Serv. Are you the gentleman? cry you mercie, sir: I was required by a gentleman i' the citie as I rode out at this end o' the towne, to deliver you this letter, sir.
B. Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, Act i. sc. 2.

And all his host had standing in their lookes,
The paleness of the death that was to come,
Yet cried they out like vultures, and urg'd on
As if they would precipitate our fates.—Id. Catiline, Act v.

Then fast'ning ropes, drag them [statues] along the streets,
Crying in scorne, this, this was that rich head
Was crown'd with garlands and with odours, this
That was in Rome so reverenced.—Id. Sejanus, Act v.

That, when the sodaine thaw comes we may break
Upon 'hem like a deluge, bearing down
Halfe Rome before us, and invade the rest
With cryes, and noyse able to wake the urnes
Of those are dead, and make their ashes feare.
Id. Catiline, Act i.

Good folk for gold or hire
But help me to a cryer:
For my poor heart is run astray
After two eyes, that pass'd this way.
Drayton. Odes. The Cryer

Far am I from disparaging the gift of voluntary and extemporary prayer, or crying down the use of it.
Sharp. Works, vol. iv. Ser. 5

Not long before the loud laments arise,
Of one distress'd, and mastiff's mingled cries;
And first the dame came rushing through the wood,
And next the famish'd hounds that sought their food.
Dryden. Theodore & Honoria.

The person and office of this cryer in the wilderness was there more exactly described, than in any other part of the sacred volume.—Atterbury, vol. iii. Ser. 11.

The female senate was assembled soon,
With all the mob of women of the town;
The queen sate lord chief justice of the hall,
And bade the criers cite the criminal.
Dryden. The Wife of Bath's Tale

From the beginning, and even whilst the French gave the blows, and we hardly opposed the vis inertiæ to their efforts, from that day to this hour, like importunate guinea-fowls crying one note day and night, they have called for peace
Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. i.

And accordingly, they, the most turbulent of mankind, who never make a scruple to shake the tranquillity of their country to its center, raise a continual cry for peace with France.—Id. Ib.

So among the Romans, when in a cause all the pleaders had spoken, the cryer used to proclaim aixerunt, i. e. they have done speaking.—Harris. Hermes, b. i. c. 7.

CRYPT. } Gr. Κρυπτ-ειν, to hide,
CRY'PTICK. } to conceal, to cover. See
CRY'PTICAL. } the quotation from the CRY'PTO-GRAPHY. } Homilies.
CRY'PTO-GRAPHAL. }

Loe, unto the time of Constantine, by the space of above three hundred yeeres after our Saviour Christ, when the Christian religion was most pure, and indeed golden, Christians had but low poore conventicles, and simple oratories, yea caves under the ground, called cryptæ, where they for feare of persecution assembled secretly together.

Homilies. Sermon against Idolatry, pt. iii.

The students of nature, conscious of her more cryptick ways of working, resolve many strange effects into the neat efficiency of second causes.—Glanvill. Apology.

All Scriptures are either manifest, or cryptical and obscure: matters that are absolutely necessary to salvation, are expressed in the first of these; other truths, whether historical, doctrinal, or practical, may be sometimes involved in doubtful difficult expressions.

Wilkins. The Gift of Preaching, s. 2.

Could we have any light why the stellary part of the first masse, separated into this order, that the girdle of Orion should ever maintain its line, and the two stars in Charles's wain never leave pointing at the Pole-star, we might abate the Pythagorical musick of the spheres, the sevenfold pipe of Pan; and the strange cryptography of Gaffarel in his Starry Book of Heaven.—Brown. Cyrus' Garden, c. 3.

To resume the pinner's rows, all the operations is a trifle; neither have I any zeal for the character, as cryptographal or universal.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 339.

In consequence of the ardour which he [Sir J. R. had] expressed on this subject, it was thought proper to deposit his body in the crypt of that magnificent church.

Malone. Life of Sir Joshua Reynolds.

Those speakers, whose chief business is to amuse or delight, to allure, terrify, or persuade mankind, do not confine themselves to any natural order, but in a cryptical or hidden method, adapt every thing to their designed ends.

Watts. Logick, pt. iv. c. 1.

CRY'STAL, n. } Frequently, but improperly, written Chrystal. Fr. Crystal; It. Cristallo; Sp. Cristal; Lat. Crystallus; Gr. Κρυσταλλος, by which both ice, and the (crystal) stone are signified: from Κρυος, i.e. cold or frost. See the quotation from Pliny.
CRY'STAL, adj.
CRY'STALLINE, n.
CRY'STALLINE, adj.
CRY'STALLIZE.
CRYSTALLIZA'TION.

First when I saw those christal streames,
Whose beauty made my mortall wounde,
I little thought within her beames,
So swete a venom to haue found.

Surrey. The Louer describes his restlesse State.

The crystall yse, which lent mine eyes their light,
Doth now waxe dym, and dazeled all with dread,
My senses all, wyll now forsake me quite,
And hope of health abandoneth my head.

Gascoigne. Dan Bartholomew of Bath.

As touching crystall, it proceedeth of a contrary cause, namely of cold; for a liquor it is congealed by extreame frost in manner of yce, and for proofe hereof, you shall find crystall in no place else but where the winter snow is frozen hard: so as we may boldly say, it is verie ice and nothing else, whereupon the Greeks have given it the right name Crystallos, i. Yce.—Holland. Pinie, b. xxxvii. c. 2.

I throw my chrystal arms along the flowry vallies,
Which lying sleek and smooth as any garden allies,
Do give me leave to play, whilst they do court my stream,
And crown my winding banks with many an anadem.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 26.

Rules and precepts doe then help after they have bin laboured and polisht by practice; but if those rules may be made cleere and chrystalline afore-hand, it would be the more excellent, because they would lesse stand in need of diligence, labour and exercise after.

Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. vi. c. 2.

Aqua-fortis, or any mineral solution, either of vitriol, alum, salt petre, ammoniac or tartar, which although to some degree exhaled and placed in cold conservatories, will chrystallize and shoot into white and glacious bodies.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 1.

In the midst of dinner, calling the ambassador up to him, he drank the king's health, who receiving it from his hand, return'd to his place, and in the same cup being of fair crystal pledg'd it with all his company.

Milton. A Brief History of Moscovia.

Seek we then ourselves in ourselves? for as
Men force the sun with much more force to pass,
By gathering his beams with a crystal glass,
So we (if we into ourselves will turn,
Blowing our spark of virtue) may out-burn
The straw which doth about our hearts sojourn.

Donne. To Mr. Rowland Woodward.

When lo! the torrent, the fleet-hurrying flood
So clear and perfect crystaline at hand,
As a black lake or settled marish stood,
At the extensure of the Hebrew wand.

Drayton. Moses, his Birth and Miracles, b. ii.

Cloris. O that their hoofs were ivory, or some thing
Than the purest ivory far more crystalline,
Fill'd with the food wherewith the Gods do dine,
To keep thy youth in a continual spring.—Id. Nymph. 4.

If you dissolve copper in aqua fortis, or spirit of nitre (for I remember not which I used, nor do I think it much material) you may, by crystallizing the solution, obtain a goodly vitriol.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 507.

In the falling of a stone to the ground, in the rising of the sea towards the moon, in cohesion and chrystalization, there is something alike, namely an union or mutual approach of bodies.—Berkeley. Of the Prin. of Hum. Knowledge, pt. i.

Or when the shower forsakes the sable skies,
Haply the cold in secret ambush lies,
Couching awaits in some inferior space,
And chills the tempest with a quick embrace;
The crystal pellets at the touch congeal,
And from the ground rebounds the rattling hail.

Brookes. Universal Beauty, b. ii.

—— The Naiad train,
Alike obsequious, from a thousand urns
Shall pour their crystaline tide.

Mason. English Garden, b. i.

In the barren part of the island, which runs out towards Nevis are several ponds, which in dry weather crystalize into good salt.—Granger. Sugar Cane, b. i. Note.

When the cane juice is granulated sufficiently, which is known by the sugar's sticking to the ladle, and roping like a syrup, but breaking off from its edges: it is poured into a cooler, where its surface being smoothed, the crystallization is soon completed.—Id. Ib. b. iii. v. 428. Note.

CUB, v. } Perhaps, says Minshew, from the CUB, n. } Lat. Cubo, because it lies (cubat) in its den or hole, and goes not out for prey as the elder animals do. Applied to—
The young of the bear or fox. Also, of the whale.
A cub, or cribb for cattle. (Glouc.—Grose.)
To cub,—to bring forth cubs; also, to confine, as cubs are, in a den or hole; (if not a corruption of Coop, qv.)

If it be so great a delight to live at liberty, and to enjoy that variety of objects the world affords, what misery and discontent must it needs bring to him, that shall now be cast headlong into that Spanish inquisition, to fall from heaven to hell, to be cubbed up upon a sudden, how shall he be perplexed, what shall become of him.

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 153.

There was another young lad, unto whom certaine mates and fellowes of his (in that season wherein young lads were permitted freely to filtch whatsoever they could handsomely come by, but reputed it was a shameful and infamous thing for them to be surprized and taken in the manner) brought a young cub or little fox to keep alive, which they had stolen: those who had lost the said cub came to make search, now had this lad hidden it close under his cloathes, and the unhappy beast being angred, gnawed and bit him in the flank, as far as to the very bowels, which he endured resolutely, and never quelched at it, for fear he should be discover'd.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 389.

Art thou of Bethlem's noble college free?
Stark staring mad; that thou would'st tempt the sea?
Cubb'd in a cabbin, on a mattrass laid,
On a brown George.—Dryden. Persius, Sat. 5.

The cubs of bears a living lump appear
When whelp'd, and no determined figure wear,
The mother licks them into shape, and gives
As much of form as she herself receives.

Id. Ovid. Met. b. xv.

On the approach of our boats towards the ice they [the whales] all took their cubs under their fins and endeavoured to escape with them into the sea.

Cook. Voyage, vol. vii. b. vi. c. 3.

CU'BE, n. } Fr. Cube; It. Cubo; Sp. Cubo; Lat. Cubus; Gr. Κυβος. For the general application in number and figure see the quotations.
CU'BICK, adj.
CU'BICAL.
CU'BICALLY.
CU'BICALNESS.

Which number [8] being the first cube is a fit hieroglyphick of the stability of that covenant made with the Jewes in circumcision.

H. More. Philos. Cabbala. App. to Defence, c. 2.

Such is sixty-four (cube or square) either made by multiplying 8 into 8, and so it is a square; or by multiplying four cubically, for 4 times 4 times 4, is again 64, but then it is a cube.—Id. Ib.

'Tis above a hundred to one against any particular throw, that you do not cast any given set of faces with 4 cubical dice, because there are so many several combinations of the six faces of four dice.—Bentley. Conf. of Atheism, Ser. 5.

The incongruity of the supposition of an infinite multitude appears in this, that the part must be as infinite as the whole:—If we should suppose a multitude actually infinite there must be infinite roots, and square and cubick numbers, yet of necessity the root [4] is but the fourth part of the square [16] and the sixteenth part of the cubick number [64].—Hale. Orig. of Mankind, p. 106.

If thinking was a mode or species of motion; then in like manner as it is a proper expression to say that circularity is one species of figure, and squareness a second, and cubicalness a third, and ellipticalness a fourth; so it would be proper also to say, that circular motion is one species of motion, &c.—Clarke. Third Defence.

CUBI'CULAR, adj. } Fr. Cubiculaire; belonging to the bed-chamber; from Lat. Cubare, to lie down.
CUBI'CULAR, n.
CUBI'CULARLY.

At the breking up of the counseille ther entrid into this reaulme a cubiculer of the popes; which broght to the kyng a sucrde and a cappe, whiche for honnor of the pope was honnourably receivid by the king's commaundement.

Leland. From MS. in Cotton Library, vol. iv. p. 244.

He firste made hym frendes secretely, and after hyryd one of the cubyclers of the pope, that he in the deed nyght, shulde speke in a rode [reed] and saye, "Celestyne, if thou wylte be sauyd and be partyner of my blysse, renounce this pompe of ye worlde, and serue me as thou before dyd."

Fabyan. Philip IV. an. 17.

As also for being the inseparable cubicular companion the king took comfort in, in the height of his troubles.

Howell, b. iv. Let. 14.

And so that custom by degrees changed their cubicularly beds into decubitory, and introduced a fashion to go from the baths unto these.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 6.

CU'BIT. Lat. Cubitus; Gr. Κυβιτον, from Κυπτ-ειν, curvare, to bend. Est enim curvatura brachii, (Martinius.)
The bend or curvature of the arm.

But who of you thenkynge, may putte to his stature a cubit?—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 6.

Whiche of you (thoughe he tooke thought therfore) coulde put one cubit vnto his stature.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And thus th' Almighty taught just Noah the same,
Three hundred cubits the whole length to be,
Fifty the breadth, the height (least of the three)
Full thirty cubits; only with one light
A cubit broad, and just as much in height.

Drayton. Noah's Flood

Hereof Forerius hath a singular exposition, conceiving the watchmen of Tyre might well be called pygmies, the towers of that city being so high, that unto men below, they appeared in a cubital stature.—Brown. Vulg. Err. b. iv. c. 11.

But Theseus, with a club of harden'd oak,
The cubit-bone of the bold centaur broke,
And left him maim'd; nor seconded the stroke.

Dryden. Ovid. Met. b. xii.

It warm'd my veins with youthful fire,
And rais'd my heart a cubit higher,
To hear your own kind words express
Your competition and success.—Blacklock to Dr. Evans.

CU'CKING-STOOL. Called by Spelman, (Gloss. Arch. in v. Terbichetum,) a Coke-stoole. Minshew says, rather, ducking-stoole, an engine for the punishment of scolds and unquiet women; called also a Tumbrel.

And because this vice is so much hurtfull to the society of a common-wealth, in all well ordred cities, these common brawlers and scolders be punished with a notable kind of paine: as to be set on the cucking-stole, pillory, or such like.

Homilies, i. Against Contention, pt. iii.

—— Let 'em, let 'em,
We'll ship 'em out in cuck-stool, there they'll sail
As brave Columbus did, till they discover
The happy islands of obedience.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Tamer Tamed, Act ii. sc. 1.

These, mounted in a chair-curule,
Which moderns call a cucking-stool,
March proudly to the river side,
And o'er the waves in triumph ride.—Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 2.

CU'CKOLD, v. } Fr. Cocu; Dut. Kockoer; Ger. Kuckuck; Lat. Curruca; Angl. a cuckold, and also a hedge sparrow, quia ut illa cuculi pullum pro suo educalt, sic et ille alienos pro suis. Cuculus apud Plautum. Angl. A Cuckold-maker, qui sic ut Cuculus, ponit et parit ova in nido alterius, (Minshew.) Tooke seems to have settled the etymology of this word very clearly and satisfactorily, though it has escaped the notice of Mr. Nares.
CU'CKOLD, n.
CU'CKOLDIZING.
CU'CKOLDLY.
CU'CKOLDOM.

" The Italian cucolo, a cuckow, gives us the verb to cucol, (without the terminating D,) as the common people rightly pronounce it, and as the verb was formerly and should still be written.

" I am cuckolled and fool'd to boot too.

Beaum. & Fletch. Women Pleas'd.

"If he be married, may he dream he's cuckol'd.
Beaum. & Fletch. Loyal Subject.

"To cucol, is, to do as the cuckow does: and cucol-ed, cucol'd, cucold, its past part., means cuckow-ed, i. e. served as the cuckow serves other birds.

"The whole difficulty of the etymologists and their imputation upon us of absurdity (see the quotation from Howell's Letters, and also Skinner,) are at once removed by observing, that, in English, we do not call them cuculi, but cuculati, (if I may coin the word on this occasion,) i. e. we call them not cuckows, but cuckowed."—Tooke. Diversions of Purley, pt. ii. c. 2. n.

Jalouse he was, and held hire narwe in cage,
For she was wild and yonge, and he was old,
And deem'd himself belike a cokewold.
Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3226.

Guenhera, a Cornish woman, (whom some wryters call fayre Eline,) that made Kyng Arthur a cuckold, was after his death deuoutly receiued into Ambesbury nódry, as a penitét to their spiritual vse.—Bale. English Votaries, pt i.

Coquage, God of cuckolds, as one merrily said, accompanies the goddesse Jealousie, both follow the fairest, by Jupiter's appointment, and they sacrifice to them together.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 627.

Tib. Nay, I will go. He see an you may be allow'd to make a bundle o'hemp, o' your right and lawfull wife thus, at every cuckoldy knave's pleasure.
B. Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, Act iv. sc. 10.

So in French, cocu is taken for one whose wife is light, and hath made him a passive cuckold, whereas clean contrary, coeu, which is the cuckow, doth use to lay her eggs in another bird's nest.—Howell, b. iv. Let. 19.

Iago. If von are so fond ouer her iniquitie, giue her patient to offend, for if it touch not you, it comes neere no body.
Oth. I will chop her into messes: cuckold me?
Shakespeare. Othello, Act iv. sc. 1.

Can dry bone live? or skeletons produce
The vital warmth of cuckoldizing juice?
Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

On the contrary, cuckoldom is the basis of most of our modern plays. If an alderman appears upon the stage, you may be sure it is in order to be cuckolded
Spectator, No 307.

No doubt but your fool's-cap has known
His highness obligingly kind,
Odrooks I could knock the fool down,
Was e'er such a cuckoldy hind?—Lloyd. Songs, Air 24.

CU'CKOO. Ger. Kuck-gauck, cuckuck; Dut. Kuyck-kuck; Fr. Coucou; It. Cucco; Lat. Cuculus; Gr. Κοκκυξ; all manifestly from the sound uttered by this bird.

And among hem [lovers] it was a comune tale
That it were good to here the nightingale
Rather than the leud cuckow sing
Chaucer. The Cuckow & the Nightingale.

And thus I sing, with harmeleese true intent.
Like Philomene, when as perease (meane while)
The cuckowe suckes mine egges by foul deceit,
And lickes the sweet, which might have fed me first.
Gascoigne. The Steele Glas.

The merry cuckowe, messenger of spring,
His trumpet shrill hath thrice already sounded,
That warnes all louers waite vpon their king,
Who now is comming forth with girland crowned
Spenser, Son. 19.

When daisies pied, and violets blue,
And lady-smocks all silver white,
And cuckoo-buds of yellow hue,
Do paint the meadowe with delight.
Shakespeare. Spring. A Song.

Lend me your song, ye nightingales:
• • • While I deduce
From the first note the hollow cuckoo sings
The symphony of spring. Thomson. Spring.

CU'CQUEAN, s. } Cuck, cuculus, a cuckold-
CU'CQUEAN, v. } maker; and quene, wife, the cuckold-maker's wife, (Minshew.)

Queene Juno, not a little wroth
Against her husband's crime,
By whom shee was a cockqueene made,
Did therefore at the time
In which Alcmena cride for helpe
To bring her fruit to light,
Three nights and dayes inchaunt her throwes.
Warner. Albion's England, b. i. c. 4.

Came I from France Queene Dowager,
Quoth she, to pay so deere
For bringing him so great a wealth
As to be cuckqueen'd here!
Id. Ib. b. viii. c. 41.

——— Nay, madam, which is more
He loves variety, and delights in change
And I heard him say, should he be married,
He'd make his wife a cuckqueen.
Heywood. Foure Prentices of London.

CU'CULLATED. Lat. Cucullus; part of the dress, hanging behind, with which the head is covered or protected against the weather. Perhaps from the Gr. Κυκλος, circulus.

Between the cicada and that we call a grasshopper, the differences are very many, as may be observed in themselves, or their descriptions in Matthiolus, Aldrovandus, and Muffetus. For, first, they are differently cucullated or capuched upon the head and back, and in the cicada the eyes are more prominent.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 3.

CU'CUMBER. Fr. Concombre; It. Cocomero; Sp. Cohombro; Lat. Cucumis, so called, a curvatura. Virgil, (see the quotation from Dryden,) applies to it the epithet tortus.

Of the cartilage and pulpous kind (such I meane onely whereof there is nothing good but that which is above ground) I reckon the cucumber, a fruit that Tiberius the Emperour much loved and affected: for he tooke such a wonderous delight and pleasure therein, that there was not a day went over his head, but he had them served up at his table.
Holland. Plinie, b. xix. c. 5.

How cucumers along the surface creep,
With crooked bodies, and with bellies deep.
Dryden. Virgil, Geor. 4.

——— Pardon then,
Ye sage dispensers of poetic fame,
Th' ambition of one meanest far, whose pow'rs,
Presuming an attempt not less sublime,
Pant for the praise of dressing to the taste
Of critic appetite, no sordid fare,
A cucumber, while costly yet and scarce.
Cowper. Task, b. ii.

CUD. Honeywood (in Skinner) thinks it so said, quasi chew'd, quia cibus ruminando quasi bis masticatur. And Skinner has no doubt, that A. S. Cud is from Ceowan, mandere. Tooke adopts this etymology. J. Taylor writes, "Chew the chud." (Sermon. The House of Feasting.)

Neuerthelesse, these shall ye not eate of thē that chewe cud and haue hoofes.—Bible, 1551. Leuiticus, c. 11.

Of wild beasts the red and fallow deere both doe chew cud when they be made tame and fed by hand: but all choose rather in so doing, to lie than to stand, and in winter more than summer, for seven months ordinarily.
Holland. Plinie, b. x. c. 73.

Because half a dozen grasshoppers under a fearn make the field ring with their importunate chink, whilst thousands of great cattle, reposed beneath the shadow of the British oak, chew the cud and are silent; pray do not imagine that these who make the noise are the only inhabitants of the field; that, of course, they are many in number; or that, after all they are other than the little shrivelled, meagre, hopping, though loud and troublesome insects of the hour.
Burke. On the French Revolution.

CU'DDIN, s. This word has only been found in Dryden, and was probably formed from the preceding cud; as if slavering while he chew'd. Serenius refers to the Isl. Kutte, nanus, pumilio, a dwarf.

The slavering cuddin, propp'd upon his staff,
Stood ready gaping with a grinning laugh,
To welcome her awake, nor durst begin
To speak, but wisely kept the fool within.
Dryden. Cymon & Iphigenia.

CU'DDLE, v. Dr. Jamieson thinks it may be from the Ger. Kudd-en, coire, convenire; to come together. May it not be the dim. of cow, to cower; q. d. cow-dle:—

To keep down close, to embrace closely.

Or have you mark'd a partridge quake,
Viewing the tow'ring falcon nigh?
She cuddles low beneath the brake,
Nor would she stay, nor dare she fly.—Prior. The Dove.

They hopp'd from spray to spray,
They bill'd, they chirp'd all day,
They cuddled close all night.—Somerville, Fab. 11.

CU'DGEL, v. } From the Dut. Kudse, kudse, (Skinner and Junius.)
CU'DGEL, s. } A knotty stick, or stake, or CU'DGELLER. } staff. Scotch, cud.
CU'DGELLING, s. }

To cudgel,—to beat or strike with a cudgel, stick or staff; to beat, to batter; and (met.) to cudgel the brains,—to force them to exertion.

A mile off the island there is a rocke in the sea, wherein do breede many foules like vnto barnacles: in the night we went out in our boates, and with cudgels we killed many of them, and brought them with many of their eggs aboord with vs.—Hackluyt Voyages, vol. iii. p. 488.

He deserveth the bastanado, to be drie beaten and well cudgeled, that forsaketh his colours, or departeth from his guard or quarters.—Holland. Livie, p. 183.

Do I not know thou hast been a cudgel'd coward,
That has no cure for shame but cloath of silver,
And think'st the wearing of a gaudy suit
Hides all disgraces!—Beaum. & Fletch. The Captain.

The baron, who had given him the blow, did kneel before him on both knees, holding in his right hand a sword, with the point towards himself, and in his left hand the like cudgel, or bastinado, wherewith he had stricken M. de Plessis; both which weapons he delivered into Plessis' hands, submitting himself to such revenge, as it should please him to take with either of those weapons.
Raleigh. Hist. of the World, b. v. c. 3.

Was it such a dissolute speech, telling of some politicians who were wont to eaves-drop in disguises, to say they were often liable to a night walking cudgeller, or the emptying of a urinal.—Milton. Apology for Smectymnuus.

As bones of Hectors, when they differ,
The more they're cudgell'd, grow the stiffer
Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2.

He that can reconcile blows and reverence, may for ought I know, deserve for his pains, a civil respectful cudgelling wherever he can meet with it.
Locke. On Civil Government, § 235.

I must confess, when I see princes and states fighting and quarrelling, amidst their debts, funds, and public mortgages, it always brings to my mind a match of cudgel-playing, fought in a china shop.—Hume. Ess. pt. ii. Of Public Credit

CUE, s. In a note upon Richard the Third (quoted below) Johnson says, "The expression is borrowed from the theatre. The cue, queue or tail of a speech, consists of the last words, which are the token for an entrance or answer. To come on the cue, therefore, is to come at the proper time." And in this Mr. Steevens appears to acquiesce. Fr. Cue, or queue, a tail, from the Lat. Cauda. Minshew says, that anti, or rather ante-loquie, is a term that stage-players use, called their qu.

Cue, from its application to these stage directions, is extended to—

Any intimation or slight direction: that, the part, which any one is directed, disposed, inclined to take; the inclination, the disposition; humour.

Cue, i. e. q, is also applied to denote a farthing (quadrans), a farthing's worth of bread, beer, &c. See Mr Nares's Glossary.

To cue,—to form like a tail, a curling line; to curl, to twist.

Tell him, wee could haue rebuk'd him at Harflewe, but that wee thought it not good to bruise an iniurie, till it were full ripe. Now we speake vpon our Q, and our voyce Imperiall.—Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act iii. sc. 6.

He comes like the catastrophe of the old comedie: my cue is villainous melancholy, with a sighe like Tom o' Bedlam
Id. Lear, Act iii. sc. 2.

Pet. Ninus toombe man: why, you must not speake that yet: that you answere to Piramus, you speak all your parte at once, cues and all. Piramus enter, your cue is past; it is neuer tyre.—Id. Midsummer Night's Dream, Act iii. sc. 1.

Buck. Had you not come vpon your Q my lord,
William, Lord Hastings, had pronounc'd your part;
I meane your voice, for crowning of the king.
Id. Rich. III. Act iii. sc. 4.

They separate it into small locks which they woold or cue round with the rind of a slender plant, down to about an inch of the ends; and, as the hair grows the woolding is continued. Each of those cues or locks is somewhat thicker than common whip-cord, and they look like a parcel of small strings hanging down from the crown of their heads
Cook. Voyage, vol. iv. b. iii. c. 6

The servant takes his cue, and flies,
While consternation marks her face,
He mounts his steed, and quits the place.
Whitehead. The Dog.

CUFF, v. } Lye thinks from the Goth.
CUFF, s. } Kaupatyan, colaphos ingerere,
CU'FFING, adj. } to inflict blows. Junius and Minshew, from the Gr. Κολαφος, from Κολεπτ-ειν, percutere, to strike. Skinner, from Κοπτ-ειν, which, he says, signifies not only to cut, but—

To beat, to strike.

The childe as he can speake and go
forthewith as glad of play,
Amongst his mates, and gathers hart
to cuffe, and learnes to fraye.
Drant. Horace. The Arte of Poetry.

He brake into the heat of fight: as when a tempest raves,
Stoops from the clouds, and all on heaps, doth cuffe the purple waves. Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xi.

The Saracin sore daunted with the buffe,
Snatcheth his sword, and fiercely to him flies:
Who well it wards, and quiteth cuff with cuff.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 2.

Those pillars first they pass, which Jove's great son did rear,
And cuffing those stern waves, which like huge mountaine roll,
(Full joy in every part possessing every soul)
In Aquitain at last the Ilion race arrive.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 1.

——— The inward man,
And outward, like a clan and clan,
Have always been at daggers-drawing,
And one another clapper-clawing;
Not that they really cuff or fence,
But in a spiritual mystic sense. Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 2.

A man, who receives a buffet in the dark, may be allowed to be vext; but it is an odd kind of revenge to go to cuffs in broad day with the first he meets, and lay the last night's injury at his door.—Swift. Apology. Tale of a Tub.

CUFF, n. Junius and Skinner think is Coif, (qv.) though—valde detorto sensu, is the opinion of the latter.

He cast on hym hus clothes. of all kyn craftes.
Hus cockres and hus cuffes. Piers Ploughman, p. 131.

Ripe statesmen, ripe: they grow in every street;
At sixe and twenty, ripe. You shall 'hem meet,
And have 'hem yeeld no savour, but of state
Ripe are their ruffes their cuffes, their beards, their gaite,
And grave as ripe, like mellow as their faces.
B. Jonson. The New Cry, Epig. 92.

Neatness he [Dr. W. Butler] neglected into slovinlyness; and, accounting cuffs to be manacles, he may be said not to have made himself ready for some seven years together.
Fuller. Worthies. Suffolk.

CUI'RASS, n. } Fr. Cuirasse; It. Corazzia,
CUIRA'SSIER. } from Cuir, (Lat. Corium,) i. e. leather, because in times past they were made of leather, (Minshew.) Junius adds to this etymology, in confirmation of it, that lorica was so called a loris, from thongs of leather.

Armour for the breast or back.

The Earl of Montgomery unfortunately breaking his lance upon the King's cuirass, a splinter thereof (his beaver being somewhat open) struck him so deep in the eye that within a few days he ended his life.—Baker. Elizabeth. an. 1559.

——— His angry lance did glide
Quite through his bright orbicular targe, his curace, shirt of maile,
And did his manly stomach's mouth with dangerous taint assaile.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. viii.

If death be not more formidable to you than hell, you are fit for a reserve, or forlorn hope, for the cannon's mouth, for cuiraissers, for fiends to duel with.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 522.

The picture of Saint George, wherein he is described like a cuirassier or horseman completely armed, &c. is rather a symbolical image than any proper figure.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 17.

CUISH. Fr. Cuisse; It. Coscia; Lat. Coxa, a thigh. Also written Quist.

Armour for the thigh.

One sort had the quishes, the greues, &c.
Hall. Hen. IV. an. 1.

I saw young Harry with his beuer on,
His cushes on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,
Rise from the ground like feathered Mercury.
Shakespeare 1 Part Hen. IV. Act iv. sc. 1.

But what reason had our author to wound Æneas at so critical a time? And how came the cuisses to be worse temper'd than the rest of his armour, which was all wrought by Vulcan and his journeymen.—Dryden. Virgil, Ded.

CU'LINARY. } Fr. Cuisine, culinaire; It. Cu-
CU'LINARILY. } cina; Sp. Cozina, Lat. Culina. A kitchen.

Of or pertaining to a kitchen, to the arts of cookery practised in a kitchen.

The opinion of Leucippus, Democritus, and other prime anatomists of old, is in our days revived by no mean philosophers; namely, that our culinary fire, such as chymists use, consists of swarms of little bodies swiftly moving, which by their smallness and motion are able to permeate the solidest and compactest bodies, and even glass itself.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 523.

A rudimental resemblance hereof there is in the cruciated and rugged folds of the reticulum, or net like ventricle of ruminating horned animals, which is the second in order, culinarily called the honey-comb.
Brown. Cyrus' Garden, c. 3.

Hard fare! but such as boyish appetite
Disdains not; nor the palate, undeprav'd
By culinary arts, unsav'ry deems.—Cowper. Task, b. i.

CULL, v. } Fr. Cueillir; It. Cogliere; from CU'LLING, n. } the Lat. Colligere, to collect or gather together, (Skinner and Junius.) It is more commonly used as Seligere:—

To select, pick or choose; to take out, in choice or preference.

Nowe shaketh my hande, my pen waxeth dulle,
For weryd and tyred; seynge this werke so longe:
The auctours so rawe, and so ferre to culle.
Fabyan, vol. i. c. 218.

For nowe, who lookes to beare the bel,
his doynge he muste cull,
At home with hym, and better adde,
then he dyd erst out pull.—Drant. Horace, b. i. Sat. 10.

For as once it was an argument, that only Jury was God's people, because they only received his commands, and the Heathen had not knowledge of his laws; so now was it as evident a proof, that the Heathen were received into his church, (i.e.) into the number of those whom he had culled out for salvation, because he made known his ordinances to them, entertained them in his service, and commanded them every one every where to repent.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 647.

Amongst the rest a small unsightly root,
But of divine effect he cull'd me out.—Milton. Comus.

If there be any vice that sullies and takes off from the lustre of his other good qualities, that shall be sure to be cull'd out, and writ upon their lives and behaviour.
South, vol. viii. Ser. 9.

To talk of looking out, and culling of places, is nonsense, where the whole Scripture alone can make up our belief, and render it entire and consummate: which no one, I think, [redacted] hope for in this frail state of ignorance and error.
Locke. Second Vind. of the Reasonableness, &c.

And when my careful eye I cast upon my sheep,
I sort them in my pens, and sorted so I keep;
Those that are big'st of bone, I still reserve for breed,
My cullings I put off, or for the chapman feed.
Drayton. Muses' Elysium, Nymph. 6.

CU'LLENDER. See COLANDER.

Thou that of faces honeycombes dost make,
And of two breasts two cullenders, forsake
Thy deadly trade; thou now art rich, give ore,
And let thy curses call thee forth no more.
Corbet. Upon the Death of Lady Haddington.

CU'LLICE. From the Fr. Coulis, jus colatum. Broth strained through a colander, a colando. Fr. Coulis, Cotgrave explains,—

Broth of boiled meat strained, fit for a weak or sick body.

For whom a cullice had more fitter been,
Than in a golden bed a gallant queene.
Drayton. Suffolk to Mary, the French Queen.

They live in cullisses like rotten cocks
Stew'd to a tenderness, that holds no tack:
Give me a thing I can crush.
Beaum. & Fletch. Bonduca, Act i. sc. 1.

When I am excellent at cawdles,
And cullices, and have enough spare gold
To boil away, you shall be welcome to me.
Id. The Captain, Act i. sc. 3.

Then by my cawdle, and my cullice, I set
My daughter on her feet, about the house here.
B. Jonson. The Magnetick Lady, Act iv. sc. 7.

CU'LLY, v. } It. Coglione; Fr. Couillon,
CU'LLY, n. } couille; Lat. Coleus; Gr. Κολεος,
CU'LLY, adj. } vagina. Cotgrave, in v. Coulle,
CU'LLIAN. } after explaining the word agree-
CU'LLTISM. } ably to the etymology, adds,—
CULLIBI'LITY. } "Also a long, lank, and lub-
CU'LLION, n. } berly coward; a heartless,
CU'LLIONLY. } faint-hearted or white-livered slimm."

The great Priapus of Rome, is alwaies proued by his cullions, an able cocke & no hen, ere he be admitted to y^e seate of antichrist.—Bale. Apology, fol. 113.

When as the cullion, and the viler clown,
That like the swine on draff sets his desire,
Feeling the tempest, sadly lays him down
Whilst that blind strumpet [Fortune] treads him in the mire.
Drayton. Pastorals, Ecl. 8.

Ile make a sop o' th' moonshine of you, you whoreson cullyenly barber-monger, draw.—Shakes. Lear, Act ii. sc. 2.

——— And all the sacred rules
Religion teaches, tricks to cully fools:
Justice would strike the audacious villain dead,
But mercy boundless, saves thy guilty head.
Pomfret. Upon the Divine Attributes. Goodness.

Yet banish'd from the realms by right her own,
Passion, a blind usurper, mounts the throne:
Or, to known good preferring specious ill,
Reason becomes a cully to the will.
Fenton. Epistle to Mr. Lambard.

O why should you, whose mother-wits
Are furnish'd with all perquisites,
B' allow'd to put all tricks upon
Our cully sex, and we use none!—Hudibras. To his Lady.

Providence never designed him [Gay] to be above two and twenty, by his thoughtlessness and cullibility.
Swift, Let. 33. To Pope.

What is this but being a cully in the grave! Sure this is being hen peck'd with a vengeance! But without dwelling upon these less frequent instances of eminent cullyism, what is there so common as to hear a fellow curse his fate that he cannot get rid of a passion to a jilt, and quote an half line out of a miscellany poem to prove his weakness is natural.—Spectator, No. 486.

CULMI'FEROUS, adj. Lat. Culmus, a stalk, and ferre, to bear.

Culmiferous plants [so call'd of culmus, Lat. straw or haulm] are such as have a smooth, joint stalk, and usually hollow, and at each joint wrapp'd about with single, narrow, sharp pointed leaves.—Miller. Gardener's Dictionary.

CU'LMINATE, v. } Lat. Culmen, the top or CU'LMINANT. } summit.

To reach the top or summit; the meridian height.

Here matter new to gaze the Devil met
Undazl'd, far and wide his eye commands,
For sight no obstacle found here, nor shade,
But all sun shine, as when the beams at noon
Culminate from the equator.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. iii.

——— I did spy
Sun, moon, and stars, by the painter's art appear
At once all culminant in one hemisphere.
Brome. To his Mistress.

On that unhabitable shore,
Expose me all alone,
Where I may view without a shade,
The culminating sun.—Pitt. Horace, b. i. Ode 22.

——— While above
T' embow'ring branches culminate, and form
A walk impervious to the sun.—Smart. Hop Garden, b. i.

CU'LPABLE, adj. } Fr. Coulpable; It. Col-
CU'LPABLENESS. } pevole; Sp. Culpable;
CU'LPABLY. } Lat. Culpabilis; from CU'LPE. } Culpa, a fault. Some CU'LPRIT. } etymologists think from
CU'LPATE. } Collabi, to slip, to fall:
CU'LPATORY. } others from Κλωπη, itself from κλεπτ-ειν, to take privately, to steal. Vossius prefers the Heb. Chalaph, to pass beyond, to transgress; and he adds, that properly culpa is transgression of the laws, and the bounds of virtue. Cicero, (in his 3d Paradox,) says, that peccare, is lineas transilire, to leap over the bounds; and when this is done, culpa commissa est, a fault has been committed.

Blamable; that may, that ought to be blamed, censured or condemned.

Culpe is used by Hall, from the Fr. Coulpe.

Culprit, appears merely to be a compound, and contraction of culpe, a fault, a crime, a transgression of the law; and Fr. Pris, part. of prendre, to take; one taken, a prisoner; for a transgression of the law.

Of Inglis and Frankis who was most culpable.
R. Brunne, p. 302

For thy my sonne in all waye
Be wel auised, I the preie
Of slaught, er that thou be culpable
Withoute cause reasonable.—Gower. Con. A. b iii.

This facte was adiudged of all the nobilitie to be vnlawfull, vniust and vngodly, to deprive a man beyng banished out of the realme without deserte, without culpe, and without cause, of his inheritaunce and patrimony.
Hall. Hen. IV. Introd.

Anon after the king sent for the sayd Lord Cobham; and as he was come, he called him secretly, admonishing him betwixt him and him, to submit him selfe to hys mother the holy churche, and as an obedient chyld to acknowledge himself culpable.—State Trials. Sir J. Oldcastle, an. 1413.

Meet and reason it is, that every one of you according to his place and calling, quit himselfe well in whatsoever shall be imposed and laid upon him: and especially to endevour and prevent, that no danger or mutinie arise by the maliciousness of those that are culpable and offenders.
Holland. Livie, p. 1033.

The truth is, when all is said, every man in doubtful cases is left to his own discretion; and if he acts according to the best reason he hath, he is not culpable, tho he be mistaken in his measures.—Sharp. Ser. vol. ii. A Doubting Conscience.

The great thing to be attended to in this case, of a man's following a mistaken judgment, is the culpableness or inculpableness, the faultiness or innocence of the mistake upon which he acts.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. Of Conscience.

Dauntless as death, away he walks;
Breaks the doors open, snaps the locks;
Searches the parlour, chamber, study;
Nor stops till he has culprit's body.
Prior. An English Padlock.

The learned, the judicious, the pious Boerhaave relates, that he never saw a criminal dragged to execution without asking himself, "Who knows whether this man is not less culpable than me?"—Rambler, No. 114.

Like other culprit youths, he wanted grace;
But could have no self-interest in the case.
Whitehead. Epilogue to the Roman Father.

The indulgence of the public ought to imprint respect, not presumption; and instead of trespassing anew on that lenity, the author has long feared he should be reproached, that Detinuit nostras numerosus Horatius aures:
a quotation he should not dare to apply to himself, if adjectives, in osus, as famosus, &c. were not most commonly used by Latian authors in a culpatory sense, and thus numerosus only means too voluminous.
Walpole. Catalogue of Engravers, vol. v. Post.

CU'LPONS. Tum cumuli, acervi, tum particulæ; piles, heaps, and also parts or particles; from Fr. Coupon, a segment, a part; and this from the verb couper, to cut, to sever, (Skinner.)

Mr. Tyrwhitt says, that culpons in the first example from Chaucer signify shreds, in the second, logs. Drant uses the verb,—to cut in pieces. Diram qui contudit Hydram.

Byunces heng his lokkes that he hadde,
And therwith he his shuldres overspredde,
Ful thinne it lay, by culpons on and on.
Chaucer. Prologue, v. 681.

And lete anon commande to hack and hewe
The okes old, and lay hem on a rowe,
In culpons, wel arraied for to brenne.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2869.

He that did crowse, [crush] and culpon once
Hydra of Hellish spyte.
Drant. Horace. Epistle to Augustus.

CU'LTER. See Coulter.

CU'LTIVATE, v. }
CULTIVA'TION. }
CU'LTIVATING, n. }
CU'LTIVATOR. }
CU'LTURE, v. }
CU'LTURE, n. } Fr. Cultiver; It. Coltivare; Sp. Cultivar; Lat. Colere, cultum, to till. Vossius prefers an Hebrew origin. Lennep considers that κολ-εω, must have existed in Greek as the root of κολαξ-ειν, puni-re, and of other words; and Scheidius that κολ-εω, was the same as κελλ-εω, and meant pellere, impellere, impellendo agere; and further, vehementiùs tractare, fundere. And thus col-ere will signify, consequentially—

To labour earnestly, (sc.) for the improvement of any thing—

As to cultivate the land,—to till it, to plough, to manure it;—to cultivate the mind,—to strive, labour or endeavour to improve, or better it, strengthen or enlarge it.

Shaftesbury uses Cult, from the Fr. n. Culte. Respect, worship.

This is a very deadly & monstrous perswacio, which hath entred the mindes of men, beleuing that the studies of philosophie are of estates and princes, either vtterly not to be touched, or at lest wise with extreme lippes to be sipped, and rather to the pomp and ostentacion of their wit, then to the culture & profit of their myndes to be litle & easily tasted.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 14.

Your highness may assure your self, that the same offices of good-will towards your highness never shall be wanting in us; such as may be able to demonstrate how firmly we are resolv'd to cultivate both long and constantly, to the utmost of our power, that friendship which is between your serenity and this republic.
Milton. To the Grand Duke of Tuscany.

But that we may returne to Alexander, he having put over the river Arbis or Arabius, and having the very night following marched through a great part of the sandy country, came the next morning into places well inhabited and cultured.—Usher. Annals, an. 3619.

Amongst whom [Lacedæmonians] also both in other things, and especially in the culture of their bodies, the nobility observed the most equality with the commons.
Hobbes. Thucydides, b. i.

Thus is every one convinc'd of the reality of a better self, and of the cult or homage which is due to it.
Shaftesbury. Advice to an Author, pt. iii. s. 1.

The mind of man hath need to be prepared for piety and virtue; it must be cultivated to that end, and ordered with great care and pains. But the vices are weeds that grow wild and spring up of themselves.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 10.

Even man hath an innate principle of reason, but it is use and cultivation of reason that must enable it actually to do that, which nature gives it only a remote power of doing.
South, vol. vi. Ser. 11.

I have had a large, a fair, and a pleasant field: so fertile, that without my cultivating, it has given me two harvests in a summer, and in both oppressed the reaper.
Dryden. To Sir R. Howard.

Physicks being a science, whose large extent invites and warrants its cultivators to search into the nature and phenomena of things corporeal, indefinitely, it must often happen, that the medicinal art, and this science will be conversant about the same subject though in differing ways, with differing scopes.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 74.

The mind that lies fallow but a single day, sprouts up in follies that are only to be killed by a constant and assiduous culture.—Spectator, No. 10.

Depend upon my sincerity, when I assure you, that I shall not only always honour you as a man of the first rank in letters, but shall be heartily disposed to cultivate your acquaintance, and to merit your good opinion.
Warburton. From Dr. Lowth. Oct. 1756.

Being asked, whether the rajah is not bound to furnish the cultivators of land with seed for their crops according to the custom of the country? he said, the king of Tanjour, as proprietor of the land, always makes advances of money for the seed for the cultivation of the land.
Burke. On the Nabob of Arcot's Debts, App. No 7.

But happiest they, who drooping realms relieve!
Whose virtues in our cultur'd vales appear!
For whose sad fate a thousand shepherds grieve
And fading fields allow the grief sincere.
Shenstone, Elegy 25.

—— From their tenements,
Pleas'd and refresh'd, proceeds the caravan
Through lively spreading cultures, pastures green,
And yellow tillages in opening woods.—Dyer. The Fleece.

CU'LVER, n. A. S. Culfre, columba, a dove, a pigeon. Wud-culfre, palumbus, a stock-dove, (Somner.)

And anoon he went up of the watris and syghe hevenes opened, and the Holy Goost comynge doun as a culuere and dwellynge in him.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 1.

Or as the culuer, that of the eagle is smitten
Chaucer. Of Philomene.

As too the whyte, and lately lymed house
The doues do flock in hope of better fare.
And leaue their home of culuers cleane and bare.
Turbervile. To One that upon Surmise, &c.

Like as a gosh-auke, that in foot doth beare
A trembling culuer, hauing spide on hight
An eagle, that with plumy wings doth sheare
The subtile ayre, stouping with all his might.
The quarrey throwes to ground with full despight;
And to the battell doth herself prepare.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 7.

—— Whence borne on liquid wing
The sounding culver shoots; or where the hawk,
High in the beetling cliff his aery builds.
Thomson. Spring.

CU'LVERIN. Fr. Coulevrine; It. Colubrina; Sp. Culebrina.

A bombard, long and thin, which is now also called serpentina, from the shape of a serpent, (colubri vel serpentis). Junius.

They haue faire ordinance of brasse of all sorts, bases, fauicons, minions, sakers, culuerings.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 316.

As there great culuerings for battery bent,
And leuel'd all against one certaine place,
Doe all attonce their thunders rage forth-rent,
That makes the wals to stagger with astonishment.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 10.

Captain Zanchy, who took in Marsey Fort and Island, found there two culverins, two sacres, and one drake.
Whitelock. Memorials, an. 1648.

CU'MBENT, adj. Lat. Cumbens, from cumbere, to lie down. See Incumbent.
Lying down, reclining.

Too cold the grassy mantle of the marle,
In stormy winters long and dreary nights,
For cumbent sheep. Dyer. The Fleece, b. i.

Bishops in cumbent attitudes and cross-legged Templars admitted no grace, nor required any.
Walpole. Anecdotes, vol. iv. c. 5.

CU'MBER. See Comber.

CU'MULATE, v. }
CUMULA'TION. }
CU'MULATIVE. } Lat. Cumulus, a heap; of unknown origin. To heap together; to pile into a heap; to collect or gather together. More usually written Accumulate, (qv.)

The defender denies any such custom; but, by the contrary, defences have severally, and without cumulation, been proponed and discussed, as in Ochiltry's process.
State Trials. Sir Robt. Spotiswood, an. 1645.

As for the knowledge which is infused by instruction, that is, cumulative, not originall; as it is in waters, which besides the head-springs, are increased by the reception of other rivers that fall into them.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. iii. c. 1.

Though the tongue spoke not, yet did his thoughts discourse, and had leisure afforded them to contemplate, part by part, all the extremes of worth and beauty, that were cumulated in Camilla.—Shelton. Don Quixote, c. 6.

They said, according to a distinction much used among them, that the king's power of calling synods and assemblies was cumulative, and not privative; that is, he might call them if he would; and appoint time and place.
Burnet. Own Time, an. 1692

CUNCTA'TION. }
CUNCTA'TOR. } Lat. Cunct-ari, atum, to tarry, to delay. From Cunctus, (i. e. conjunctus,) all together, is cunctari, which properly denotes cuncta aggredi, sive per cuncta ire; but because it is not possible to do so without length of time; hence cunctari came to signify morari—

To take time, to tarry, to delay, (Vossius.)

The swiftest animal conjoyned with that heavy body, implying that common moral, festina lente, and that celerity should alwayes be contempered with cunctation.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 2.

Being unwilling to discourage such cunctators, [they] always keep them in good hope.
Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 494.

CUND. Cundeth or cunneth, from the A. S. Cunnan, to ken, to know, or cause to know; to give notice.

They [the pilchard boates] be houering upon the coast, and are directed in their worke by a balker or huer, who standeth on the cliffe side, & from thence, best discerneth the quantitie and course of the pilcherd; according whereunto, he cundeth, as they call it, the master of each boate (who hath his eye still fixt upon him.)
Carew. Survey of Cornwall, fol. 32

CU'NNING, adj. }
CU'NNING, n. }
CU'NNINGLY. }
CU'NNINGNESS. } See To Con. Cunning, or conning, is,—knowledge, science. Cunning is now applied to—

That knowledge or skill, to that craftiness or subtilty, which is employed to deceive, to trick, to outwit, to evade.

As we ben clerkes ycnowen. cunnyng in schole.
Piers Ploughman. Crede.

And eschewe thou foltische questiouns and withouten kunnynge witynge that tho gendren chidynges.
Wiclif. 2 Tymo. c. 2.

Wherefore these articles of belefe, and all other bothe of the olde lawe and of the newe, which after the commaundment of God any man oughte to beleue, I beleue verely in my soule, as synnefull deedly wreiche, of my cunnynge and power ought to beleue, prayenge the Lord God, for his holye name, for to encrease my belefe, and help my unbelefe.
State Trials. Wm. Thorpe, an. 1407.

If I in fine may force
hir pittie by my plaint:
I shall in cunningste verse I may hir worthie prayse depaint
Turbervile. The Lover declareth how first he was taken, &c

Which tooles I openlie confesse, be not of myne owne forging, but partlie left unto me by the cunningest master, and one of the worthiest gentlemen, that ever Englande bred, Syr John Cheke.—Ascham. The Schole-master, b ii.

For all use, in all thinges, if it be not stayed by cunning, will very easely bring a man to do that thing, whatsoever he goeth about, with much ilfavorednesse and deformitye.
Id. The Schole for Shooting.

Who soeuer is desirous to reade this proposicion more at large and cunningly handled, let him but peruse the proverbe or adage it selfe in the first centurian of the fourth chyliade of that famouse Clarke Erasmus Roterodamus.
Gascoigne. Hearbe.

Yow yt can so cõningly dymynysh & adde, cut of & set on, pull out & put in, as ye haue done afore in your Augustynes allegacyons, are able ynough to shewe your conueyaunces here.—Bale. Apology, fol. 55.

Admired match! where strives in mutual grace
The cunning pencil and the comely face;
A task which thy fair goodness made too much
For the bold pride of vulgar pens to touch.
Donne. Anatomy of the World.

—— A carpenter's desert
Stands more in cunning than in power.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b xxiii.

I am a little world made cunningly
Of elements, and an angelic spright;
But black sin hath betrayed to endless night
My world's both parts, and oh! both parts must die.
Donne. Holy Sonnets, son 5.

—— The rest, in giggots cut, they spit,
Roast cunningly, draw, ſt, and feast: nought lackt to leaue alaid
Each temperate appetite —Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b ii.

Sam. How cunningly the sorceress displays
Her own transgressions to upbraid me mine?
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

You may easily guess what motions of mirth this mistake rais'd, but the Doctor by this oversight (or cunningness rather) got a supply of money.—Howell, b iv. Let. 2.

Whatever the matter was, soon after the consecration his parts sunk so fast, that in a few months he, who had passed his whole life long for one of the cunningest men in Scotland, became almost a changeling.
Burnet. Own Time, an. 1661.

All the weighty consequents
Depend upon more blind events,
Than gamesters, when they play a set
With greatest cunning at piquet —Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1.

This deplorable estate could not be more feelingly expressed than it is here, by making sin (which still remain'd in man under the law) a person, who, implacably aiming at his ruin, cunningly took the opportunity of exciting concupiscence in those to whom the law had made it mortal.
Locke. On Romans, c. 7. Notes (8)

When great policy and craft do effect nothing, but are blasted of themselves, or baffled by simplicity: when cunningly-laid designs are soon thwarted and overturned, &c.
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 11.

Where leafy branches form'd a secret shade
The painted birds their cunning fabrics made.
Fawkes. Description of May.

The fox in deeper cunning vers'd,
The beauties of her mind rehears'd,
And talk'd of knowledge, taste and sense,
To which the fair have vast pretence!—E. More, Fable 2.

Yet well he knew them always vain
Of what they strive not to attain,
And play'd so cunningly his part
That pug was rivall'd in his art —Id. Ib.

CUP, v. }
CUP, n. }
CU'PBOARD, v. }
CU'PBOARD, n. } A. S. Cuppe; Dut. Kop; Ger. Kopf; Fr. Coupe; It. Coppa; Sp. Copa. Wachter thinks it so called, a notione cavitatis.

A Cup-board,—a place, a closet, for cups or vessels; things placed in cups or vessels, or other articles.

Cupping-glass,—so called, says Minshew, because made of glass, and deepe and hollow like a cup: hence, to cup, to draw blood in such glasses, (otherwise from the Fr. Couper, to cut, to make an incision.)

Drink hayl, quoth thys kyng agen, & bid hire drinke anon.
The coupe he nom seththe of hire among hem echon
And custe hire, & sette hire adoun, & glad dronk hire hail.
R. Gloucester, p. 113.

—— And gaf hem echone
Couppes of clene gold, and coppes of selver.
Piers Ploughman, p. 39.

At feyres and at full ales, fyllen the cuppe.—Id. Crede.

And he took the cuppe and dide thankyngis and gaf to hem and seide, drynke ye alle therof —Wicliff. Matt. c 26.

And he toke y^e cup, and thanked, and gaue it them, saying drynche of it euery one —Bible, 1551. Ib.

Hire over lippe wiped she so clene,
That in hire cuppe was no ferthing sene
Of grese, whan she dronken hadde hire draught.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v 131.

The cup is all that euer him pleaseth,
And also that hym most displeaseth.
It is the cup whom he serueth,
Whiche all cares from hym keruеth.—Gower. Con. A. b.vi.

I trust to see the time, when they that now are vp
May feele the whirle of fortune's wheele and taste of sorrowes cup.—Gascoigne. Flowers.

The Erle of Arrondel was chiefe butler on whō xii. citizens of London did giue their attendaunce at the cupbord. The Earl of Darby cupberer.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 25.

Then hastely the clerke tooke out, and leide forth on a cupborde diverse rollis and writings
State Trials. William Thorpe, an 1407.

Where were prouided for him two chambers richly hanged and decked, ouer and aboue the gallant furniture of the whole house, together with an ample and rich cupboord of plate of all sortes, to furnish and serue him at all meales
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 287.

Howbeit at length Stoslaus was slayne by his foe, who making a drinking cup of his skull, engraved thereupon in golden letters this sentence "Seeking after other mens, he lost his own."—Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 221.

In thy fattes our cares be drown'd,
With thy grapes our haires be crown'd,
Cup vs till the world go round,
Cup vs till the world go round.
Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act ii sc 7.

Men. There was a time when all the bodies members
Rebell'd against the belly: thus accus'd it
That only like a gulfe it did remaine
I'th midd'st o th' body, idle and vnactiue,
Still cubbording the viand, neuer bearing
Like labour with the rest.—Id. Coriolanus, Act i. sc 1

And next unto them went other that carried plate, made and wrought after antiek fashion, and notable cups of the ancient kings of Macedon, as the cup called Antigonus, and another Seleucus and to be short, all the whole cubboord of plate of gold and silver of King Perseus.
North. Plutarch, p. 219.

The maior to attend in his own person as chiefe cupwarder (charged with the cupboard royall) as well in the hall at dinner, to serve the king in a cup of gold with spices, and for his fees to haue the said cup, and a water spout pot of gold thereunto belonging, when he took his leave at night.
Speed. Rich. II. b ix c. 13.

The clotted blood lies heavy on his heart,
Corrupts, and there remains in spite of art,
Nor breathing veins, nor cupping will prevail.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. iii.

Him, the damn'd doctors and his friends immur'd,
They bled, they cupp'd, they purg'd, in short they cur'd.
Pope. Horace, Ep. 2.

With other victual which anon
We further shall dilate upon,
When of his hose we come to treat,
The cupboard where he kept his meat.
Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2.

When the ava is ready, cups of it are handed about to those who do not join the song, which they keep in their hands until it is ended; when, uniting in one loud response, they drink off their cup.—Cook. Voyages, vol. vii. b. v. c. 8.

Where is the dappled pink, the sprightly rose?
The cowslip's golden cup no more I see:
Dark and discolour'd every flower that blows,
To form the garland, Elegy! for thee!
Shenstone, Elegy 8.

May heav'n (its all I wish for) send
One genial room to treat a friend,
Where decent cupboard, little plate,
Display benevolence, not state.—Green. The Spleen.

CUPIDITY, n. Fr. Cupidité; It. Cupidità, Sp. Cupididad; Lat. Cupiditas. from cupere, to covet; plus est cupere, quam velle, (Vossius.) To covet, is more than to wish.

An eager desire, covetousness.

For that tyraunt blynded and glutted with the cupiditie of rulynge and soueraygntie commanded Edward my brother and me to be slaine and dispatched oute of this mortall lyfe.
Hall. Hen. VII. an. 11.

O though this be not your actuall crime, yet it is an aptitude thereunto, for while you are thus amused, the serpent covertly windeth into your heart, first by blandishments he intangleth your reason, and then by fallacies he diverteth your fear, affirming you shall not surely die, and thus sharpens the curiosity while he suggesteth the cupidity, and by these degrees presenteth the fruit, and putteth you out of the garden.—Mountague. Devoute Ess. Treat. 13 s. 6.

CU'POLA. }
CU'POLAED. } It. Cupola; Sp. Cupula; Lat. Fornix, testudo. Dim. of It. Cupo, concavus, profundus, (Menage,—L'Origini della Ling. Ital.) Skinner calls it, "Turris rotunda fornicata." The word he considers to be pure Italian. See the quotation from Evelyn.

They did likewise cover (especially temples, and such magnificent and sacred buildings,) with a cupola, which is that dome or hemispherical concave made in resemblance of the heavens, and admitting the light at the top centre or navil only, without any lantern, as is to be seen in that incomparable piece of the Pantheon yet extant.
Evelyn. Of Architects and Architecture

Now hast thou chang'd thee, saint; and made
Thyself a fane that's cupola'd.—Lovelace. Luc. P p 18.

The famous cupola painter of these times, to show the grandeur and boldness of his figures, hath a horn in his mouth, which he seems to wind with great strength and force.—Tatler, No. 153.

Here they meet a cave of about ten yards deep, and fifteen broad, being in shape like an oven or cupola, having a hole at the top, which is near eight yards over.
Boyle Works, vol. v. p. 703.

CU'PEL, n. }
CU'PEL, v. }
CUPELLA'TION. } Fr. Coupelle. The little ashen pot or vessel, wherein goldsmiths melt, or fine their metals, (Cotgrave.)

In the assay-master's trade, the quick melting down of ores, and cupelling of them, or at least of metals, in a trice, without bellows or furnace.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii p. 453

We took a drachm of filings of zinck or spelter, and having put it upon a cupel under a muffler, we kept it there in a cupelling fire about three hours (having occasion to continue the cupelation so long for other trials) then taking it off the cupel, we found it to be caked into a brittle and dark coloured lump, which looked as if the filings had been calcined.—Id. Ib. vol. iii p. 713.

CU'PREOUS. Lat. Cupra, copper: Coppery. See COPPER.

You will have the steel almost in a trice, overlaid with a reddish substance, which, by its colour and other signs appears manifestly to be cupreous.
Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 92.

CUR, n. }
CU'RRISH. }
CU'RRISHLY. }
CU'RRISHNESS. }
CU'RRSHIP. } Dut. Korr; perhaps from the Ger. Kirren, to snarl.

A snarler, a growler; a mere snarler, (sc.) without courage to bite. Applied to—

Any snarling, angry-minded, yet cowardly, person.

As curres from careyne, that is cast in diches.
Piers Ploughman. Crede.

Who though he be a periurde man of currishe kindred borne,
All gored in his brother's blood,
a runagate forlorne. Drant. Horace, b. ii. Sat. 5.

No savage beast doth force a man a whit,
That loues him not we see the dogged curre
Fawns not on him that with the whip doth smite,
The horse hates him that pricks him with the spurre.
Turberville. To his friend T.

These tidyngs were ioyfull to the Duke of Burgoyne, as to hym whiche (according to the old prouerbe) hated the Earl of Warwycke, worse than the curre dogge, or serpent.
Hall. Edw. IV. an. 9.

Thus curst curres after they have spent and discharged their choler and anger upon the cudgels or stones, which have been thrown at them, become thereby more gentle and tractable to men.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 171.

—— But at last, when their cur-like presumes,
More urg'd, the more forborne; his spirits and rattle their fumes,
And he revokt his active strength; turn'd head, and did repell
The horse troopes that were new made in: twixt whom the fight grew fell.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. ii

O lawlesse paunch! the cause of much despight,
Through raunging of a currish appetite,
When spleenish morsels cram the gaping maw,
Withouten diet's care or trencher-law.
Bp. Hall, b. iv. Sat 4

Bishop Bonner being restored againe would not suffer the brother and natural sister of Bishop Ridley, and other his friends, not onely not to enjoy that which they had by the said their brother Bishop Ridley, but also currishly without all order of law or honesty, by extort power wrested from them all the liuings they had.
Fox. Martyrs. Life of Bp. Ridley, p. 1[illegible].

Diogenes though he had wit, by his currishness got him the name of dog: and coming once to a feast, the company called him so, and threw him bones.

Feltham, pt. ii. Resolve 69.

This worthy knight being then but a stripling had occasion to enquire which was the way to St. Ann's Lane, upon which the person whom he spoke to, instead of answering his question called him a young popish cur, and asked him who made Ann a saint.—Tatler, No. 125.

Therefore men usually deal with such currish sharp natures as they do with mastiffs, they are fain to stroak them, tho' they deserve to be cudgelled.—South, vol. VII. Ser. 8.

How durst th', I say, oppose thy curship
'Gainst arms, authority, and worship.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2.

At Bruin flies the slavering, snarling cur,
But only fills his famish'd jaws with fur.

Falconer. The Demagogue.

CU'RATE, n. } It. and Sp. Curato; Mid.
CU'RATESHIP. } Lat. Curatus. A curate—
One to whom the cure and healing of souls is committed. And see the quotation from Blackstone.

When thou shalt be shriven of thy curat, tell him eke all the sinnes that thou hast don sith thou were laste shriven.

Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

Hee would as Sait Peter byddeth, that euery man should be able to gyue a reason of hys fayth and hope vnto euerye man that woulde ask him, and that the curate shoulde be ready to teach the ignoraunt yt that is yet vntaught.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 831.

In the meane time to live in good estate,
Loving that loue and hating those that hate;
Being some honest curate or some viker,
Content with little in condition sicker.

Spenser. Mother Hubberd's Tale.

Such was her concern for the souls of her neighbours, that when her husband's infirmities made him, upon occasions, unable to visit the sick, and that the curate was accidentally from home, she would procure this assistance, when to be had, from others.—Nelson. The Life of Bull.

But now should fortune shift the scene,
And make thy curateship a dean.—Swift. The Parson's Case

A curate is the lowest degree in the church: being in the same state that a vicar was formerly, an officiating temporary minister, instead of the proper incumbent.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 11.

N. B. never to transcribe any more from Calamy: Mrs. Pilcocks, at my curacy, having one volume of that author lying in her parlour window.—Idler, No. 33.

CURB, v. } Fr. Courbe; Sp. Corbar;
CURB, n. } Lat. Curvare, to curve, bow or CU'RBING, n. } bend. See the quotations from CU'RBED, adj. } Holland's Plutarch, and Ray.
To bend or bow; to bend or bow, (sc.) to the will; to guide or regulate; to manage, to control, to check, to restrain.

He curbeth and restraineth persons of ambitious and aspiring mindes, who (as he coniectureth) after his death might worke some innouations in the common wealth, or disturb the kingdomes.—Hacklugt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 861.

I know your nature's sweet enough, and tender,
Not grated on, nor curb'd: do you love your mistress?

Beaum. & Fletch. Monsieur Thomas, Act i. sc. 2.

Old. K. I'll curb her for't, can he be but recover'd,
He shall have her, and she shall be dutiful,
And love him as a wife too.

Id. Wit at several Weapons, Act v. sc. 1.

The steed was tam'd and fitted to the field,
That serves a subject to the rider's laws,
He that before ran in the pastures wild,
Felt the stiff curb control his angry jaws.

Drayton, Eclogue 4.

Now by right lines we behold things, some in the air, and others thorow transparent stones and horns, for that all these consist of very subtle parts: by crooked and curbed lines, we look within the water.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 678.

As bodies that are crooked, disdain not to be brac'd in steel, that they may become straight: so the mind that is warping to vice, should not think much to be kept upright by the curbings and the stroaks of adversity.

Feltham, pt. ii. Resolve 57.

For though the course of the sun be curbed between the tropicks, yet are not those parts directly subject to his perpendicular beams, either unhabitable, or extremely hot, as the ancients fancied.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

He had the will of his maid before he could speak or go, he had the mastery of his parents ever since he could prattle; and why, now he is grown up, is stronger and wiser than he was then, why, now of a suddain must he be restrained and curbed?—Locke. Of Education, § 35.

For who but a poltroon, possess'd with fear,
Such haughty insolence can tamely bear?
Command thy slaves: my freeborn soul disdains
A tyrant's curb; and restif breaks the reins.

Dryden. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

It [Collier's attack upon the stage] obliged the succeeding dramatic poets to curb that propension to indecency, which had carried some of their predecessors so far beyond the bounds of good taste and good manners.—Beattie. On Truth.

CURD, v. } See CRUDE.
CURD, or CRUD, n. } To form into coagulated masses
CU'RDIRD. } of gore (cruoris), of blood; and CU'RDLE, or CRU'DLE, v. } then, generally—to concrete or coagulate.

Curdle or crudle, is the diminutive. Some editors of Shakespeare have altered curdied in Coriolanus, to curdled; but not Mr. Steevens.

Hast thou not milked me, as it were milleke: and turned me to cruddes like chese!—Bible, 1551. Job, c. 10.

Yet I express to you a mother's care,
(God's mercie, maiden) do's it curd thy blood
To say I am thy mother!—Shakes. All's Well, Act i. sc. 3.

Corio. The noble sister of Publicola:
The moone of Rome: chaste as the isicle
That's curdied by the frost, from purest snow,
And hangs on Dian's temple: deere Valeria.

Id. Coriolanus, Act v. sc. 3.

Being put into milke, it will not suffer it to turn or soure, it keepeth it from quailing & curding: which is the reason that they who use ordinarily to drinke milke, take mints therewith, for fear it should coagulate or crudle in their stomacke, and put them in daunger of suffocation.

Holland. Plinie, b. xx. c. 14.

Now by my sheephook, here's a tale alone,
Learn me the same, and I will give thee hire.
This was as good as curds for our Joan,
When at a night we sitten by the fire.

Drayton, Eclogue 4.

——— With a crew
Of hungry whelpes, his battalious bold brood,
Whose clawes were newly dipt in cruddy blood.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 3.

Then curds and cream, the flower of country fare
And new-laid eggs, which Baucis' busy care
Turn'd by a gentle fire, and roasted rare.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. viii.

It [milk] differs from a vegetable emulsion by coagulating into a curdy mass with acids, which chyle and vegetable emulsion will not.—Arbuthnot. On Aliments, c. 4.

To day a mighty hero comes, to warm
Your curdling blood, and bid you, Britons, arm.
To valour much he owes, to virtue more.
He fights to save, and conquers to restore.

Garth. Prologue designed for Tamerlane.

There are divers things, that seem to argue spirit of wine, as inflammable as it is, to abound with a piercing salt, and that such saline corpuscles may suffice to curdle whites of eggs, our freshly-mentioned experiment of curdling the white of an egg with spirit of salt does sufficiently declare.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 417.

CURE, v. } Fr. Curer; Sp. Curar; It.
CURE, n. } Curare; Lat. Curare, to take
CU'RABLE. } care. Vossius thinks, cer-
CU'RABLENESS. } tainly from Gr. Κηρ, the heart.
CURA'TION. } Tooke, from the "A.S. Kar-ian,
CU'RATIVE. } curare, advertere, accurare, to
CURA'TOR. } take care or heed, to regard,
CURA'TRIX. } to mind, to attend." (Somner.)
CU'RER. } By Chaucer, Joye, and other
CU'RING, n. } older writers, cure and care
CU'RELESS. } seem used indiscriminately.
(See CURATE.) Cure is now—consequentially—
To heal, to recover, to restore to a sound or healthy state.

For clergie is Cristes vikery, to comfort and to cure.

Piers Ploughman, p. 233.

And a womman that hadde a flux of blood twelve yeer, and hadde spendid al hir catel in lechis, and sche myghte not be cured of ony.—Wiclif. Luke, c. 8.

Construwe that as you list, I doe not cure.

Chaucer. Prol. to the Legend of Good Women.

After hir craft [appertaineth, sc. to Physiciens] to don gret diligence unto the cure of hem which that they han in her governance.—Id. The Tale of Melibeus.

Of studie toke he moste cure and hede.

Id. Prologue to Canterbury Tales, v. 306.

But I may not endure that thou dweil
In so vnskilful an opinion
That of thy wo nis no curacion.—Chaucer. Troilus, b. i.

Of surgerie he knewe the cures.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

Phisike hath done the beaines
Of sondry cures many one
To make hym holle. Id. Ib. b. v.

Though these and other like
by processe are procurde,
Yet naythelesse my festred wonde
can not in time be curde.

Turbervile. That Time conquereth all Things.

And eke the balefull blowe
so grieuous that was thought,
Full quickly curde by surgion's sleight,
if he were quickly sought.

Id. That it is hurtfull to conceale, &c.

This counsell of Daniel geuen to the kyng declareth, (not straightly to require of the kynge and princes not onely the obedience of his ten commandements but also princely iustice, that is, the diligent cure and charge of his chirche.

Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 4.

Wherfore in the night when he was asleepe, his wife loosed the bandes of the wound, first her husband not perceiuing, and afterward dissembling, and so by little and little sucked & spitted out the poyson and prepared the wound curable & ready to the plaincion.

Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. ii. c. 4.

All other thinges concernynge thys matter, partayn to the part curatiue, whiche treateth of healynge of sycknes

Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. iii.

——— My glasse presented vnto me,
The cureless wound, that bleedeth day and night.

Surrey. Bonum est mihi, &c.

He that by easie prayers and a seldom fast, by the scattering of a little alms, and the issues of some more natural vertue thinks to cure his evil nature, does fortifie his indisposition, as a stick is hardned by a little fire, which by a great one is devoured.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 10.

By these books and resolutions of the judges it is clear, that the appropriator was the incumbent parson, and had the cure of the souls of the parishioners.

Spelman. English Works, Pref. p. 10.

And so did [Galerius] swarme with wormes, that being not curable neither by surgerie nor physicke, he confessed that it happened for his crueltie toward the Christians, and so called in his proclamations against them.—Fox. Martyrs. The Difference between the Church of Rome, &c. p. 28.

But if with too much braine, and too little blood, they do [run mad] I le be a curer of madmen.

Shakespeare. Troyl. & Cress. Act v. sc. 1.

I can be content to be let blood in the arme or foot, for the curing of the head or heart.

Bp. Hall. Heaven upon Earth, s. 22.

None else there is gives comfort to my grief,
Nor my mishaps amended with my moan,
When heaven and earth have shut up all relief,
Nor care avails what cureless now is grown.

Drayton, Eclogue 10.

If Peter and John cured the lame man by the strength of imagination; why have no persons ever since cured those whose welfare they have as heartily desired as ever they could do his.—Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 9.

I shall now only tell you in general, that on the one side I think the arguments, which Helmont and others draw from the providence of God, for the curableness of all diseases, are not very cogent and somewhat irreverent, so on the other side, I am not much convinced by the grand argument alleged against Paracelsus, and the chymists that hold all diseases to be in their own nature curable, namely, that they themselves many of them, (no nor even their very master) lived not to the age attained by many strangers to chymistry.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 110.

The curative indications are wholly to be directed to the invigorating and strengthening the blood.

Sydenham. Works, p. 280.

Seeing the above mentioned strangers are like to continue here yet a while, at the least some of them, the society shall much stand in need of a curator of experiments.

Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 147.

That nature of Hippocrates, that is the curatrix of diseases, αι φυσεις των νουσων ιατροι, and that Archeus of the chymists or Paracelsians, to which all medicaments are but subservient, as being able to effect nothing of themselves without it.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 167.

It is a great misfortune to a young clergyman, when he is confined to a country cure, to be destitute of such books as are necessary to enable him to make any considerable advance in his studies of divinity, to which other parts of learning contribute their aid and assistance, and therefore consequently are not to be neglected.

Nelson. Life of Bp. Bull.

Satire throws by her arrows on the ground,
And if she cannot cure, she will not wound.

Churchill. The Candidate.

For the proper cure of such prejudices, as I take it, is to be made by application of those truths that are common to all climes: not by the partial manners or opinions which arise out of them in this or that more polished society.
Hurd. On Foreign Travel, Dial. 3.

CU'RFEW, n. From the Fr. Couvrir le feu; cover the fire, (Minshew;) extinguish it, put it out. See the quotation from Speed.

The dede slepe, for wery besinesse,
Fell on this carpenter, right as I gesse,
Abouten curfew-time, or litel more.
Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3643.

Who ever gives a paire of velvet shooes
To th' Holy Rood, or liberally allowes
But a new rope to ring the courre-feu-bell,
But he desires that his great deed may dwell,
Or graven in the chancel-window-glasse,
Or in his lasting toumbe of plated brasse.
Bp. Hall, b. iii. Sat. 4.

Disarming the English [Wm. I.] he commaunded euery house-holder to put out both fire and candle at eight of the clocke at night, at which houre, in euery city, towne, & village, he caused a bell to be rung of the French then called Couerfeu (that is couer-fire) partly yet in practise, and in name very neere, commonly called Curfue.—Speed, b. ix. c. 2.

In that coarse age were princes fond to dwell
With meagre monks, and haunt the silent cell:
Sent from the Monarch's to the Muse's Court,
Their meals were frugal, and their sleeps were short;
To couch at curfew-time they thought no scorn,
And froze at matins every winter morn.
Tickell. On Queen Caroline's rebuilding, &c. at Oxford.

CURIA'LITY. Fr. Curial; Lat. Curialis, from Curia, the court.
Of or pertaining to the court.

I come to the last of those things which I propounded, which is, the Court and Curiality.
Bacon. Advice to Sir G. Villiers.

CU'RIOUS, adj. } Fr. Curieux; It. and Sp. Curioso; Lat. Curiosus, from Cura. (See CURE.) Curious is used by old writers as equivalent to—CU'RIOUSLY.
CU'RIOUSNESS.
CURIO'SITY.
CURIO'SO.
Care-ful, heed-ful; full of care, of anxiety, of nicety, (sc.) in the performance or execution of any thing; and thus, accurate, exact, nicely, highly finished.
Careful, or anxious, (sc.) to know, to learn, to understand; and thus, inquisitive.

Also thei idel lernen to go aboute housis, not oonli idil but ful of wordis and curious spekynge thingis that bihoueth not.—Wiclif. Tymothy, c. 5.

For we han herd, that summe among ghou goen in reste and no thing worchen but doen curiousli.—Id. 2 Thess. c. 3.

Yf he ne haue rent or such a thing
Although he be religious
And God to seruen curious
Thus mote he done, or do trespas.—Chaucer. R. of the R

And eraft of mannes hond so curiously
Arrayed had thus gardin trewely,
That never was ther gardin of swiche pris,
But if it were the verray paradis.
Id. The Frankeleines Tale, v. 11,221.

And thus he went forth his weie
Alone, as a knight auenturous,
And in his thought was curious
To witte, what was best to do.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

I maruell then why he is so curious to cause vs to worship the saintes yt are asleepe.—Frith. Workes. p. 103.

Curiously I haue regarded, that Rome beginneth to declyne, when our senate fayleth of meke and wise senatours, and multiplieth with these serpentines.—Golden Boke, c. 7.

It is not therefore your part to knowe, what yeare, what moneth, or what houre, that kingdom of Israel shal cum, which thyngis ye foolysh caikers curiously seke for.
Udal. Acles, c. 1.

And therewithall came curiousnesse and carped out of frame,
The audience laught to hear the strife, as they beheld the same.—Vncertaine Auctors. A Prayse of Mrs. R.

Be diligent therfore that those be not deceaued with curiousnes. For mē of no small reputation haue bene deceaued with their owne sophistry.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 67.

But alas, it euer was and shall be that ye greater nōber receaue the wordes for a newnesse and curiositie (as they say) and to seme to be somewhat and that they haue not gone to schole in vayne.—Id. Ib. p. 238.

Many other curiosities may be required, which for the nonce I did not set downe, as well for that the intent I had principally was to satisfie your doubt touching the spicerie, as for that I lack leasure and time.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 220

Man is read in his face: God in his creatures, but not as the philosopher, the creature of glory reads him: but, as the divine, the servant of humility: yet even he must take care, not to be too curious.—B. Jonson. Discoveries.

And each one had a little wicker basket,
Made of fine twigs, entrayled curiously,
In which they gather'd flowers to fill their flasket:
And with fine fingers cropt full feateously
The tender stalkes on hie.—Spenser. Prothalamion.

First granting, as I do, it was a weakness
In me, but incident to all our sex,
Curiosity, inquisitive, importune
Of secrets, then with like infirmity
To publish them, both common female faults.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

Desire, to know why, and how, curiosity; such as in no living creature but man: so that man is distinguished, not only by his reason, but also by this singular passion, from all other animals; in whom the appetite of food, and other pleasures of sense, by predominance, take away the care of knowing causes: which is a lust of the mind, that by a perseverance of delight in the continual and indefatigable generation of knowledge, exceedeth the short vehemence of any carnal pleasure.—Hobbs. Of Man, pt. i. c. 6.

Ah curiousnesse, first cause of all our ill,
And yet the plague which most torments us still!
Stirling. Doome's-day. The first Houre.

In suffering such a crew of riotous gallants,
Not of the best repute, to be so frequent
Both in your house and presence, this, 'tis rumour'd
Little agrees with the curiousness of honour,
Or modesty of a maid.
Massinger. The Parliament of Love, Act i. sc. 4.

The remarkable smoothness of that language, I confess, might excite some people to learn it out of curiosity; but the Tonquinese are not so curious.
Dampier. Voyage, an. 1688.

I shall now add, that having enquired of one of the curiousest and most observing makers of steel tools, whether he did not find a difference in the employing of pump-water, or river-water in giving them their temper, he satisfied me that he did so.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 413.

It is true our bodies are made of very coarse materials, of nothing but a little dust and earth, yet they are so wisely contrived, so curiously composed, so neatly, so artificially, so admirably ordered and put together, that we cannot but acknowledge and admire the wisdom and power of him that made them, in every part of them
Bp. Beveridge, vol. ii. Ser. 107.

What a ridiculous question would this be to him, who knows that, in what we call spoil, he pursues the rational purposes of his own art: that, to the excellence of the metal, he may also add the curiousness of the figure
South, vol. viii. Ser. 11.

——— The spacious west,
And all the teeming regions of the south
Hold not a quarry, to the curious flight
Of knowledge, half so tempting or so fair
As man to man.—Akenside. Pleasures of Imagin. b. iii.

Instead of striving which shall produce the brightest tint, or curiously trifling, shall give the gloss of stuffs, so as to appear real, let their ambition be directed to contend, which shall dispose his drapery in the most graceful folds, which shall give the most grace and dignity to the human figure.
Sir J. Reynolds, Disc. i.

He has, likewise, a complete service of Corinthian metal, which though he admire as a curiosity, is far from being his passion.—Melmoth. Pliny, b. iii. Let. 1.

CURL, v. } Skinner suspects that there
CURL, s. formerly existed in A. S. the CU'RLING, s. verb Cyrl-an, crispare; formed
CU'RLY. from the verb Cyrr-an, vertere, to turn. Chaucer writes it, Crulle.
To turn, to writhe.

Now was ther of that chirche a parish clerk
The which that was yeleped Absolon
Crulle was his here, and as the gold it shon.
Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3314.

Behold, behold, they neuer stand content,
With God, with kinde, with any help of arte,
But curle their locks with bodkins and with braids.
Gascoigne. Epilogue.

Thy curling, and thy cost, thy friesling and thy fare,
To court to court with al those tois, and there set forth such ware. Id. A Challenge to Beautie.

Her lords and ladies all this while deuise
Themselues to setten forth to stranger's sight;
Some frounce their curled haire in courtly guise,
Some pranke their ruffes, and others trimly dight
Their gay attire: each others greater pride does spite.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4.

Shee as a vail down to the slender waste
Her unadorned golden tresses wore
Disheveld, but in wanton ringlets wav'd
As the vine curls her tendrils.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. iv

——— And himselfe he threw upon the shore,
Lay, as laid out for funerall. Then tumbl'd round, and tore
His gracious curles.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xviii.

——— Who the purple beakes
Of ships did neuer see: nor that which breakes
The waues in curles, which is a fan like oare,
And serues as wings, with which a ship doth soare.
Id Ib. Odyssey, b. xxiii.

If you please to compare the Roman names that seeme so stately, because you vnderstand them not, you will disdaine them in respect of our meanest names; for what is Crispus but curle-pate.—Camden. Remaines. Surnames.

Seas would be poole, without the brushing air,
To curl the waves, and sure some little care
Should weary nature so, to make her want repair.
Dryden. The Flower and the Leaf.

Their hair is black, straight, and strong, commonly cut short on the hind part, with the rest tied on the crown of the head: but some have it of a curling disposition, or of a brown colour.—Cook. Voyage, vol. v. b. i. c. 8.

As the fair offspring of the sylvan grace
With matchless swiftness speeds along the race,
His golden tresses wav'd; his curls behind
Flow loosely down, and dance upon the wind.
Hart. The Sixth Thebaid of Statius.

The general colours of it are black and brown, growing to a tolerable length, and very crisp and curly.
Cook. Voyage, vol. iv. b. iii. c. 6.

CU'RMU'DGEON. Fr. Cœur, the heart, and mechant, or meschant, have been suggested. "Meschant," Cotgrave explains, "wicked, paltry, curst, harsh, froward." Cur-mudgeon may be a corruption of curr, and manger, from the story of the dog or cur in the manger. Holland renders the Lat. Frumentarius (i. e. corn-merchant, the s. negotiator, being understood) in the two instances quoted below, Corn-mudgin. In Pliny's Nat. Hist. (b. viii. c. 44.) he renders the same word, corne-maister. Applied to—
One who is covetous to acquire, covetous to keep, what he cannot enjoy.

Being but a riche corne-mudgin, that with a quart (or measure of corne of two pounds) had bought the freedome of his fellow-citizens.—Holland. Livie, p. 150.

The ediles curule, hung up twelve brazen shields, made of the fines that certein cornmudgins paid for hourding up and keeping in their graine.—Id. Ib. p. 1004.

A soldier is in peace a mockery, a very town-bull for laughter; unthrifts, and landed babies are prey, cormud geons lay their baits for.—Ford. The Lady's Trial, Act v. sc. 1.

Now wilt thou find him a cormudgin
If thou dispatch it without grudging.—Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 2.

They'll think me grown a meer cormudgeon.
Dryden. The Kind Keeper, Act iv. sc. 1.

CU'RRENT, s. } Fr. Courant; It. Corrente,
CU'RRENT, adj. Sp. Corriente; Lat. Currens,
CU'RRENTLY. pres. part. of currere, to run.
CU'RRENTNESS. Current, the noun—
CU'RRENCY. Running (water); the stream of a river; any passage, course or progression. The adjective—
Flowing, passing like a stream, in an uniform, uninterrupted course; passing generally, commonly, without hinderance or opposition.
Brown uses curricle,—a small or short course.

Like the current fire, that renneth
Upon a corde as thou hast sene.—Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

Also if there commeth any whale within the current of the same, they make a pitifull crie.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 311.

It was desyryd of the sayd prouoste that he shuld suffre the foresayd money to ronne and be current through the cytie.—Fabyan. John, an. 7.

Which such disgrace unto the queen appears,
That (all incens'd with an ambitious rage)
She doth conspire to have him made away,
As one that staid the current of her sway.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. v

——— Sometimes, she stood cleare
He was her husband; sometimes, the ill weare
His person had put on, transform'd him so,
That yet his stampe would hardly current go.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey b. xxiii.

What shall I name these current traverses,
That on a triple dactyl foot do run,
Close by the ground, with sliding passages,
Wherein that dancer greatest praise hath won,
Which with best order can all order shun
Davies. Orchestra, s. 69.

All truth is sweet: it is indeed God's, not ours, whereesoever it is found; the king's coyne is current, though it be found in any impure channell.

Bp. Hall. The Old Religion, c. 1.

We have found out favourable interpretations, and glosses, restrictions, and evasions, to wind ourselves out of them, to shift them all off and put them by, and yet pass for sound and currant Christians.—Hales. Rem. Ser. Of Duels.

If by public law the mint were ordained to be onely supplied by our stanneries, how currently would they pass for more precious than silver mines?

Bp. Hall. Select Thoughts.

And thus when substantialnesse combineth with delightfulnesse, fullnesse with finenesse, seemelinesse with portlinesse, and currentnesse with stayednesse, how can the language which consisteth of all these, sound other than most full of sweetness.

Camden. Rem. Excellencie of the English Tongue.

Like Egypt's Nile the bounteous current shows,
Dispersing blessings wheresoe'er it flows.

Yalden. To Sir Humphry Mackworth.

But besides that this seems to have a more harsh and forced sense, the other interpretation is more consonant to the style and current of the sacred Scriptures.

Locke. Ephesians, c. 1. Note (b) 14.

For the form of the passports, let me but bring one drawn up as we desire it, and in terms current with the forms of their state, and it shall be immediately agreed to.

Sir W. Temple. To Arlington, Sept. 1668.

On the contrary, words are offered to the publick by every private man, coined in his private mint, as he pleases; but 'tis the receiving of them by others, their very passing, that gives them their authority and currency, and not the mint they come out of.

Locke. Second Reply to the Bishop of Worcester.

Upon a curricle in this world depends a long course of the next, and upon a narrow scene here an endless expansion hereafter.—Brown. Christ. Mor. vol. ii. p. 23.

It is extremely vexatious to a man of eager and thirsty curiosity to be placed at a great distance from the fountain of intelligence; and not only never to receive the current of report till it has satiated the greatest part of the nation, but at last to find it muddied in its course, and corrupted with taints or mixtures from every channel through which it flowed.—Rambler, No. 61.

Good and bad money is offered to them, and they ought to beware of the coin which will not pass current in the republic of letters, and in the critical world, and of that which is found light when weighed in the balance of the sanctuary.

Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

"Indeed!" replied the other; "well, I do not know him myself, being a Cambridge man; but it is currently reported at Norwich that he is a methodist."

Jones. Life of Dr. Horne.

It cannot at this time be too often repeated; line upon line; precept upon precept; until it comes into the currency of a proverb, To innovate is not to reform.

Burke. To a Noble Lord.

CU'RRY, v.
CU'RRIER.
CU'RRYING, n.
CU'RRYING, adj.

Fr. Corroyer, to curry, taw or dress, as leather, (Cotgrave.) Lat. Corium, the hide. To curry a horse, l. corium equi et dorsum fricare strigili; to rub the hide of a horse with a curry-comb.

To curry the hide, to rub it with a curry-comb; to scratch, scrub or use roughly: and, consequentially, give a good thrashing or drubbing.

The word favour, in the common expression, "to curry favour," has been supposed by Mr. Douce to be a corruption of favel, (see the quotations from Chaucer, and Udal,) a name given to yellow coloured horses, as bayard, blanchard, to bay or brown and grey. We yet, however, use in common speech, "To smooth him down," (met.) for to soothe his anger; calm his passion; to ingratiate by acts of obsequiousness or flattery. Skinner thinks, from the old Fr. Querir; Lat. Quærere, to seek after.

At Japhet was slain fauvell his stede.—R. Brunne, p. 175.

And it was maad that many daies he dwellide in Ioppe at oon Symount a coriour.—Wiclif. Dedis, c. 9.

As though he had lerned cury favel of some old frere.

Chaucer. The Marchantes Second Tale.

Nether yet let any manne curry favell with himselfe after this wise. The faute is but light, the lawe is broken in nothing but in this part.—Udal. James, c. 2.

Yea when he curried was, and dusted slicke and trimme,
I causde both hey and prouander to be allowde for him.

Gascoigne. The Complaint of the Green Knight.

Man. Your short horse is soon curried.

Beaum. & Fletch. Valentinian, Act ii. sc. 2.

We see that the very currying of horses doth make them fat and in good liking.—Bacon. Nat. Hist. § 58.

Now for matters of government, the noblemen and honest citizens did hate Alcibiades manner of rule in the commonweal, as a man most dissolute, and given to flattery, because he ever studied by all device he could, to curry favour with the common people.—North. Plutarch, p. 202.

Also there was a new act deuised and made, the old being abrogated (by the appointment of the king) for the creation of the Scottish kings in time to come, manie of the nobles rather consenting with silence, then greatlie allowing it either in harte or voices, though some curri-favours among them set forward the matter to the best of their powers.—Holinshed. Scotland. Kenneth.

He call'd to mind th' unjust foul play
He would have offer'd him that day,
To make him curry his own hide,
Which no beast ever did beside.—Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1.

Till warn'd by frequent ills, the way they found,
To lodge their loathsome carrion underground.
For, useless to the currier were their hides.

Dryden. Virgil, Geor. 3.

For this purpose [in cleaning and dressing their horses] and to remove the sweat, they [the Germans] made use of a piece of wood, formed to the shape of a sword, and known to us under the name of a scraper; and, instead of a curry-comb they put a covering upon their hands, of a rough grain, and composed of the bark of the palm-tree, with this they rubbed the coats of their horses, to give them a polish, and make them sleek and shining.

Berenger. On Horsemanship, vol. i. p. 77.

CURSE, v.
CURSE, n.
CU'RSED, adj.
CU'RSEDLY.
CU'RSEDNESS.
CU'RSER.
CU'RSING, n.

Somner has A. S. Curs-an, plectere, to torment or punish; and hence, Curs-ian, to doom to punishment, to torment or torture. Skinner thinks, from the Lat. Cruciare.

Curst is applied as an epithet to any ill-quality in excess; as ill-temper, malignity or maliciousness, vexatiousness, quarrelsomeness.

The gode bisshop of Chestre cursed this ilk Geffray
His lif out of this estre [i. e. estate] in cursyng went away.

R. Brunne, p. 123.

After that Cayin the cursede. hadde cullede Abel.

Piers Ploughman, p. 179.

For alle that ben of the werkis of lawe ben undir cure. For it is writun, ech man is cursid that abidith not in alle thingis that ben writun in the book of the lawe to do tho thingis.—Wiclif. Galathies, c. 3.

For as many as are under ye dedes of the law are under malediction. For it is wrytten cursed is every man that continueth not in all thynges whych are wrytten in the boke of the lawe.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

But no man of you suffre as a manslear, either a theef, either a cursor, either a doairer of othere menes goodis.

Wiclif. 1 Peter, c. 4.

And day they gonnen to dispise all new
Calling it traitour, envious and worse
And bitterly the daies light they corse.

Chaucer. Troilus, b. iii.

——— I trowe that he, that all his lif
Wifes hath ben, though that men woulde him rife
Into the herte, no coude in no manere
Tellen so much sorwe, as I you here
Could tellen of my wive's cursednesse.

Id. Marchantes Tale v. 9115.

Of cursing ought eche gilty man him drede
For curse wol sle right as assoiling saveth.

Id. Prologue, v. 662.

This pope tho by all weye,
That he maie worthe of violence,
Hath sent the bulle of his sentence,
With cursinge, and enterdite.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

The curst and crabbed carle that posies flings away
By this (perhaps) may find some cause with prettie floures to play.—T. C. H. in Prayse of Gascoigne's Posies.

In like maner sayth Solomon euen as a bird flying to an vncertayne place, and as any sparow flying in the ayer, so a curse in vayne cast out cometh on him who sent it.

Barnes. Workes, p. 375.

In the which time wee indured extreme stormes, with perpetual snow, where many of our men died with cursed famine, and miserable cold.—Hackluyt. Voy. vol. iii. p. 843.

Neither speke you cursedly vnto men that punysh you throughe ignorannce, but rather glorifie you the Lorde God in your heartes, whiche to his seruauntes turneth all thynges into the best, whethersoeuer chaunseth loye or aduersitie.

Udal. 1 Peter, c. 3.

I pray you master parson (quoth he) how goeth crowne now with you, whereat the priest was abashed, and would rather have lost a crowne indeede, then that his crowne should have beene so cursedly and in such wise taunted.

Wilson. The Arte of Logike, fol. 8.

And the more to shew his cursednesse, when the wyse men, that were banish, went out at one gate, there entered in at another gate all unthriftes, the whiche by Tytus his brother, had been banyshed and exiled.—Golden Boke, c. 4.

That is, he that keepeth them shall haue his life glorious according to all the promises and blessings of the law, and shal auoyde both all temporal punishments of the law & all the threatnynges and cursinges also.

Tyndall. Workes, p. 9.

Then after he [Annibal] had cursed the person of Prusias and his own realme, and called upon the Gods, protectors of the law of hospitalitie, to bear witnesse how hee had violated his faith and broken promise with him, he set the cup of poysone to his mouth, and drank it of.

Holland. Livie, p. 1056

Suf. A plague vpon them: wherefore should I curse them?
Would curses kill, as doth the mandrakes grone,
I would inuent as bitter searching termes,
As curst, as harsh, and horrible to heare,
Deliver'd strongly through my fixed teeth,
With full as many signes of deadly hate,
As leane-fac'd Enuy in her lothsome cane.

Shakespeare. 2 Part Hen. VI. Act iii. sc. 2

The rather for I earnestly beseech,
Touch you the sowrest points with sweetest termes,
Nor curstnesse grow to th' matter.

Id. Antony & Cleopatra, Act ii. sc. 1.

As rash swearing, so all cursing also, is a part of that prophanation of the name of God, which is forbidden in the text. For when men in common conversation, use curses and imprecations against their brethren; as passionate and profane men are frequently apt to do, it is either with an intention and desire that mischief might befall them; which is both malicious towards men; and also irreligiously thinking light of the curse of God: or else it is without any such desire or intention; and then it is profanely supposing God to have no regard to their behaviour.—Clarke, vol. ii. S. 125.

It now remains for you to school your child,
And ask why God's anointed he revil'd;
A king and princess dead! did Shimei worse?
The curser's punishment should fright the curse.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther

If this toil was inflicted as a curse, it is as might be expected from the curses of the Father of all Blessings, it is tempered with many alleviations, many comforts.

Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let 3.

CU'RSORY, adj.
CU'RSORILY.
CU'RSORARY.

Low Lat. Cursorius, from Currere, cursum, to run. Running, moving or changing; running over without stop or stay, hastily, swiftly; and thus, superficial, careless, heedless.

Cursory, (see the quotation from State Trials,) is contra-distinguished from Legier, (qv.)

Three of them are legiers and statesmen;—besides their cursory men.

State Trials. Of the Consp. in the Gunp. Plot, an. 1606.

France. I have but with a cursorie eye [cursorary]
O're-glanc't the articles.—Shakes. Hen. V. Act v. sc. 2.

In his passage he met a man, who had been born blinde, and he discoursed cursorily of the cause of that blindnesse.

Bp. Taylor. Great Exemplar, pt. iii. § 14.

The regard I have ever borne in my mind towards men of eminency, in times past born and bred among us, led me at my leisure hours to make cursory collections out of my books and papers of their lives and actions.

Strype. Life of Sir T. Smith, Ep. Ded

You must not read or hear them, as people are apt to do, so carelessly and cursorily, as if there was no great matter in them; but ye must attend to them with the same care and diligence, as if you heard them at the same time uttered by a voice from heaven, or published as the law was upon mount Sinai, with thundering and lightning.

Beveridge, vol. i. Ser. 38.

It is an advantage to all narrow wisdom and narrow morals, that their maxims have a plausible air, and on a cursory view, appear equal to first principles. They are light and portable.—Burke. On the Present Discontents.

CURT, adj.
CU'RTAIL, v.
CU'RTAL, n.
CURTA'IL, adj.
CURTA'ILER.
CURTA'ILING, n.
CU'RTLY.

Fr. Cour, courte, short Courtault or courtaut. A curtal, from the Lat. Curtatus, shortened, from Curtus; Gr. Κυρτος, cut short. The termination al in English, appears to have been borrowed from the Fr. Ault; and this completely discountenances the idea that tal is tail. Menage renders Courtaut by curtaldus.

"Fr. Cour,—short, brief, succinct, cutted," (Cotgrave.)

To curtail,—to shorten, to cut off, to lop off; to abridge, to abbreviate.

Fly. Old Peck.
Tip. Maestro del campo, Peck! his name is curt,
A monosyllable, but commands the horse well
B. Jonson. The New Inn, Act iii. sc. 1.

So that what the story of those times, and the plain context can give us to conjecture of the obscure and curt Ebraisms that follow, this prophet [Malachi] does not forbid putting away.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

Here Mr. Licenciat shew'd his art, and hath curtal'd, succinctly, and concisely—epitomiz'd the long story of the captive.—Gayton. Notes on Don Quixote, vol. iv. p. 15.

Clot. When a gentleman is disposed to sweare; it is not for any standers by to curtail his oathes. Ha?
Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act ii. sc. 1.

I that am curtail'd of this faire proportion,
Cheated of feature by dissembling nature.
Id. Rich. III. Act i. sc. 1.

Pist. Hope is a curtail dog in some affairs.
Id. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act ii. sc. 1.

Old Laf. I'd giue bay curtail, and his furnature,
My mouth no more were broken then these boyes,
And writ as little beard.—Id. All's Well, Act ii. sc. 3.

But matters of this moment, as they were not to be decided there by those divines, so neither are they to be determin'd here by essays and curtal aphorisms, but by solid proofs of Scripture.—Milton. An Answer to Eikon Basilikè.

Robert, the eldest sonne of King William, and of Queene Maude his wife, was surnamed Curtuoise, signifying in the old Norman French, Short-Bootes.—Speed, b. ix. c. 2.

The supplanting way indeed seems the most curt and compendious way of bringing about dishonest or dishonourable designs.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 18.

This conduct of theirs [the Greeks] betrayed a shortness of thought, and served to shew that the Latins had not been interpolators of the creed, [the Athanasian,] but that the Greeks had been curtailers.
Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 290.

Scriblers send us over their trash in prose and verse, with abominable curtailings and quaint modernisms.—Swift.

Have the burthens of the war compelled them to curtail any part of their former expenditure, which I have before observed, affords the only standard of estimating property as an object of taxation?—Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 3.

CU'RTAIN, v. } Fr. Courtine; It. and Sp. Cortina. Skinner suggests CU'RTAIN, n. } that curtain may be from court; as the Lat. Aulæum, from aula. Applied, in fortification.

To curtain, to surround with curtains; i. e. something placed, raised, or hung, or suspended for ornament, shade, shelter, or defence.

On the Frenche kynge's right hand, was another traverse tiled, and cortened all of white satten.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 24.

They [our foes] came in time, but cursed time for mee,
They came before the curtaine raysed were,
One onely foote aboue the trenches there.
Gascoigne. The Fruites of Warre.

——— Now o'er the one halfe world
Nature seemes dead, and wicked dreames abuse
The curtain'd sleepe.—Shakes. Macbeth, Act ii. sc. 1.

So when the sun in bed,
Curtain'd with cloudy red
Pillows his chin upon an orient wave.—Milton, Ode 24.

So soon as day forth-dawning from the east,
Night's humid curtain frō the heauens withdrew,
And early calling forth both mā and beast,
Commanded them their daily works renew.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 5.

Thus boasted he, but in their trenches deepe
The hidden squadrons kept themselues from scath,
The curtaine made of shields did well off keepe
Both darts and shot, and scorned all their wrath.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Bovlogne, b. xi. s. 37.

But in her temple's last recess enclos'd,
On Dulness' lap th' anointed head repos'd,
Him close she curtains round with vapours blue,
And soft besprinkles with Cimmerian dew.
Pope. The Dunciad, b. iii.

And for my beauty, that, as time shall try;
But draw the curtain first, and cast your eye:
He look'd and saw a creature heavenly fair
In bloom of youth, and of a charming air.
Dryden. The Wife of Bath's Tale.

My best instructor, Sickness, shuts the eye
From vanity, she draws the curtain round
The couch, nor gives admittance to the world
Thompson. Sickness, b i.

CU'RTSY. See COURTESY, in v. COURT.

CURVE, v. }
CURVE, n. }
CURVE, adj. }
CURVA'TION. }
CU'RVATURE. }
CU'RVEDNESS. } Fr. Courver, courber; It. Curvo; Sp. Curvo; Lat. Curvus, bowed; which Vossius thinks has the same origin as curtus, i. e. κυρτος, Eol. Κυρτος. And κυρτος, Lennep deduces from κεκυρται, 3d per. perf. pass. of κυρ-ειν, incidere, impingere. To curve, is,—
CURVILI'NEAL. }
CURVILI'NEAR, adj. }
CU'RVITY. }

To bow, to arch, to bend, to crook, to inflect, to reflect, (to curb, qv.)

And a line meeting the curve in one point, that produced does not fall within the curve is called a tangent to the curve in that point.
Maclaurin. Newton's Philos. Discoveries, b ii. c 3.

This line thus curve, and thus orbicular,
Render direct and perpendicular.
Congreve. An Impossible Thing.

As for his session we must not look upon it as determining any posture of his body, corresponding to the curvation of our limb.—Pearson. On the Creed, Art. 6.

The power which acts on a planet that is nearer the sun is manifestly greater than that which acts on a planet more remote; both because it moves with more velocity, and because it moves in a lesser orbit, which has more curvature, and separates farther from its tangent, in arcs of the same length, than a greater orbit.
Maclaurin. Newton's Philos. Discoveries, b iii. c. 3.

There is also a curvedness, which may be reduced to a fracture.—Wiseman. Surgery, b. vii. c. 1.

Thus Sir Isaac Newton saw that the curvilineal motion of the moon in her orbit, and of any projectile at the surface of the earth, were phenomena of the same kind.
Maclaurin. Newton's Philos. Discoveries, b. iii. c. 2.

The gravity of the moon suggested to him the universal gravitation of matter; and so successful an account of her motion led him to explain all the curvilinear motions in the solar system, from the same principle.—Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 3.

The joined ends of that bone and the incus receding, make a more acute angle at that joint, and give a greater curvity to the posture of the ossicles.—Holder. On Speech.

But other Thracians, who their former name
Retain'd in Asia, fulgent morions wore
With horns of bulls in imitating brass,
Curv'd o'er the crested ridge.—Glover. Leonidas, b. iv.

They have no furniture, except a few little blocks of wood, the upper side of which is hollowed into a curve, and which serve them for pillows.—Cooke. Voyage, vol. i. b. i. c. 17.

CU'RVET, v. }
CU'RVET, n. } Fr. Courbette; It. Corvetta, corvettare.

To leap as a horse does when drawn by the curb. See CURB.

Himself he on an earwig set,
Yet scarce he on his back could get,
So oft and high he did curvet,
Ere he himself could settle.—Drayton. Court of Fairy.

Sometimes he trots, as if he told the steps,
With gentle majesty, and modest pride:
Anon he rears upright, curvets and leaps,
As who would say, "Lo, thus my strength is try'd."
Shakespeare. Venus & Adonis.

When on sporting it [a lamb] is set,
It will beat you a curvet,
And at every nimble bound
Turn itself above the ground. Drayton, Nymphal 2.

Now I behold the steed curret and bound,
And paw with restless hoof the smoaking ground.
Gay. Rural Sports.

Again I put him to make curvets backwards; I use then my outward rein, and keep my hand near my body; at each cadence that the horse makes, I make him feel a time, and mark one, and every time he comes to the ground I receive or catch him as it were in my hand.
Berenger. On Horsemanship, vol. ii. p. 75.

CURU'LE, adj. A curule chair. A chair, so called because it was placed in the chariot (curru) of the consul, and other magistrates.

Upon the very calends of January, when he had sitten awhile upon his curule chaire of estate before the Temple of Jupiter Capitolinus, he resigned up the office, and substituted another in his place.—Holland. Suetonius, p. 49

No rods, nor chairs curule adorn the place,
Nor purple magistrates the assembly grace.
Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b iii.

CU'SHION. }
CU'SHIONED, adj. } Dut. Kussen; Ger. Keussen; Fr. Coussin; It. Coscino.
CU'SHIONET. } All, Skinner thinks, from the Lat. Coxa, quia coxis, i. e. natibus substernitur. Menage would prefer the Ger. verb, Keussen, but of the origin of that word he is ignorant; and Wachter confesses himself in the same predicament. It is sometimes written Quisshen, or Quisshon, (qv.)

Then said the cardinal [Wolsey] what maister doctour, had you not a sufficient scope in the Scriptures to teach the people, but that my golden shooes, my pillers, my pollaxes, my golden cushions, and my crosses did so sore offende you, that you must make us ridiculum caput amongst the people
Barnes. Life, p. 3.

The marchantes are carried in a closet which they call deling, in the which a man shall be very well accommodated, with cushions vnder his head, and couered for the defence of the sunne and raine, and there he may sleepe if he haue will thereunto.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 257.

But when the said Otho began to be so saucy to dispossesse the bishops of their cities and lands which they had incroched into their hands, they could not beare that, but incontinent they put him besides the cushion.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 718. Bishops of Rome advaunced by Emperours.

When a friend of his reprehended him for dancing beside his dignity (belike at some cushen dance) hee told him licuit, qui sapit interdiu, vix unquam nocte desipit, he that is wise in the day, may dote a little in the night
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p 399.

Couchant upon these precious cushonets
Were thousand beauties and as many smiles.
Chast blandishments, and modest cooling heats,
Harmless temptations, and honest guiles.
Beaumont. Psyche, c. 6. s. 223

A prude, at morn and evening prayer,
Had worn her velvet cushion bare;
Upward she taught her eyes to roll,
As if she watch'd her soaring soul.—Gay. The Mad Dog.

How many and doughty monarchs, in later and more polite ages, would have slept in cottages, and have worked in stalls, instead of inhabiting palaces, and being cushioned up in thrones, if this rule of government had continued in force.—Bolingbroke. A Dissertation upon Parties, Let. 13

The plump convivial parson often bears
The magisterial sword in vain, and lays
His reverence and his worship both to rest
On the same cushion of habitual sloth.—Coup. Task, b iv.

CUSP. } Lat. Cuspis, a point. ut a carus, cæspes, sic a cusu, cuspis, (Vossius.)
CU'SPIDAL. } From Cudere, cusum, to strike, to form or fashion by striking. Cocheram has "Cuspulate,—to sharpen."

This enters and raiseth up into life and beauty the whole corporeal world, orders the lowest protection of life, viz. the real cuspis of the cone infinitely multiplied, awaking that immense mist of atoms into several energies, into fiery, watery, and earthly, and placing her magic attractive points, sucks hither and thither to every centre a due proportion, and rightly disposed number of those cuspidal particles.—More. Notes on Psyche, p. 346.

Full on his cusp his angry master sate,
Conjoyn'd with Saturn, baleful both to man.
Dryden. The Duke of Guise, Act iv.

CU'STARD. Quasi gustard; perhaps from Gustare, to taste; because of the sweetnesse in taste, (Minshew.) Skinner thinks it may have had the same origin as Costard, (qv.) namely the Dut. Kost, cibus, and aerd, natura. Junius confesses that he once suspected it to be compounded of cowes and tart!

Laf. You have made shift to run into 't, bootes and spurres and all: like him that leapt into the custard
Shakespeare. All's Well that Ends Well, Act ii. sc. 3.

Pet. Why thou saist true, it is a paltrie cap,
A custard-coffen, a bauble, a silken pie.
Id. Taming of the Shrew, Act iv. sc. 3.

The inside of the fruit is full of a white soft pulp, sweet and very pleasant, and most resembling a custard of any thing, both in colour and taste; from whence probably it is called a custard-apple by our English.
Dampier. Voyage, an. 1699.

She has no desire to be praised but for her cookery; nor wishes any ill to the rest of mankind, but that whenever they aspire to a feast, their custards may be wheyish, and their pie-crusts tough.—Rambler, No. 51.

CU'STODY. } Lat. Custodia; also It. and CUSTO'DIAL. } Sp. A guard or watching, from Curare, as Perottus thinks, (Vossius;) who adds, or rather from Con, and adstare, (q.d.) Coastes.

Guard or safe-keeping, (and, consequently, imprisonment,) preservation, security, care, charge.

It neither was reason nor in any wise to be suffered, that the young king their master and kinsmanne, shoold bee in the hands and custodye of his mother's kinred, sequestred in maner frō theyr companie and attendance.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 40.

Oth. I'le know thy thoughts.
Iago. You cannot, if my heart were in your hand,
Nor shall not, whilst 'tis in my custodie.
Shakespeare. Othello, Act iii. sc. 3.

Cic. —— Fathers
Is it your pleasures they shall be committed
Unto some safe, but a free custody,
Untill the senate can determine farder?
B. Jonson. Catiline, Act v.

Lest memory unused might so fail, they permitted not commission of their lectures and instructions to the custody of writing, but delivered all in a multitude of verses and Pythagorean precepts, exactly imitating the Cabalists.
Selden. On Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 10.

Which business being over, the house ordered the sergeant at arms to deliver those of the king's judges who were in his custody, into the hands of the lieutenant of the tower.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. iii. p. 39.

Ecclesia commendata, so called in contradistinction to ecclesia titulata, is that church, which for the custodial charges and government thereof, is by a revocable collation concredited with some ecclesiastical person, in the nature of a trustee.—Letter to the Bp. of Rochester, (1773,) p. 2.

Nor is it more difficult to apprehend why the representation of his being made unto us sanctification and redemption is particularly directed to the Jews; for in their custody were deposited the living oracles, which explain that state and condition of man, from whence arises the necessity of sanctification and redemption.
Warburton. Works, vol. ix. Ser. 5.

CU'STOM, v.
CU'STOM, n.
CU'STOMABLE.
CU'STOMABLY.
CU'STOMARY.
CU'STOMARILY.
CU'STOMARINESS.
CU'STOMED, adj.
CU'STOMER.
} Fr. Coustume; It. Costume; Sp. Costumbre; Lat. Consuetudo, from Consuere, (con, or cum, and suere, which Martin conjectures is, usu ire, to go by use, to pass usually; and thus,) to do any thing usually, habitually, regularly, constantly. The verb to accustom is now commonly used. Customs are—

Certain taxes, tributes or imposts usually demanded and paid; certain laws established by long continued use. Any usual dealing, any regular or habitual practice.

To custom or accustom, (qv.)

To go or move by use, to pass usually; to do, or be wont to do, any thing constantly, habitually, regularly.

Custom-house,—at which customary taxes, &c. are paid. And To custom—

To make entry, or payment, at such place of such imports.

And he wuste, that yr Louerd in the Gospel tolde,
That he himsulf was sothnesse, & costume nout,
Ther wore luther costumes he nolde graunti nouzt,
R. Gloucester, p. 470.

But it is a custom to ghou that I delyure oon to ghou in Pask, therfore wolen ghe that I delyuere to ghou the King of the Iewis?—Wiclif. Jon, c. 18.

Ye haue a custome, that I should delyuer you one louse at Easter. Wyll ye that I louse vnto you the Kyng of the Jewes?—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And every night and day was his custume
(Whan he had leiser and vacation
From other worldly occupation)
To reden in this book of wikked wives.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6264.

This Nero had eke of a custumaunce
In youth ageins his maister for to rise.
Id. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,429.

That to doen euill is customere
And of naught els taketh hede.—Id. Rom of the Rose.

Pluto these othes ouer all
Swore of his common customaunce.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Now leie thy conscience in weight,
My good sonne, and shriue the here,
If thou were euer customere
To fals semblant in any wise. Id. Ib. b. ii.

What wise man, I pray you, would euer counsaile this thing, knowing that ill is not to be done, that good may come thereof? and especially where the ill is euident inough, and the good neither certaine nor customed to followe commonly vpon the deed.—Vives. Instruct. of a Christ. Wom. b. i. c. 10.

And if it bee found, that any goods, wares, or merchandises whatsoeuer be arrived and discharged in the countries aforesaid, belonging to our saide subiectes, not lawfully customed and acquited towarde vs of our right and custom for which, &c.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 210.

Marke wel and remēbre that we spake here of belief, & faith, not of workes and deedes, lest, after hys customable fashion, letting the beliefe go by, he answere vs with rayling vpon mannes maners, and so leade ye reader more than a mile frō the matter.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 389.

Manny tymes of wyse yonge men cometh olde fooles. And of younge fooles customably commeth wise old men.
Golden Boke, c. 14.

Moreouer also of late, the customers of the anal or petty custome & of the subsidie doe demand of them custome for kersey-clothes equal vnto the custome of those clothes, that be ful assize.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 172.

Further, as he passed by the custome-house, he espyed sitting there a certayne publicane, called Matthewe, whiche also was named Leuy, the sone of Alpheus.—Udal. Matt. c. 9.

Those ships which when you went, put out to sea,
Both to our Greenland, and Virginia,
Are now return'd, and, custom'd have their freight,
Yet you arrive not, nor return me aught.
Drayton. Of his Lady's not coming to London.

Now Morn her rosie steps in th' eastern clime
Advancing, sow'd the earthe with orient pearl
When Adam wak'd, so custom'd, for his sleep
Was aerie light. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

No common winde, no customed euent,
But they will plucke away his naturall cause,
And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs.
Shakespeare. John, Act iii. s. 4.

Now custom differeth from use, as the cause from the effect in that custom is by use, and continuance established into a law.—Raleigh. History of the World, b. ii. c. 4. s. 14.

His customable and watchful care of the king and the state still boiling within him, and having, with the blessed virgin Mary, laid up in his heart the king's so strange judgment and construction of it, he could not be at rest, till he had acquainted the foresaid lords what had passed between the king and him in private.—State Trials. Of Conspirators in the Gunpowder Plot, an. 1606.

And to these temples have the Christians customably used to resort from time to time, as unto meete places where they might with common consent praise and magnifie God's name.
Homilies. Of the Place and Time of Prayer, pt. ii.

Whereas he [Hippias] retained the same with abundant security, both for the customary fear in the people, and diligence in the guard; and was not to seek, like a younger brother, to whom the government had not continually been familiar.—Hobbes. Thucydides, b. vi.

And first, let me call you to this mart, which holds both now, and ever; if ye love yourselves, be ye customers at this shop of heaven; buy the truth.—Bp. Hall. Best Bargain.

So the Normans, whose terms were once not so much differing from ours, might not hold their assizes, or times of law, but after Easter and harvest (that is after the times of holy Church and public necessity); as appeareth by their custumary.—Spelman. The Originals of the Terms, c. 14.

Such precedents are numberless, we draw
Our right from custom; custom is a law
As high as heaven, as wide as seas or land;
As antient as the world is our command.
Lansdown. Beauty & Law.

Where I enforce the conjunction of prayer with fasting, people must not think, that by prayer is meant a formal customary attendance upon the offices of the church, undertook only out of a sordid fear of the eye of man, and then performed with weariness and irreverence, with seldom access, and more seldom devotion.—South, vol. ix. Ser. 5.

But to call God to witness to an untruth or a lye perhaps, or to appeal to him on every trivial occasion, in common discourse, customarily, without any consideration of what we say, is one of the highest indignities and affronts that can be offered him, being a sin to which there is no temptation.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

If we use the same sincerity and industry, in recommending ourselves to God, and our Lord Jesus, and procuring our own everlasting salvation, that men ordinarily and customarily do, in prosecuting any great affair in the world, that they have set their hearts upon. I say, whosoever is thus far sincere as to his spiritual concernments, shall undoubtedly go to heaven.—Sharp, vol. iii. Ser. 6.

Every Christian is infinitely concern'd more especially to watch over himself, that he be not carried away with the common stream; that the customariness of the things, and the approbation and encouragement, that they receive from the men of the world, be not a snare to him to go and do likewise.—Sharp, vol. v. Disc. 8.

This fellow had an admirable knack of fishing out the secrets of his customers, as they were under his hands. He would rub and lather a man's head, till he had got out every thing that was in it.—Guardian, No. 71.

One morn I miss'd him on the custom'd hill.
Gray. Elegy. Written in a Country Churchyard.

It was drawn from the old Germanick or Gothick customary; from feudal institutions which must be considered as an emanation from that customary; and the whole has been improved and digested into system and discipline by the Roman law.—Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. i.

CU'STREL. Fr. Coustillier, from Coustille, a kind of long poniard, used heretofore by esquires; and hence variously applied to—

An esquire of the body; an armour-bearer unto a knight. See Menage and Cotgrave.

This yere the kyng ordeined fiftie gentle menne to be speres, euery of them to haue an archer, a dimidaunce and a custrell.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 1.

CUT, v.
CUT, n.
CU'TTLE.
CU'TTEDLY.
CU'TTER.
CU'TTING, n.
CU'TTING, adj.
CU'TLER.
CU'TLERY.
CU'TLET.
} The French have Couper, which Cotgrave explains, "to cut, hack, slash, hew; to cleave, slit, launce, make an incision; also, to carve, grave, intail; also, to prune, lop or fell trees, mow corne or grasse; also, to divide, sunder, separate." The Fr. Couteau or cousteau, also, is "a knife or whittle; also, any such cutting instrument." Couper is derived by French etymologists from the Gr. Κοπτ-ειν, to cut, and Couteau, from the Lat. Cultellus; and from one of these, Skinner thinks the English verb, to cut, (written by Wiclif to kit,) may have been formed; it is generally applied when the separation is made by a keen or sharp instrument, as a knife, a sword, scissars; to cleave or separate by swift motion, to wound sharply, keenly, deeply.

To draw cuts, is an expression familiar to our oldest writers, (see the quotations from Chaucer, and Berners's Froissart,) and means to draw lots, (sc.) of papers, &c. cut of unequal length.

Cut and long tail, is explained by Archdeacon Nares as meaning to include all kinds, curtail dogs, sporting dogs, and others. See CURTAIL.

A cutter is explained by Coles as a cuttor (a robber,) gladiator, latro. Thus the hero of Cowley's Cutter of Coleman Street is a town adventurer; or, as he is aptly expressed in the Dramatis Personæ, "a merry, sharking fellow about the town, pretending to have been a colonel in the king's army."

A kind of vessel is called cutter, perhaps because it cuts swiftly through the water. Du Cange gives the word Cota, navis species; but in the only passage which he quotes, he decides that the reading should be Coca seu cocca, and not cota.

His wiif walked hym with, with a long gode
In a cuttede cote cutted ful heyghe.
Piers Ploughman. Crede.

By Crist quath a kitte pors. ich have no kyn there.
Id. p. 125.

And now the axe is put to the roote of the tree, therfor every tre that makith not good fruyt schal be kit down and schal be cast into the fyr.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 3.

And now an axe is sett to the roote of the tre, and therfore every tre that makith not good fruyt schal be kitt doun, and schal be cast into the fier.—Id. Luke, c. 3.

Therefore Symound Petir hadde a swerd and drough it out, and smoot the seruaunt of the bischop and kittide of his right eere.—Wiclif. Jon, c. 26.

Simon Petir had a sweard and drue it, and smote the hye preestes seruaunte and cut off his right eare.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Now draweth cutte, or that ye forther twinne,
He which that hath the shortest shall begin.
Chaucer. Prologue, v. 837.

Wherefore I rede, that cut among us alle
We drawe, and let see wher the cut wouide falle.
And he that hath the cut, with herte blith,
Shal rennen to the toun.
Id. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,727.

Thou wilt graunt me that euery asse hath two eares: nay mary will I not maister, quod the boye, Why so boye, quod he, Marye, mayster, quod he, for some asse maye happe to haue neuer one, for they may be cutte bothe.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 204.

And ther they were at a longe stryf whiche of them shulde go, and so at last they acorded and sware, and made promyse before all the company, that they shulde drawe cuttes, and he that shulde haue the longest streawe shulde go forthe, and the other abyde.

Berners. Froussart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 258.

And beholde, I sente for thy seruantes, the cutters and hewers of tymber.—Bible, 1551. 2 Chronicles, c. 2.

And suche thynges, although the euangelists foreknew them by the spirite of prophesie, yet certes vnder the persones & names of the apostles, they cannot be reported, but both coldly and also cuttedly.—Udal. Pref. of Erasmus.

Anon he remembered hys chaste vow they saye, and so turned his face to the dore dismembering himselfe with a sharpe cuttle in her presence.—Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii.

Tim. I haue a tree which growes heere in my close,
That mine owne vse inuites me to cut downe,
And shortly must I sell it.

Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act v. sc. 2.

——— If he had so offended
He would haue waigh'd thy brother by himselfe,
And not haue cut him off.

Id. Measure for Measure, Act v. sc. 1.

Gru. Error, i'th bill sir, error i'th bill? I commanded the sleeves should be cut out and sow'd vp againe, and that I'le prove vpon thee, though thy little finger be armed in a thimble.—Shakespeare. Taming of the Shrew, Act iv. sc. 3.

But the contention between these two persons, was as a deep cut, which divided the city into two factions; of which the one was called the nobility, and the other the commonalty.—North. Plutarch, p. 137.

——— And then the justice
In fair round belly, with good capon lin'd,
With eyes seuere, and beard of formall cut.

Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act ii. sc. 7.

There oft the Indian herdsman shunning heate,
Shelters in coole, and tends his pasturing herds
At loopholes cut through thickest shade.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

But cloud instead, and ever-during dark
Surrounds me: from the chearful ways of men
Cut off, and for the book of knowledg fair
Presented with a universal blanc
Of Nature's works, to me expung'd and ras'd,
And wisdome at one entrance quite shut out.—Id. Ib. b iii.

——— Never saw I figures
So likely to report themselves; the cutter
Was as another nature dumbe, out-went her,
Motion and breath left out.—Shakes. Cymbeline, Act ii. sc. 4.

Ros. Indeed, there is fortune too hard for nature; when fortune makes nature's naturall the cutter-off of nature's wit.—Id. As You Like It, Act i. sc. 2.

The weedes of heresie being growne vnto such ripenesse as that was, doe, euen in the verie cutting downe, scatter oftentimes those seeds which for a while lie vnseene and buried in the earth, but afterward freshly spring vp againe no loss pernicious then at the first.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. p. 273.

Secondly, by imposing continual taxes and tallages, worse then Irish cuttings, being sometimes the tenth, sometimes the fifteenth, sometimes the third, sometimes the moiety of all the goods both of the clergy and laiety.

State Trials, an. 1607. The Case of Præmunire in Ireland.

By this wine, I'le thrust my knife in your mouldie chappes, if you play the sawcie cuttle with me.

Shakespeare. 2 Part Hen. IV. Act ii. sc. 4.

Gra. Aboute a hoope of gold, a paltry ring,
That she did giue me, whose poesie was
For all the worid like cutler's poetry
Vpon a knife; 'loue mee, and leaue mee not.'

Id. Merchant of Venice, Act v. sc. 1.

When as Dorilus arose,
Whistles cut-tail from his play,
And along with them he goes.

Drayton. The Shepherd's Sirena.

At the town of Hala, likewise another preacher, named M. George, for ministring in both kinds, was martyred and slaine of a like sort of cut-throtes, set up by monks and friers to murther him.

Foe. Martyrs, p. 802. H. Stutphen, George of Hala, &c.

You call me misbeleeuer, cut-throte dog,
And spet vpon my Jewish gaberdine
And all for vse of that which is mine owne.

Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act i. sc. 3.

Lap. My surplus, with one sleeve, you shall find here,
For to that dearth of linnen you have driven me;
And the old cut-work cope, that hangs by geometry.

Beaum. & Fletch. Spanish Curate, Act iii. sc. 2.

Brewers Straights are sometimes passed by small ships that sail from Batavia to Malacca, because for them it is a nearer cut, than to run so far as Pulo Timaon, or the Straights of Sincapore.—Dampier. Voyage, an. 1688.

I am apt to think that the posy was written originally upon the ax, like those which our modern cutlers inscribe upon their knives.—Spectator, No. 58.

I cannot express to you with what indignation I behold the noble spirit of gentlemen degenerated to that of private cut-purses.—Tatler, No. 65.

I remember inquiring of a skilful cutter of diamonds and polisher of gems, whose customer I had been, about some conjectures I had concerning things belonging to his profession.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 36.

The other teeth (the cutters and dog teeth) have usually but one root.—Id. Ib. vol. v. p. 434.

The ruffian robbers by no justice aw'd,
And unpaid cut-throat soldiers are abroad.

Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 3.

Others, I think, more significantly make it [1 Tim. iv.] an allusion to the practice of surgeons and physicians, who use cuttings and burnings for the healing of corrupt flesh: which being once thus cauterized, or seared, becomes afterwards insensible.—South, vol. ix. Ser. 2.

I hoisted out the cutter, and manned her with an officer and seven men, with orders to keep as far a head of the ships, with a light at her mast-head, as a signal could be distinguished, which she was to make in case she met with any danger.—Cook. Voyage, vol. iii. b. ii. c. 9.

One of our best London workmen was ordered, by one of the first cut-glass manufacturers in the kingdom, to cut a similar cup; he did so, and he charged five shillings for the workmanship alone.

Anecdotes of the Life of Bp. Watson, vol. i. p. 285.

CU'TICLE. CUTI'CULAR. CUTA'NEOUS. } Lat. Cuticula, dim. of cutis, the skin. Gr. Δερος, corium, pellis; the hide, the skin.

When we consider so many constituent parts in the bodies of men, all admirably compacted into so noble an engine; in each of the very fingers, for example, there are bones, and gristles, and ligaments, and membranes, and muscles, and tendons, and nerves, and arteries, and veins, and skin, and cuticle, and nail, &c.—Bentley, Ser. 3.

A specific medicine may cure by discussion, or resolving the morbific matter, and thereby fitting it for expulsion through the greater outlets of the body and cuticular pores.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 123.

Some of them may contain other juices and discharge their recrements by sweat or insensible transpiration, at the cutaneous outlets.—Id. Ib. vol. v. p. 102.

Among the bulk of the people, the skin is more commonly of a dull hue, with some degree of roughness, especially the parts that are not covered: which, perhaps, may be occasioned by some cutaneous disease.

Cook. Voyage, vol. v. b. ii. c. 10.

CU'TLASS, n. CU'RTELASSE. CU'RTLAX. } Fr. Coutelas; It. Coltellacio, sica, ensis brevior, (q. d.) cultelliacus, vel cultellaceus, (Skinner.) From the Lat. Cultellus, a knife. (See CULTER or COULTER.) This word is variously, and apparently very corruptly, written in old authors, curtax, curtleax, cutelaxe, &c.

Unto another, who demanded why the Lacedæmonians fought with such short cutelaxes: to the end (quoth he) that we might cope and close more neerely to our enemies.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 347.

Others do write, that Darius seeing himself convicted by manifest proofs brought in against him, he fell down at his father's feet, and besought him to pardon him: and then that his father being angry, rose up, and drew out his curtleax and wounded him in so many places withall that at length he slew him.—North. Ib. p. 798.

With curtaxe vsed Diamond to smite,
And Triamond to handle speare and shield
But speare and curtaxe both vs'd Priamond in field.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 2.

But he refusing to dismiss you so,
On that proud king I'll execute such force,
As never yet came from the sling, the bow,
The keen-edg'd curtlax or the puissant horse.

Drayton. Moses his Birth and Miracles.

The sword is a piece of wood shaped like a cutlass.

Dampier. Voyage, an. 1688.

His European weapons consisted of a musket, bayonet, and cartouch-box; a fowling piece; two pair of pistols; and two or three swords or cutlasses.

Cook. Voyage, vol. vi. b. iii. c. 6.

CU'TTRY-COO. A word formed from the sound, which has been found only in Drayton.

Draws in his head, and thrusteth out his breast,
Spreadeth his tail, and swelleth up his crest,
And turning round and round with cuttry-coo
As when the female pigeon and he woo.

Drayton. Noah's Flood.

CY'CLE. Fr. Cycle; It. Ciclo; Sp. Cyclo; Lat. Cyclus; Gr. Κυκλος, a circle, an orbit.
A revolution, or succession of revolutions, of periods of time.

——— How they will wield
The mightie frame, how build, unbuild, contrive.
To saue appearances, how gird the sphear
With centric and excentric scribl'd o'er,
Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. viii.

The greatest difficulty in chronology has been to accommodate the two methods of computing time by the course of the moon and that of the sun to each other; the nearest division of the year by months being twelve, and yet twelve lunar months falling eleven days short of a complete year. This gave birth to many cycles in use among the ancients, the principal of which I shall explain.

Priestley. Lectures on History, pt. iii. Lect. 14.

Wages have been twice raised in my time, and they bear a full proportion, or even a greater than formerly, to the medium of provision during the last bad cycle of twenty years.—Burke. Thoughts and Details on Scarcity.

CY'CLOPEDE. Used by Warton for cyclopædia; compounded of κυκλος, a circle, and παιδεια, discipline, instruction, learning.

Heavy penalties were imposed on those academics, who relinquished the sacred text, to explain the tedious and unedifying commentaries on Peter Lombard's scholastic cyclopede of divinity, called the sentences, which alone were sufficient to constitute a moderate library.

Warton. History of English Poetry, vol. ii. s. 18.

CY'CLOPS. CYCLOPE'AN, adj. CYCLO'PIC, adj. } Lat. Cyclops; Gr. Κυκλωψ, compounded of κυκλος, a circle, and ωψ, an eye, (Vossius.) Απο του κυκλους της οψεως, from the roundness of the eye.

All then aboord, we beate the sea with ores;
And still with sad hearts sail'd by out-way shores;
Till th' out-law'd Cyclops' land we fetcht.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. ix.

Thence, o'er the deep proceeding sad, we reach'd
The land at length, where, giant-siz'd and free
From all constraint of law, the Cyclops dwell.

Cowper. Id. Ib.

But the cyclopean furnace of all wicked fashions, the heart, calls my speech to it.

Bp. Hall. The Fashions of the World.

Sending a bill of defiance to all physicians, chirurgeons, and apothecaries as so many bold giants, or cyclopick monsters who daily seek to fight against heaven by their rebellious drugs and doses.

Bp. Taylor. Artificial Handsomeness, p. 53.

CY'GNET. Fr. Cigne; It. Cigno; Sp. Cisne; Gr. Κυκνος; Lat. Cygnus, a swan.
A young swan.

Delicious beds of cygnets' softest downe,
Cushions of roses, lilies, violets,
Bathes of perfumed oiles, foot pathes thick strown
With budding Summer's undeflower'd sweets.

Beaumont. Psyche, c. 4. s. 139.

——— O that her hand,
In whose comparison, all whites are inke,
Writing their owne reproach; to whose soft seizure,
The cygnet's downe is harsh, and spirit of sense
Hard as the palme of ploughmun.

Shakespeare. Troil. & Cress. Act i. sc. 1.

A golden chariot in the midst is set,
And silver cygnets seem to feel its weight.

Prior. Solomon. Pleasure.

Cygnets are to this day fattened at Norwich about Christmas, and are sold for a guinea a piece.

Pennant. British Zoology. The Tame Swan.

CY'LINDER. CYLI'NDRICK. CYLI'NDRICAL. CYLINDRA'CEOUS. } Fr. Cylindre; It. and Sp. Cilindro; Lat. Cylindrus; Gr. Κυλινδρος, απο του κυλινδειν, ob volubilitatem; because easily rolled: Ita dixere, quidquid oblongum esset, et teres, instar columnæ, (Vossius.) So called, because oblong and polished like a column.

For he [Archimedes] prayed his kinsman and friends, that after his death they would put a cylinder upon his tomb, containing a massie sphere, with an inscription of the proportion, whereof the continent exceedeth the thing contained.—North. Plutarch, p. 263.

He that looks upon a picture made up of scattered and deformed pieces, beholding them united into one face, by a cylindrical looking glass aptly placed, discerns the skill of the artist that drew it, better than he that looks only on the single parts of the picture, or upon the whole picture without the uniting cylinder.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 30.

Which fibers [of the muscles] the curious and ingentous Borelli saith, are cylindraceous; not hollow, but filled with a spungy, pithy substance after the manner of elder.
Derham. Phys. Theol. b. iv. c. 8. Note i.

We saw their machine for clearing cotton of its seeds, which is made upon the same principles as those in Europe, but is so small that it might be taken for a model, or a toy; it consists of two cylinders, like our round rulers, somewhat less than an inch in diameter.
Cook. Voyage, vol. ii. b. iii. c. 9.

The tongue is long and cylindric, for the same use as that of the woodpecker.—Pennant. Brit. Zool. The Wry-neck.

CY'MAR, n. See CHIMERE, and SIMAR. Fr. Chamarre; a loose and light gown, (and less properly, a cloak,) that may be worn scarf-wise.

Her comely limbs compos'd with decent care,
Her body shaded with a slight cymarr.
Dryden. Cymon & Iphigenia.

CY'MBAL, n. Fr. Cymbale; It. Cembalo; Sp. Cimbalo; Lat. Cymbalum; Gr. Κυμβαλον, from Κυμβη, cymba, κυμβος, hollowness.

If I speke with tungis of men and of aungels and I haue not charitie, I am maad as bras sownynge, or a cymbal tynklynge.—Wiclif. 1 Corynth. c. 13.

Thoughe I spake wt the tonges of men and angels, & yet had no loue, I were euen as soundinge brasse; or as a tinklynge cymball.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

A little windy opinionative goodness distempers the empty brain, 'tis charity must ballast the heart: and that's the grace, according to holy Maximus his opinion, that all this while we have required but not found in the Pharisee, and that's the reason that the brass sounds so shrill, and the cymbal tinkles so merrily.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p 611.

It has often been observed by witty essay writers, that the deepest waters are always the most silent; that empty vessels make the greatest sound, and tinkling cymbals the worst musick.—Tatler, No. 208.

——— But e'en amidst
The thickest war, let but the tuneful rod,
On brazen cymbal strike, the lenient strains
Quick undulating thro' the silent air,
Recal harmonious love and gentle peace
Back to their ancient seats.
Cowper. The Power of Harmony, b. i.

CY'NICK, n. / CY'NICK, adj. / CY'NICAL. / CYNARCTO'MACHY. / CYNEGE'TICK. } Fr. Cynic; It. and Sp. Cinico; Lat. Cynicus; Gr. Κυνικος, from Κυων, canis, a dog. Applied (met.)—Snarling, growling; ill-natured.

Of this cynical sect, it seems was he, who would needs make orcus to be the anagram of uxor, by contracting c s into an x, uxor et orcus,—idem.—Howell, b. iv. Let. 7.

There are extant of his in Greek, four books of Cynegeticks or Venation, five of Halieuticks or Piscation, commented and published by Ritterhusius; wherein describing beasts of venery and fishes, he hath indeed but sparingly inserted the vulgar conceptions thereof.—Brown. Vulg. Err. b. i. c. 8.

19. Whether the bulk of our Irish natives are not kept from thriving, by that cynical content in dirt and beggary, which they possess to a degree beyond any other people.
Berkeley. The Querist.

He was a man of a more morose and cynical temper, just in his administration, but vicious under the appearance of virtue.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1660.

The same occult design doth lie
In bloody cynarctomachy,
Is plain enough to him that knows,
How saints led brothers by the nose.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1.

Cynarctomachy signifies nothing in the world, but a fight between dogs and bears, though both the learned and ignorant agree, that in such words very great knowledge is contained: and our knight, as one, or both of these, was of the same opinion.—Id. Notes.

Blame, cynic, if you can, quadrille or ball,
The snug close party, or the splendid hall,
Where night, down-stooping from her ebon throne,
Views constellations brighter than her own.
Cowper. Progress of Errour.

I hope it is no very cynical asperity not to confess obligations, where no benefit has been received, or to be unwilling that the publick should consider me as owing that to a patron, which Providence has enabled me to do for myself.
Johnson. Letter to Lord Chesterfield.

CY'NOSURE. Fr. Cynosure; It. and Sp. Cynosura; Lat. Cynosura; Gr. Κυνοσουρα, i. e. κυνος, ουρα, cauda canis, the tail of a dog, (Martinius.)

The name given by the Greeks to the Lesser Bear.

This gave cold Ulsinore in loves long night,
Some hope of day; as sea-men that are run
Far northward finde long winters to be light,
And in the cynosure adore the sun.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. iii. c. 5.

Towers and battlements it sees
Bosom'd high in tufted trees,
Where perhaps some beauty lies,
The cynosure of neighb'ring eyes.—Milton. L'Allegro.

——— Some gentle taper,
Though a rush-candle, from the wicker-hole
Of some clay habitation visit us
With thy long levell'd rule of streaming light;
And thou shalt be our star of Arcady,
Or Tyrian cynosure. Id. Comus.

CY'ON, or / CY'ON. } More properly written Scion, (qv.) "Fr. Scion; a scien, a young and tender plant, a shoot, sprig, or twig," (Cotgrave.) Minshew derives it, a scindendo; quia scinditur ab arbore; or it is rather, adds Skinner, contracted from situm for insitum, planted. Any thing set or planted. Applied met.

It may be that oft regrafting of the same cions may likewise make fruit greater: as if you take a cion and graft it upon another stock the first year; and then cut it off, and graft it upon another stock the second year; and so for a third or fourth year; and then let it rest, it will yield afterward, when it beareth, the greater fruit.
Bacon. Naturall History, s. 454.

Cleanse trees of moss, &c. the weather moist.—gather cyons for graffs before the buds sprout; and about the latter end graft them in the stock.
Evelyn. Kalendarium Hortense. January.

CY'PRESS, n. / CY'PRESS, adj. } Fr. Cypres; It. Cipresso; Sp. Cypres; Lat. Cupressus; Gr. Κυπαρισσος, supposed to be παρα το κυειν παρισους τους ακρεμονας; because it bears or produces equal branches. See Vossius, and Martinius.

Binde you my browes with mourning cyparisse
And palish twigs of deadlie poplar tree,
Or if some sadder shades ye can divise,
Those sadder shades vaile my light loathing eie.
Bp. Hall. Elegy on Dr. Whitaker.

Within the navel of this hideous wood,
Immur'd in cypress shades a sorcerer dwells.
Milton. Comus.

Meanwhile the lawn beneath the scatter'd shade
Spread its serene extent; a stately file
Of circling cypress mark'd the distant bound.
Mason. The English Garden, b. ii.

And every myrtle bower and cypress grove,
And every solemn temple teems with love.
Dodsley. Melpomene.

CY'PRESS-LAWN. Skinner says, either from Fr. Crespe, (v. CRAPE,) or from the Island of Cyprus, where this article was first manufactured.

On their heades bonettes of Turkay fashion, of cloth of golde of Tyssue, and clothe of siluer roiled in cypres, kerchefles after the Paynyms fashion.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 12.

——— To one of your receiuing
Enough is shewne, a cypresse, not a bosome,
Hides my heart.—Shakes. Twelfth Night, Act iii. sc. 1.

Enter Autolicus singing.
Lawne as white as driuen snow,
Cypresse blacke as ere was crow.
Id. Winter's Tale, Act iv. sc. 3.

Item, a charme surrounding fearefully,
Your partie-per pale picture, one halfe drawne
In solemne cypres, the other cobweb-lawne.
B. Jonson, Epig. 73.

CZAR. / CZA'RISH. / CZARI'NA. } Serenius says, S. Ryss-Keisare, Emperor of the Muscovites; and Ihre has, Keisare, Imperator, (Wachter.) Kaiser, a word acknowledged and used by all ancient dialects.

But each have separate interests of their own,
Two czars are one too many for a throne.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

His czarish majesty dispatch'd an express to General Golts with an account of these particulars.—Tatler, No. 55.

In the mean time the czar resented this affront [the arrest of his ambassador] very highly, and demanded that the sheriff of Middlesex and all others concerned in the arrest should be punished with instant death.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 7

Assemblies were quite unknown to them, [the Russians;] the Czarina was satisfied with introducing them, for she found it impossible to render them polite.
Goldsmith, Ess. 22.

D.

THE letter D is classed by Wilkins among semi-spiritous or half-breathed consonants; meaning such as are accompanied with some kind of vocal murmur. D and T, he adds, are commonly framed by an appulse or collision of the top of the tongue against the teeth or upper gums; the first being more soft and gentle, with some kind of murmure, the other wholly mute, i. e. pronounced with a strong emission of the breath, without any vocal sound.—On Real Character, pt. iii. c. 12.

Tooke observes, that D differs from T by no variation whatever of articulation, but singly by a certain unnoticed and almost imperceptible motion or compression of or near the larynx; which causes what Wilkins calls "some kind of murmure."—Diversions of Purley, vol. ii. p. 93.

DAB, v. / DAB, n. / DA'BBING. / DA'BBLE. / DA'BBLER. / DA'BBLING. } Dab, dib or dob; dap, depe, dip or dop, are the same word variously written or applied, from the Goth. Daup-jan; A. S. Dipp-an, mergere, immergere, to dip; Dut. Doop-en. Why the dab-chick or dob-chick is so called, is well told by Drayton; see the quotation from him.

Dabble is merely the diminutive; to dip a little part below the surface: (met.) to look or search, to examine or inquire shallowly, superficially.

The A. S. Dipp-an, and Dut. Doop-en, are also consequentially tingere, intingere, imbuere, inficere, i. e. to die or dipp cloth, (Somner.)

To die, to tinge, to stain, to daub; and thus we have, a dab of dirt.

To dab,—to move with the short, quick action of dipping.

A dab-wash,—a dip-wash. A dab, a slight blow.

Dab, as applied to a person who is handy or clever at any thing, may be a corruption of Adept, (qv).

Dabbing, in Norfolk, is dibbing or setting plants with a dibber.

And Saint Paule himself confesseth, that for a medicine preseruatiue against pride, there was giuē hym the sungell of Sathan the pricke of the fleshe to dabbe him in the necke and make him stowpe and beate hym.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 551.

I creping held with crokid hands the mountaynes toppe,
Encombrid in my clothes that dabbing down from me did droppe.—Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. vi.

Spa. His tongue trouls like a mill-clack: he towzes the ladies' sisters, as a tumbling dog does young rabbits. Hay here dab there.—Ford. Fancies Chaste & Noble, Act iii. sc. 3.

And this way of fishing we call daping, dabbing, or dibbing, wherein you are always to have your line flying before you—up, or down the river, as the wind serves—and to angle as near as you can to the bank of the same side whereon you stand.—Walton. Angler, pt. ii. c. 5.

The diving dobchick, here among the rest you see,
Now up, now down again, that hard it is to prove,
Whether under water most it liveth, or above.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 25.

And under them again (that water never take,
But by some ditches' side, or little shallow lake
Lie dabbling night and day) the palate-pleasing snite.
Id. Ib.

Neither will a soul that dwells with stars, dabble in this impurer mud, or stoop to be a play-fellow and copartner in delights with the creatures, that have nought but animal.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 24.

I will tell you nothing I have not made myself as certain of, as any man can be in thirty years experience; for so long I have been a dabbler in that art.—Walton. Angler, pt ii. c. 1.

'Tis but to dye, dogs do it, ducks with dabbling.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Mad Lover, Act ii. sc. 1.

As when a dabchick waddles through the copse
On feet and wings, and flies, and wades, and hops;
So labouring on, with shoulders, hands, and head,
Wide as a windmill all his fingers spread,
With arms expanded Bernard rows his state
And left legged Jacob seems to emulate.
Pope. Dunciad, b. ii.

I saw a young child dabbling in a bucket of water, and standing in a very bleak and sharply freezing wind. I bid the child go in to the fire; she answered, that the water was warm, and she stayed there to keep her hands warm.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 421.

On the old frame remain these lines, probably written by the painter himself, who, we have seen, dabbled in poetry too.—Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 7.

Wherefore your dabblers in metaphysics are the most dangerous creatures breathing. they have just abstraction enough to raise doubts that never would have entred into another's head, but not enough to resolve them.
Search. Light of Nature, vol i. Introd.

One writer for instance, excels at a plan, or a title page, another works away the body of the book, and a third is a dab at an index.—Goldsmith. The Bee, No. 1

DA'CTYLE. DA'CTYLICK. DA'CTYLIST. DACTY'LOGY. } Gr. Δακτυλος, a finger. The name of a foot in poetry, and so called because like the finger, tribus constat artubus, uno longiori, ac duobus brevibus, (Vossius.) It consists of three members; one long, and two short. Fr. Dactylogie; It. Sp. and Lat. Dactylogia. Dactylogy,—finger talk.

The nimble dactyl striving to outgo,
The drawling spondees pacing it below:
The lingring spondees, labouring to delay,
The breathless dactyls with a sudden stay.
Bp. Hall, b. i. Sat. 6.

Whosoever saw a colt wonton and wild,
Yok'd with a slow-foot ox on fallow field,
Can right areed how handsomely beseets
Dull spondees with the English dactylets. Id. Ib.

Cheirology, or dactylogy, as the words import, is interpretation by the transient motions of the fingers; which of all other wayes of interpretation, comes nearest to that of the tongue.
Dalgarno. Deaf & Dumb Man's Tutor, (1680.) Introd.

The learned languages have certainly a great advantage of us, in not being tied to the slavery of any rhyme; and were less constrained in the quantity of every syllable, which they might vary with spondees or dactyls.
Dryden. Account of Annus Mirabilis.

It was requisite, for instance, that the hexameter verse should have the quantity of its syllables so disposed, that it could be scanned or measured by six metrical feet, which might be either dactyles or spondees, (as the musical time of both these is the same) with this restriction only, that the fifth foot was regularly to be a dactyle, and the last a spondee.—Blair, vol. ii. Lect. 38.

This at least was the power of the spondaic and dactylick harmony, but our language can reach no eminent diversities of sound.—Rambler, No. 94.

DADE. A word peculiar to Drayton, and which, Johnson says, is to hold up by a leading string; and Mr. Nares, to flow; and Dr. Jamieson, to suck. Daddle, Mr. Grose explains, to walk unsteadily like a child; to waddle. To daddle, diddle, or dodlle, are no doubt the diminutives of Dade, whatever may be the origin of this latter word. Perhaps the word dawdle, diminutive of daw (qv.) may be a cognate term, if not the same, differently applied. To dade, seems to be equivalent to—

To move, or cause to move, cautiously, slowly.

Which, nourished and bred up at her most plenteous pap,
No sooner taught to dade, but from their mother trip,
And in their speedy course strive others to outstrip.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 1.

Th' Egyptian horrours yet 'twas I did see,
And through those strange calamities did wade,
And Israel's charge imposed was on me,
When they (but then) had scarcely learn'd to dade.
Id. Moses, his Birth and Miracles, b. iii.

The little children when they learn to go,
By painful mothers daded to and fro,
And taught by sugar'd numbers to rehearse,
And have their sweet lips season'd with my verse.
Id. Earl of Surry to Lady Geraldine.

DADD. DA'DDY. } Da da, a word, like pa pa, ma ma, formed from the sound. See BABE.

Zounds, I was never so bethumpt with words,
Since I first call'd my brother's father dad.
Shakespeare. King John, Act ii. sc. 2.

Buss, buss, uncle, and there's a pum for daddy.
Ford. The Lover's Melancholy, Act iii. sc. 3.

Come, bless'em, bless'em, honest daddy; kneel down, children.—Dryden. Love Triumphant, Act v. sc. 1.

DÆDAL. Gr. Δαιδαλλ-ειν, to make or form artfully, skilfully. Dædalum vocatur, quicquid est artificiosè varium et affabrè factum, (Vossius.)

Artful, skilful; fruitful in invention.

But liuing art may not least part expresse,
Nor life-resembling peincill it can paint,
All were it Zeuxis or Praxitiles,
His dædale hand would faile, and greatly faint,
And her perfections with his error taint.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, Introd. b. iii.

Then doth the dædale earth throw forth to thee
Out of her fruitful lap abundant flowres,
And then all liuing wights, soon as they see
The spring breake forth out of his lusty bowres,
They all do learne to play the paramours.
Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 10.

——— Nor hath
The dædal hand of nature only pour'd
Her gifts of outward grace.—J. Philips. Cider, b. i.

Here ancient art her dædal fancies play'd
In the quaint mazes of the crisped roof;
In mellow glooms the speaking pane array'd,
And rang'd the cluster'd column, massy proof.
Warton, Ode 3.

DÆ'MON, or DE'MON, n. DE'MONARCH. DE'MONESS. DEMONI'ACAL. DEMO'NIAC, adj. DEMO'NIAC, n. DEMO'NIAL. DEMO'NIAN. DEMO'NIANISM. DE'MONIST. DEMO'NIPHOBE. DEMONO'LATRY. DEMONO'LOGY. DEMO'NOMY. DEMO'NOMIST. DE'MONSHIP. } Gr. Δαιμων; Lat. Dæmon; Fr. Démon; It. Demone, demonio; Sp. Demonio; Gr. Δαημων, sciens, gnarus, from δαι-ειν, scire, to know, (Vossius.) And Plato, in Cratylus, (xxiii.) "On this account, therefore, it appears to me (Socrates) more than other, he calls them dæmons, because they were prudent and learned, (δαημονες)."—Taylor's Translation. See the quotations from Cooke's Hesiod, and Sydenham's Plato.

An intelligent being, (not of human kind;) now most usually applied to an evil spirit.

Touching the cherl, they sayden subtiltee
And highe wit made him speken as he spake;
He n'is no fool, ne no demoniake.
Chaucer. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7874.

As he came foorth they offered vnto hym a maruayloose noumbre that were vexed with diuers diseases, and also demoniakes whyche were possessed with deuyelles.
Udal, Matthew, c. 8.

Wherefore I have oft exhorted you, that not one of those who come hither, and enioy the divine doctrine, and are likewise partakers of the dreadfull and mysticall sacrament, should go unto these stage-players, nor yet entermixt these divine mysteries with demoniacall.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act vi. sc. 4.

Princes, heaven's antient sons, æthereal thrones,
Demonean spirits now, from the element
Each of his reign allotted, rightlier call'd,
Powers of fire, air, water, and earth beneath.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. ii.

I return you the manuscript you lent me of dæmonology, but the author thereof and I are two in point of opinion that way; for he seems to be on the negative part, and truly he writes as much as can be produc'd for his purpose.
Howell, b. iii. Let. 23.

These Javans are drunk in demonomy, and the more earnestly embrace it by how much their corrupt natures abhor honesty; whence it happens, that they trade in murder, adultery, theft, rapine, deceit, and all other wickedness.
Sir Thomas Herbert. Travels, p. 305.

Celebes—well peopled, but with bad people, no place engendering greater demonomists, or till of late worse savages.
Id. Ib. p. 308.

Plutarch doth acquaint us with this pretty conceit—that the souls of men took degrees after death; first they commenced heroes, who were as probationers to a demonship; then after a time sufficient, demons!
Mede. Apost. of Latter Times, p. 18.

Is there any one, O Melitus, who acknowledging that there are humane things, can yet deny that there are any men? or confessing that there are equine things can nevertheless deny that there are any horses? if this cannot be, then no man who acknowledges demonial things can deny demons.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 264.

Here therefore have we an unquestionable instance of a demoniack in these latter times of ours, such a one who at first for two moneths together had no manner of madness or mania at all upon him, though afterward the demon possessing his whole body.—Id. Ib.

It is agreeable to the sense of the ancient fathers, that the demoniack or angelick kind of beings, is not altogether incorporeal or bodiless, but that they are conjoyned with bodies, or have cognate bodies belonging to them.
Id. Ib. p 813.

These [Platonists] did doubtless therein designedly lay a foundation for their Polytheism and creature-worship, (now vulgarly called Idolatry,) that is, for their Cosmo-latry, Astro-latry, and Demono-latry.—Id. Ib. p. 593.

Darkling the demon [Morpheus] glides for flight prepar'd,
So soft that scarce his fanning wings are heard.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. x.

Religion, no doubt, is much indebted to those men of prodigy; who in such a discerning age, wou'd set her on the foot of popular tradition; and venture her on the same bottom with parish tales, and gossipping stories of imps, goblins, and demoniacal pranks, invented to fright children, or make practice for common exorcists, and cunning men.
Shaftesbury. On the Freedom of Wit and Humour.

He is possessed with a legion of impure lusts, and as the demoniac in the Gospel was sometimes cast into the fire, and sometimes into the water; so is he hurried by the fury of contrary passions.—Bates. Harm. of Divine Attributes, c. 9.

Perfect dæmonists undoubtedly there are in religion; because we know whole nations who worship a Devil or fiend, to whom they sacrifice and offer prayers and supplications, in reality on no other account than because they fear him.
Shaftesbury. An Enquiry concerning Virtue.

When in the grave this race of men was laid,
Soon was a world of holy demons made
Aërial spirits, by great Jove design'd
To be on earth the guardians of mankind;
Invisible to mortal eyes they go,
And mark our actions, good or bad, below.
Cooke. Hesiod. Works and Days, b. i.

The dæmon-kind is of an intermediate nature between the divine and human. What is the power and virtue, said I, of this intermediate kind of being? To transmit and to interpret to the Gods, said she, what comes from men; and to men, in like manner, what comes from the Gods; from men their petitions and their sacrifices; from the Gods in return, the revelation of their will.
Sydenham. Plato. The Banquet.

How very inconclusive then must all these reasonings be, which are built on the false supposition, that the Jews held only one prince of demons; and that demonarch was a term never applied by them to any but to the Devil.
Farmer. Letters to Worthington, Let. 2.

Hence he too hastily, yet with his usual modesty, insinuated that the possessions recorded in the Gospel, and called demoniacal, might be of that imaginary sort, and no other in reality than occult diseases.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. ix. Notes.

The learned Doctor, in his turn, will allow that the teachers of the Gospel in the fullness of their inspiration, must needs be secure from an error, which so dreadfully affected the religion they were entrusted to propagate, as demoniacism did, if it were an error.—Id. Ib.

Of these, Isabella, whom Gray so strongly stigmatizes,
She-Wolf of France, with unrelenting fangs,
That tear'st the bowels of thy mangled mate,
I hope was wrapped in the friar's garment, for few stood more in need of a dæmonifuge.—Pennant. London, p. 271.

The established theology of the heathen world from its first rise to its final overthrow, rested upon the basis of demonism. Scarce was there a single oracle delivered but by a person said to be possessed.
Farmer. Demoniacs of the New Testament, c. 1. s. 7.

The king, [James] who was much celebrated for his knowledge, had, before his arrival in England, not only examined in person a woman accused of witchcraft, but had given a very formal account of the practices and illusions of evil spirits, the compacts of witches, the ceremonies used by them, the manner of detecting them, and the justice of punishing them, in his dialogues of Dæmonologie, written in the Scottish dialect, and published at Edinburgh.
Johnson. On Macbeth.

DAFF, n. Mr. Tyrwhitt says is Saxon, and means a fool. The A. S. is Deaf-ian, adeaf-ian, surdescere, to grow deaf. Wachter, (in v. Taub,) and Junius agree that—that is said to be deaf, which has lost any of its natural strength. Deaf corn is barren corn, sterile frumentum. See Dr. Jamieson, who considers it connected with the Sw. Dofwa, stupere, sensu privare. And see DAW.

Thow dotede daffe quath hue. dolle aren thy wittes.
Piers Ploughman, p. 19.

And whan this jape is tald another day,
I shall be halden a daffe or a cokenay.
Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4206.

DAFF, v. To doff, to do off, throw off, put aside.

Prince. I would shee had bestowed this dotage on mee, I would haue daft all other respects, and made her halfe myselfe.—Shakes. Much Adoe about Nothing, Act ii. sc. 3.

Where is his sonne,
The nimble footed mad-cap, Prince of Wales,
And his cumrades, that daft the world aside,
And bid it passe?—Id. 1 Part Hen. IV. Act iv. sc. 1.

For lo! his passion, but an art of craft,
Even there resolv'd my reason into tears;
There my white stole of chastity I daft,
Shook off my sober guards, and civil fears.
Id. A Lover's Complaint.

DA'FFADIL, or DA'FFODIL. DAFFADI'LLY. DAFFADOWNDI'LLY. } Fr. Aspodille; It. Asphodelo; Gr. Ασφοδελος. From Fr. Des Asphodilles. Holland renders Narcissus, daffodill, (Plinie, l. xviii. c. 26.) The Fr. asphodill, Cotgrave calls the daffadill, affodill or asphodill flower.

—— Whereas she play'd
Amongst her watry sisters by a pond,
Gathering sweet daffadillies, to haue made
Gay girlonds, from the sun their forheads faire to shade.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 4.

Bid aramanthus all his beauty shed,
And daffadillies fill their cups with tears,
To strow the laureat herse where Lycid lies.
Milton. Lycidas.

Strowe me the ground with daffadowndillies,
And cowslips, and kingcups, and loued lillies.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. Aprill.

Haymakers, rakers, reapers, and mowers,
Wait on your summer-queen;
Dress up with musk-rose her eglantine bowers,
Daffodils strew the green.
Ford. The Sun's Darling, Act iii. sc. 2.

By whose pure moving glass the milk-white lilies
Do dress their tresses, and the daffodilies.
Drummond, pt. i. s. 13.

The joyous spring draws nigh! ambrosial showers
Unbind the earth, the earth unbinds the flowers,
The flowers blow sweet, the daffodils unfold
The spreading glories of their blooming gold.
Broome. Daphnis & Lycidas.

On his lovely body shower
Leaves of roses, virgin lilies,
Cowslips, violets, daffodillies,
And with garlands dress the bower.
Hughes. A Pastoral Masque.

DAG. DAG-MAKER. } A pistol; perhaps, says Minshew, because brought into use by the Daci, a people of Germany; and that they were a new fashion of German horsemen appears from the quotation from Knolles (produced by Mr. Nares.) See DAGGER.

The prince yet alwayes bare hym selfe so wisely, that he could not without some sturre be thrust downe openly: and ridyng on his iourney, he was once shot with a dagge secretly.—Ascham. A Report and Discourse.

They were wont to vse bowes and launces in the fielde, but nowe they vse dagges as our horsemen doe.
Fox. Mart. p. 681. Amurathes ouercome by Scanderbeius.

Neither was any thing taken from them but these dags, which the German horsemen, after a new fashion, carried at their saddle bows; these the Turks greatly desired, delighted with the noveltie of the invention, to see them shoot off with a firelock without a match.
Knolles. History of the Turks, p. 742.

The dagge was bought not many days before, of one Adrian Mulan, a dagge-maker, dwelling in East Smithfield, as by the said Mulan was testified vera voce upon his oath.
State Trials. Death of Northumberland, an. 1554.

DAG, v. DAG, n. DA'GON, DA'GSWAINE. } "Dagge, a slip or shread. Dagged, cut into slips. Dagging, slitting, cutting into slips. Dagon, a slip or piece," (Tyrwhitt.) A. S. Dag. Sparsum pendens seu dependens, (Skinner.) Any thing that is loose, and hanging abroad, dagling, dagging, or dangling, (Somner.)

Dagswaine,—a rough or coarse mantle to cast on a bed. Schiauina, (Minshew.) And Schiauina, a long robe of coarse cloth worn by slaves, Schiaui, (Menage.)

If so be that they wolden yeve swiche pounsoned and dagged clothing to the poure peple, it is not convenient to were for hir estate, ne suffisant to bote hir necessitee, to kepe hem fro the distemperance of the firmament.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

And high shoes knopped with dagges.—Id. R. of the R.

So moche dagging of sheres, with the superfluitee in length of the foresaide gounes.—Id. The Persones Tale.

A dagon of your blanket, leve dame,
Our suster dere. Id. The Sompnoures Tale.

Suche a doulty dagswayne
Sende him to Fraunce agayne.
Skelton. Duke of Albany and the Scottes.

The second is the great (although not generall) amendment of lodging, for (said they) our fathers (yea and we our selues also) haue lien full oft vpon straw pallets, on rough mats couered onelie with a sheet, vnder couerlets made of dagswain or hop-harlots (I vse their owne termes) and a good round log vnder their heads in steed of a bolster or pillow.
Holinshed. Description of England, b. ii. c. 12.

Would it not vex thee, where thy sires did keep,
To see the dunged folds of dag-tayl'd sheep.
Bp. Hall, b. v. Sat. 1.

DA'GGER, n. DA'GGERED, adj. } Fr. Dague; Sp. and It. Daga; Dut. Dagghe; Ger. Degen; Sw. Daggert; Low Lat. Dagga, daggerius. This word, as well as Dag, (qv.) Du Cange says, some derive a Dacis, as a weapon peculiar to them. Wachter quotes authorities to show that gladius was called degin,—quod ejus ministerio in defensione utamur,—and hence inclines to think it an application of degen, vir fortis, miles; remarking that men and their arms are often designated by the same name.

A short weapon, used to stab with.

And I shall rive him thurgh the sides tway,
While that thou stroglest with him as in game,
And with thy dagger loke thou do the same.
Chaucer. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,764.

And Ahud put forthe his lefte hande & toke the dagger frome his right thighe, and thrust it into his bely, so that the hafte wente in after the blade.—Bible, 1551. Judges, c. 3.

How many gallants have drunk healths to me,
Out of their dagger'd-arms, and thought them blest,
Enjoying but mine eyes at prodigal feasts.
Dekker. The Honest Whore, sc. 6.

I remember three in my life and observation, who were as downright killed with vomits, as they could have been with daggers.—Sir W. Temple. On Health and Long Life.

For shame! for shame! As you have spoke daggers to him, you may justly dread the use of them against your own breast, did a want of courage, or of noble sentiments, stimulate him to such mean revenge.—Junius, Let. 26.

DAINT, adj. DAINT, n. DA'INTY, adj. DA'INTY, n. DA'INTROUS. DA'INTEOUSLY. DA'INTIFUL. DA'INTILY. DA'INTINESS. DA'INTREL. } Fr. Dain, m. daine, f. Dainty, fine, quaint, curious; (an old word.) Cotgrave. Skinner suggests the Fr. Dain; Daim, a deer; because its flesh has at all times, and in all nations been esteemed among the grandest delicacies or dainties. Minshew,—a dente, a tooth; because dainties or delicacies are grateful to the teeth and palate. Casaubon,—from the Gr. Δαινυσθαι, to feast, to banquet; but the French derive from the Greek through the medium of the Latin. The Goth. Dauht, epulum, convivium, occurs Luke, v. 29, and xiv. 15; but no means of tracing the connexion of the words have occurred. Mr. Tyrwhitt says, "Deintee, n. Fr., value, a thing of value. Deintreous, choice, valuable." Dainty is now used as equivalent to—

Delicate of taste, exquisite, elegant, nice, choice; and, emphatically, over-nice.

Of Dowel ne of Dobet. daynte me thoughte.
Piers Ploughman, p. 200.

Thenne was this folk feyne. and fedde hunger dayntevsliche.—Id. p. 143.

Ful many a dainte hors hadde he in stable.
Chaucer. Prologue, v. 168.

They loved me so well by God above
That I no telde no deintee of hir love. [Set no value. Tyr.]
Id. Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 5790.

Walter hir doth so faithfully plesance
That it was deintee for to see the chere [It was a valuable thing. Tyr.]
Betwix hem two, sin they ben met in fere.
Id. Clerkes Tale, v. 8983.

For trewlich, I hold it great deinte,
A king's sonne in armes wel to do.—Id. Troilus, b. ii.

And then to the souper al and some
Whan time was, ful soft they hem set
God wot there was no deinte ferre to fet.—Id. Ib. b. iii.

Al ful of love and blisse is the paleis,
And ful of instruments, and of vitaille,
The most dainteous of all Italie.
Id. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9588.

But plainly for to speke of that
I not how thilke bodye fat,
Whiche thei with deintie meates kepe,
And laien it softe for to slepe,
Whan it hath elles of his will
With chastitee shall stonde still.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

There is no lust so deintefull,
Of whiche a man shulde not be full,
Of that the stomake vnderfongeth:
But euer in one myn herte longeth.—Id. Ib. b. vi.

Perhappes some daintie nose, no bachelors button lykes
And some at pimpernell and pinkes, a slender quarell pykes.—A. W., in Commendation of Gascoigne's Posies.

I haue seen very few men come to great proofe of either learning, wit, or virtue, that had bin daintilie brought vp.
Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. ii. c. 11.

How lustly may this barbarous and rude Russe confemne the dainteinesse and nicenesse of our captaines, who living in a soile & aire much more temperate, yet commonly vse furred bootes, and clokes.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 250.

Dic. Haile, fellow Hodge, and well to fare with thy meat, if you have any:
But by thy words, as I them smelled, thy dainirels be not manie.—Gammer Gurton's Needle, Act ii. sc. 1.

And you, fair troop, if Thirsil you disdain not,
Vouchsafe with me to take some short refection,
Excuse, or dainty, my lowly roof maintain not;
Peares, apples, plummes; no sugred made confection.
P. Fletcher, Ecl. 7. s. 37.

Therefore to cherish him with diets daint,
She cast to bring him, where he chearen might
Till he recovered had his late decayed plight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

Why should you be so cruel to yourself,
And to those dainty limbs which Nature lent,
For gentle usage and soft delicacy?—Milton. Comus.

True wisdom bids vs to this banquet haste,
That precious nectar may renew the taste
Of Eden's dainties, by our parents lost
For one poore apple.—Beaumont. In Spiritual Comfort.

At mine own breast with care I fed thee still,
Letting thee suck thy fill;
And daintily I nourish'd thee
With idle thoughts and poetry!
Cowley. Love's Ingratitude.

Your dainty speakers have the curse,
To plead bad causes down to worse;
As dames, who native beauty want,
Still uglier look, the more they paint.—Prior. Alma, c. 2.

And if we list to fare more daintily, we must either hunt for it, using craft and toil to catch it out of the woods, the water, the air; or we must carefully wait on those creatures, of which we would serve ourselves, feeding them that they may feed us.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 18.

To paint thy grisly face, to dance, to dress,
And all those awkward follies that express
Thy loathsome love, and filthy daintiness.
Rochester. To Sir Car Scrope.

But nicer eates, her dairy's boasted fare,
The jelly'd cream or custard, daintiest food,
Or cheesecake, or the cooling syllabub,
For Thyrsis she prepares.—Dodsley. Agriculture, c. 3.

And now a maiden charg'd with golden ew'r
And with an ardent laver, pouring first
Pure water on their hands, supplied them next
With a bright table, which the maiden, chief
In office, furnish'd plenteously with bread
And dainties, remnants of the last regale.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. iv.

DA'IRY. Sw. Dia, lactere. Radicem servat L. Anglica, dug, mamma, (Ihre.) Goth. Dadd-jandei, mulier lactans, infanti lac præbens, (Junius.) A. S. Diende, lactantes, (Lye, and Benson.) The Sw. Deja, nutrix, Dr. Jamieson says, has precisely the sense of dey, a dairy-maid, and is evidently allied to a variety of terms in the northern languages, which have a similar meaning. Isl. Dia, dy; Sw. Di, to suck; Sw. Goth. Deyg-ia, daegg-ia, to give milk, to suckle; Moes. G. Dadd-jan, both—to milk and to suck.

Dey, in Chaucer, and Day-woman, in Shakespeare,—a dairy-woman. Dairy, (Low Lat. Daeria, dayeria,)—

A place for preserving milk, churning it into butter, and making cheese, &c.

For she was as it were a maner dey.
Chaucer. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 14,851.

That serchen every land and every streme,
As thikke as motes in the sonne-beme,
Blissing halles, chambres, kitchenes, and bowres,
Citees and burghes, castles high and towres,
Thorpes and bernes, shepenes and dairies,
This maketh that ther ben no faeries.
Id. The Wif of Bathes Tale, v. 6353.

As one who long in populous city pent,
Where houses thick and sewers annoy the aire,
Forth issuing on a summer's morn to breathe
Among the pleasant villages and farms
Adjoined, from each thing met conceaves delight,
The smell of grain, or tedded grass, or kine,
Or dairie, each rural sight, each rural sound.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Few cows were bred up for the dairy, more than served consumption within.
Sir W. Temple. On Adv. of Trade in Ireland.

The compartments between the avenues are railed off, and laid down in pasture and meadow, for the supply of the large dairy of cows established here by the present king.
Swinburne. Spain, Let. 38.

DAIS, or Deis. } Dasium, a word concerning the etymology of which Du Cange is doubtful. Meursius derives it from Dagus, επισελλιον, subsellium, a bench. Dais, however, as Du Cange shows from a passage in Matt. Paris, (de Vitis Abbatum S. Albani, 92,) has a widely different meaning. The newly elected abbot, says the historian, Solus in Refectorio prandebit supremus, habens vastellum, Priore prandente ad magnam mensam, quam Dais vulgariter appellamus; for the Dais, continues Du Cange, is the name given by the French to a canopy suspended over a banqueting table.

Tyrwhitt, again, derives it from the Fr. Ais, assis tabula; and thinks it was at first written D'ais, ex assibus; but the old spelling Dois will not permit this etymology. Menage brings it from Dossium or dossum for dorsum.

Dais is commonly used for—

The upper table raised on a platform more elevated than the others, and probably at first placed under a canopy.

Pinkerton considers it to be the elevated floor only. Ritson (Met. Rom. ad voc. Deys) holds it to be indifferently the floor and the canopy. In Leland, the high dease seems to be what he has before called the high table. May the word not be Deske, a table, or a platform?

Wel semed eche of hem a fayre burgeis,
To sitten in a gild halle on the deis.—Chaucer. Prol. v. 372.

The fyrst day of his corone
Where he was in his royall throne,
And held his fest in the paleis
Sittend upon his hie deis.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

Then the marshall with the carver must go towards the high table, and the panter to folow them, makyng their obeysance first in the middest of the hall, and agayne before the hygh dease.—Leland, vol. vi. Inthron. of Abp. Nevill.

DA'ISY. } A. S. Dæyes-eage, i. e. days-eye.
Da'isied. } And Chaucer in Prologue to Legend of Good Women,—

That well by reason men it call may
The deisie, or els the eye of the day.

This etymology was suggested to Skinner by Dr. T. H.; but Skinner himself adopts Fr. Dais, a canopy. (See Dais.) Propter aliquam in flore talis umbellæ similitudinem.

B. Jonson writes dayes-eyes. See under Day.

Now haue I than eke this condicion,
That of all the floures in the mede,
Than loue I most these floures white & rede,
Such that men callen daisies in our toun.
Chaucer. Legend of Good Women, Prol.

Amongst the roses in a row,
Next place I panks in plenty,
These double daisies then for show,
And will not this be dainty?—Drayton, Nymphal 5.

And therefore went unto these homely townes,
Sweetly environ'd with the dazied downes.
Brown. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 4.

The silent heart, which grief assails,
Treads soft and lonesome o'er the vales,
Sees daisies open, rivers run,
And seeks (as I have vainly done)
Amusing thought.—Parnell. Hymn to Contentment.

The gentle pair that in these lonely shades
Wand'ring, at eve or morn, I oft have seen,
Now, all in vain, I seek at eve or morn,
With drooping wing, forlorn,
Along the grove, along the daisied green
Langhorne. Monody sung by a Redbreast.

DALE. Goth. Dalei; A. S. Dal; Dut. Dal; Ger. Thal, tahl. Locus declivis. The Dutch have the verb Dal-en, descendere, demittere se; to descend. Junius seems to suspect some connexion with A. S. Dæl-an, to deal, to divide, to distribute. Dal, he observes, is used for the infernal pit; but it does not seem easy to trace this supposed connexion.

The low ground between ground ascending around or on various sides of it.

Neuer bifor in Wales was don so grete greue,
Bi downes & bi dales. R. Brunne, p. 91.

Forthe she flewe the gentil nightingale
To all the birds that were in the dale.
Chaucer. The Cuckow and the Nightingale.

Thus (er he wiste) into a dale
He came, wher was a litell plaine,
All rounde aboute, well beseyne
With bushes greene, and cedres hie.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

A litle lowly hermitage it was,
Downe in a dale, hard by a forrest's side,
Farre from resort of people, that did pass
In trauell to and froe.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 1.

And in the first place, as to the business of ornament, beauty, and pleasure, I may appeal to all men's senses, whether the grateful variety of hills and dales, be not more pleasing than the largest continued plains.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iii. c. 4.

Hark! how the airy echoes talk along
With undulating answer, soft or loud,
The mocking semblance of the imag'd voice,
Babling itinerant from wood to hill,
From hill to dale, and wake their sisters round,
To multiply delight upon the ear.
Thompson. Sickness, b. v.

DA'LLY, v. } Skinner thinks from the A. S. Dole, foolish, dull: and this Tooke considers to be the regular past tense and past part. of Dwel-ian, dwol-ian, hebere, hebetare, to be or cause to be dull; and hence, to dally will be—

Da'lliance.
Da'llier.
Da'llying, n.
Da'llyingly.

To act like one dull or foolish; like a dolt or simpleton; to waste or idle away time; to spend, to loiter away time, in wanton or idle amusements; to amuse, to trifle, to sport, to frolick.

And ouer this, in her dalyaunce,
Lowly she is, discrete and wise
And goodly gladde, by attemperaunce.
Chaucer. The Floure of Curtesie.

——— And (all too late) I see
That lingring life doth daily but in vaine
For Atropos will cut the twist in twaine.
Gascoigne. Hearbes.

Here if I shuld brynge I the dyuerse metynges of the sayd prynces, and the curyouse seruyces yt eyther causyd other to be fed and seruyd wt, within eyther of theyr tentys, or of theyr dalyaunce or passe tymes cõtynuyng the season of theyr metynges, &c. it wolde aske a longe tracte of time.
Fabyan, an. 1396.

And yet they be the greatest makers of love, the daylie dalliers with such pleasant wordes, with such smiling and secret countenances, with such signs, tokens, wagers, purposed to be lost before they were purposed to be made.
Ascham. The Schole Master, b. 1.

Wher as he doth but dalliengly perswade, they may enforce & compel.—Bale. Image, pt. ii.

And who (as let in lease) do farm the crown,
And joy the use of majesty and might:
Whilst we hold but the shadow of our own,
Pleas'd with vain shows, and dallied with delight.
Daniel. The Civil Wars, b. ii.

For so to interpose a little ease,
Let our frail thoughts dally with false surmise.
Milton. Lycidas.

——— Know, most unworthy man,
So much we hate the baseness of thy lust,
As, were none living of thy sex but thee,
We had much rather prostitute our blood
To some envenom'd serpent, than admit
Thy beastial dalliance.—Ford. Love's Sacrifice, Act ii. sc. 3.

These great men's dissensions awakened Nero, fearing lest the Britaines thereby would be more forward to advantage, with whom experience had shewed there was no dallying.—Speed. The Romans, b. vi. c. 8.

[A soul] guiltless of hate, and proof against desire;
That all things weighs, and nothing can admire.
That dares prefer the toils of Hercules
To dalliance, banquets, and ignoble ease.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 10.

Is there now any dallying in such a matter as this?
Sharp, vol. vii. Ser. 13.

Let me not daily with my queen's distress,
What were it, but to lift incumbent woe,
That it might fall more grievous.
Smollett. The Regicide, Act iii. sc. 2.

From pleasing dalliance with the charms of night,
[Urania] my wandering thought recalls, to what excites
Far other beat of heart! Narcissa's tomb!
Young. Complaint, Night 5.

DAM, or Dame, n. } Fr. Dame; It. Dama; Sp. Dama; by contraction from the Lat. Domina, mistress. Somner thinks that dam, pro brutorum matre, procreatrice, may be from the A. S. Team, issue, offspring, from the A. S. Tym-an, parere, parturire, to bear, to bring forth; but dame, as well as dam, was applied to mother by our old writers, and there seems not sufficient reason to suppose them different words. Dam—

A mother; usually restricted to brute animals. And dame—

A matron, a mother, a mistress.

"Mid how mony knyghtes ys he come?" the other ageyn seyde,
"Ma dame, bute mid é mon."—R. Gloucester, p. 35

——— And fykel tonge hure syre,
Amendes was hure dame.—Piers Ploukman, p. 30.

Ac rys up ragamoffyn. and reche me all the barres
That Belial the beel syre. beot with thy damme.
Id. Ib. p. 351.

And so befell, that the excellent renoun
Of the emperoures doughter dame Custance
Reported was, with every circumstance,
Unto these Surrien marchants, in swiche wise
Fro day to day, as I shal you devise
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale.

Then shall the priest be as the people, the master as the servaunt, ye dame like the mayde, the seller like the byer.
Bible, 1551. Esays, c. 24.

Faithlesse, forsworn, ne goddesse was thy dam
Nor Dardanus beginner of thy race;
But of hard rockes mount Caucase monstruous
Bred thee, and teats of tyger gaue thee suck.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv

——— No fair to thine
Equivalent or second, which compel'd
Mee thus, though importune perhaps to come
And gaze, and worship thee of right declar'd
Sovran of creatures, universal dame.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

When the young is brought forth, how comes all the nourishment then to be transfer'd from the womb to the breasts or paps, leaving its former channel, the dam at such time being for the most part lean and ill-favour'd!
Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

Silence in times of suffering is the best,
'Tis dangerous to disturb an hornet's nest.
In other authors you may find enough,
But all they say of dames is idle stuff
Dryden. The Cock and the Fox.

The attraction of the calf or lamb to the teat of the dam, is not explained by simply referring it to the sense of smell. What made the scent of milk so agreeable to the lamb, that it should follow it up with its nose, or seek with its mouth the place from which it proceeded?

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 13.

DAM, v. } A.S. Daman; Dut. and Ger. Dammen; Sw. Damma, obturare, obstruere; to stop up, to obstruct.
DAM, n. }
DA'MING, n. }
See DUMB.

To stop or shut up, block up or confine, to obstruct.

If al the earth were parchment scribable
Spedie for the hand, and all maner wood
Were hewed & proporcioned to pennes able
All water ynke, in damme or in flood
Euery man being a perfite scribe and good
The cursednesse yet and descript of women
Could not be shewed by the meane of penne.

Chaucer. The Remedie of Loue.

But with certain windes that come from the sea of Ponte, the sande in the plaines is blowen together in heapes, whyche seeme a farre of like greate hylles, whereby the accustomed wayes bee so damned, that no signe of them can appeare.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 184.

——— And then a rocke
He lift aloft, that damd vp to his flocke,
The doore they entred.—Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. lx.

Abortive tears from their fair eyes out-flow'd,
And damm'd the lovely splendour of their sight,
Which seem'd like Titan, whilst some watry cloud
O'erspreads his face, and his bright beams doth shroud.

Cowley. Pyramus & Thisbe.

Cal. No more dams I'll make for fish,
Nor fetch in firing, at requiring.

Shakespeare. Tempest, Act ii. sc. 2.

In that of Thorpe, as to those five persons, it was not an absolute denial of justice; it was not a damming up, but a strengthening only, of the channel.

State Trials. J. Hampden, an. 1637.

Small exhortation needs; your powers employ:
And this bad world (so Jove decrees) destroy.
Let loose the reins to all your watery store.
Bear down the dams, and open every door.

Dryden. Ovid. Met. b. i.

When you dam up a stream of water, as soon as the dam is full, as much water must run over the dam-head as if there was no dam at all.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv. c. 5.

DA'MAGE, v. } Fr. Dam, dommage; It. Danno, dannaggio; Sp. Dano; from the Lat. Damnum; from Damnare, to doom, to deem.
DA'MAGE, n.
DA'MAGEABLE.
DA'MAGE-FULL.
See TO CONDEMN, and TO DAMN.

The damnum, is the doom, the judgment, the loss, the punishment, to which any one is judged, sentenced, doomed or damned; and then, generally—

Any loss, injury, hurt, harm or detriment.

It is so full of wildnesse
So oft it doeth shame and domage
To him or to his lynage.—Chaucer. The Rom. of the Rose.

When bothe the armyes were approachyng to the other, the ordinaunce shot so terribly and with suche a violence, that it sore dammaged and encombred bothe the parties.

Hall. Hen. VII. an. 3.

Being perswaded that hee hauing entrid into so many perils, your maiestie wil not dislike the same, especially, if it may appeare that it be not damageable vnto your royall maiestie, and that to your people it will bring some profite.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 245.

But Calidore, that was well skild in fight,
Him long forbore, and still his spirit spar'd,
Lying in wait how him he damage might.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 1.

He discharged one single gun from his poop, and hung out a red flag: and came up to the English admiral, and gave him a broadside; with which he killed many of his men, and damaged the ship.

Clarendon. Civil War, vol. iii. p. 459.

The other denied it, because it would be damageable and prejudicial to the Spaniard (who had been at the charge of maintaining a strong army for now full six months) in case peace should not be agreed upon.

Camden. Elizabeth, an. 1588.

His warre in Ireland was more dammagefull, than fishing with an hooke of gold, for here the baite and hooke was not onely lost, but the line, rod and himselfe were drawn altogether into the deathes of irrecouerable ruine.

Speed. Rich. II. b. ix. c. 13. s. 107.

Soon after the English fleet had refitted themselves (for they had generally been much damaged by the engagement in Solbay,) they appeared in sight of Scheveling, making up to the shore.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1672.

The engagement began at about four in the afternoon, and lasted till nine at night with great loss to the enemy, and little damage on our side though their fleet was double our number.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 349.

In the library of St. John's college, Cambridge, is an original of their foundress Margaret of Richmond, the king's mother, much damaged, and the painter not known.

Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 3.

That to the utmost of our ability we ought to repair any damage we have done to others is self-evident, and it is no less evident, that we must not promote our own interest to the detriment of another, or if any necessity force us to this, that we ought to make good his loss, as soon as it is in our power.—Beattie. Moral Science, pt. iii. c. 1.

DA'MASCENE. Fr. Damasine. Prunum Damascenum, plum of Damascus. Also written Damson or damsin, (qv.)

And if you come heather,
When damsins I gather,
I will part them all you among.

Spenser. Shepheard's Calendar. April.

And therefore all your dainty plummes, are a little drie, and come from the stone, as the muskie-plumme, the damasine-plumme, the peach, the apricot, &c.

Bacon. Naturall History, s. 509.

A third bore a kind of purple apple; which, after it had been kept a few days, became eatable, and tasted somewhat like a damascene.—Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 6.

DA'MASK, n. } Damask garment, damask rose. Vestis, aut rosa Damascena. Fr. De damas; It. Di damasco; Sp. De damasko; Dut. and Ger. Damask. So called (says Skinner) from the most ancient and celebrated city of Damascus, whence they were introduced into Europe.
DA'MASK, v. }
DA'MASK, adj. }
DA'MASKIN. }
DA'MASKING. }

The colour of damask, i. e. of the damask rose. To damask their bodies,—to stain them with damask colour; to form, or imitate the form of, flowers; to flower; to variegate. Cups damaskined,—Fr. Damasquiner, to flourish, carve, or engrave, damask-wise.

He yaue to lords iuels manifold
Clothes of veluet, damaske and of gold
To get him hearts.—Ludgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. iii.

And yet did she [Saint Mary Magdeleyn] it but to do him pleasure with, as men dyd thē vnto gestes to make them chere withal, as folke do now cast damaske water & burne pleasāt perfumes.—Sir T. More. Works, p. 612.

And in time of memory things have been brought in that were not here before, as the damaske-rose, by Doctour Linaker, King Henry the Seuenth, and King Henrie the Eight's physician.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 165.

There daisies damask every place,
Nor once their beauties lose,
That when proud Phœbus hides his face,
Themselves they scorn to close.

Drayton. The Description of Elysium.

The last reason of such their going naked sometimes, was out of an opinion that no clothing so adorned them, as their painting and damasking of their bodies.

Speed. Ancient Britaines, b. v. c. 7. s. 7.

[They had] cups of fine Corinthean latin guilded and damaskined.—Purchas, b. iii. c. 13.

On a large gentle hill crown'd with tall wood,
Near where the regal Gabaah proudly stood,
A tent was pitch'd, of green wrought damask made,
And seem'd but the fresh forest's natural shade.

Cowley. The Davideis, b. iii.

The damaske meddowes, and the crawlinge streames,
Sweeten, and make soft thy dreame.

Corbet. The Country Life.

No old Toledo blades, or damaskins.

Howell. The Vole, or a Poem Royal.

——— Why hast thou rent
Those curled locks, where I have often hung
Riband and damask-roses, and have flung
Waters distill'd to make thee fresh and gay,
Sweeter than nosegayes on a bridal day?

Beaum. & Fletch. Faithful Shepherdess, Act iv. sc. 1.

But as the raven late, he next sends out
The damask-colour'd dove, his nimble scout
Which thrills the thin air, and his pinions plies.

Drayton. Noah's Flood.

——— When solar beams
Parch thirsty human veins, the damask'd meads
Unforc'd, display ten thousand painted flowers
Useful in potables.

J. Philips. Cider, b. ii.

Now Turnus arms for fight! his back and breast,
Well-temper'd steel, and scaly brass invest:
The cuishes, which his brawny thighs infold,
Are mingled metal damask'd o'er with gold.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. xi.

As soon as th' unskilful fool that's blind enough,
To call rich Indian damask Norwich stuff,
Shall become rich by trade.—Somerville. Horace, Ep. 10.

DAME. See DAM.

DAMN, v. } Fr. Damner; It. Dannare; Lat. Damnare. (See CONDEMN.) Tooke thinks the root is the A.S. Dem-an, to deem, (dem-a, judex, or doomer; demn, judicium, damnatio, doom.) In Matt. v. 21, the Gr. Κρισις; Lat. Judicium; A.S. and Eng. Dome or Doom; M. V. Judgment; are used emphatically, or with a subaudition of the punishment doomed or adjudged, Ὁς δ' ἂν φονευσῃ, ἔνοχος ἐσται τῃ κρισει. "Thou shalt not kill, and whoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment." And Dr. Hammond observes of the Gr. Κριμα, that according to its origination, it signifies censure, judgment; and in its making hath no intimation, either of the quality of the offence to which that judgment belongs, or of the judge who inflicts it;—he might have added, or of the punishment inflicted. (Works, i. 314.)
DA'MNABLE.
DA'MNABLENESS.
DAMNABI'LITY.
DA'MNABLY.
DAMNA'TION.
DA'MNATORY, adj.
DA'MNED.
DA'MNEDLY.
DA'MNIFY.
DA'MNING, n.
DA'MNINGNESS.

To damn or to condemn,—is to deem, think or judge, (subaud.) any one to be guilty, to be criminal;—to give judgment or sentence, or doom, of guilt; to adjudge or declare the penalty or punishment.

——— Mytigacion ich by seche,
Dampne me nouht at domys-day, for that ich dude so ille.

Piers Ploughman, p. 103.

And Jhesus reiside himsilf, and seide to hir, womman where ben thei that accusiden thee? no man hath dampned thee? Sche seide, no man, Lord. Jhesus seide to hir, neither I schal dampne thee: go thou, and now aftirward nyle thou synne more.—Wiclif. Jon, c. 8.

That deuouring the housis of widowis: and feynen longe preyinge, these schulen take the more dampnacioun.

Id. Luk, c. 20.

For wel thou wost thyselven verraily,
That thou and I be damned to prison
Perpetuel, us gaineth no raunsoun.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1177.

Hir othes ben so gret and so damnable
That it is grisly for to here hem swere.

Id. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,406.

I cannot seyn, but that they do cursedly and damnably ayenst Crist, and all the feith of holy chirche.

Id. The Persones Tale, vol. ii. p. 334.

He eteth his owne dampning
But if he lie, that made all thing.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

Lay them to the touchstone, and trye them with God's word. If they be found false and counterfaite, then damne them, and I shall also reuoke them with all myne hart.

Frith. Works, p. 3. To the Christian Reader.

For what better allectiue coulde Lucyfer deuyse, to allure and bringe men pleasantly into damnable seruitude, than to pourpose to them in fourme of a playe, his principall treasury.—Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 26.

When lawes are made against God and his word: then I ought more to obey God than man. Then I may refuse to obey with a good conscience; yet for all that I may not rise up against the magistrates, nor make any uprore: for if I doe so, I sin damnably.

Latimer. The fourth Sermon upon the Lord's Prayer.

Lest that suche short forgeuenes, as wel of al the payne as of the displeasure of God, and of the deadlyneese, or as men might say, of the damnabilitie belōging to the mortall offence myght make men waxe the worse, & sette much the lesse by sinne.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 458.

I must put vp my supplication to the queen's maiesty and her honourable councell to grant me leaue to stay here so much of their goods as they haue damnified mee, or else that I may take of them in Newfoundland, as much fish as shall be worth 600 li.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 134.

——— Wert thou so void of fear or shame
As offer them to me the Son of God,
To me my own, on such abhorred pact,
That I fall down and worship thee as God?
Get thee behind me; plain thou now appear'st
That evil one, Satan for ever damn'd.

Milton. Paradise Regained, b. iv.

Doubtlease, as the damnableness of this most execrable impietie, (which is next of kinne to that unpardonable sinne and blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, the author of the Scriptures,) transcends my narrow expressions; so the eternal torments allotted to it, doe surpasse men's highest thoughts.—Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act iii. sc. 5.

And sting of conscience is a punishment
On earth, they say, the greatest, and some tell
It is more'o'er the only one in hell,
The worm that never dies, being alone
The thing they call endless damnation.
Cotton. Epistle to John Bradshaw, Esq.

But if the words be of the present or past time, and yet not immediately damnatory, they do imply the sentence to be made afterward; as decernimus, definimus, declaramus, and the like.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 2.

Super. Fell it out so accursedly?
Ambo. So damnedly.
Tourneur. The Revenger's Tragedy, Act. iii. sc. 1.

Harrow now out, and weal-away, he cryde,
What dismall day hath lent this cursed light,
To see my Lord so deadly damnifyde.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 6.

When on one day, the same hands that would have sacrificed to him [Paul] as a God, did sacrifice him to their own evill spirits; he tore his clothes with more emotion of spirit when he was vainly to be Deified, then he suffered the tearing of his flesh when he was thus unjustly damnified.
Montaigne. Devoute Essayes, Treat. 9. s. 2.

He may vow never to return to those sins which he hath had such experience of, for the emptiness and damningness of them, and so think himself a compleat penitent.
Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 20.

However it may be said by way of answer to that part of the argument, that Christ suffered and satisfied for sin, or else God could not pardon any, (not to dispute the truth of that, whether he could or no,) it still remains that the damningness of sin is then taken from sin, by what means it now matters not.—Id. Ib. p. 187.

As to the state of the damned, that that likewise is immutable the Scripture does seem plainly enough to assert, when it calls it an everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and uses such expressions to set forth the continuance of their misery, as signify the longest and most interminable duration, expressions of as great an extent as those which are used to signify the eternal happiness of the blessed; and as large and unlimited as any are to be had in those languages wherein the Scriptures are written.
Tillotson, vol. ii. Ser. 73.

They acknowledge the power of the Englishman's God, as they call him, because they could never yet have power by their conjurations to damnify the English either in body or goods.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 320.

DAMP, v.
DAMP, n.
DAMP, adj.
DA'MPEN, v.
DA'MPISH.
DA'MPISHNESS.
DA'MPNESS.
DA'MPY.

Dut. Dampen, dompen, vaporare, et mollire, et mollescere ex vaporibus, (Kilian.) Ger. Dampfen, exhalare, vaporare, fumare, (Wachter.)

To evaporate, to exhale, to reek, to throw forth an exhalation, a steam; and then, generally, to moisten, to wet; and, consequentially and met. to cool, to chill; as to damp or cool the courage; and thus, further, to abate, to weaken, to deject, to depress, to dishearten, to discourage.

And that (the course of thinges beyng sodainly chaunged) they that were pulled vp before by the vayne Iniustice of Moyses' lawe, and by the foolysh wisedome of this worlde, should bee damped, and be brought lowe.—Udal. Matt. c. 3.

And maie it one daie please God to vouchsalue whan he seeth his time, to dampe ye taunting mockes of such personnes, likewise as at this present he did sharply reproue these Pharisees.—Id. Luk, c. 16.

But Perseus after he had encouraged his men in this sort, and had put them in such a hope and jollity, when this barbarous supply came to ask him a thousand crowns in hand for every captaine, he was so damped and troubled withall in his mind, casting up the sum it came to, that his onely covetousnese and misery made him return them back, and refuse their service.—North. Plutarch, p. 209.

The aire, if it be moist, doth in a degree quench the flame; (as we see lights will go out in damps of mines.)
Bacon. Nat. Hist. § 375.

Adam by this from the cold sudden damp
Recovering, and his scatter'd spirits return'd,
To Michael thus his humble words address'd.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Then both from out hell gates into the waste
Wide anarchie of chaos, damp and dark,
Flew divers.
Id. Ib. b. x.

In midst himself dampens the smiling day,
And prints sad characters, which none may write or say.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 7.

We'll first hang Envie in such rings of mist
As never rose from any dampish fen.
Anonymous. The Merry Devil of Edmonton.

Brick hath been used by some, with great success, to make their walls thick; and to put a lay of chalk between the bricks, to take away all dampishness.
Bacon. Nat. Hist. § 937.

Nor did his wisdom damp his martial fire,
Minerva both her portions did inspire,
Use of the warlike bow and peaceful lyre.
Stepney. To the Earl of Carlisle.

I wish the matter as well tried as might be, by very dampy vapours about the mouth of the baroscope, or in the closet, and then again, &c.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 397.

No more the warbling waters roll:
Deserts of snow fatigue the eye;
Successive tempests bloat the sky,
And gloomy damps oppress the soul.
Akenside, b. i. Ode 2.

Afterwards hearing, that the king of the country was making a general search for books to furnish his library at Pergamus, he hid them [Aristotle's works] in a hole under ground; where they lay for many years, and suffered much from worms and dampness.—Beattie. On Truth, pt. iii. c. 2.

DA'MSEL, n. Fr. Damoiselle; It. Damigella, donzella, Sp. Donzella, (q. d.) dominicella, parva domina, (Skinner.) "It is properly," says Minshew, "and according to the use of the word in times past, a gentlewoman, being not a ladie; and it is the feminine of the French words, Damoisel, damoiseau; It. Damigello, donzello, Sp. Donzelle. (Domicellus) quasi parvus dominus, which is a young gentleman following armes, and not yet knighted." But in England we call a damsel—
A young maiden yet unmarried.

Tho fond he thre damyseles, gent and fair ynowg.
That Homber with hym brogte.—R. Gloucester, p. 26.

The Erle of Arundelle his londes lauht [left] he than,
& take a damyselle, William doubter of Warrenne.
R. Brunne, p. 332.

And Petre satt withoute in the halle, and a damysel cam to him and seide, Thou were with Jhus of Galilee.
Wiclif. Matthew, c. 26.

And with Rhetorike come forth musike a damesel of our house, that syngeth nowe lighter modes or proiacions and now headier.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. ii.

Thei ben all redy obeisant,
As damoiselles attendant
To the goddes, whose service
They mote obey in all wise.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

——— Thammuz came next behind,
Whose annual wound in Lebanon allur'd
The Syrian damsels to lament his fate
In amorous ditties all a summer's day.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. i.

An amber scent of odorous perfume
Her harbinger, a damsel train behind;
Some rich Philistian matron she may seem,
And now at nearer view, no other certain
Than Dalila thy wife. Id. Samson Agonistes.

Then to the skies her flight Minerva bends.
And to the queen the damsel-train descends;
Wak'd at their steps, her flowing eyes unclose;
The tear she wipes, and thus renews her woes.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xviii.

And therefore when St. Luke speaks of the damsel at Philippi as possessed with a spirit of divination, or of Apollo, he meant only to describe her pretensions, and the common belief concerning her.—Farmer. On Miracles, c. 3. s. 3.

DA'MSON. See DAMASCENE.

Full of goodly trees euen as in France, as in okes, elmes, ashes, walnut-trees, cydrons, vines, and white thornes, that bring foorth fruit as bigge as any damsons.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 316.

Nor there the damson wants, nor dainty apricock.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 18.

DANCE, v.
DANCE, n.
DA'NCER.
DA'NCERESS.
DA'NCERY.
DA'NCING, n.

Fr. Danser; It. Dansare; Sp. Danzar; Ger. Tantzen; Dut. Dansen; Sw. Dansa, of uncertain etymology. Ihre, after giving the opinions of various etymologists, concludes:—Such things we say, when we have nothing worth saying. Wachter observes,—"Saltare nihil aliud est, quam motus pedibus facere ad sonum et numerum chordæ compositos;" i. e.

To make certain motions or movements with the feet corresponding to the sound and tune of music.

To dance attendance, or to kick the heels, (sc.) while in attendance,—is an expression applied to those, who wait a wearisome length of time, and who endeavour to amuse or warm themselves by motion; and thus,—

To wait or attend servilely, suppliantly.

——— Herodes the daffe
Gaf hus douhter for daunsynge. In a dishe the hefde
Of the blessede Baptiste.—Piers Ploughman, p. 175.

He that hath eeris of heryng; here he. But to whom schal I gesse this generacioun lyk? it is lyk to children sittynge in chepynge that crien to peeris, and seyen we have sungen to you; and ye han not daunsid, we have mourned to you; and ye han not weyled.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 11.

For who so sorowfull is in harte
Him lust not to plaie ne starte
Nor for to dauncen, ne to sing.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

That turned is to quaking all my daunce.
Id. Of Queene Annelida.

There was revell, there was dauncinge
And every life, whiche couth singe
Of lusty women in the route,
A freshe caroll hath songe about.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

And ye seruauntes of Achis sayde of hem: is not this Dauid the kinge of the lande? did they not singe vnto this fellow in daunses, sayinge: saul hathe slayne his thousand and Dauid his ten thousand.—Bible, an. 1551. Kings, c. 22.

Whiche prestes, for as moch as certayne times they daunced about the citie with targates, that they imagined to fal from heuen, were called in Latine Salij, whiche in to Englyshe may be translated daūcers.
Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 20.

I am not of that opinion, that all dauncing generally is repugnant vnto vertue, all thoughe some personnes excellently lerned, specially diuines, so do affirme it.
Id. Ib. b. i. c. 19.

Some of the mariners thinking we were in Bristow Channell, and other in Silly Channell: so that through variety of iudgements, and euill marinership we were faine to dance the hay foure dayes together, sometimes running to the north-east, sometimes to the south-east, and againe to the east and east-northeast.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 200.

——— Methought it was a sound
Of riot and ill-manag'd merriment,
Such as the jocund flute, or gamesome pipe
Stirs up among the loose unletter'd hinds,
When for their teeming flocks, and granges full,
In wanton dance, they praise the bounteous Pan,
And thank the Gods amis. Milton. Comus.

What eye doth see the Heav'n but doth admire
When it the movings of the Heav'ns doth see?
Myself, if I to Heav'n may once aspire,
If that be dancing, will a dancer be.—Davies. Dancing.

For what doth this danceresse? She most impudently uncovers her head, which Paul hath commanded to be alwayes covered, she turns about her necke the wrong way: she througheth about her haire hither and thither.
Prynne. Hystrio-Mastix, Act vi. sc. 12.

This sung the sacred Muse, whose notes and words
The dancers feete kept; as his hands his cords.
Vlysses, much was pleas'd, and all the crew;
This would the king haue varied with a new
And pleasing measure; and performed by
Two, with whom none would strive in dancerie.
And those, his sonnes were: that must therefore dance
Alone; and onely to the harp aduance,
Without the words.—Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. viii.

At this time the court fell into much extravagance in masquerading; both king and queen and all the court, went about masked, and came into houses unknown, and danced there with a great deal of wild frolic.
Burnet. Own Time, an. 1688.

James, before he beheld Betty was vain of his strength, a rough wrestler, and a quarrelsome cudgel-player: Betty, a public dancer at maypoles, a romp at stool-ball.
Spectator, No. 71.

Remove your benches, you apostate pit,
And take, above, twelve pennyworth of wit;
Go back to your dear dancing on the rope,
Or see what's worse the Devil and the Pope.
Dryden. A Prologue

Thee the voice, the dance, obey,
Temper'd to thy warbled lay,
O'er Idalia's velvet-green
The rosy-crowned Loves are seen,
On Cytherea's day. Gray. The Progress of Poesy.

We must court, flatter, and fee them; not to mention the trouble of dancing attendance, and paying our most obsequious respects to them.—V. Knox. Antipolemus.

DANDELI'ON. Fr. Dent de lion; It. Dente di lione; Sp. Diente di leon; from I know not what similitude to the tooth of a lion, (Skinner.) Because, says Minshew, its juice renders the teeth strong and firm.

Now when things are set in this clear light, it appears how ridiculous it would be for two persons to contend, whether dandelion be an herb or a weed; whether it be a pot-herb or a sallad; when by the custom or fancy of different families, this one plant obtains all these names according to the several uses of it, and the value that is put upon it.

Watts. Logic, pt. I. c. 6.

DA'NDLE, v. Ger. Denteln. (See DANDIPRAT.) Minshew says—

To dandle, is to lull, cocker, hugge fondly, to dandle in the lap or armes, as a nurse doth to please an infant.

Junius interprets the Dut. Dandelen, to the same effect. Wachter gives cunctari, as one of the usages of denteln; and dandle seems so used by Spenser; (sc.) to delay or trifle away.

But there is one very foul abuse, which by the way I may not omit, and that is in captaines, who notwithstanding that they are specially imployed to make peace through strong execution of warre, yet they doo so dandle their doings, and dallie in the service to them committed, as if they would not have the enemy subdued, or utterly beaten downe, for feare afterwards they should need employment, and so be discharged of pay.—Spenser. On the State of Ireland.

Dare you not cherish those sins in your souls that possibly you dare not commit in your practices? Do you not dandle them in your thoughts, and hover and flutter over them in your affections?—Hopkins, Ser. 14.

King Henries ambassadors into France hauing beene dandled by the French during these delusive practises, returned without other fruite of their labours.

Speed. Hen. VII. b. ix. c. 20. s. 28.

Sporting the lion ramp'd, and in his paw
Dandl'd the kid. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

Then dandles him with many a mutter'd pray'r
That heaven would make him some rich miser's heir.

Dryden. Persius, sat. 2.

Thou happy wretch! by blindness thou art blest;
By dotage dandled to perpetual smiles.

Young. Complaint, Night I.

DA'NDRUFF is sufficiently explained by Holland. Skinner says from the A. S. Tan, i. e. "A foul tetter, scab or other like disease, especially in the chin, causing the haire to fall." And drof, "filthie, dirtie, draffie," (Somner.)

The roots of the black [beet] sodden after the same manner in water, rid away the dandruffe or unseemely skales within the haire of the head or beard.

Holland. Plinie, b. xx. c. 8.

A paste of composition rare,
Sweat, dandriff, powder, lead, and hair.

Swift. Lady's Dressing Room.

DA'NDY, n. } Dandy.—Dr. Jamieson refers
DA'NDIPRAT. } to the Isl. Dandi, and Sw. Dasenne, liberal, munificent; and explains it to be,—that which "is nice, fine, or possessing supereminence in whatever way."—Dandiprat—is with us (Skinner) a dwarf, a little man: of uncertain origin. The Dut. Danten, dandelen; It. Dondolare; Fr. Dandiner, ineptire, garrire; Scotch, Dandle, to saunter, to go about idly; Ger. Denteln, ludere, ludicrè agere, to dally, to idle; and (see Florio) to play the babie, puppie, or gull,—seem to be allied. But what is Prat? Skinner thinks it may be Fr. Prest, prompt, apt, fit; and thus it may be,—

One apt to play the fool.

The smug dandiprat smells us out, whatsoever we are doing.—Massinger. The Virgin Martyr, Act ii. sc. 1.

The vile dandiprat will overlook the proudest of his acquaintance.—Brewer. Lingua, Act iii. sc. 3.

K. Henry the Seauenth stamped a small coin, called dandyprats.—Camden. Remains. On Money.

DA'NEGELD. A. S. Dane-geld; Mid. Lat. Dane-geldum; compounded of Dane, and gelt, a debt or fine. The examples sufficiently explain the usage of the word. And see Spelman, (Gloss. Archæol.)

Which yerely, during his lyfe, and after, to the cummynge of Seynt Edwarde was leuyed of his subiectes, and named, for the continuaunce thereof, Danegelt: whiche is, or was to meane, money payde to y^e^ Danys or shortly Dane money

Fabyan, vol. i. c. 198.

At first, £10,000. was given to the Danes, who retired with this money and the rest of their plunder. The English were now, for the first time, taxed to supply this payment. The imposition was called Danegelt not more burthensome in the thing, than scandalous in the name.

Burke. Abridgement of English History, b. ii. c. 2.

DANG, v. See DING.

DA'NGER, v.
DA'NGER, n.
DA'NGERFULL.
DA'NGERFULLY.
DA'NGERLESS.
DA'NGEROUS.
DA'NGEROUSLY.
DA'NGEROUSNESS.

Fr. Danger; Low. Lat. Dangerium, domigerium.

Mr. Tyrwhitt says,—"Danger, n. Fr. A dangerous situation. In danger, 665.—In danger hadde he, i. e. within the reach, or controul of his office, and R. 1470.—Coyness, sparingness, R. 1147. Tr. ii. 384.—With danger, 6103, sparingly.—Dangerous, adj. difficult, sparing, 519. 5733."

The passages referred to by Mr. Tyrwhitt are quoted below. Dr. Jamieson says, "In his daunger, under his daunger, in his power as a captive. But (i. e. Be-out) daungere, without hesitation or apprehension. The O. Fr. danger frequently occurs as signifying power, dominion." The authors, he adds, of the Dict. Trev. think that the word in this sense is corrupted from the Lat. Dominari.

With respect to the etymology of this word, Menage says, they are deceived who derive it from damnum gerere; it comes from damniarium. Damnum damni, damniarium, damjarium, danger. Du Cange prefers Fr. Dommager, i. e. damnosus.

In Fr. and old English law, danger seems equivalent to penalty, damages, commissi poena. And thus,—"Narcissus love had caught in his daungere;" i. e. within the action or agency of pain or penalty, of damage, hurt, ill or mischief; within the reach of penal, hurtful, mischievous power. Thus also, "In danger had he all the yonge girles." And in R. Brunne,—"All was in the erle's dangere." And again, "He was never wedded to woman's danger," i. e. woman's dangerous power. From this application to the risk or chance of pain or mischief, the word seems to have been extended to the fear of pain or mischief; and, consequentially, as Mr. Tyrwhitt explains, to sparingness, to coyness. Thus, "With daunger uttren we our chaffare;" with fearfulness, with fear of loss, of harm, and, therefore, cautiously, thriftily, sparingly.

Daungerous, in Gower and Chaucer, appears equivalent to—fearful to hurt, fearful to lose; and, therefore, cautious to guard or to preserve; or, as Mr. Tyrwhitt says, Sparing, (sc.) in the use.

To danger or to endanger, is, to be or cause to be within the action or agency of damage, of pain or penalty, of hurt, ill or mischief; within the reach of penal, hurtful, mischievous power.

——Gef heo abowe to hym, and to here kyng hym nome,
That he wole al out hem brynge of the daunger of Rome.

R. Gloucester, p. 78.

Kyng was Kynwolf sex and tuenty gere
He was neuer wedded to woman's daungere.

R. Brunne, p. 9.

Aboute with Sir Symoun the king went that gere
Cite, castelle and toun alle was in the erle's dangere.

Id. p. 219.

For hee that ys ones a theef, is evere more in daunger
And as the lawe lyketh, to lyve oth^r^ to deye.

Piers Ploughman, p. 236.

In danger hadde he at his owen gise
The yonge girles of the diocise,
And knew hir conseil, and was of hir rede.

Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 665.

With danger uttren we all our chaffare.
Gret prees at market maketh dere ware,
And to gret chepe is holden at litel prise;
This knoweth every women that is wise.

Id. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6103.

Narcissus was a bachelere
That loue had caught in his daungere,
And in his nette gan him so straine.

Id. The Rom. of the Rose.

For all his purpose, as I gesse,
Was for to make great dispence
Withouten warning or defence;
And richesse might it well sustaine,
And her dispences well maintaine,

And him alwaie such plentie sende
Of golde and siluer for to spende,
Without lacking or daungere
As it were pourde in a garnere.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

So let your daunger, sugred ben alite
That of his death, ye be not al to wite.—Id. Troilus, b. ii.

He was to sinful men not dispitous,
Ne of his speche dangerous ne digne,
But in his teching discrete and benigne.

Id. The Prologue, v. 519.

If I be dangerous God yeve me sorwe,
Min husband shal it have both even and morwe.

Id The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 5733.

I trow, I love him the bet, for he
Was of his love so dangerous to me.—Id. Ib. v. 6696.

He [Agamemnon] toke of hir what hym list
Of thyng, which was most precious,
Whereof that she [Chryseis] was dangerous.

Gower. Con. A. b. i.

And beholde, there were certain Jewes present standing by, whose soules y^e^ spirite of Satan did more daungerfully possesse, then that same vncleane spirite had possessed the body of this man.—Udal. Luke, c. 11

Y^e^ which the same moste gracious lorde anone as he had rebuked his disciple, restored agayne, and so made him [Malchus] amendes for the hurt of this small & daungerles wounde.—Id. Marke, c. 14.

Along the shore also of the Grecian sea we went very dangerously vpon the ice in sundry places, & that for many daies together.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 65.

It came not of any daungerousnes or difficultie on his behalfe, y^t^ they could not touche hym, who grudged not to touche and handle the leper but the ensaumple of theyr faith highly pleased hym y^e^ whiche his pleasure was to haue set furth and commended to all men.—Udal. Marke, c. 6.

If they were thriftlesse, mought not we amend,
And with more care our dangered fields defend?
Each man can guard what things he deemeth deare.

Bp. Hall, b. v. Sat. 3.

——Give him then an honest period,
In brave fight, by Patroclus sword, if he be deare to thee,
And grieves thee, for his danger'd life.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xvi.

Thus having dispersed his power all abroad, he [Pompeius] brought all the pyrates' ships that were in a fleet together, within his danger: and when he had taken them, he brought them all into a dock.—North. Plutarch, p. 536.

Por. Of a strange nature is the suite you follow,
Yet in such rule, that the Venetian law
Cannot impugne you as you do proceed.
You stand within his danger, do you not?

Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act iv. sc. 1.

Three times a day I holpe him to his horse,
Three times bestrid him: thrice I led him off,
Perswaded him from any further act:
But still where danger was, still there I met him.

Id. 2 Part Hen. VI. Act v. sc. 3.

It is no common labour to
The ruer Ob to sayle,
Howbeit Burrough did therein,
Not dangerles, preuaile.

Warner. Albion's England, b. xi. c. 67.

Such men as he, be neuer at heart's ease,
Whilst they behold a greater then themselues,
And therefore are they very dangerous.

Shakespeare. Julius Cæsar, Act I. sc. 2.

How therefore either dangerously
Their labyrinth did passe
Shall not be ouerpassed: thus
Their seuerall fortune was.

Warner. Albion's England, b. vii. c. 34.

And surely if they list but a litle cõsider, the dangerousnes of the enterprise was very apparent. It was now night, the situation of the towne was vnknowen, within nothing but enemies, and euery corner fit for an ambush.

Savile. Tacitus. Historie, p. 109.

Thee, God, no face of danger could affright,
Not huge Typhæus, nor th' unnumber'd snake
Increas'd with hissing heads, in Lerna's lake.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. viii.

A sword covered with rust, will wound much more dangerously where it does wound, than it could do if it were bright and clean.—South, vol. viii. Ser. 4.

The third and last thing I proposed to show, was, that from what has been said, there arises a very plain and easy rule, by which we may judge of the malignity and dangerousness of any errour in matters of religion.

Clarke, vol. ii. Ser. 147.

Danger, whose limbs of giant mould
What mortal eye can fixt behold!
Who stalks his round, a hideous form,
Howling amidst the midnight storm,
Or throws him on the ridgy steep
Of some loose hanging rock to sleep.—Collins. Ode to Fear.

DA'NGLE. } It may be deduced, says
DA'NGLER. } Skinner, from the A. S. Dun vel Dunehangen, i. e. deorsum pendere, to hang down. Serenius gives the Sw. Dingla, which Ihre interprets, pendulum motitari. And see To DING or DANG.

To hang, unfixedly, to move or shake as it hangs, slackly, loosely; to hang on, (sc. as dependent,) in idle attendance.

Doron. The spinners' webs 'twixt spray and spray
The top of every bush make gay,
By filmy cords there dangling.
Drayton. The Muses' Elysium, Nymph. 3.

Ours [labour] is not great, the dangling boughs to crop,
Whose too luxuriant growth our alleys stop,
And choke the paths.
Dryden. State of Innocence, Act iii. sc. 1.

They waste their time, which might be spent in honourable and lucrative employments, solely that they may dangle after persons in high life, who often despise their meanness, while, for their own accommodation or amusement, they admit their visits, and accept their attentions.
Anox. Winter Evenings, Even. 30.

Instead of their proper, but severe unostentatious duties, they assign [to them] the brilliant part of men of art and pleasure, of gay, young, military sparks, and danglers at toilets.—Burke. Letter to a Member of National Assembly.

The slipp'ry seat betray'd the sliding part
That press'd it, and the feet hung dangling down,
Anxious in vain to find the distant floor.
Cowper. Task, b. i.

DANK, adj. } Half-dry, half-wet, says Skinner, from the Ger. Tunken, intingere, immergere; to dip, to immerse. Tunken, Wachter says, is a word formed by the Franks from the Gr. Τεγγ-ειν; Lat. Ting-ere.
DANK, n. }
DA'NKISH. }

Wet, moist, mouldy.

Take heede also of mistye and dankinshe dayes, which shall hurt a bowe more than anye rayne.
Ascham. The Schole of Shooting.

And when the broad backe of the sea, their pleasure was to sit,
The superficies of his waves, they [horses] slid upon; their hoves
Not dipt in danke sweate of his browes.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xx.

—— Me, in my vow'd
Picture, the sacred wall declares t' have hung
My dank and dropping weeds
To the stern God of sea.—Milton. Horace, b. i. Ode 5.

They fell vpon me, bound me, bore me thence,
And in a dark and dankish vault at home
There left me and my man, both bound together,
Till gnawing with my teeth my bonds in sunder,
I gain'd my freedome.
Shakespeare. Comedy of Errors, Act v. sc. 1.

—— The arrow that by night
Cuts the dank mist, and fatal wings his flight.
Prior. Solomon. Power.

DAP, or DAPE. } See DAB.

My friend is one that would fain be a brother of the angle: he hath been an angler but this day, and I have taught him, how to catch a chub, by daping with a grashopper.
Walton. Angler, pt. i. c. 5.

With these—and a short line, I shewed to angle for a chub—you may dape or dap.—Id. Ib.

DA'PPER, adj. Dut. Dapper; Ger. Tapfer; strenuus, fortis. A new word, says Wachter, and sprung from Sclavonic Dobry, bonus. Skinner explains it,—a small man of stature, but courageous and active.

Small and active, neatly formed, neat, spruce.

For who is shee that may endure
The dapper tearmes that louers vse;
And painted proems to procure
The modest matron's minde to muse.
Turberville. That Louers ought rather, &c.

The dapper ditties that I wont deuise,
To feed youthes fansie, and the flocking fry,
Delighten much.—Spenser. Shepheard's Calendar. October.

Kened King of Scots, then in the court of Edgar, sitting one day at table was heard to say jestingly, among his servants, he wondered how so many provinces could be held in subjection by such a little dapper man.
Milton. History of England, b. v.

He's so very little, pert, and dapper, the rogue looks as if he could insinuate himself through a key-hole.
Otway. The Atheist.

DA'PPLE, v. } To variegate with spots, like
DA'PPLE, n. } the apple. In the same signification, and for the same reason, this colour is in French called Pommele, (Skinner.) In It. Pommelato, (instar pomi;) in Dut. Appel grauw. Pommele-grey is used by Chaucer, (v. 618.) Generally—To spot; to variegate with spots.

His stede was all dapple-gray.
Chaucer. The Rime of Sire Thopas, v. 13,813.

He had a pair of horns like a bull, his feet cloven; as many eyes upon his body as my gray mare hath dapples, and for all the world so placed.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. ii. p. 271.

—— And looke, the gentle Day
Before the wheels of Phœbus, round about
Dappled the drowsie East with spots of grey.
Shakespeare. Much Adoe about Nothing, Act v. sc. 3.

No way is troden, all the verdant grass,
The spring shot up, stands yet unbruised here
Of any foot, only the dapled deer
Far from the feared sound of crooked horn
Dwells in this fastness.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Faithful Shepherdess, Act ii. sc. 1.

Ply'd with the scourge he still neglects his haste,
And moves reluctant when he moves at last,
Reverts his eye, regrets the distant mare,
And neighs impatient for the dappled fair.
Pitt. Vida. Art of Poetry, b. i.

A dreadful serpent, dappl'd on the back
With crimson spots, and by Olympian Jove
Himself protruded, from the altar's foot
Slipp'd into light, and glided to the tree.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.

DARE, v. }
DARE, n. }
DA'RER. }
DA'REFULL. }
DA'RING, n. }
DA'RINGLY. }
DA'RINGNESS. } Dut. Derren; Ger. Darfen. "A. S. Dearran, dyrran, audere, presumere, to dare, to presume, to adventure, to make or be bold," (Somner.) Goth. Cadaursta; A. S. Dorste, audebat; (Mar. xii. 34;) whence the pret. durst.

To have boldness, bravery or courage; to face danger, to defy it, to challenge or provoke it; and thus, to daunt or dismay; to appal, to terrify, to cower or cause to cower;

And this seems to account for Dare in Chaucer's Shipmannes Tale, v. 13,033, which Mr. Tyrwhitt says, is Saxon, and means Stare.

Thise wedded men, that lie and dare,
As in a fourme setteth a wery hare.

And Minshew, "to dare, an old English word, for to stare; because they which behold a man stedfastly, with a wide, open, staring eye, are said to be bold or daring." With respect to daring larks, Mr. Steevens, on Henry VIII. says, "It is well known that the hat of a Cardinal is scarlet, and that one of the methods of daring larks, was by small mirrors fastened on scarlet cloth, which engaged the attention of these birds, while the fowler threw his net over them."

And heo schulle be such, that no prince dorre hem for sake.
R. Gloucester, p. 113.

"Sir kyng," said Merlyn, "certis nay,
"To opyn my mouthe I dar ne nay."
R. Brunne. App. to Pref. exc.

Save Mede that mayde, no mo dorst a byde.
Piers Ploukman, p. 37.

Do thy neyhebore non harme ne the selve nother
Thanne doest thow wel and wisliche. ich dar hit wel a vouwe.—Id. p. 248.

The folke wol wene, that thou for cowardise
Thee fainest sick, and that thou durst not rise.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. v.

But such diuersity of sects ayenst the rightfull bileue of loue, these errours beene foorth spredde, that loues seruauntes in the trew rule and stedfast faith, in no place darne appeare.—Id. The Testament of Loue, b. ii.

And the feare of God fell vpon that cyties that were rounde about them, that they durst not folowe after the sonnes of Jacob.—Bible, 1551. Genesis, c. 35.

—— What, is Brutus sicke!
And will he steal out of his wholsome bed
To dare the vile contagion of the night?
And tempt the rhewmy, and vnpurged ayre,
To add vnto his sicknesse?
Shakespeare. Julius Cæsar, Act ii. sc. 1.

And running straight whereas she heard his voyce,
Inclos'd the bush about, and there him tooke
Like darred larke; not daring vp to looke
On her whose sight before so much he sought.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vii. c. 7.

—— If we liue thus tamely,
To be thus jaded by a peece of scarlet,
Farewell nobilitie: let his grace go forward,
And dare vs with his cap, like larkes.
Shakespeare. Hen. VIII. Act iii. sc. 2.

There is not in the compass of the light
A more unhappy creature; sure I am monstrous,
For I have done those follies, those mad mischiefs,
Would dare a woman.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Maid's Tragedy, Act iv.

Now from his bodie and his shield, the violent lance he drew
That princely Socus had infixt: which drawne, a crimson dew
Fell from his bosome on the earth: the wound did dare him sore.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.

They doe so insult over, and restrain them, never Roby so dared a larke.—Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 654.

Hots. You strayne too farre—
I rather of his absence make this vse:
It lends a lustre, and a more great opinion,
A larger dare to your great enterprize.
Shakespeare. 1 Part Hen. IV. Act iv. sc. 1.

Leon. That's she, sir, that pretty lady,
If you would speak with her.
Juan. Don Michael, Leon, another darer come.
Beaum. & Fletch. Rule a Wife, &c. Act iii. sc. 1.

Were they not forc'd with those that should be ours,
We might have met them, darefull, beard to beard,
And beate them backward home.
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act v. sc. 5.

Courage may be virtue, where the daring is extreme, if the cause be good; and extreme fear no vice, when the danger is extreme.—Hobbs. De Corpore Politico, c. 4.

—— For I intend to prove
Which thrives the best, the mean or lofty love:
Whether fit wedlock, vowed, 'twixt like and like,
Or prouder hopes which daringly o'erstrike
Their place and means.—Eastward Hoe, Act i. sc. 1.

O let us be sure, then, our confidence, our claims to heaven, improve not above their proportion, that we preserve this symmetry of the parts of grace, that our hope be but commensurate to our sincerity, our daringness to our duty.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 554.

This Midas knew: and durst communicate
To none but to his wife his care of state:
One must be trusted, and he thought her fit,
As passing prudent, and a parlous wit.
Dryden. The Wife of Bath's Tale.

The sea beneath 'em sinks; their labouring sides
Are swell'd, and sweat runs gutt'ring down in tides,
Chance aids their daring with unhop'd success.
Id. Virgil. Æneid, b. v.

Where, when your brother, fired with success,
Too daringly upon the foe did press,
And was a captive made, then you alone
Did with your single arm support the throne.
Halifax. On the Prince of Denmark's Marriage.

The charms of vice, (how tempting soever they may seem to be,) are by no means equivalent to the inward remorse and trouble, and the tormenting reflections which attend it; which always keep pace with our guilt, and are proportioned to the greatness and daringness of our crimes.
Atterbury, vol. iv. Ser. 4.

Ye curious hands, that, hid from vulgar eyes,
By search profane shall find this hallow'd cake,
With virtue's awe forbear the sacred prize,
Nor dare a theft for love and pity's sake.
Collins. Verses with a Piece of Bride Cake.

For in those poems at least, in which something of uncommon grandeur and sublimity is aimed at, there predominates a perpetual, I had almost said, a continued use of the metaphor, sometimes daringly introduced, sometimes rushing in with imminent hazard of propriety
Lowth. On the Sac. Poet. of Heb. (by Gregory) Lect 6

DA'RICK. A coin so called for the reason given in the quotation from Plutarch.

He repaired at the length unto Cimon, and brought him home to his own door two bowls, the one full of daricks of gold, and the other full of daricks of silver, which be pieces of money so called, because that the name of Darius was written upon them.—North. Plutarch, p. 415.

DARK, v.
DARK, n.
DARK, adj.
DA'RKEN, v.
DA'RKENER.
DA'RKFULL.
DA'RKISH.
DA'RKLING.
DA'RKLY.
DA'RKNESS.
DA'RKSOME.
DA'RKSOMENESS.

A. S. Adeorc-ian, obscurare, to obscure, to make darke or dimme, to darken, to hide, (Somner.)

To obscure, to dim, to cloud; to be, or cause to be, obscure, gloomy, dim, dusky, clouded, hidden, secret; to involve in obscurity or secrecy; to deprive of clearness, brightness, purity, vivacity.

Dark is much used in composition.

To darken is now the usual verb.

For it is so derk to symple men, bute me were the bet in lore. R. Gloucester, p. 133.

That thoru al the middelerd [earth] derk-hede ther was inou. Id. p. 500.

As in the north west a derk weder ther aros.—Id.

The day for drede ther of with drow, and deork by cam the sonne. Piers Ploughman, p. 342.

And the unwise herte of hem was derkid.
Wiclif. Romaynes, c. 1.

And the sunne was derkid.—Id. Apocalips, c. 9.

The lanterne of thi bodi is thin yghe. If thin yghe be symple: al thi body schal be lighty, but if it be weyward, al thi body schal be derkful.—Id. Luk, c. 11.

I will wipe his eyen a little, that be darked by the cloud of mortall things.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. i.

But youth, alas, by counsaile wil not werke
For which ful oft, he stumbleth in the derke.
Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. iii.

Le baddo is nothing ela, but abeĉe or negatiue of good, as darknes is absence or negatiue of light.
Chaucer. The Test. of Loue, b. iii.

For where there is no purueiance
Of light, men erren in the darke.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

The spirituall pleasure is of trouth so swete, that ye swetenes thereof many times darketh and minisheth ye felyng of bodily payne.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 74.

The air is so darkened with continuall mists and fogs so nere the Pole, that no man can well see, either to guide his ship, or direct his course.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 19.

Such as for pouertie be not able to go to that charges, are in the night darkelong without all pompe and ceremonies buried in a dunghill.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 66.

For albeit yt he is so wauering in hys wordes he woteth not where to holde him, and therefore speaketh so darckly yt he would be loth to be vnderstanden.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 543.

Come nye and heare this: Haue I spoken anye thinge darckelye sence the beginninge? when a thinge beginneth, I am there.—Bible, 1551. Isaye, c. 48.

Adioyninge hilles, except they be with darkenum dale vndun:
But so that on the right side still doth shine thy rysing sonne.
Drant. Horace. Epistle to Quintius.

The dreadfull night with darksomenesse,
Had ouerspread the light,
And sluggish sleepe with drowsynesse,
Had ouer prest our might.—Gascoigne. Good Morrow.

Th' erth cumber'd, and the wing'd air dark'd with plumes.
Milton. Comus.

Or count them happy, that enioyes the sunne?
No: darke shall be my light, and night my day.
Shakespeare. 2 Part Hen. VI. Act ii. sc. 4.

In the time of this incredible storm, the 15 of September (1578) the Moon was eclipsed in Aries, and darkned about three points, for the space of two glasses.
Sir F. Drake. The World Encompassed, p. 39.

But what cloud soeuer hath darkened my present lot, yet haue the heauens and nature giuen mee [Caractacus] that in birth and minde, which none can vanquish, or deprive mee of.—Speed. The Romans, b. vi. c. 6. s. 15.

Clo. Ha? I should know their shapes,
Though it be darkish, there are both our brothers,
What should they make thus late here?
Beaum. & Fletch. The Captain, Act ii. sc. 2.

He that hath scorned or wasted his inheritance, cannot complain if he dies a bankrupt; nor he that has spent his candle at play, count it hard usage, that he is fain to go to bed darkling.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 508.

Then fed on thoughts, that voluntarie moue
Harmonious numbers, as the wakeful bird
Sings darkling, and in shadiest couert hid
Tunes her nocturnal note.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

Cla. How darkly, and how deadly dost thou speake!
Your eyes do menace me: why looke you pale!
Who sent you hither? Wherefore do you come!
Both Murd. To, to, to ——
Cla. To murther me!—Shakes. Rich. III. Act i. sc. 4.

A dungeon horrible, on all sides round
As one great furnace flam'd, yet from those flames
No light, but rather darkness visible
Serv'd onely to discover sights of woe.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. i.

Yet shall this sacred lamp in prison burn
And through the darksome ages hence invade
The wondering world, like that in Tully's urn
Which, though by time conceal'd, was not decay'd.
Sir W. Davenant. To Mr. Cotton.

For as that which sees does not cease to exist, when, in the dark, all objects are removed: so, that which perceives, does not necessarily cease to exist, when, by death, all objects of perception are removed.
Clarke. Attributes, Prop. 10.

On the opposite side, if the least portion of the darkened part of the moon, extends beyond the enlightened part, mountains may very manifestly be discerned, exactly resembling ours on the earth.
Derham. Astro-Theology, b. v. c. 2. N.

I observed, that (though it were then winter) the colour of their hair and skin was far less whitish than the Danes, who inhabit a milder region, is wont to be, but rather for the most part of a darkish brown.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 715.

Darkling he watch'd the planetary orbs,
In their obscure sojourn o'er heaven's high cope.
J. Philips. Cerealia.

And if we admire those discourses of the Heathen philosophers, wherein they speak more darkly and obscurely concerning those things, what admiration doth the Gospel deserve, which hath brought life and immortality to light!
Stillingfleet, vol. i. ser. 4.

Yea, 'tis our duty, not to be contented onely, but to be delighted, to be transported, to be ravished with the emanations of his love: to entertain them with such a disposition of mind, as the chill and darksome air admits the divine influence of heavenly light.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 8.

Their complexion is rather darker than that of the Otaheiteans, and they are not altogether so handsome a people.
Cook. Third Voyage, b. v. c. 3.

It is darkish, inclining to yellow, and very fragrant: it is brought from Hindustan and its medicinal virtue lasts three years.—Sir W. Jones. On the Spikenard of the Ancients.

But when this grand cause of terrour makes its appearance, what is it? is it not wrapt up in the shades of its own incomprehensible darkness, more awful, more striking, more terrible, than the liveliest description, than the clearest painting, could possibly represent it?
Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, pt. ii. s. 4.

How, O my son! still living, hast thou reached
This darksome region? Arduous is the task,
For living man to mingle with the dead.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. ii.

DA'RLING, or DE'ARLING, n.
DA'RLING, adj.

A. S. Dyrling, amasius, a sweetheart, a darling, or dearling, (Somner.) Diminutive of Dear, (qv.)

One very dear; very dearly, affectionately, tenderly, passionately beloved.

Knoute lufed him best, he was his derlyng.
R. Brunne, p. 50.

Lo my child whom I have chosen: my derling in whom it hath wel pleasd to my soul, I schal putte my spirit on hym.
Wiclif. Matthew, c. 12.

Yet than her loke into his mind he brought
The swete visage, and amorous blenking
Of faire Cresside, somtime his own derling.
Chaucer. The Complaint of Cresside.

Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?
Thou art more lovely and more temperate:
Rough winds do shake the darling buds of May,
And summer's lease hath all too short a date.
Shakespeare, Son. 18.

Let the world's darlings examine what they confide in for the security of their joys, and they will finde it is the father of lies, they trust for the truth of their felicity.
Mountayne. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 7. s. 3.

Meaning, that so long as they continue in the practice of any one vice unreformed, and are not able to prevail with themselves to forsake a darling sin, their endeavours to obtain the kingdom of God cannot but be ineffectual.
Clarke, vol. ii. Ser. 168.

Such men as they are the especially good men, the godly saints, the flower of mankind, the choice ones, the darlings of God, and favourites of heaven; the special objects of divine love and care.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 29.

Hath he not won the vulgar tribes,
By scorning menaces and bribes,
And proving, that his darling cause
Is of their liberties and laws
To stand the champion?—Churchill. The Duellist, b. iii.

DARN, v.
DA'RNING, n.

May be the A. S. Dyrnan, occultare, to hide, to conceal. Somner says, Dyrn, occultus, secret, privie. Chaucer, Derne.

To hide, to conceal, to cover over; (sc.) a hole, a rent.

Democritus sheweth and proveth, that we ourselves have been apprentices and scholars to them in the principall things of this life, namely, to the spider, for spinning, weaving, derning and drawing up a rent.—Holland. Plut. p. 783.

Sir John Cutler had a pair of black worsted stockings, which his maid darned so often with silk, that they became at last a pair of silk stockings. Now supposing those stockings of Sir John's endued with some degree of consciousness at every particular darning, they would have been sensible, that they were the same individual pair of stockings both before and after the darning; and this sensation would have continued in them through all the succession of darnings; and yet after the last of all, there was not perhaps one thread left of the first pair of stockings, but they were grown to be silk stockings, as was said before.
Pope. Memoirs of Martinus Scriblerus.

DA'RNEL. From the A. S. Derian; Dut. Deyren or Deren, nocere, to hurt or injure; because it is hurtful or injurious to more useful plants, (Skinner and Minshew.)

So it is no doute but yt the sower of dissenciō & king of rebelliō ye prince of prida, the greate Deuil himself hath gathered thys flock to him, & sēt alway now & then such darnell seede and cocle to feede thē.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 686.

The crimson darnel flower, the blue-bottle and gold,
Which though esteem'd but weeds, yet for their dainty hues
And for their scent not ill, they for this purpose chuse.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 15.

No fruitful crop the sickly fields return;
But oats and darnel choak the rising corn.
Dryden. Virgil, Past. 5.

DA'RNEX. Certain cloths introduced from Belgium, and so called from the celebrated city, Doorniek. Fr. Tournay, (Skinner.)

But I have got them painted with your arms,
With a fair darnex carpet of my own
Laid cross for the more state.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Noble Gentleman, Act iv. sc. 1

DA'RRAIN. In Shakespeare, quoted below, the quartos read, "Prepare your battel," and Johnson and Steevens interpret, "Range your host, put your host in order." Junius (in v. Dare) ascribes dare as the origin of daren, darraine, darreigne battle, which, he observes, frequently occur in Chaucer; unless, he adds, we suppose it to be from the Norman, Desrener, and to have been transferred from forensic litigation to contest in arms. Cotgrave has, desrener, to dereine, to justifie or make good the denial of an act or fact. Spelman thinks desrener contracted for deraisner or deraisoner; Low. Lat. Disrationare, to assert or maintain the contrary by reasoning; to destroy by reasoning what has been asserted, (Gloss. Archæol. in v. Disrationare.) And Mr. Tyrwhitt, desrener; Lat. Derationare, to contest.

Darreyn is a common word in law; Fr. Derrain, dernier, the last; and the verb darrain may have been formed upon this adjective, to denote—

To finish, to end, to conclude, or bring to a conclusion; to terminate, to determine, to decide.

Arcite is ridden anon unto the toun,
And on the morwe, or it were day light,
Ful prively two harneis hath he dight,
Both sufficant and mete to darreine
The bataille in the feld betwix hem twaine.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1633.

And this day fifty wakes ferre ne nere,
Everich of you shal bring an hundred knightes,
Armed for listes up at alle rightes
Alle redy to darreine hire by bataille.—Id. Ib. v. 1865.

The next day folowynge, the kynge deuyded hys whole nombre into three battailes and after in good arraye approached nigh to the toune of Stoke, where was an equall and playne place for both parties to darreigne the battaile.
Hall. Hen. VII. an. 11.

Strange sort of sight, three valiant knightes to see
Three combats loyne in one, and to darraine
A triple warre with triple enmitee,
All for their ladies froward love to gaine,
Which gotten, was but hate.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 2.

But faire before the gate a spatious plaine,
Mantled with greene, itself did spredden wide,
On which she saw sixe knights, that did darraine
Fierce battaile against one, with cruel might and maine.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. i.

And in the townes as they do march along,
Proclames him King, and many flye to him,
Darraigne your battell, for they are at hand.
Shakespeare. 3 Part Hen. VI. Act ii. sc 2.

For battell was design'd a plot of ground
Within a little isle, which Olney hight,
Whom Seuerne with his armes incircleth round,
Where we as combatants in single fight
Should d'araine battell in both armies sight,
While they assigned were by our command,
On th' other side of Seuern's streame to stand.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 599.

DART, v. DART, n. DA'RTER. } Fr. Dard; It. and Sp. Dardo; Ger. Dard; Mid. Lat. Dardus, jaculum, telum missile. Martinius, (in v. Sagitta,) derives Dart from the Gr. Δορατιον, the diminutive of δορυ, hasta, a spear; and this etymology, says Wachter, snatches the palm from all that I have seen: he thinks, however, the Gr. and Ger. had a Celtick origin. Junius also prefers δορατιον.

"Fr. Darder, to dart;—to fling, hurl, cast or throw a dart; also to hit, wound, pierce or hurt with a dart." (Cotgrave.) Generally, to throw, to cast.

Oft tille our Inglismen was schewed a marvaile grete,
A darte was schot to them, bot non wist who it schete.
R. Brunne, p. 178.

In alle thingis take ghe scheeld of feith in which ghe moun quenche all the fyry dartis of the worst.—Wiclif. Effes. c. 6.

Right with her loke, through shotten & darted.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. i.

—— She the castel nil not assaile
Ne smite a stroke in this battaile
With dart, ne mace, speare, ne knife.—Id. R. of the Rose.

And anone after, the Beeotians caused a certaine nomber of slingers and dart-casters to comme from Malie wyth two thousande good souldiars on fote.—Nicoll. Thucid. fol. 118.

Sussex, the next that was to come aboard,
Bore a black lion rampant, sore that bled
With a field-arrow darted through the head.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

Dire was the tossing, deep the groans, Dispair
Tended the sick, busiest from couch to couch;
And over them triumphant Death his dart
Shook, but delai'd to strike, though oft invok't
With vows, as their chief good, and final hope.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Himself taking a torch-light in his hand shewed them the way what they should go, appointing his archers and darters to hurl and bestow their darts and other fiery instruments, to the tops of the houses.—North. Plutarch, p. 191.

Disconsolate, not daring to complain,
Silent he wander'd by the sounding main:
Till safe at distance, to his God he prays,
The God who darts around the world his rays.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

Ought not the light of reason to be look'd upon by us as a rich and a noble talent, and such an one as we must account to God for? For it is certainly from him. It is a ray of divinity darted into the soul.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 11.

Then to their succour ran with eager haste,
And, fondly griev'd, their stiff'ning limbs embrac'd,
But in the action falls; a thrilling dart,
By Phœbus guided, pierc'd him to the heart.
Crexall. Ovid. Metam. b. vi.

But to return from the old treatise on archery to the practise of it in the present age. The ladies seem to be ambitious of shooting darts, in a literal sense, as they have long been celebrated for doing execution by their figurative artillery.—Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 36.

You will be able when you come to London, to examine with the minutest scrupulosity, as Johnson would call it, the properties of that singular animal, who is in the rivers of South America, what Jupiter was feigned to be among the Gods, a darter of lightning, and should be named αστραπηφορος, instead of gymnotus.
Sir W. Jones. To Lord Althorp.

DASH, v. DASH, n. DA'SHING, n. DA'SHISM. } Percutere, allidere, contundere, perfundere, confundere. The original of this word is uncertain; its meaning and various applications are plain. Dash, daze, daw, are probably the same word, differently written and applied.

To dash (sc.) the foot against a stone, is simply to strike it against a stone.

To dash any one, (met.) is to strike him (sc.) with surprise, with astonishment, with shame with fear. And thus—

To daunt, to depress, to lower the character or quality, and by striking or throwing one thing into another, to mix, and thus to alter.

To dash,—to do any thing with a dash, with a stroke, at a blow, with a show of ease, of dexterity, with a flourish;—hastily, carelessly, precipitately, flourishingly, ostentatiously.

The pykes smyte hem thorn out, or thei wyste wat yt were,
And daschte and a dreynte fourty schippes there.
R. Gloucester, p. 51.

So wo begon a thing was she
She all to daslit herselfe for wo
And smote togider her hondes two.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

—— For I my faulte confesse,
And my deserte dothe al my comforte dashe.
Wyat, Psalm 38.

For it is wrytten, he shall giue his aungels charge over thee to kepe thee, and with their handes they shall stay the vp that thou dashe not thy fote agaynst a stone.
Bible, 1551. Luke, c. 4.

And whan he perceyueth, that Scriptures wyl not ayde hym in approuynge of hys bablynges, he heapeth me in, an whole halfe leafe at a dash, out of Saynt Augustyne.
Bale. Apology, fol. 37.

Sam. Go, baffl'd coward, lest I run upon thee,
Though in these chains, bulk without spirit vast,
And with one buffet lay thy structure low,
Or swing thee in the air, then dash thee down
To the hazard of thy brains and shatter'd sides.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

What was the snaky headed Gorgon shield
That wise Minerva wore, unconquer'd virgin,
Wherewith she freez'd her foes to congeal'd stone,
But rigid looks of chaste austerity,
And noble grace, that dash'd brute violence
With sudden adoration, and blank awe?—Id. Comus.

For Th. hee would haue the Saxon letter Thorne, which was a D with a dash through the head, or þ.
Camden. Remains. Languages.

Aut. Now (had I not the dash of my former life in me) would preferment drop on my head.
Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act v. sc. 2.

Whatever moves is moved by nature and necessity, and the mutual occursions and rencounters of atoms, their playes, their strokes and dashings against one another, their reflexions and repercussions, their cohesions, implexions, and entanglements, as also their scattered dispersions and divulsions, are all natural and necessary.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 97.

With just bold strokes he dashes here and there,
Showing great mastery with little care,
Scorning to varnish his good touches o'er
To make the fools and women praise them more.
Rochester. An Allusion to Horace.

Should he find but upon one single sheet of parchment or paper an epistle or oration written full of profound sense, express'd in proper and significant words, illustrated and adorn'd with elegant phrase; it were beyond the possibility of the wit of man to persuade him that this was done by the temerarious dashes of an unguided pen, or by the rude scattering of ink upon the paper, or by the lucky projection of so many letters at all adventures.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

Fountains and cypresses peculiarly become buildings, and no man can have been at Rome, and seen the vast basins of marble dashed with perpetual cascades in the area of St. Peter's, without retaining an idea of taste and splendour.
Walpole. On Modern Gardening.

The dashing fellow, as great genius usually shows strong indications of it at the earliest age, begins his career of glory at the public school, to which he is sent by his parents, to rub off the shyness incident to natural modesty and the immaturity of youth.—Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 28.

He must fight a duel, before his claim to complete heroism, or dashism, can be universally allowed.—Id. Ib.

DA'STARD, v. DA'STARD, adj. DA'STARD, n. DA'STARDIZE. DA'STARDLINESS. DA'STARDLY. DA'STARDNESS. DA'STARDY. DA'STARDLIKE. } Dastard, i. e. territus, the past part. of Dastrig-an, adastrig-an, terrere. Dastriged, dastryed, dastried, dastred, dastr'd, (Tooke.) Upon this past part. Dryden has formed the verb.

To terrify, to dash or strike with terror, to intimidate, to cow or cower.

Scant could they hold the teares that furth gan burst,
And almost fell from bloody hands the swordes;
Only the sterne Herennius, with grym looke,
Dastarde, why stand you still? he sayeth; and straight
Swape of the head with his presumptuous yron.
Uncertaine Auctors. Marcus Tullius Ciceroes Death.

Dastardes whē they come forth of their dennes, bring nothing with them but names of men.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 92.

Then the Lorde Willoughby, set on them before and the Erle behynde, shotynge so fierseley, that the dastarde people partly amased with the sodaine chaunce, and partly galled and wounded with the shot of the arrowes threwe awaie their harneis.—Hall. Hen. VI. an. 12.

But Hildebrand accuseth them of negligence and dastardnesse, threatneth them with excommunication, vnlesse they cause their priests to obeie his decree.
Fox. Martyrs. Marriage of Priests Defended, p. 159.

Conuey me Salisbury into his tent,
And then wee'le try what these dastard Frenchmen dare.
Shakespeare. 1 Part Hen. VI. Act i. sc. 4.

And this their pusillanimity and cowardice, as well as their cunning and craft, may be imputed to their various thraldoms, contempt and poverty, which hath cow'd and dastardized their courage.—Howell, b. i. s 6. Let. 14.

The Romans have ever esteemed magnanimity, even in their greatest enemies; but dastardness, though it be fortunate, yet it is hated of every body.
North. Plutarch, p. 216.

The standard bearer for the tenth legion desperately leapt foorth of the ship with his eagle, calling on the danted souldiers and asking whether they would dastardly forsake their ensigne and betray it through cowardize to the enemy.
Speed. The Romans, b. vi. c. 2. s. 5.

I'm weary of this flesh which holds us here,
And dastards manly soul with hope and fear.
Dryden. The Conquest of Mexico, Act ii. sc. 2.

Darest thou not, O heartless dastard, to do that, which is in thy power easily to doe, which thou art infinitely concerned to doe, which upon so many accompts thou art obliged to doe, out of fear to cross thine equal, yea far thine inferiour in this case.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 34.

For if he liv'd, and we were conquerors,
He had such things to urge against our marriage
As, now declar'd, would blunt my sword in battle,
And dastardize my courage.
Dryden. Don Sebastian, Act ii. sc. 2.

There is a dastardly poorness in guilt and faction that will shrink before the face of justice, and the aspect of authority.
South, vol. vii. Ser. 4.

But think not, though these dastard-chiefs are fled,
That Covent Garden troops shall want a head:
Harlequin comes their chief.—Churchill. The Rosciad.

No efforts should be declined in such a cause, (civil liberty,) nor should men, sensible of their blessings, and desirous of handing them down as they received them, sink, with dastardly indolence, into a state of despair.
V. Knox. On Despotism, s. 34.

DATE, v. DATE, n. DA'TER. DA'TELESS. DA'TARY. } Fr. Date; It. Data; Sp. Data; Lat. Datum, past part. of dare, to give, which was written by the Romans at the bottom of their epistles; denoting the time at which they were written.—As, Datum pridie idus Junii. Accepi literas datas, &c. And thus date, generally, is—

Any given time; any fixed or settled time; and to date,—Sp. Datar; Fr. Dater.—to mark, note, or fix the time.

Datum, pl. Data,—any thing or things, any fact or facts, given or granted.

Cotgrave has, "Dataire, a dater of writings; and (more particularly) the dater or despatcher of the pope's bulls."

The date of Jhesu Criste was written in this lyne
Auht hundreth wynter sexti & fyue.—R. Brunne, p. 21.

As for the date ye shall know verely
That ye may haue a space in your comming.
Chaucer. The Assemblie of Ladies.

And the king by his ordinance, dated the Munday after Midlent, Anno 1302, (set doune in the register of ancient orders of Parliament, fol. 45) willed, that for the commodity of his subjects there should be every yeare two parliaments at Paris, and in other provinces.
Prynne. Treachery of the Papists, &c. pt. i. p. 15.

But yet, in common acceptation, it's an enemy to verity, which can plead the antiquity of above six thousand: and bears date before the chaos.
Glanvill. The Spirit of Dogmatizing, c. 15.

Then can I drown an eye unus'd to flow,
For precious friends hid in death's dateless night,
And weep afresh love's long-since cancel'd woe,
And moan the expense of many a vanish'd sight.
Shakespeare, s 30.

Pius V. sent a greater aid to Charles IX. and for riches, besides the temporal dominions, he hath in all the countries before named the dalary or dispatching of Bulls.
Howell, b. i. s. 1. Let. 36.

From the blessings they bestow,
Our times are dated and our eras move:
They govern and enlighten all below,
As thou dost all above.—Prior. Hymn to the Sun.

——— He at once,
Down the long series of eventful time,
So fixed the dates of being, so dispos'd
To every living soul of every kind
The field of motion and the hour of rest,
That all conspir'd to his supreme design,
To universal good.—Akenside. Pleasures of Imagin. b. ii.

Any writer, therefore, who mentions the rising or setting of any star, at any particular time of the year, with respect to the sun, furnishes us with data sufficient to determine the time in which he wrote.—Priestley. History, Lect. 12.

DATE. Fr. Datte, dacte, dactil, ductyle; Sp. Datel; It. Dattero; Lat. Dactylus, a species of palm tree, so called from some resemblance in the fruit, or the husk of the fruit, to the finger. The Fr. Dactyle, Cotgrave calls the date or finger-grape.

There were cherubins and date trees made also, so that the date tree stode euer betwixte two cherubyns.
Bible, 1551. Ezekiel, c. 41.

Date-trees love a light and sandie ground, and specially (for the most part) if it stand much upon a veine of nitre besides.—Holland. Plinie, b. xiii. c. 4.

The fig and date, why love they to remain
In middle station, and an even plain.
Prior. Solomon. Knowledge.

DAUB, v.
DAUB, n.
DA'UBER.
DA'UBING, n.
DA'UBRY.
DA'UBY.

Junius thinks daub is of the same origin as dabble, (qv.) i. e. from dab, to dab or dip, (sc.) in the dirt; tingere, inficere; and thus, consequentially,—

To stain or smear, to dirty; to cover with, to lay on any thing thickly, coarsely; and thus, (met.) to disguise, and also to flatter.

Daubing, in the quotation from Piers Plouhman, is dabbing, or dibbing.

Tho was Peers ful proude, and putte hem al to werke
In daubyng and in delvyng.—Piers Ploukman, p. 138.

Thus wyll I perfourme my wrathe vpon this wall, and vpon them that haue daubed it with vntempered morter, and then wyll I say vnto you: The wal is gone, and the daubers are awaye.—Bible, 1551. Ezekiel, c. 13.

Her forehead faire is like a brazen hill
Whose wrinkled furrows, which her age doth breed,
Are daubed full of Venice chalk for need.
Bp. Hall, b. vi. Sat. 1.

I am a younger brother, basely borne, of mean parentage, a durt dauber's sonne, am I therefore to be blamed?
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 320.

So smooth he daub'd his vice with show of virtue
That his apparent open guilt omitted,
I meane, his conuersation with Shore's wife,
He liu'd from all attaindor of suspects.
Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act iii. s. 5.

She workes by charmes, by spels, by th' figure, and such daubry as this is beyond our element: we know nothing.
Id. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act iv. sc. 2.

It is built from top to bottom with brick, all over daub'd thick with mud and dirt.—Dampier. Voyage, an. 1688.

She duely, once a month, renews her face;
Mean time, it lies in daub, and hid in grease.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 6.

But how should any sign-post dauber know
The worth of Titian or of Angelo.—Id. Ep. 4. To Mr. Lee

But this was false daubery and within a day or two I was constrained to make satisfaction.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 345.

Yet some stricter persons censured this work much, as being a political daubing, in which, they said, there was more pains taken to gratify persons, and serve particular ends, than to assert truth in a free and unbiassed way, such as became divines.—Burnet. Hist. of Ref. an. 1536.

And therefore, not in vain, th' industrious kind,
With dawby wax and flow'rs the chinks have lin'd.
Dryden. Virgil, Geor. 4.

No passions to plague him, no cause to torment,
His constant companions are Health and Content,
Their lordships in lace may remark, if they will,
He's honest though daub'd with the dust of the mill.
Cunningham. The Miller.

His observation that the lights and shades in the different parts of the picture came from opposite sides, is unanswerable, and demonstrate it no genuine picture of Holbein, unless that master had been a most ignorant dauber, as he might sometimes be a careless painter.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 4.

In truth the age demanded nothing correct, nothing compleat, capable of tasting the power of Dryden's numbers, and the majesty of Kneller's heads, it overlooked doggrel and daubing.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. c. 4.

And did you step in, to take a look at the grand picture in your way back?—'Tis a melancholy daub, my lord! not one principle of the pyramid in any one group.
Sterne. Tristram Shandy, vol. iii. c. 12.

DA'UGHTER.
DA'UGHTERLY.
DA'UGHTERLINESS.
DA'UGHTERLESS.

Goth. Dauhtar; A. S. Dohtor; Dut. Dochter; Ger. Tochter. Junius, from the Gr. Θυγατηρ. Skinner, from the Lat. Dos; puella enim sine dote vix elocari potest. (In Scotch, Tocher is dowry.) Wachter, from Low Sax. Tygen, gignere, parere, procreare; to beget, to bring forth.

The daughter of a man or woman is his or her female child; the son is the male child.

Thre doghren this kynge hadde, the eldest Gornorille,
The mydmost hatte Regan, the gongest Cordeille.
R. Gloucester, p. 29.

Offa, kyng of Lyndsay, a fayre doughter had,
Brittrik hir wedded, and quene home her lad.
R. Brunne, p. 10.

And he that lovith son or doubtir over me is not worthie of me.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 10.

And certes if I of him faile,
I wot right welle withoute faile,
Ye shall for me be doughterless.—Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

For Christian charitie, and naturall loue, & youre very daughterlye dealing, funiculo triplici, qui (vt ait Scriptura) difficile rumpitur, both bynde me and straine me thereto.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1449.

Sam. ——— She pleas'd
Me, not my parents, that I sought to wed,
The daughter of an infidel.—Milton. Samson Agonistes.

This must assuredly be a considerable accession to the womanliness or daughterliness, if I may so speak, of the church of Rome.—More. On the Seven Churches.

The great plenty of fruitful vines upon the sides of these mountains, was the occasion that Jacob in the spirit of prophesy, Gen. xlix. 22, compared Joseph's two branches, Ephraim and Manesseh, to the branches of a fruitful vine planted by the well side, and spread her daughter-branches along the wall.—Raleigh. Hist. of the World, b. ii. c. 9. s. 1.

Cecil cared not to go along with the purposes of the ambitious Duke of Northumberland, to advance his daughter-in-law, married to Guildford Dudley his son, to the crown, and so to bring on the kingly dignity into his blood.
Strype. Life of Cheke, an. 1553.

My daughter, my only daughter, from whose tenderness I expected all the comforts of my age, died last night of a fever. My views, my purposes, my hopes are at an end: I am now a lonely being disunited from society.
Johnson. Rasselas, c. 18.

DAUNT, v.
DA'UNTER.
DA'UNTING, n.
DA'UNTLESS.

"Daunt," says Skinner, "is to terrify, to confound, to reduce to silence by great daring or threatening; perhaps from Fr. Domter, domare, and this immediately from Lat. Domitare." Fr. Dompter or donter, to tame, to reclame, to break, daunt; vanquish, overcome, subdue, bring under," (Cotgrave.)

G. Douglas calls a breaker of horses or a horse-breaker, a danter of horses, (b. xii.)

The Gywes and Herodes (that here king was)
He a daunted harde ynow, and non harme yt nas.
R. Gloucester, p. 61.

And David that be diademy'd, and daunten alle oure enemyes. Piers Ploukman, p. 60.

Thy foly more fro day to day
Shall grow, but thou it put away:
Take with thy teeth the bridell fast
To daunt thy hart. Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

And furthermore, for as moche as reson of man wol not daunt sensualitee whan it may, therefore is a man worthy to have shame: and thus suffered our Lord Jesu Crist for man whan they spitten in his visage.
Id. The Persones Tale.

Thus haue I herd oft in saiying
That man may for no daunting
Make a sperhauke of a bosard.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

But for all that, this he him graunteth
That which of hem, that other daunteth,
In armes, hym she shulde take,
And that the kinge hath vndertake.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

When drie of teares; and tir'd with tumbling there,
Th' old tel-truth thus my danted spirits did cheare.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. iv.

——— Impudence!
Thou goddess of the palace, mistress of mistresses,
To whom the costly perfumed people pray,
Strike thou my forehead into dauntless marble,
Mine eyes to steady sapphires.
Tourneur. The Revenger's Tragedy, Act i. sc. 1.

——— Will God incense his ire
For such a petty trespass, and not praise
Rather your dauntless vertue, whom the pain
Of death denounc't, whatever thing death be,
Deterr'd not from achieving what might leade
To happier life, knowledge of good and evil.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

The danter then of trespassers
Perceauing Theseus drie
His grieuous wounds, and at his feete
Pirithous dead to lie,
Desirous to reuenge them both,
Laies lustie lode about.
Warner. Albion's England, b. i. c. 6.

A doctor of Jesuits, that is, a doctor of five D D's as dissimulation, deposing of kingdoms, daunting and deterring of subjects, and destruction.
State Trials, an. 1606. Henry Garnett.

About the middle of August, the prince, exposing himself upon all occasions, received a musket shot in his arm; at which perceiving those about him were daunted, he immediately pulled off his hat with the arm that was hurt, and waved it about his head, to show the wound was but in the flesh, and the bone safe.
Sir W. Temple. Memoirs, pt. ii. (1672-79.)

Let this suffice: nor thou, great saint, refuse
This humble tribute of no vulgar muse:
Who, not by cares, or wants, or age deprest,
Stems a wild deluge with a dauntless breast;
And dares to sing thy praises in a clime,
Where vice triumphs, and virtue is a crime.
Dryden. Eleonore.

——— In idle argument
Let us not now consume the precious hour:
The middle stream is pass'd; and the safe shore,
Invites our dauntless footsteps.
Smollett. The Regicide, Act i. sc. 6.

DA'UPHIN.
DA'UPHINESS.
DA'UPHINRY.

Skinner, a delphino, from the dolphin, which these princes wore for their family arms. But the adoption of these insignia or arms appears to have been subsequent to the name. Cotgrave says, "Daulphin de France. The Dolphin, or eldest son of France, called so, of Dauphiné, a province given, or (as some report it) sold in the year 1349, by Humbert, earl thereof, to Philippe de Valois; partly on condition that for ever the French king's eldest son, should hold it (during his father's life) of the empire." And see the quotation from Stow.

Wherefore the whole nobilitie and sage fathers made humble request, to Kyng Edward to help and ayde the yonge ladye and Prynces of Burgoyne, allegynge that as farre as they could perceyue the maryage of his doughter with the Dolphine, was but dissimuled and fayned.
Hall. Edw. IV. an. 18.

Wherof John, then Duke of Burgoyn, beynge warned, suspectyd the quene that she with ayde of the duke wold cõvey the Dauiphin into Germanye, and there to hold hym at theyre pleasure.—Fabyan, vol. ii. Car. VII. an. 26.

Euery daye almost talkyng with the quene his wife, of the mariage of his daughter, whom he caused to be called Dolphineese, thynkyng nothyng surer then that mariage to take effect, according to the treatie.—Hall. Edw. IV. an. 14.

And [they] passed the ryuer, and so entred into the Dolphynny of Vyen, and lodged abrode in the vyllages.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 177.

And in y^t season vnder the kyng there ruled in the Dolphynry the Lorde Eugueram Dardyn. Id. Ib.

Phillip of Valois the nine and fortyeth kinge of France in the yeare of our Lorde and Saulour Jesus Christ one thousand three hundred forty and nine, bought the prouince of Dauphine of Imburtus Dauphin, for a small summe of money: uppon condition that for euer after the eldest sonnes of the Kinge of Fraunce, should be called the Prince Dauphin: which our English Chronicles call Prince Dolphin, and the French Chronicles call our Prince, the Prince of Wales, Prince of Gaules.—Stow. King James, an. 1609.

The best of Ovid's expositors is he that wrote for the Dauphin's use, who has very well shown the meaning of the author, but seldom reflects on his beauties or imperfections.
Addison. Ovid. Met. b. ii. Notes.

It is now sixteen or seventeen years since I saw the Queen of France, then the Dauphiness, at Versailles; and surely never lighted on this orb, which she hardly seemed to touch, a more delightful vision.—Burke. On the French Revolution.

DAW, n.
DA'WISH.
DA'WCOCK. } Skinner thinks it is so called from the sound it utters. Junius strongly suspects that it was originally written dawl: and that through the Ger. Tul, vel tule, it is, perhaps, from the Gr. Θυελλα, a sudden and heavy storm; which these birds usually presage.

And make here of a sickel or a saw
For though ye live a hundred yere ye shall dye a daw.
Skelton. Ware the Hawke.

Complaine or do what you will,
Of your complaint it shal not skill;
This is the tenor of my bil,
A daucocke ye be, and so shalbe still.
Id. Why come ye not to Court?

I see women can find in their hearts to tumble and lie with vicious and filthy men, & drunkards and brauliers, and dawish, and brainelesse, cruel, and murderers.
Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 16.

Pompey being overthrown, one Nonius said, that there was yet good hope left, because they had taken seven eagles within Pompey's camp. Thy perswasion were not ill, quoth Cicero, so we were to fight but with pies and daws.
North. Plutarch, p. 725.

——— Endless as to sound each grating note
With which the rooks, and chattering daws, and grave
Unwieldly inmates of the village pond,
The changing seasons of the sky proclaim.
Akenside. Pleasures of Imagination, b. ii.

DAW, v. To daw or adaw seems equivalent to—to dash, to daze, to daunt, and so Mr. Gifford interprets the word in B. Jonson (and all may have had the same origin. See ADAW.) "To dauer, daiver," Dr. Jamieson says, "is to stun, to stupefy, also to become stupid; Su. G. Daur-a, infatuare, dofic-a, stupere. To the same import is the Ger. Teuben. The Ger. Daver-en, tremere, tremiscere, he considers to be cognate. Ihre says, that dofw-a, properly denotes, sensu privare; to deprive of sense or sensation. In the quotation from Uncertain Authors it is,—to tame, to mitigate.

For he that sendeth grisely stormes,
With whisking windes and bitter blastes,
And fowlith with haile the winter's face,
And frotes the soile with hory frostes,
Euen he adaweth the force of cold,
The springe in sendes with somer hote
The same full oft to stormy hartes
Is cause of bale, of ioy the roote.
Uncertaine Auctors. The Meane Estate, from Horace.

Wit. He then had no barren head.
You daw him too much, in troth, sir.
B. Jonson. The Devell is an Asse, Act iv. sc. 4.

DAW, v.
DAWN, v.
DAWN, n.
DA'WNING, n.
DA'WNING, adj. } A. S. Dag-ian, lucescere, to daw.—Dawn, past part. Dawen; and hence the verb, to dawn, to be or become day. To bring out of daw is not an uncommon expression in R. Gloucester. Jamieson says, to do out of dawys, to bring of daw, is, to kill. Daw, he observes, is often used to denote life,—and thus out of daw denotes death; and on daw, (q. on days,) may denote in life. But see DAW, supra.

To show or exhibit, or cause to show or exhibit, the appearances of light; and (met.) of any brilliant quality; any talent or virtue; and, consequentially, to awaken, to arouse.

Thorn ssedynge of thy brother blod, that thus ys brogt of dawe.
R. Gloucester, p. 291.

"Ver, [for] gode syre kyng," quath thys thef, "vor thy loue ych hym slow.
Here ys that knyf al blody, that ych brogte hym wyth of dawe."
Id. p. 311.

Vor the heye blod, of wam hil come, the kyng hym by thogte,
An adde reuthe of hem gret, & ys wille gan wyth drawe,
And ne mygte, vor reuthe, vor non thyng bring hym of lyf dawe.
Id. p. 315.

So that hil come to her felawes in dawynge.—Id. p. 208.

To Keningwurthe hil come in the dawninge.—Id. p. 557.

——— To haf tho lawes,
That Samuel the gode kyng gaf bi olde dawes.
R. Brunne, p. 168.

——— Joye by gynneth to dawen.
Piers Ploukman, p. 349.

Tyl the day dawede. these damseles daunsede.
Piers Ploukman, p. 364.

To hem haue I so great affection
As I saied erst, comen is the Maie
That in my bedde there daweth me no dale,
That I nam vp, and walking in the mede.
Chaucer. Prologue to the Legend of Good Women.

I would it dawed, and were now day
And that the night were went away.
Id. The Rom. of the Rose.

The dawning uprist, out of the see.—Id. Legend of Dido.

Amongst the Turks was one thrust thorow, who (let vs not say it was ill fortune) fell off from the toppe of the prison wall, and made such a lowing, that the inhabitants thereabout (as here and there scattering stoode a house or two) came and dawed him, so that they vnderstood the case how that the prisoners were paying their ransoms.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 134.

Tyll with good rappes,
And heuy clappes
He dawde hym vp agayne.
Sir T. More. Workes. These Powre Thinges.

Watch therefore for ye know not when the master of the house wyll come, whether at euen or at midnight, whether at the cocke crowing or in the dawnynge: least yf he come sodenlye he should find you slepyng.
Bible, 1551. Mark, c. 13.

The dawning day this while, ye ocean sea had cleerely cleft.
Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. xi.

As when with crowned cups unto the Elian god
Those priests high orgies held; or when the old world saw
Full Phœbes face eclips'd, and thinking her to daw,
Whom they supposed falln in some enchanted swoun'd,
Of beaten tinkling brass still play'd her with the sound.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 6.

Now when as sacred light began to dawn
In Eden on the humid flours, that breath'd
Their morning incense, when all things that breath,
From th' earth's great altar send up silent praise
To the Creator, and his nostrils fill
With grateful smell, forth came the human pair
And joyn'd their vocal worship to the quire
Of creatures wanting voyce.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. ix.

But now at last the sacred influence
Of light appears, and from the walls of heav'n
Shoots far into the bosom of dim night
A glimmering dawn.
Id. Ib. b. ii.

Const. Would it were day! Alas poore Harry of England: hee longs not for the dawning, as wee doe.
Shakespeare Hen. V. Act iii. sc. 7.

There by th' vncertaine glimse of starry night,
And by the twinkling of their sacred fire
He mote perceiue a little dawning sight,
Of all which there was doing in that quire.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 8.

Heare we no bird of day, or dawning morne,
To greet the sun, or glad the waking eare:
Sing oute, ye scrich-owles, lowder then aforne,
And ravens blacke of night.
Bp. Hall. Elegy on Dr. Whitaker.

The painted birds, that haunt the golden tide,
And flutter round the banks on every side,
Along the grove in pleasing triumph play,
And with soft music hail the dawning day.
Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. vii.

And oft thy voice in dreadful thunder speaks;
And oft at dawn, deep noon, or fainting eve,
By brooks, and groves, in hollow-whispering gales.
Thomson. A Hymn.

The darkness and shadows of death pass away as soon as the Sun of Righteousness dawns upon the soul.
T. Knox. Works, vol. vi. Ser. 4.

In such an anxious state of things, if dawnings of success serve to animate our diligence, they are good; if they tend to increase our presumption, they are worse than defeats.
Burke. On the Œconomical Reform.

DA'WDLE, n. & v. Daw, in Scotch, (see To DAW or ADAW,) is, consequentially, a sluggard, one who is lazy and idle, (Jamieson.) And dawdle, in English, seems to be a diminutive.

To move sluggishly, lazily, idly; to loiter or idle away time.

Be quick—why sure the gipsy sleeps!
Look how the drawling dawdle creeps.—Lloyd. Chit-Chat.

DAY, n.
DA'ILY, adj.
DA'ILY, ad. } A. S. Dæg, from Dæg-ian, lucescere, to grow or become light. Dut. Dagh; Ger. Tag. Day is much used in composition; as day-break, day-spring. See DAW, v.

The Kyng Cassibel anon for ioye made ys heste.
That alle the knyghtes of hys lond com to ys feste,
To London at a certeyn day, and here wyues al so.
Here sacrifice to here Godes, as rygt was, to do.
R. Gloucester, p. 52.

——— A countes to gelde
Howe we ladde oure lyf here. and hus lawes kepte
And hou we dude day by day. the dome wol reherce.
Piers Ploughman, p. 165

Techinge hem to kepe alle thingis whatever thingis I have comaundid to you and lo I am with you in alle dayes unto the endyng of the world.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 28.

And anoon the man was mand hool & took up his bed, and weute forth: and it was Saboth in that day.—Id. John, c. 5.

His sone succedeth in his heritage;
In rest and pees, after his fadres day.
Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 9012.

Thus passeth yere by yere, and day by day,
Till it felle ones in a morwe of May
That Emelie, that fayrer was to sene
Than is the lilie upon his stalke grene.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1610

Wherefore was all their daily labour,
Who could approch next in her fauour
Id. The Remedie of Loue.

All this was moued at councel thrise
And concluded daily twice. Id. Dreame.

——— God saw the light was good
And light from darkness by the hemisphere
Divided: light—the day, and darkness—night
He nam'd: thus was the first day eev'n and morn.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii

——— Other creatures all day long
Rove idle unemploid, and less need rest;
Man hath his daily work of body or mind
Appointed, which declares his dignitie,
And the regard of heav'n on all his waies.—Id. Ib. b. iv

Redouble then this miracle, and say,
How cam'st thou speakable of mute, and how
To me so friendly grown above the rest
Of brutal kind, that daily are in sight?—Id. Ib. b. ix

That and the rest are in my daily care:
But should I shun the dangers of the war,
With scorn the Trojans would reward my pains,
And their proud ladies with their sweeping trains
Dryden. Homer. Iliad, b. vi.

A patient, useful creature, born to bear
The warm and woolly fleece, that clothed her murderer,
And daily to give down the milk she bred,
A tribute for the grass on which she fed.
Id. Ovid. Met. b. xv

At the close of the day, when the hamlet is still,
And mortals the sweets of forgetfulness prove,
When nought but the torrent is heard on the hill,
And nought but the nightingale's song in the grove
Beattie. The Hermit.

DA'YESMAN. An arbiter, as it were, bestowing a day, to decide a matter, (Minshew.) In Ger. Tag is day, and emphatically the day, the fixed or appointed day; and Tagen, is condicere diem, to appoint a day. In Dut. Dagh, is day, and dagh vaerden, diem dicere, constituere, prefinire alicui; to fix, appoint or determine a day for any one. And daghen, citare, to cite or summon. And thus, dayesman, he who fixes the day, who is present or sits as judge, arbiter or umpire on the day fixed or appointed. In Paul, 1 Cor. iv. 3, Wiclif's translation "of manny's dai," is literal from the Lat. Vulgate, "ab humano die." In Gr. Απο ανθρωπινης ημερας; and this Mr. Parkhurst observes, is spoken in opposition to the coming of the Lord, in ver. 5, and also to ἡ ἡμερα, the day, i. e. the day of the Lord, in the preceding chapter, ver. 13; where the Vulgate renders ἡ ἡμερα, Dies Domini.

If one man synne agaynst another, dayesman may make hys peace: but yf a man sinne agaynst the Lord who can be hys dayesman?—Bible, 1551. 1 Sam. c. 2.

To whom Cymochles said; For what art thou,
That mak'st thyselfe his dayes-man, to prolong
The vengeance prest.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 8.

A shameful precedent for the time to come: namely, that vmpiers and dayes-men, should convert the thing in suit unto their own and proper vantage.—Holland. Livius, p. 137.

There shall be no more need of a days man for to make intercession and reconciliation, for all distances, and enmity shall be utterly abolished.—Hopkins, Ser. 15.

DAZE, v.
DA'ZING, n.
DA'ZZLE, v.
DA'ZZLEMENT.
DA'ZZLINGLY. } Dut. Daesen, delirare, insanire, phantasmate turbari. Also Dut. Dayselen: Vertigine laborare, obstupere, mente et animo perturbari, attoniti fieri, (Kilian.) Junius and Skinner think from the A. S. Dwaes, stultus, foolish.

To daze or dazzle, seems equivalent to—

To dash, to confuse or confound, perplex or embarrass the sensations or perceptions, (sc.) by excess of light, of splendour or brilliancy—both lit. and met.

And also dombe as a stone
Thou sittest at another boke
Til fully dazed is thy loke.—Chaucer. House of Fame, b. ii.

For in good faith thy visage is ful pale
Thin eyen dazen, sothly as me thinketh.
Id. The Manciples Prologue, v. 16,980.

If any do but lift vp his nose to the smell after the truth, they swap him in the face with a fire brande to senge hys smellyng, or if he open one of his eyes once to looke towards yᵉ light of God's word, they bleare and daze his sight with their false lugglyng.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 277.

I gessed long ago that God would send a dasing into the head of the spiritualitie, to be catched thēselues in their owne subtiltie, and I trust it is come to passe.
Id. Ib. p. 455.

And the Lorde shall smyte the with madnesse, blyndnesse and dasynge of herte.—Bible, 1551. Deut. c. 28.

Whereby I learne that grieuous is the game
Which follows fansie dazled by desire.
Gascoigne. Flowers. To the same Gentlewoman.

Then takes he forth the shield, whose light so dazed
The lookers on, they fall down all amazed.
Harrington. Orlando, b. x. s. 93.

As where th' Almighties lightning brond does light,
It dimmes the dazed eyen, and daunts the sences quight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 8.

The which, O pardon me thus to enfold
In couert vele, and wrap in shadowes light,
That feble eyes your glory may behold,
Which else could not endure those beames bright.
But wold be dazzled with exceeding light.—Id. Ib. b. ii.

It beat back the sight with a dazzlement.
Donne. Hist. of the Sept. p. 55.

There are but few, whom Fortune bathes in blesse,
But blinded are, and dazelingly they looke:
They see nought else but worldly happinesse,
At that they only fish with fortune's hooke.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 56

If less splendour wait on thine,
Yet they so benignly shine,
I would turn my dazzled sight
To behold their milder light.—Waller. To Amoret.

Swift, at his look, a shape supremely fair
Leap'd into being with a boundless blaze,
That fifty suns might daze.
Sir W. Jones. A Hymn to Nárâyena.

The leading clergy of the 4th [century] understand their interest too well, to part with the old plea of miraculous gifts, which had been found so effectual, to dazzle the senses and possess the minds of the multitude.
Middleton. Free Enquiry, Introd. Dis.

DE'ACON. DE'ACONESS. DE'ACONRY. DE'ACONSHIP. } Lat. Diaconus; Gr. Διακονος; It. and Sp. Diacono; Fr. Diacre; Dut. Diaker; Ger. Diacon. Gr. Διακονος, qui festinat, qui sedulus est; a diligent servant or minister, from Δια-κον-ειν, to serve, to minister diligently; (compounded of δια, and κον-ειν, to hasten, to be diligent.)

See the quotation from Comber.

Also it behoueth dekenes to be chaaste, not double tunged, not ghouen mych to wyn, not suynge foul wynnynge, that han the mysterie of feith in cleen conscience, but be thei preued first and mynystre so, hauing no cryme.
Wiclif. 1 Tim. c. 1.

Likewise must the deacons be honest, not double tonged, not geuē vnto muche drynkynge, neither to fylthy lucre: but hauing the mistery of the faith in pure conscience. And let them fyrste be proued, and then let thē minyster, yf they be found faultless.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And Rom. xvi I commende vnto you Phebe the deaconisse of the church of Cenchris.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 250.

More plainly, if the Scriptures had intended, and held forth many churches, as making one church, and the elders of those many churches, to have been elders in common to those churches, as one church, then the deacons of all those churches, should make up a common deaconry; and be deacons in common, unto all those churches in an ordinary way, as the other elders.
Goodwin. Works, vol. iv. pt. iv. p. 188.

Nor do they exercise acts of that office in a set way to other congregations, nor to neighbour congregations more than to another, much less is there a common deaconship of them all.—Id. Ib.

So Epiphanius. There is an order of deaconesses in the church but not to meddle, or to attempt any of the holy offices.—Bp. Taylor. Of the Office Ministerial.

The lowest order of the clergy in the apostolical and our church is, that of a deacon, which deserves a great esteem, because the meanest office in God's house is honourable, and none ought rashly to undertake it, nor suddenly to be admitted into it, because it is the foundation of, and first step toward the higher orders; and being instituted by the inspired Apostles, it is a sacred order, which gives a man power to minister about holy things.
Comber. On the Office for making Deacons.

DEAD, or DE'ADEN, v. DEAD, n. DEAD, adj. DE'ADISH. DE'ADLY, adj. DE'ADLY, ad. DE'ADLIHOOD. DE'ADLINESS. DE'ADNESS. DEATH. DE'ATHFUL. DE'ATHFULNESS. DE'ATHLESS. DE'ATHLY. } Ga-dauthnan, mori. Af-dauthjan, morti tradere. "A. S. Adead-an, fatiscere, to fail or decay, to dye: it. vastare, subruere, mortificare, to lay waste, to destroy, to mortify," (Somner.) Ger. Todten; Dut. Dood-en, mori, necare, to die or cause to die; to kill. Sw. Doe, mori, to die: Doeda, necare, to cause to die; to kill.

To fail or decay, or dissolve, or cause to fail or decay, or dissolve;—to lose or destroy, (sub.) motion or sensation; any natural power or quality; to be or make, or cause to be, motionless, senseless, useless; without life, animation, breath, spirit; to have or cause to have any of the peculiar or distinguishing qualities or appearances of any thing dead, of any thing without action or sensation, light or life; the stillness, dullness, darkness, gloominess, sameness.

Death is that which deadeth. The third pers. sing. of A. S. Dead-ian, to dead or deaden, to kill.

Death is much used in Composition.

He drow ys knif, & slow the kyng, that no man yt yseyg.
He was sone forth ywent, er any mon were war.
And tho me hadde al y sought, the kyng lay ded thar.
R. Gloucester, p. 105.

As he wolde schete an hert, al agryne his wille
To dethe he schet ys owne fader, that he lay ther stille.
Id. p. 11.

The date a thousand right a hundreth & fifty,
That Steuen to dede was dight, now comes the Secunde Henry.
R. Brunne, p. 127.

And he wonded the kyng dedely fulle sore.—Id. p. 33.

Dede him toke & he died, als it salle do vs.—Id. p. 5.

A suynhird smote he to dede vnder a thorn busk.—Id. p. 9.

Lest we felle in dedlych sunne [sin] vor vr ydelnysse.
Id. p. 195.

Ac ouercome vas he nogt, they ys wounden [though his wounds] dedlych were.—Id. p. 223.

Of Englysse al vor nogt that valeye was ney
As heye yfuld myd dedemen, as the doune an hey.
Id. p. 362.

That ys to seye sothliche, ge sholde rather deye,
Than eny dedliche synne do. Piers Ploughman, p. 121.

——— And seide I to the Jewes
That seeth hym synneles, cease nat ich hote
To stryke with stoon othe with staf, thus strompett to dethe.
Id. p. 231.

And of the risynge agen of ded men have ye not red, that it is seide of the Lord, that seith to you, I am God of Abraham, and God of Isaac, and God of Jacob, he is not God of dede men but of lyvynge men.—Wiclif. Matt. c. 22.

As touchinge the resurrectiō of the deade, haue ye not redde what is sayde vnto you of God, which saythe I am Abraham's God, and Isaac's God, and the God of Jacob? God is not the God of the deade: but of the lyuynge.
Bible, 1551. Matt. c. 22.

And he seide, nay fadir Abraham but if ony of deed men go to hem: thei schulen do penaunce. And he seide to him, if thei heren not Moyses and profetis, neither if ony of deed men rise agen thei schulen bileeue to him.
Wiclif. Luke, c. 16.

And he sayde: naye father Abraham, but if one came vnto them, from the dede they woulde repente. He sayde vnto hym: If they heare not Moses and the prophetes, neyther wil they beleue though one rose from death agayne.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

For thei seiynge that himsilf werin wise thei werin maad foolis & thei chaungiden the glorie of God uncorruptible into the likness of an ymage of a deedli man and of briddis and of four footid beestis and of serpentis.—Wiclif. Rom. c. 1.

Thanne he seide to hem, my soule is sorowful to the deeth, abyde ye heere, and wake ye with me.—Id. Matt. c. 26.

Ne certes she was fatte nothing
But semed wery for fasting
Of colour pale and dedde was she.—Chaucer. R. of the R

When she had swounded, with dedly chere,
That it was reuthe for to seen and here.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 915.

And whan a beest is ded, he hath no paine;
But man after his deth mote wepe and pleine,
Though in this world he have care and wo,
Withouten doute it maye stonden so. Id. Ib. v. 1322.

And thus there were many dede,
Her heades stondinge on the gate.—Gower. Con. A. b.viii.

Wherof the seruant as he hadde,
Whan he was deade, his sonne hath ladde
To Bethuel, where he Robecke
Hath wedded with the white necke. Id. Ib.

Thus hate I deadely thilke vice. Id. Ib. b. iii.

But such fortune cam to honde,
That deth, which no king maie withstond,
But euery life it mote obey,
This worthy quene toke away. Id. Ib. b. vii.

And the Duke of Gloucester aduertised of hys desyre, caused him in the dead of the night after al other folk auoyded, to be brought to him in his secret chamber.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 60.

Lest that suche short forgeuenes, as wel of al the payne as of the displeasure of God, and of the deadlynesse, or as men might say, of the damnabilitie belōging to the mortall offence, myght make men waxe the worse, & sette much the lease by sinne.—Id. Ib. p. 438.

I wretch astonisht was, and thought the deathful doom,
Of heaven, of earth, of hell, of time and place was come.
Sydney. Arcadia, b. iii.

Spreade abrode the swete sauoure of Christ, of it selfe indeede (as I say) to all menne pleasaunte and holsome, but yet to som throughe theyr owne faulte deadlye poyson: holsom to suche, as throughe fayth in the gospell obteyne saluacion, vnholsome and deathlye to such as refuse it.
Udal. 2 Cor. c. 2.

For plaie ingendrs trembilinge stryfe,
and stryfe outraginge ire:
Outraging ire, fell spyteful lyfe,
it, deathlyke battle dyre.
Dront. Horace. Epistle to Mæcenas.

The proof hath been, that both beer and wine, (as well within water as above,) have not been pallid or deaded at all.—Bacon. Naturall History, §. 385.

A sad course I liue now: heauen's sterne decree
With many an ill, hath numb'd and deaded me.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xviii.

Now this deceives men, when they look back to the vanities, which they have forsaken; how deadned are they to those sinful ways, which before they much delighted in?
Hopkins, Ser. Acts, xxvi. 28.

Ama. Cruel, thou hast struck me deader with thy voice
Than if the angry heavens with their quick flames
Had shot me through.
Beaum. & Fletch. Faithful Shepherdess, Act i. sc. 1

Thei pierce the turfie ground, and under it meet with a black and deadish water, and in it small fishes do swim.
Fuller. Worthies. Lancashire.

How comes it then, that in so near decay
We deadly sleep in deep security,
When every hour is ready to betray
Our lives to that still watching enemy?
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 7

As for my relapses, I confess them with sorrow and shame, I know their danger, and (had I not to do with an infinite mercy) their deadlinesse.
Hall. Satan's Fiery Darts Quenched, Decad. 2.

They said that by the deadness of trade they did want employment, in such a measure, as did make their lives very uncomfortable.—Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. p. 412.

At last this odious offspring whom thou seest
Thine own begotten, breaking violent way
Tore through my entrails, that with fear and pain
Distorted, all my nether shape thus grew
Transform'd: but he my inbred enemie
Forth issu'd, brandishing his fatal dart
Made to destroy: I fled, and cry'd out Death;
Hell trembled at the hideous name, and sigh'd
From all her caves, and back resounded Death.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

And now the deathlesse Gods, and deathful earth
He sung: beginning at their eithers birth,
To full extent of all their emperie.
Chapman. Homer. A Hymne to Hermes.

What hinders, while we are living and among the living, but that we may study to adorn our looks, so as may be most remote from a deathfulness, and most agreeable by their lovliness to those with whom we live?
Bp. Taylor. Artificial Handsomeness, p. 10.

Oh, my dear angel! in that friend I've lost
All my soul's peace; for every thought of him
Strikes my sense hard, and deads it in my brain.
Otway. Venice Preserved, Act iv. sc. 2.

This motion of the parts of the sounding bell may be further argued by this; that if the finger, or some other soft body, be laid upon it, the sound will be checked or deaded, and much more if a broad string, though of a soft substance, be tied about it.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 30.

And, by his mother, stood an infant Love
With wings unfledg'd; his eyes were banded o'er;
His hands a bow, his back a quiver bore,
Supply'd with arrows bright and keen, a deadly store.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

When he seemed to show his weakness in seeking fruit upon that fig-tree that had none; he manifested his power, by cursing it to deadness with a word.—South, vol. vii. Ser. 1.

Happy! to whom this glorious death arrives,
More to be valued than a thousand lives!
On such a theatre as this to die,
For such a cause and such a witness by.
Waller. Instructions to a Painter.

——— To Philoctetes care
He leaves his deathful instruments of war,
To him commits those arrows, which again,
Must see the bulwarks of the Trojan reign.
Gay. Ovid. Metam. b. ix.

He rais'd the low, and fortify'd,
The weak against the strongest side:
Ill has he read, that never hit
On him in Muses' deathless writ.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2.

Vary both your style and your elocution, as in conversation you always do, suitably to your matter. For monotony both absolutely prevents emotion, and soon deadens attention.—Secker. Eight Charges, Char. 8.

Gods! I behold a prodigy. My spear
Lies at my foot, and he, at whom I cast
The weapon with such deadly force, is gone.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xx.

And are you sure, that old age will come with all these circumstances inviting to repentance? It may be, and is very likely to be, to life, what the winter is to the year, a time of chilliness and numbness, and of deadness of the faculties for repentance.—Pearce, vol. iii. Ser. 18.

A sullen, dire, unhospitable cell,
Where deathful spirits and magicians dwell.
Sir W. Jones. The Seven Fountains.

So shines our prince. A sky-born crowd
Of virtues round him blaze:
Ne'er shall oblivion's murky cloud
Obscure his deathless praise.—Id. From the Chinese.

DEAF, or, DE'AFEN, v., DEAF, adj., DE'AFELY., DE'AFNESS. } A. S. Deaf-ian, adeaf-ian, surdescere; Dan. Doof; Ger. Taub; Sw. Dofw-a, sensu privare, to deprive of sense or sensation. And Wachter and Junius agree that that is deaf, which has lost any of its natural strength. Deaf corn, is barren corn. A deaf nut, Grose says, is a nut whose kernel is decayed. And deafely,—lonely, solitary, far from neighbours. As now restricted, to deafen, is—

To deprive of the sense of hearing; to stun the sense of hearing.

— "That ye vor nogt," the other seyde, "vor the folke's herte ys,
"So yharded, that hii beth blynde & deue ywys,
"That hii nolleth non god thyng yhure ne yse"
R. Gloucester, p. 352.

For God is def now a dayes, and deyneth nouht ous to huyre. Piers Ploughman, p. 186.

Blind men seen, crokide goen, meesels ben maad clene, defe men heren.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 11.

And said, frend, though that I still lie
I nam not deefe, now peace and cry no more
For I haue herd thy words, and thy lore.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. i.

Monardus writeth that a little of the powder of that horne put into the ear cureth deafenesse.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 650.

This eager river seems outrageously to roar,
And counterfeiting Nile, to deaf the neighbouring shore.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 13.

——— I will stay here,
It is enough, my hearing shall be punish'd,
With what shall happen, 'gainst the which there is
No deafing, but to hear.
Beaum. & Fletch. Two Noble Kinsmen, Act v. sc. 1.

Now had the stillnesse of the quiet night
Drown'd all the world in silence and in sleepe,
When suddenly we heard a dreadfull sound,
Which deaf the earth, and tremble made the ground.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. viii. s. 16.

What shall be the harmony of hell, where the ears shall be deafned with the cries and complaints of the damned.
Bp. Taylor. Cont. b. ii. c. 7.

——— The hollow abyss
Heard farr and wide, and all the host of hell
With deafning shout return'd them loud acclaim.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

He answered that it was impossible for him to hear a man three yards off, by reason of deafness that had held him fourteen years: which being found true, the witness was rejected.—State Trials. Earl of Strafford, an. 1640.

A blind or deaf man has infinitely more reason to deny the being, or the possibility of the being, of light or sounds; than any atheist can have to deny or doubt of, the existence of God.—Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 4.

While, from below, old Ocean groans profound,
The walls, the rocks, the shores repel the sound,
Ring with the deafning shock, and thunder all around.
Rowe. To the Earl of Godolphin.

——— With a shout
All sprung towards the ships. up flew the dust
And overhung them, deaf'ning were the cries,
To clear the grooves and slide the barks to sea.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.

The deafness seems the unconquerable part of the malady: for none deaf and dumb from their birth have been brought to hear.—Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 11.

DEAL, n., DEAL, v., DE'ALER., DE'ALING, n. } Goth. Dail-jan; A. S. Dal-an, dividere, partiri, distribuere, to divide, to distribute, to impart, to deale, (Sonner.) Dut. Deyl-en; Ger. Theil-en.

To deal cards,—is to share or distribute them among the company; to deal in business, is to share or partake or participate in business or the concerns of business; and thus,—

To trade or traffic, or treat with, to have any transactions with.

A deal,—a part, portion, share.

A deal-board,—a board dealt or divided from a larger mass or trunk.

Deal supplies the dimin. term.—dle.

Ther aftur cueno a two he delede hys kyndom.
And gef hys twei dogtren half, & half hym self nom.
R. Gloucester, p. 31.

From Douere in to Chestre tilleth Watlinge-strete,
From south est in to north west, and that ys some del grete. Id. p. 8.

To while that thise men bold with ther folk gan daile,
Sir Robert de Brus the old to Dauid gan trauaile,
R. Brunne, p. 116.

Parfay, quoth Pacience, propeliche to telle
In English hit is ful harde, ac som del ich shal telle the.
Piers Ploughman, p. 268.

Let nat thy lyft half oure Lord techeth
Ywite what thow delest with thy ryht syde.—Id. p. 41.

And whan he hadde take the fyve looues and twey fisches: he bihelde into hevene, and blesside and brak, and delide to hise disciplis, that thei schulden sette forth bifore the cumpanyes.—Wiclif. Luke, c. 9.

And of her good to him deles
And yeueth him part of her loweles.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

That selie Dido hath now such desire
With Eneas her newe gest to deale
That she lost her howe and eke her heale.
Id. Legend of Dido.

His garment was euery deale
Ipourtraied and iwrought with floures
By diuers medeling of colоures.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

A good wif was ther of beside Bathe,
But she was som del defe, and that was scathe.
Id. Prologue, v. 448.

And eke when I maie here saine
Tidynges of my ladies hele,
All though I maie not with hir dele:
Yet am I wonder glad of that.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Be so that he the haine dele
Hem graunt. Id. Ib. b. v.

Henry Donn said, do the people expect I should say any thing? I was acquainted I confess with their practices, but I never did intend to be a dealer in them.
State Trials, an. 1586. Mary Queen of Scots.

Therefore shal the Lorde rewarde me after my righteous dealynge, and accordynge vnto the cleannesse of my handes in his eye syghte.—Bible, 1551, Psalms 18.

To thee, O greatest goddesse, onely great,
An humble suppliant loe! I lowly fly:
Seeking for right, which I of thee entreat;
Who right to all dost deale indifferently.
Spenser. Of Mutabilitie, c. 7. s. 14.

He three jewels, as thou knowest well,
A ring, a brooch, and a cloth, thee bequeath,
Whose vertues he thee told every deal,
Or that he past hence and yald up the breath.
Browne. The Shepheard's Pipe, Eclogue 1.

Opinion's stamp does virtue current make;
But such small money (though the people's gold
With which they trade) great dealers skorne to take,
And we are greater than one world can hold.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. i. c. 3.

To be officious getteth friends,
Plaine dealing hated is,
Yeat better plainly to reproue,
Than fainedly to kisse.
Warner. Albion's England, b. xi. c. 61.

Having with great importunity (as a thing upon which the service depended) gotten from the commissioners of Devon above a thousand deal-boards to make huts for the soldiers, he employed them all in the building a great riding house at Buckland for their own pleasure.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. ii. p. 675.

Though the Earl of Clarendon did often prevail with the king to alter the resolutions taken there, he was forced to let a great deal go that he did not like.
Burnet. Own Time, an. 1661.

Arthur More, who had risen up from being a footman without any education, to be a great dealer in trade, and was the person of that board in whom the lord-treasurer confided most, moved that they might first read it every one apart, and then debate it.—Id. Ib. an. 1713.

The generality of these have been very malignant and much disaffected to a parliamentary or thorough reformation, and from whom they cannot but expect very severe dealings.
Parliamentary History, an. 1641.

Lord of his own paternal field,
He liberal dealt his store;
And call'd the stranger to his feast,
The beggar to his door.—Logan. A Tale.

It [charity] must preside with a superiority over all the desires of our hearts, that neither wantonness nor lust, nor anger and revenge, nor covetousness and ambition, may carry us aside from the ways of righteousness and equity in our dealings one with another.—Sherlock, Dis. 35.

DEALBA'TION. Lat. Albus; Gr. Αλφος, white; which Scheidius supposes to have the same origin with Αλφιτον, farina hordeacea, barley-meal; and to have signified originally commolita, bruised or ground; and thence applied to colour, quod farina commolita album colorem præbet, because meal bruised or ground, or rather corn ground to meal, presents a white colour.

I have been here time enough in conscience to pass all the degrees and effects of fire, as distillation, sublimation, mortification, calcination, solution, descension, dealbation, rubification, and fixation.—Howell, b. ii. Let. 42.

Phil. To see her negligence! she hath made this cheek
By much too pale, and hath forgot to whiten
The natural redness of my nose; she knows not
What 'tis wants dealbation.
Randolph. The Muse's Looking-glass, Act iv. sc. 1.

DEAMBULA'TION. } Lat. De, and ambul-
DEA'MBULATORY, adj. } are; (see AMBLE:)
DEA'MBULATORY, n. } which (Vossius) is spoken of men—

Going about this way, and that; as herdsmen do when following their rambling cattle.

Let them beware lest iustice, equite, and iudgment be neglected, as they were in this kynges ydle deambulacions.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 4.

Touchinge suche exercises, as may be vsed within the house, or in the shadowe (as is the olde maner of speakynge) as deambulations or moderate walkynges.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. i. c. 15.

The deambulatory actors used to have their quietus est, and to forego their employments for want of continuance more or less.—Bp. Morton. Episcopacy Asserted, p. 142.

The sides of every street were covered with fresh alures [allies] of marble or cloisters, crowned with rich and lofty pinnacles, and fronted with tabernacular or open work, vaulted like the dormitory of a monastery, and called deambulatories, for the accommodation of the citizens in all weathers.—Warton. History of Eng. Poetry, vol. ii. p. 93.

DEAN., DE'ANERY., DE'ANESS., DE'ANSHIP. } Sp. Dean; Fr. Doyen; It. Decano; Ger. Ein dechant; Dut. Deken; Sax. Decen; Lat. Decanus, Gr. Δεκανος; from Δεκα, decem, ten: because a deane is—

An ecclesiastical magistrate, who hath power over ten canons at the least, (Minshew.)

See the quotation from Blackstone, and DECANAL.

Sir Alexander was his dene of Glascow.—R. Brunne, p. 337.

On the 2d of June 1572, about eight in the morning, the duke was brought to a scaffold erected on Tower-hill, attended by Alexander Nowel, dean of St. Paul's
State Trials. Duke of Norfolk, an. 1572.

But as the number of Christians increased, so first monasteries, than finallie parish churches were builded in euerie iurisdiction: from whence I take our deaneries churches to haue their originall, now called mother churches, and their incumbents archpriests.—Holinshed. Desc. of Eng. b. ii. c. 1.

A good pension was settled on the dean, until the said pension was redeemed, according to Denny's phrase, with the dignity of the deanery of Lincoln, afterwards conferred on him.—Strype. Life of Parker, b. i. c. 6.

Then we'll buy English silks for our wives and our daughters,
In spite of his deanship and journeyman Waters.
Swift. An excellent New Song.

The chief of them [the clergy constituting the chapter] who presided over the rest obtained the name of Decanus or Dean, being probably at first appointed to superintend ten canons or prebendaries.—Blackstone. Com. b. i. c. 11.

I call not to that heart which is a stranger to the throbs and yearnings of curiosity, so excited, to justify the abbess of Quedlingberg, the prioress, the deaness, and sub-chauntress for sending at noon-day for the trumpeter's wife.
Sterne. Tristram Shandy. Tale of Slawkenbergius.

DEAR, v. }
DEAR, n. }
DEAR, adj. }
DE'ARLING. }
DE'ARLY. }
DE'ARNESS. }
DE'ARTH. }

The old English verb to Dere, A. S. Der-ian, is, nocere, ladere, to hurt, to do mischief. Dearth is the third pers. sing., and means some or any season or weather, or other cause, which dereth or maketh dear, hurteth or doeth mischief. See Tooke, ii. 409.

Dearth is applied, consequentially, to the scarcity or want, or barrenness, that is the consequence of the hurt or mischief done. And thus, dear is—

Precious, costly, highly or greatly prized or valued, rated or esteemed; coveted or desired.

Tho ye moder yslaw was, me blamede hym therfore,
And seyde, that heo bogte hym dere, er he were ybore.
R. Gloucester, p. 68.

In this tyme was great deorthe
xii. d. an half peny loof was worthe.—Id. p. 589.

And said, now may go lightly here
Thase stones to schip, withouten dere.
R. Brunne, (from Wace.) Preface, p. 195.

And said the stones thei salle haf here.
Thei ralle bie tham first fulle dere.—Id. Ib. p. 193.

Thus ich awakede and wrot what ich hadde dremed
And dyghte me derly and dude me to churche
To huyre hollich the masse.—Piers Ploughman, p. 366.

Of deth ne of derthe, drad was he nevere.—Id. p. 280.

And ther was maad a cloude overschadowinge hem, and a voice cam of the cloude, and seyde, This is my derworth sone: here ye him.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 9.

And ye shul bothe anon unto me swere,
That never mo ye shul my contree dere
Ne maken werre upon me night ne day.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1824.

And fell in speche of Telephus the king,
And of Achilles for his queinte spere,
For he coude with it bothe hele and dere.
Id. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,554.

And thre yere in this wise his lif he ladde,
And bare him so in pees and eke in warre,
There n'as no man that Theseus hath derre, [dearer.]
Id. The Knightes Tale.

For that is dere-bought honour.—Id. House of Fame, b. iii.

I may now too derely aby my negligence.
Id. Remedie for Loue.

And, as Seint Gregory sayth, that precious clothing is culpable for the derthe of it, and for his softnesse, and for his strangenesse and disguising, and for the superfluitee, or for the inordinate scantinesse of it.—Id. The Persones Tale.

For yet ben there things dwelled to thee ward, that no man doubteth that they ne ben more derworth to thee, than thyne owne life.—Id. Boecius, b. ii.

For when I wote his good estate,
As for that tyme I dare well swere,
None other sorowe mai me dere.—Gower. Con. A. b. i

Upon a day as he was mery,
As though ther might him no thinge derie.—Id. Ib. b. vi.

Lowe nowe my sonne what it is,
A man to caste his eie amis:
Whiche Acteon hath dere abought.—Id. Ib. b. i.

And thus by sleight, and by conyne
Aros the derth, and the famine.—Gower Con A. b v.

So thik it was with leves grene,
Might no rayn cum thar-bytwene,
And that grenes lastes ay,
For no winter dere yt may.
Ritson. Romances. Ywaine & Gawin, v. 358.

When thou in hand has the stane,
Der sal thai do the nane,
For the stane es of swilk myght;
Of the sal men have no syght.—Id. Ib. v. 744.

Then cease we to bee sonnes of God, were we neuer so deare dearlynges to him before, and shall neuer be hys sonnes agayne, till we mend againe, and leaue the fleshe agayne, and fall agayne, to the spyryte.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 700.

It grieued Nature muche to see the dede,
Me seems I see hir how she wept, to see hir dearling blede.
Gascoigne. Flowers. In praise of Lady Sandes.

I know nothing to the contrary, but that it may be allowed for a good merchantable commodity considering there the small charge for the labour & feeding of men, the infinite store of wood, the want of wood & deerenesse thereof in England, and the necessity of ballasting of ships.
Hacklugt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 269.

And when the vii. yeres of plentiousness that was in the laude of Egypte, were ended, then came the seuen yeres of derth accordynge as Joseph had sayd.
Bible, 1551. Genesis, c. 13.

Golden quoifes, and stomachers,
For my lads to giue their deers.
Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act iv. sc. 3.

That I did loue thee Cæsar, O 'tis true:
If then thy spirit looke vpon vs now,
Shall it not greeue thee deerer then thy death
To see thy Antony making his peace,
Shaking the bloody fingers of thy foes?
Id. Julius Cæsar, Act iii. sc. 1.

O blessed sheepe, O shepheard great,
that bought his flocke so deare
And them did saue with bloudie sweat,
from wolues that would them teare.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calendar. July.

It is seldome seen that God allowes even to the greatest dearlings of the world a perfect contentment; something they must haue to complaine of, that shall giue an unsavory verdure to their sweetest morsels; and make their very felicity miserable.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Esther suing to Ahasuerus.

1*st Gent.* His suite is only, sir, to be excus'd.
Duke. He shall not be excus'd, I love him dearlier:
Say we intreat him; goe, he must not leave us.
Beaum. & Fletch. Passionate Madman, Act ii. sc. 1.

Surely it is no proper address to God, for perseverance in the state of grace, to expect this toleration of a friendship and dearness with our vitious nature.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 6. s. 2.

I have heard it credibly reported, he was told by a wizard, that could he but come to see the king's face again, he should be reinvested in his former dearness.
State Trials. Murderers of Sir T. Overbury, an. 1615.

——— The cormorant that lives in expectation
Of a long wish'd-for dearth, and smiling grinds
The faces of the poor, you may make spoil of,
Even theft to such is justice.
Massinger. The Guardian, Act ii. sc. 4.

The courtesie for which the Romans were to thank him, was, that out of Egypt they had lately been supplied with corn, in a time of extreme dearth: when the miseries of war had made all their own provinces unable to relieve them.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. v. c. 4. s. 3.

'Tis hard to judge if Clymene were mov'd
More by his prayer, whom she so dearly loved,
Or more with fury fir'd to find her name
Traduced, and made the sport of common fame.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. i.

But the peace between the two kings, whatever mutual dearnesses there had appeared, was but short.
Strype. Memorials, an. 1521.

For I find the dearth at this time was very great. Wheat was at four marks the quarter: malt, at two pound four shillings; pease, at two pound five shillings.
Burnet. Hist. of the Reformation, an. 1557.

Without being liable to any charge of want of zeal for the public service, he might have passed the rest of his days in the command to which he had been appointed in Greenwich Hospital, there to enjoy the fame he had dearly earned in two circumnavigations of the world.
Cook. Third Voyage, Introd.

To this cause he attributes a certain supposed dearness of the necessaries of life, which must compel our manufacturers to emigrate to cheaper countries, particularly France, and with them the manufacture.
Burke. On a late State of the Nation.

DEARN. See DERNE.

DEA'URATE. Lat. Deauratus; Sp. Dorado; It. Dorato. "Fr. Doré, gilt over; also, of gold; also, fair, beautiful, brightly shining," (Cotgrave.)

And while the twilight and the rowa rede
Of Phebus light were deaurat alite
A penne I tooke.—Chaucer. The Blacke Knight.

DEBACCHA'TIONS. Lat. Debacchari, to revel like a bacchanal. "Fr. Debaccher, to rave, rage, rail, take on like a drunken man," (Cotgrave.) See DEBAUCH.

What confidence can such have of the suffrage of the saints, who defile their holiday with most foolish vanities, most impure pollutions, most wicked debacchations, and sacrilegious execrations.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act vi. sc. 12.

DEBA'R, v. }
DEBA'RRING, n. } Lat. De, and bar. (See BAR.) Goth. and A. S. Bairg-an, beorg-an, birg-an, byrg-an, to bar, to defend, to guard.

To guard against, to prevent; to hinder.

But man alone, alas the hard stound,
Ful cruelly, by kinds ordinaunce
Constrained is and by statute bound
And debarred from all such pleasaunce.
Chaucer. The Floure of Curtesie.

Your honour writeth of the debarring of your merchants at the seaport from their accustomed libertie of interchangeable trafficke and bartar.—Hacklugt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 505.

Nature itself taught men to ioyne alwayes well-favouredneesse with profitableneesse. As in man, that ioynte or piece which is by any chaunce deprived of his comlineesse, the same is also debarred of his use and profitableneesse.
Ascham. The School of Shooting.

His song was all a lamentable lay,
Of great vnkindness, and of vsage hard,
Of Cynthia the lady of the sea,
Which from her presence, faultlesse him debar'd.
Spenser. Colin Clout's come home againe.

Whether God (who can turn the afflictions of his friends into advantages,) oppose the felicities of his enemies, and debar their injustice to his adherents, since this last seems the lesser prerogative!
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 4. s. 2.

Hereby the Apostle not only debarred women from prophesying, but from any public function in the ecclesiastical jurisdiction.—Strype. Life of Aylmer, c. 13.

When we see men acting thus against the precepts of reason, and the instincts of nature, we cannot hesitate to determine, that by some means or other they were debarred from choice.—Johnson. On the State of Affairs in 1756.

DEBA'RE. Found only in Drant, and meaning simply bare, (qv.)

As wooddes are made debayre of leaues
by turning of the yeare,
The oldest fail: so antique age
of words away do weare.
Drant. Horace. The Arte of Poetrye.

DEBA'SE, v. }
DEBA'SEMENT. }
DEBA'SER. } See ABASE and BASE. To put or bring low, to deject or cast down, to lower, to degrade.

But hell, and darknesse, and the grislie grave,
Is ignorance, the enemy of grace,
That mindes of men borne heavenlie doth debace.
Spenser. Teares of the Muses.

King Edward the Third in the sixteenth year of his reign proclaimed, that no man should sell wool-fels or leather, under such a price, so that these staple commodities might not be debased, and this at no place but at Northampton and Anwick.—State Trials. Great Case of Impositions, an. 1606.

Sam. So let her go, God sent her to debase me,
And aggravate my folly, who committed
To such a viper his most sacred trust
Of secresie, my safety and my life.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

——— Record, thou spirit of truth,
With what debasement I have thrown myself
To under-offices, only to learn
The truth, the party, time, means, the place,
By whom, and when, and where thou wert disgraced.
Marston. The Malcontent, Act i. sc. 7.

What more debases man than to consecrate the flower of his esteem and affections to unworthy objects, and many times to things, wherein were no signs of life, much less any ray of divinity.—Bates. On the Existence of God, c. 1.

Is it for moral imperfections or blemishes; for vicious habits or actual misdemeanours? these indeed are the only debasements and disparagements of a man; yet do they not expunge the characters of divinity impressed on his nature.
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 27.

Even reason itself, (which, if we have any original faculties, is surely one of them,) is subject to the same law of habit, as the means of improvement or of debasement.

Beattie. Elements of Moral Science, pt. iii. c. 2.

Receivers of bribes, extorters of money by threats, debasers of metals, &c.—Sir W. Jones. Laws of Menu, c. 9.

DEBA'TE, v.
DEBA'TE, n.
DEBA'TEABLE.
DEBA'TEFULL.
DEBA'TEMENT.
DEBA'TER.
DEBA'TING, n.

Fr. Débattre; Sp. Debatir. (See BATE; and also Batten, in Wachter, and Batre, in Menage.) Generally—

To fight, quarrel, strive, struggle, contend;—to dispute, argue, discuss, examine.

And on the day of the Trinite nexte auyng was a gret debaat (in the cite of Yorke saith Caxton) by Henaudys & Englyssh̄men, & in that murther ther were sleye in the erldom of Nychol iiii. skore.—R. Gloucester, p. 690.

Nother bost no debat. beo among em alle.

Piers Ploughman, p. 377.

Priuy backbiteris, detractouris, hateful to God, debatouris, proude and highe ouer measure.—Wiclif. Romaynes, c. 1.

And ouer that his cote-armoure
As white as is the lily floure,
In which he would debate.

Chaucer. The Rime of Sir Thopas, v. 207.

In this debate I was so wo
Me thought min hert brast atwaine.—Id. Dreame.

But sodeynly the wynde and rayne
Began vpon the sea debate.—Gower. Conf. b. viii.

The queene is come: and whan she herde
Of this mater, how that it ferde,
She sigh debate, she sighe disease
But if she wolde hir doughter please.—Id. Ib.

When Lucifer was hest in heuen,
And ought moste haue stonde in euen,
Towardes God he toke debate.—Id. Ib. b. v.

And it fell that like tyme so,
That Rome had warres stronge
Ageyne Carthage, and stood longe
The two cities vpon debate.—Id. Ib.

Nowe commeth Tindall and seeth that they shalbe put to flyght and fayne to runne awaie, and therefore wittily proundeth a startyng hole, steppynge from playne and euident Scripture, theyr olde specialt playne euidente woordes vnto darke debatable termes of general pithe and substance.

Sir T. More. Works, p. 461.

But yet if ye be so debatefull, and contencious, so desirous of transitorye thynges, whose contempte ye take vpon you.

Vaal. 1 Corinthians, c. 6.

Sir Charles Daver charged him, [Henry Cuffe] when there was a debating of the several enterprizes, which they should undertake, that he did ever bind firmly and resolutely for attempting the court.—State Trials. Sir C. Blunt, an. 1600.

Whereby the vulgar may become so wise,
That (with a self presumption overgrown)
They may the deepest mysteries debate,
Control their betters, censure acts of state.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vi.

For brethren to debate and rip up their falling out in the ear of a common enemy, thereby making him the judge, or at least the well-pleas'd auditor of their disagreement, is neither wise nor comely.—Milton. Ans. to Eikon Basilike.

So gan he to discourse the whole debate,
Which that strange knight for him sustained had,
And those two Sarazins confounded late,
Whose carcases on ground were horribly prostrate.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 8.

And shortlie after, Sir James Liermouth was appointed to go as ambassador to England, to make complaint vpon certaine inuasions made by the borderers of England into Scotland, and also for the vsing of the debatable ground betwixt the two realmes.—Holinshed. Scotland, an. 1541.

Debatefull strife, and cruel enmitie
The famous name of knighthood fouly shend.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 6.

Vpon the receipt of this most honourable inuitation and offer, there was much debatement in the chappell, where they sate vpon the earle's behalfe, whether he should accept thereof or no.—Speed. Hen. III. b. ix. c. 9. s. 89.

Out idle words, servants to shallow fools!
Unprofitable sounds, weak arbitrators!
Busy yourselves in skil-contending schools;
Debate where leisure serves with dull debaters.

Shakespeare. The Rape of Lucrece.

They scoffe at all mature delayes, and meditated debatelings of matters by consultation, and deliberation; as a thing too much tasting of an oratory veine; and full of tediousness; and nothing conduceing to the summe and issues of businesse.—Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. viii. c. 2.

In midst of all the dome, Misfortune sate,
And gloomy Discontent, and fell Debate.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

Whereas the petitioners were called up by several and respective writs, under great penalties to attend in Parliament; and have a clear and indubitable right to vote in bills and other matters whatsoever debatable in parliament by the ancient customs, laws and statutes of this realm.

Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. p. 351.

As I am only giving an opinion on this point, and not at all debating it in an adverse line, I hope I may be excused in another observation.—Burke. Of the present Discontents.

At London you may see men sauntering in the Court of Requests, while the most important debate is carrying on in the two houses; and many do not think themselves sufficiently compensated for the losing of their dinners, by all the eloquence of our most celebrated speakers

Hume. Ess. On Eloquence.

I am grown too old to think of figuring as a parliamentary debater. Anecdotes of Bp. Watson, vol. ii. p. 102.

DEBAUCH, v.
DEBA'UCH, n.
DEBA'UCHEDLY.
DEBA'UCHEDNESS.
DEBAUCHE'R.
DEBA'UCHER.
DEBA'UCHERY.
DEBA'UCHING, n.
DEBA'UCHMENT.
DEBA'UCHTNESS.

Variously written in our elder writers; Debois, debosh, debauch. Cotgrave, in v. Debaucher, refers to baucher, which he explains; to rank, order, array, lay evenly. Minshew thinks the Eng. Debosh, and Skinner, the Fr. Desbaucher, also to be compounded of de or des, and baucher; and to signify,—to put out of rank or order; to turn from the right way. Bauche, Skinner thinks, is the Lat. Abacus; Series lapidum vel laterum juxta positorum mensiformis. The Lat. Debacchari,—to revel like a bacchanal; Fr. Debaucher, seems to present a more simple etymology. See DEBAUCHATION.

"Fr. Desbaucher,—to debosh, mar, corrupt, spoyle, viciate, seduce, mislead, make lewd, bring to disorder, draw from goodness," (Cotgrave.)

Witty. —— Oh Le cozen,
These are ill courses, you are a scholar too?
Cred. I was drawn into 't most unfortunately,
By filthy debaucht company.

Beaum. & Fletch. Wit at several Weapons, Act iv. sc. 1.

My purse shall bear me out; a lazy life
Is scurvy and debosh'd.—Ford. Lady's Trial, Act v. sc. 2.

But haughty she did this just match despise,
Her pride debauch'd her judgment and her eyes.

Cowley. Davideis, b. iii.

But stage-playes, if we take them in their very best conception, had their rise, their pedigree, and being from idolatrous infidels, and the deboisest Pagans, who were the Deuil's factors in this seruice.

Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act i. sc. 2.

Consider, dear brethren, whether it be iust, that out of that mouth of Christians where the body of Christ doth enter in, a deboist song should be brought forth, as the very poyson of the Deuill.—Id. Ib. Act v. sc. 9.

They are generally men, who by speaking against the French, inveighing against the debauches of court, talking of the ill management of the revenue, and such popular flourishes, have cheated the countrye into electing them.

Marvell. Works, vol. i. p. 539.

To live severely with the melancholy, merrily with the pleasant, gravely with the aged, wantonly with the young, desperately with the bold, and debauchedly with the luxurious.—Cowley, Ess. i. Of Liberty.

Although it be true, (of great men especially,) that they are the last that know the evills of their owne house, yet either it could not be when all Israel rung of the lewdnesse of Elie's sonnes, that hee onely should not know it, or if hee knew it not, his ignorance cannot be excused; for a reasonable restraint might haue preuented this extremity of debauchednesse. Bp. Hall. Cont. Eli and his Sonnes.

What hope can the city have of those youth, the debauchtness of whose lives hath not been prevented by good education.—Scott. Ess. On Drapery, p. 137.

In a word, those who make a kind of conscience of drinking, amorous dancing, healthing, dicing, idleneese, stage playes, and of every sinne at other times, deeme it a part of their piety to make no bones of these, of any deboistnesse or prophanenesse now.

Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act viii. sc. 3.

To live civilly and piously in the middest of wicked men, and not to joyne with them in the same excesse of sinne and riot of dissolutenesse and deboistnesse that they run into—with sundry other particulars which I prætermit: are now infallible arguments and symptomes of a rank Puritan.

Id. Ib. pt. i. Act viii. sc. 7.

Upon a sudden after the doctor died, which now immediately happened, to the amazement of all that formerly knew them, [they] turned open debauchees.

Hammond. Life, p. 23.

Then thou strong debaucher, and seducer of youth, witness this easie and honest young man

B. Jonson. Bartholomew Fayre, Act v. sc. 6.

The face of the court was much chang'd in the change of the king. for King Charles was temperate, chaste, and serious; so that the fooles and bawds, mimicks and catamites of the former court grew out of fashion; and the nobility and courtiers, who did not quite abandon their debaucheries, had yet that reverence to the king, to retire into corners to practice them.

Memoirs of the Life of Colonel Hutchinson.

Whereas a king must be ador'd like a demigod, with a dissolute and hauty court about him, of vast expence and luxury, masks and revels, to the debauching of our prime gentry, both male and female; not in their pastimes only, but in earnest, by the loose employments of court service, which will be then thought honourable.

Milton. Free Commonwealth.

He that repents instantly, breaks his habit when it is in ovo, in the shell, and prevents God's anger, and his own debauchment and disimprovement

Jer. Taylor. On Repentance, c. 6. s. 2.

But thou in time th' increasing ill control,
Nor first debauch the body by the soul:
Secure the sacred quiet of thy mind
And keep the sanctions Nature has design'd.

Dryden. Ovid. Met. b. x.

The truth of characters, the beauty of order, and the simple imitation of nature, were in a manner wholly unknown to 'em: or thro' petulancy, or debauch of humour, were, it seems, neglected and set aside.

Shaftesbury. Advice to an Author, pt. ii. s. 2.

Could we but prevail with the greatest debauchees amongst us, to change their lives, we should find it no very hard matter to change their judgments.—South, vol. i. Ser. 6

These philosophers, above all other men, have rendered the human mind, the flatterer, the deceiver, and the debaucher of itself, blanda adulatrix, et quasi lena sui

Bolingbroke. On Human Knowledge.

On the contrary, there is too much cause to fear, that they are not at all sincerely and really desirous to be satisfied in the true state of things, but only seek, under the pretence and cover of infidelity, to excuse their vices and debaucheries; which they are so strongly inslaved to, that they cannot prevail with themselves upon any account to forsake them.

Clarke. On Natural and Revealed Religion, Introd.

Not so Silenus from his night's debauch,
Fatigu'd and sick, he looks upon his watch
With rheumy eyes and forehead aching sore.

Wilkie. A Dialogue

But after a few years, a sad reverse usually appeared. The boy became a spendthrift and a debauchee; alienated his father's affections by incurring debt, and ruined his constitution by every species of excess.

V. Knox. Liberal Education, s. 36.

DEBE'L, v.
DEBE'LLATE, v.
DEBE'LLATING, n.
DEBELLA'TION.

Lat. Debellare, to make war against. See BELLICOUS. "Fr. Débeller,—to subdue, vanquish, overcome," (Cotgrave.)

The debellation of Salem and Bizance made by Syr Thomas More, A.D. 1533, after he had giuen ouer the office of Lorde Chauncellour of Englande.

Sir T. More. Works, p. 59.

No better Spanish Cacus sped,
For all his wondrous strength,
Whom Hercules from out his realme
Debelled at the length.

Warner. Albion's England, b. ii. c. 8.

—— Him long of old
Thou didst debel, and down from heav'n cast
With all his army.—Milton. Par. Reg. b. iv.

They desire (King Edward growne aged) not to seeme by sitting still upon so many thornes of disgrace, & losse, to haue been ouer-warred, and though in two or three battels inferiour, yet not to haue beene clearely debellated.

Speed. Edw. III. b. ix. c. 12. s. 138.

[The example of Hercules] doth notably set forth the consent of all nations and ages, in the approbation of the extirpating and debellating of giants, monsters, and foreign tyrants, not only as lawful, but as meritorious, even of divine honour: and this although the deliverer came from one end of the world unto the other.—Bacon. Holy War.

DEBE'LLISH, v. Only found in G. Fletcher; opposed to embellish, (qv.)

Are these the eyes that made all others blind?
Ah! why are they themselves now blemished!
Is this the face, in which all beauty shind?
What blast hath thus his flowers debellished.

G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph over Death.

DEBE'NTURE, n. Lat. Debentur, from debere, to be due; and so written by Bacon, in the old edition of his speech to king James, touching purveyors.

Jack. Wyll, this knave is drunke, let us dresse him.
Let us riffell him so, that he have not one pennie to bless him,
And steale his debenters too.—Edwards. Damon & Pithias.

Nay, farther, they are grown to that extremity, as is affirmed, though it be scarce credible, save that in such persons all things are credible, that they will take double poundage, once when the debenture [debentur, old ed.] is made, and again the second time when the money is paid.
Bacon. Speech touching Purveyors.

"Then vengeance seize this head of mine,
If I have heard or can divine—
Yet, prithee, where are Cæsar's hands
Allotted their debenture lands?"
Francis. Horace, b. ii. Sat. 7.

DE'BILE, adj. } Fr. Débile, Lat. Debilis, quasi dehabilis.
DEBI'LITATE, v. } Weak, feeble, faint, infirm.
DEBILITA'TION.
DEBI'LITATING, n. } To debilitate,—to weaken, to enfeeble, to lessen or diminish the strength, firmness or debility.
DEBI'LITY.

Imoderate watch drieth to moch the body, and doth debilitate the powers animall.—Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. ii.

For so it was, that for his feblenesse or debylate of age, he, by councell of physycyons, was sowyd in a shete wasshyd with aqua vite, to the ende to cause his olde body to catche naturall hete.—Fabyan, an. 1389.

For that I have not wash'd
My nose that bled, or foyl'd some debile wretch,
Which without note here's many else have done,
You shoot me forth in acclamations hyperbolicall.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act I. sc. 9.

Mine expectation, presently, without forsaking me, forged and sought out for another hope, that might sustain me, although it were debile and weak.
Shelton. Don Quixote, b. iv. c. 13.

Seeing then hee hath violated all articles of the peace, it was lawfull for mee, according to my agreement, to recover what was mine owne, and to debilitate his power by all means.—Prynne. Treach. & Disloy. of Papists, pt. iii. p. 28.

Which he also acknowledges in these words: That if the crown upon his head be so heavy as to oppress the whole body, the weakness of inferior members cannot return any thing of strength, honour, or safety to the head; but that a necessary debilitation must follow.
Milton. An Answer to Eikon Basilikè.

——— Nor imagine I,
A worse thing to enforce debilitie,
Then is the sea: though nature neere so strong
Knits one together.—Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. viii.

It seems more probable, that without any such strengthening of the pressure of the outward air, the taking quite away or the debilitating of the resistance from within, may suffice to produce the effects under consideration.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 18.

But after full three hours ineffectual labour, the jeers broke, and the men being quite jaded, we were obliged, by mere debility, to desist, and quietly to expect our fate, which we then conceived to be unavoidable.
Anson. Voyage round the World, b. iii. c. 4.

Sometimes the body in full strength we find,
What various ails debilitate the mind.
Jenyns. On the Immortality of the Soul, b. i.

By the constitution of nature, which may properly be considered as indicating the will of God, all excess in sensual indulgences tends to the depravation of the mind, and to the debilitation of the body, and may, on that account, be esteemed repugnant to the will of God.
Anecdotes of Bp. Watson, vol. ii. p. 162.

DE'BITE, n. i.e. Deputy, (qv.) And see DEBT.

There was then no kyng in Edom, the kynge was but a debite.—Bible, 1551. 3 Kings, c. 22.

When the debyte had redde the letter, he asked of what countre he was.—Id. Acts, c. 23.

And yet he wyll be taken and esteemed for the vicar and debyte of Christ.—Udal. Reuelacion, c. 17.

DEBONA'IR. } Bonere was formerly in use. See it. Skinner says, "De bon aire, i. e. of good temper or disposition; but Junius seems to accede to Menage, who conceives it to be formed from Low Lat. Debonarius, used for bonus. The It. Bonario, bonarietà, correspond to the Fr. Débonnaire, débonnareté. In Boetius (b. iii. met. 9,) Chaucer translates, Tu requies tranquilla piis; thou art pesible rest to debonnaire folk. The word is now used as in Cotgrave: and see the second quotation from Chaucer.
DEBONA'IRITY.
DEBONA'IRLY.
DEBONA'IRNESS.

"Fr. Débonnaire,—courteous, affable; gentle, mild; of a sweet or friendly conversation," (Cotgrave.)

For he was mek & mylde ynou, and vayf of fles & felle, [skin]
Debonere to spake wyth, & wyth powere mon meest.
R. Gloucester, p. 287.

With even glad, and browes bent,
Her heere downe to her heles went.
And she was simple as doue on tree,
Ful debonaire of hart was shee.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

The remedie agenst ire, is a vertue that cleped is mansuetude, that is, debonairtee: and eke another vertue, that men clepen patience or sufferaunce.—Debonairtee withdraweth and refreineth the stirrings and mevings of mennes corage in his herte, in swich maner, that they ne skip not out by anger ne ire.—Id. The Persones Tale.

For truely that swete wight,
When I had wrong, and she the right,
She would alwey so goodly
For vene me so debonairly,
In all my youth. Id. Dreame.

In olde bokes of recorde
Thus finde I wr to ensamplaire
Traian the worthy debonaire,
By whome that Rome stode governed.
Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

He in the first flowre of my freshest age,
Betrothed me vnto the onely heire
Of a most mighty king, most rich and sage;
Was neuer prince so faithfull and so faire;
Was neuer prince so meeke and debonaire.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 2.

In which regards, she both delighted me, and also yeelded no small testimony of rare debonarity that nature had endured her withall.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 439.

Gra. I have no poulterer's nose, but your apparel acts about you most debonairly.
Ford. Love's Sacrifice, Act ii. sc. 1.

'Tis but natural for this most debonair and generous dealing to requite one another with good words at least, or with some demonstrations of esteem.
Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 33.

There is not the least of the divine favours, which, if we consider the condescensive goodness, the clear intention, the undeserved frankness, the cheerful debonairity expressed therein, hath not dimensions larger than our comprehension, colours too fair, and lineaments too comely for our weak sight thoroughly to discern.—Id. vol. i. Ser. 8.

For to that seminary of fashions vain,
The rich and noble from all parts repair,
Where grown enamour'd to the gaudy train,
And courteous haviour gent and debonair,
They cast to imitate such semblaunce fair.
West. On the Abuse of Travelling.

I believe so, said I.—Then I'll go to the duke, by heaven! with all the gaiety and debonairness in the world.
Sterne. Sentimental Journey.

DE'BREYD. See BRAID.

And the unclene spirit debrayinge him and cryinge with a gret voys wente out fro him.—Wiclif. Mark, c. i.

DEBT, n. } Fr. Debt; It. Debito; Lat. Debitum, past part. of debere. (See TO OWE.) Vossius says, Debeo, is from de, and habeo; quasi de alio habeo. In like manner from præ, and habeo, is prohibeo, by contraction prebeo.
DE'BTED, adj.
DE'BTLESS.
DE'BTOR.
DE'BIT, v.

A debt,—any thing had or held of or from another, his property or right, his due: that which is owed to him; which ought at some time to be delivered or paid to him.

To debit, in accounts,—to put or write down as a debt.

That Roberd, ne none of his, salle ask Henry the kyng
This dette on non wise, peny no ferthing.
R. Brunne, p. 99.

Neode hath no lawe, ne nevere shal falle in dette.
Piers Ploughman, p. 392.

And the Lord hadde mercy on that servant, and suffride him go, and forgat to him the dette.—Wiclif. Matth. c. 18.

Britheren I nyle that ghe unknowe that ofte I purposide to come to ghou, and I am lett to this tyme that I have sum fruyt in ghou as in othere folkis to Grekis and to barbarys to wise men and to unwise men I am dettour.
Wiclif. Rom. c. 1.

This worthy man ful wel his wit besette;
There wist no wight that he was in dette,
So stedfastly didde he his governance
With his bargeines, and with his cherisaunce.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 282.

Of which ther was a dosein in that hous,
Worthy to ben stewardes of rent and lond
Of any lord that is in Engelond,
To maken him live by his propre good,
In honour dettelees. Id. The Prologue, v. 364.

Tell me alway, er that I fro thee go,
If any detour hath in min absence
Ypaide thee, lest thurgh thy negligence
I might him axe a thing that he hath paid.
Chaucer. The Shipmannes Tale, v. 13,327.

So now to be vnder the lawe, is not to be able to fulfill the law, but to be detter to it, and not able to pay that, which the law requireth.—Tyndall. Works, p. 47.

The walles are built, the time is come,
The priests their money craue;
Laomedon forswears the debt
And naughty language gaue.
Warner. Albion's England, b. i. c. 4.

——— Here's the note
How much your chaine weighs to the vtmost charect;
The fineuesse of the gold, and chargefull fashion
Which doth amount to three odde duckets more
Then I stand debted to this gentleman.
Shakespeare. Comedy of Errors, Act iv. sc. 1.

Faire damzell, that with ruth (as I perceiue)
Of my mishaps, art mou'd to wish me better,
For such your kind regard, I can but rest your detter.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 5.

The duty of praise and thanksgiving considered absolutely in itself is, I say, the debt, and law of our nature.
Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 1.

Debtors thus, with like design,
When they never mean to pay,
That they may the law decline,
To some friend make all away.
Waller. Sacharissa & Amoret.

At the expiration of sixty days, the debt was discharged by the loss of liberty or life; the insolvent debtor was either put to death, or sold in foreign slavery beyond the Tiber. but if several creditors were alike obstinate and unrelenting, they might legally dismember his body, and satiate their revenge by this horrid partition.—Gibbon. Rom. Emp. c. 44.

So that since the allegory of books has been employed by the best authorities, we may consider the provisions of heaven as an universal bank, wherein accounts are regularly kept, and every man debited or credited for the least farthing he takes out or brings in.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. c. 28.

[The English, in France, may be permitted,] to be their brokers and factors, and to be employed in casting up their debits and credits, while the master republick cultivates the arts of empire, prescribes the forms of peace to nations, and dictates laws to a subjected world.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 4.

DEBU'RSE, v. Now written Disburse, (qv.) and Burse.
To pay out of the purse or burse, to expend.

But if so chance thou get nought of the man,
The widow may for all thy charge deburse.
Wyatt. How to use the Court.

Make the estimation and accompte of the expences that were made in that same army, as well by the cytie generally as by the capytaynes and souldyars in particulere, to witt, of the charges, whyche the cytie had deboursed for that preparation.—Nicoll. Thucydides, fol. 157.

Yet we do wish recompence to be made to such as have deboursed sums of money to these unjust possessors, so that the same had not been given of late, in prejudice of the church, or no collusion used.
Spottiswood. Church of Scotland, an. 1560.

A certain sum was also promised to be paid to the Earl of Ormond, in consideration of what he had deboursed for the army.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 193.

DE'CACHORD, n. } Gr. Δεκα, ten, and
DE'CACHORD, adj. } χορδη, intestinum; a chord or string.
See the first example.

It signifies decachord, or instrument of ten strings.
Hammond. Annot. on Psalm 33.

And so all the antient interpreters uniformly render it: the lxxii. εν ψαλτηριω δεκαχορδω, on a decachord psaltery.
Id. Ib.

DE'CADE. Gr. Δεκα, ten; Lat. Decas; Fr. Décade; It. Decade, from Δεχ-εσθαι, capere: quia comprehendat ac capiat omnia numerorum genera. (See Tooke, ii. 205.) And see TEN.

Of their cruelties mention is made in the booke of decades, of a frier, who taking vpon him to persuade the people to subiection, was by them taken, and his skin cruelly pulled ouer his eares, and his flesh eaten.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 517.

Liuie in the seuenth of his first decade, speaketh of an huge person which made a challenge as he stood at the end of the Anien bridge, against any Romane that would come out and fight with him, whose stature was not much inferiour to that of Goliah.—Holinshed. Britaine, b. i. c. 5.

So small their number, that if wars were ceas'd,
And Greece triumphant held a general feast,
All rank'd by tens, whole decads when they dine
Must want a Trojan slave to pour the wine.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.

The first five hundred, who had shewn the greatest marks of cowardice, he divided into fifty parts, and put one in each decad to death, to whose lot it might happen to fall; thus reviving an ancient custom of military punishment which had been long disused.—Langhorne. Plutarch. Lives.

DE'CADENCE. } Lat. De, and cadens, past
DE'CADENCY. } part. of cadere, to fall.
A falling into disuse, into ruin, decay, (qv.)

But it is now thought even by the English themselves that the race of their poets is extinct: every day produces some pathetic exclamation upon the decadence of taste and genius.—Goldsmith. Citizen of the World, Let. 39.

That morning we arrived at Burgos, the ancient capital of the kingdom of Castille, but long since abandoned by its princes to obscurity and decadency.
Swinburne. Spain, Let. 44.

DE'CALOGUE. } Fr. Décalogue; It. and DECA'LOGIST. } Sp. Decalogo; Lat. Decalogus; Gr. Δεκαλογος; from δεκα, ten, and λογ-os, sermo; because it contains—
The Ten Discourses or Commandments of God, (Minshew.)

Whatsoeuer one findeth of another man's, he should restore it agayne to him that lost it: and many other such like precepts, whereby we learne to liue well and Godly, and especially, that decalogo which is contayned in the ii. tables of stone.—Barnes. An Epitome of his Works, p. 368.

Among the ten Commandments in the decalogue, that which enjoins obedience from children to parents, hath only a benediction (of longevity) added to it.
Howell, b. i. s. 6. Let. 24.

In which notes he made an early discovery of his civil, historical, ecclesiastical, ritual, and Oriental learning, together with the Saxon, French, Italian, Spanish, and all Eastern languages; through which he miraculously travelled, without any guide, except Mr. Dod, the decalogist
Account of J. Gregory. Preface to his Posthuma, 1650.

The grossest kind of slander is that which in the decalogue is called bearing false testimony against our neighbour; that is, flatly charging him with facts the which he never committed, and is no-wise guilty of.—Barrow, vol. I. Ser. 17.

DECA'MERON. Fr. and Sp. Décaméron; It. Decameron; Gr. Δεκαμερον; from δεκα, ten, and μερος, part; because divided into ten parts.

Cle. When were you there?
Dan. Last night; and such a decameron of sport fallen out, Boccace never thought of the like.
B. Jonson. The Silent Woman, Act I. sc. 3.

DECA'MP, v. Opposed to Camp, or Encamp, (qv.) A.S. Campian; Fr. Camper, to pitch a camp.
To take down or remove a camp; and, generally, to quit or leave any place; to move off.

Letters from Lisbon advise, that the army of the king of Portugal was at Elvas on the 22d of the last month, and was to decamp on the 24th, in order to march upon the enemy, who lay at Badajoz.—Tatler, No. 11.

After such a stain upon the convent, it was not to be supposed it could subsist any longer; the fathers were ordered to decamp, and the house was once again converted into a tavern.—Goldsmith, Ess. 5.

If a murderer touch a church wall (and many walls are church walls in this city) [Naples] before he is seized by the officers, Holy Church will not suffer him to be hanged, and if one man stabs another in the sight of ten witnesses, they all decamp, and leave the coast clear to the assassin.
Priestley. On History, Lect. 47.

DECA'NAL. Pertaining to a dean, (Lat. Decanus,) or deanery. See DEAN.

The chief mourner in a chair at the head; the two attendants at the feet; the pall-bearers and executors in the seats on the decanal side; the other noblemen and gentlemen on the cantorial side.
Malone. Life of Sir J. Reynolds.

DECA'NT, v. } Serenius says, "Ex, de, and DECA'NTER. } Suio. Goth. Kanna, cantharus," as if poured out of a can; but to cant, (see CANTON,) among mechanics, is to raise on the edge or corner.
To decant, is—to pour, draw off or drain from a vessel, by tilting, lifting or raising one end of it: by general usage, from one bottle to another of a different description—called a decanter.

Let it stand there some three weeks or a month, till by fermentation it have both purged itself upwards, and by sediment downwards. Then decant from it the clear juyce.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 454.

But these azure-coloured liquors should be freed from the subsiding matter, which the salts of tartar or urine precipitate out of them, rather by being decanted, than by filtration.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 745.

To taste the tasted, and at each return
Less tasteful! O'er our palates to decant
Another vintage. Young. The Complaint, Night 3.

DECAPITATE. } "Fr. Décapiter: to de-
DECAPITA'TION. } capitate, to behead," (Cotgrave.) Lat. Caput; Gr. Κεφαλη.
To take off or away, to cut off, the head, or top. See CAPITAL.

Hedge-row ashes may the oftener be decapitated, and show their heads again sooner than other trees so used.
Evelyn, l. 7. s. 2.

It is better to lose life by decapitation, than to desert a prince, and criminally seek to gain his dominion.
Sir W. Jones. Suhridbheda, or Breach of Friendship.

DE'CARD. See DISCARD.

DECA'RDINALIZE. To remove from the rank, to deprive of the rank, of cardinal, (qv.)

The matter was taken up by the king himself, and the cardinal clapt up in a bastile, where the king saith he shall abide to ripen; for he is but young, and they speak of a bull that is to come from Rome to decardinalize him.
Howell, b. i. s. 2. Let. 19.

DECARNA'TION. The putting off, stripping off, or, as the author says, devesture of carnality, (qv.) or fleshliness, fleshly lusts.

For God's incarnation inableth man for his own decarnation, as I may say, and devesture of carnality.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, Treat. 2. s. 1.

DECA'STICH. Gr. Δεκα, ten, and στιχος, which, Vossius says,—ordinem ac versum notat.
A poem of ten lines or verses.

I suddenly fell upon the ensuing decastich, which if your lordship please, may have room among the rest.
Howell, b. i. s. 6. Let. 31.

DECA'Y, v. } Fr. Décheoir; Sp. Decaer;
DECA'Y, n. } It. Decadere; Lat. Decad-ere,
DECA'YEDNESS. } (de and cadere,) to fall. See
DECA'YER. } DECADENCE.
DECA'YING, n. } To fall from, to fall away, to decrease, to diminish, to lessen; to wane, to waste, to wither.

The wall and all the citie within
Stante in ruine, and in decaye.
The felde is where was the palais.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

And now though on the sunne I drive,
Whose fervent flame all things decaies,
His beames in brightnesse may not striue,
With light of your sweete golden rayes.
Surrey. The Constant Lover lamenteth.

Wyked people brynge a cytye in decaye, but wise men sette it vp agayne.—Bible, 1551. Proverbs, c. 29

O who would e'er have thought, that time could have decay'd
Those trees whose bodies seem'd by their so massy weight
To press the solid earth, and with their wond'rous height
To clime into the clouds.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 23.

His falling temples have you rear'd
The withered garlands tane away
His altars kept from the decay,
That envie wish'd, and nature fear'd.
B. Jonson. Under-woods. An Elegie.

Many other members of both houses, some upon their lowness and decayedness of their fortunes, others to get name and reputation to be in the number of reformers, (amongst whom they doubted not all places of honour, or offices of profit, would be bestow'd,) most upon the confidence, that all would be ended without a blow, by the king's want of power to gather strength, desir'd and obtain'd command of horse or foot.—Clarendon. Civil War, vol. I. p. 703.

Poverty in wedlock, is a great decayer of love and contentation; and riches can find many wales to divert an inconvenience; but the mind of man is all.—Feltham, pt. I. Res. 65.

Let others of the world's decaying tell,
I envy not those of the golden age,
That did their careless thoughts for nought engage,
But cloy'd with all delights, liu'd long and well.
Stirling. Aurora, s. 98.

I give the sign, and struggle to be free:
Swift row my mates, and shoot along the sea;
New chains they add, and rapid urge the way,
Till, dying off, the distant sounds decay.
Pope. Homer Odyssey, b. xii.

Old age is likewise a great decayer of your idol.
Spectator, No. 13.

Methinks e'en now I view some free design,
Where breathing Nature lives in every line:
Chaste and subdued the modest lights decay,
Steal into shades and mildly melt away.
Collins. An Epistle to Sir Thomas Hanmer.

Throughout the whole vegetable, sensible, and rational world, whatever makes progress towards maturity, as soon as it has passed that point, begins to verge towards decay.
Blair, vol. I. Ser. 12.

DECE'ASE, v. } Lat. Deced-ere, decessum,
DECE'ASE, n. } to go away, (de, and cedere, to go.) It. Decedere; Fr. Décéder, to depart, (sc.) from life. Fr. Décez, a departure from life.
To go away, to depart from, (sub.) life; and thus, to die.

& if that Henry die, or Steuen mak his decese,
Henry heyr we scie sallo haf the lond in pes.
R. Brunne, p. 126.

Of your charytye pray for the sowle of James Stanley, sometymes Bysshop of Ely and Wardeyn of Manchester, who deceased thys transytory wourld the xxii of March yn the yere owre Lord God MDXV.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon. In St. John's Chapel.

But he must proue vs, that hys forswearyng of our Saulour, yet shoulde not haue letted him from saluacion, although he hadde furthwith vpō that dede deceased without repentaunce, or any remembraunce after that sinne.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 603.

Moreouer, now thy freend deceassyd lieth with corpe on ground,
Alas vnware thou art, and al thy fleete he doth confound.
Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. vi.

For they vse to marrie their sister by the father's side onely, and also the wife of their father after his decease.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. I. p. 55.

O all ye blest ghosts of deceased loves,
That now lie sainted in the Eclesian groves,
Mediate for mercy for me.—F. Beaumont. An Elegy.

And I, the whilst you mourne for his decease,
Will with my mourning plaints your plaint increase.
Spenser. The Ruine of Time, s. 34.

And here may I be allowed to mention one matter, though of no great account, yet shewing a privilege of the Archbishops of Canterbury with relation to the Bishops of his province deceasing; which was, that upon the death of every such Bishop, his best ring, save one, and all his seals became due to the Archbishop.—Strype. Life of Grindal.

I have not yet been in a place called Westminster at last, but soon intend to visit it. There, I am told, I shall see justice done to deceased merit; none, I am told, are permitted to be buried there, but such as have adorned as well as improved mankind.
Goldsmith. Citizen of the World, Let. 12.

The Romans had [the custom] to deify and adore their emperors, most of them after their decease, and some of them during their lives, even though they were the vilest of mankind.—Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

DECE'IVE, v. } Fr. Décevoir; Lat. De-
DECE'IVABLE. } cipere, deceptum, "to take DECE'IVABLENESS. } away from, (De, and capere, DECE'IVER. } to take.) "Decipere is so
DECE'IVING, n. } called, because fraudulent
DECE'IVANCE. } men are accustomed craftily
DECE'IT. } to take (capere) from a sum
DECE'ITFUL. } or heap, and this is pro-
DECE'ITFULLY. } perly decipere," (Vossius.)
DECE'ITFULNESS. } To take away from, (sc.)
DECE'PTIBLE. } by fraud or guile; to de-
DECEPTIBI'LITY. } fraud, to beguile, to delude,
DECE'PTION. } to mislead; to lead into DECE'PTIOUS. } error.
DECE'PTIVE. }

Than said Kyng Philip tille alle the of France,
Of gile this is a trip of Richard deceyuance.
R. Brunne, p. 156.

The folk out of France to Normundie were comen,
To R. deceyuance his londes haf thei nomen.—Id. p. 195.

Whan this thing was grant, Henry dred deceite,
He wild, that his cōnant [covenant] were holden stable & streite. Id. p. 159.

That fyrst man deceyede, thourgh frut and fulee by-heste.
Piers Ploughman, p. 310.

Were the bisshop blessid.
Hus sele sholde nogt be sent in deceel of the puple.
Id. p. 4.

And Jhesus answerde and biganne to seye to hem loke ye that no man deceyve you. For many schulen come in my name seiyng, that I am & thei schulen deceyve manye.
Wiclif. Mark, c. 13.

For many disceyuers wenten out into the world which knowechen not that Jesu Crist han come in fleische this is a disceyuer and Antecrist.—Id. 2 Jon, c. 1.

And he biheeld the disseyt of hem: and seide to hem, what tempten ye me? Schewe ye to me a peny.
Id. Luk, c. 20.

For all this worlde gouerne we
And can the folke so well deceive
That none our gile can perceiue.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

Shee cruell Fortune casteth adoun kinges, that whylome weren ydrad, and shee deceivable enhaunceth vp the humble cheere of him that is discomfited: ne shee neither hereth ne recketh of wretched wepings.—Id. Boecius, b. ii.

And for they, yf thou seemest fayre, thy nature ne maketh nat that, but the deceivaunce of the feblenesse of the eyen that looken.—Id. Ib.

The book saith, that som men (han taught hir deceivour, for they han to muche dreded) to be deceived.
Id. Tale of Melibeus.

Right as a mirrour openly
Sheweth all thing that stondeth therby
As well the colour, as the figure
Withouten any coverture,
Right so the cristall stone shining
Withouten any discerning.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

Deceite, weping, spinning, God hath yeven
To women kindly, while that they may liven.
Id. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 5983.

Minge not your loue with false decepeion.
Id. The Complaint of Cresside.

For thy my sonne, as I the meue,
It sette the well to take hede,
That thou eschewe of thy manhede
Hypocrisie, and his semblant,
That thou ne nought be deceivant.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Thus was the lawe deceivable,
So ferforth that the trouth foude
Rescous none. Id. Ib. b. ii.

This Achelous was a geaunt,
A subtill man, a deceivaunt,
Whiche through magike and sorcerie
Couthe all the worlde of trecherie. Id. Ib. b. iv.

——— Joab by deceipt alough
Abner, for drede he shulde bee
With King Dauid euche as was he. Id. Ib. b. iii.

Eve hym whose commyng is by the worckynge of Satan, wt all lyuinge power, sygnes and wonders: and in all deceauablenesse of vnrightoousnes amonge thē that peryah, because they receaued not the lone of the truthe, that they might haue bene saued.—Bible, 1551. Thessalonians, c. 2.

He is the moste crafty deceyuer and perellous hypocrite sewed and blown to gather of all lyes, falshed, and gyle.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 8.

As for men, they are but vayne, men are dysceitful: vpō the weyghtes they are altogether lyghter than vanyte it selfe.—Bible, 1551. Psalme 62.

Why hast thou then not onely publyshed and declared vs as traytoures but also craftely and deceitfully imagined, purposed and conspired the vtter destruccion and confusion of our persones.—Hall. Hen. IV. an. 3.

Who so hourdeth vp ryches with the dysceitfulnes of his tōg, he is a foole, and lyke vnto them yt seke their owne death.—Bible, 1551. Proverbes, c. 21.

Syr, sayd the constable, he shewed me soo fayre semblaunt that I durst not refuse it. Constable, sayd the Duke of Borgoyne, in fayre semblauntes are grete decepcyons: I reputed you more subtil than I take you now.
Berners, Froissart. Cronicle, vol. ii. c. 68.

To this adde that precept of Aristotle, that wine be forbore in all consumptions; for that the spirits of the wine do prey upon the roscide juyce of the body, and intercommon with the spirits of the body, and so deceive and rob them of their nourishment.—Bacon. Naturall Hist. § 55.

——— O ever faining trust,
In mortal strength! and oh what not in man
Deceivable and vain!—Milton. Samson Agonistes.

And certainly this Devil of light is now gone abroad into the world with all that power and deceivableness he can, and we cannot but with sad and bleeding hearts observe his too general prevalency and success.
Hopkins. Practical Expos. of the Lord's Prayer.

Hence with thy brew'd enchantment, foul deceiver:
Hast thou betray'd my credulous innocence,
With visor'd falshood and base forgery?
And would'st thou seek again to trap me here
With liquorish baits fit to ensnare a brute?
Milton. Comus.

The deceiving of the senses, may be set down as one of the delights of the senses.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. iv. c. 2.

But the hypocrisie which I mean, is, first, that which is opposite to (and incompatible with) sincerity: first the deceiving of men, with a pretence of piety putting off the most unchristian sins, having no more of Christianity than will serve to mischief others, i.e. only the pretence of it to disguise the poison of a bitter heart.
Hammond. Works vol. i. p. 218.

What man so wise, what earthly wit so ware,
As to descry the crafty cunning traine,
By which Deceit doth mask in vizour faire,
And cast her colours dyed deepe in graine,
To seem like Truth, whose shape she well can faine,
And fitting guestures to her purpose frame,
The guiltless man with guile to entertaine.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 7.

Such when as Archimago them did view,
He weened well to worke some vncouth wile;
Eftsoones untwisting his deceitfull clew,
He gan to weaue a web of wicked guile.—Id. Fa. b. ii. c. 1.

So do we find in this man's practice, who first inveigled the merchants, drawing them to Diep to be inthralled; then dealt deceitfully with the king to colour his offences, his design being against Rochel and the religion.
State Trials. Duke of Buckingham, an. 1626.

There is no greater argument of the deceitfulness of our hearts than this, that no man can know it all; it seems as in the very number of its cosenage.
Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 7. pt. ii.

Sith yet there is a credence in my heart,
An esperance so obstinately strong,
That doth invert that test of eyes and ears;
As if those organs had deceptious functions.
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cres. Act v. sc. 2.

My Muses, here your sacred raptures end,
The verse was what I owe'd my suffering friend.
This while I sung, my sorrows I deceiv'd,
And bending osiers into baskets weav'd.
Dryden. Virgil, Past. 10.

That, says he, any man induced by some specious reason should be of opinion, that it is the part of a learned physician rather to accommodate his medicines as occasions suggest, than to insist upon some certain prescripts, is a deceivable assertion, and which attributes too little to experience, too much to judgment.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 244.

Surely, if these things prove true, (namely, whereof he was accused,) let me be registered to my perpetual infamy, not only for a most notorious deceiver, but such an hypocrite as never trod upon the earth before.
Strype. Life of Whitgift, an. 1596.

A modest blush he wears, not form'd by art,
Free from deceipt his face, and full as free his heart.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 11.

But suffer us, whose younger minds ne'er felt
Fortune's deceits, to court her as she's fair:
Were she a common mistress, kind to all,
Her worth would cease, and half the world grow idle.
Otway. The Orphan, Act ii. sc. 1.

They take themselves for injur'd when we dare
Make them think better of us than we are:
And if we hide our frailties from their sights,
Call us deceitful jilts and hypocrites.
Rochester. Artenissa to Chloe.

There was few or none of the philosophers, who did not signify his dislike or contempt of the vulgar opinions and practices concerning religion: what Cicero saith of one part, the wiser part did judge of all: "the whole business was deceitfully forged either for gain, or out of superstition, or from mistake."—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 14.

But sin, by that deceitfulness which the Apostle speaks of in the text, hides its deformed appearances from the eyes of foolish men; and sets before them nothing but pleasures and profits, joy and vanity, present security, and very distant, very uncertain, very remote fears.
South, vol. ix. Ser. 11.

But as for popular errours, they are more nearly founded upon an erroneous inclination of the people, as being the most deceptible part of mankind, and ready with open arms to receive the encroachments of errour.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 3.

Now though our coming judgments do in part undeceive us, and rectifie the grosser errors which our unwary sensitive hath engaged us in, yet others are so flesht in us, that they maintain their interest upon the deceptibility of our decayed natures, and are cherish'd there as the legitimate issues of our reasonable faculties.
Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 8.

But then, as the shadow still attends the body, so there is no one thing, relating either to the actions or enjoyments of man, in which he is not liable to deception.
South, vol. vi. Ser. 1.

But what account shall a man give of himself for living perpetually in disguise; for deceiving all about him, and using the speech, which God gave him for better purposes, to impose on the weakness and folly of mankind
Sherlock, Dis. 26.

In what Christian country is charity the ruling principle with every man in the common intercourse of civil life, insomuch that the arts of circumvention and deceit are never practised by the Christian against his brother, nor the appetites of the individual suffered to break loose against the public weal, or against his neighbour's peace!
Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 40

——— But when I think
What rocks in secret lie—what tempests rise
On love's deceitful voyage, my timid soul
Recoils affrighted, and with horrour shuns
Th' inviting calm.—Smollet. The Regicide, Act iii. s. 6.

But we cannot even suppose them fallacious, without violating our nature: nor, if we acknowledge a God, without impiety; for in this supposition it is implied, that we suppose the Deity a deceiver.—Beattie. On Truth, pt. i. c. 2. s. 1.

Let such sort of writers go on, at their dearest peril, and sport themselves in their own deceivings: let them, at their peril, make a jest at the Bible, and treat the sacred articles of Christianity with scoff and merriment.
Watts. Improvement of the Mind, pt. i. c. 18.

I consent to put into the scale of regal prerogative, all the deceptive verbal criticism from words no longer clearly understood, all the volumes of precedents of irregular and condemned practices.
Musgrave. Case of Impositions. Collection of Tracts.

It is to be feared, that the sciences are above the comprehension of children, and that this mode of education, to the exclusion of the classical, is ultimately deceptive.
V. Knox. Remarks on Grammar Schools.

DECE'MVIRI. DECE'MVIRAL. DECE'MVIRATE. DECE'MVIRSHIP. Lat. Decem, ten, and viri, men. Ten men appointed (see the quotations from Holland's Livy) to draw up a new code of laws for the Roman government.

By this time were the embassadours returned with the Athenian lawes. And therefore the tribunes were so much the more earnest and urgent, that once at length they would set on, to describe and put down some lawes. And agreed it was, that there should be created decemvirs, above all appeale: and for the yeare being, there should no other officers and magistrates be in place.—Holland. Livie, p. 109.

But before they went out of the cittie, the decemvirall lawes, (which now are knowne by the name of the twelve Tables) they set up openly to be seene, engraven in brasse.
Id. Ib. p. 127.

This man [Publius] having been in times past of great worth, both at home, and also in warre: the decemvirship, and the conditions of his colleagues together, had so greatly changed, that he chose rather to bee like Appius than himself.—Id. Ib. p. 115.

They [says Cicero, speaking of the twelve Tables] amuse the mind by the remembrance of old words and the portrait of ancient manners; they inculcate the soundest principles of government and morals; and I am not afraid to affirm, that the brief composition of the decemvirs surpasses in genuine value the Libraries of Grecian philosophy.
Gibbon. The Roman Empire, c. 44.

This I promise, that, if such a decemvirate should ever attempt to restore our constitutional liberty by constitutional means, I would exert in their cause, such talents as I have, and even if I were oppressed with sickness, and torn with pain, would start from my couch, and exclaim with Tacitus, "If you mean to act worthily, O Romans! I am well."—Sir W. Jones. Letter to Lord Althorp.

DE'CENT. DE'CENCE. DE'CENCY. DE'CENTLY. DE'CENTNESS. Fr. Décence; It. Decenza; Sp. Decencia; Lat. Decentia, from the verb Decere. "Decere, quasi aptum esse consentaneumque tempori, et personæ, quod tum in factis sæpissime, tum in dictis valet, in vultu denique et gestu, et incessu; contraque item dedicere," (Cic. Orat. Ernest. i. 611.) Vossius thinks from the Gr. Δεει, contr. δει, c inserto.

Fitness, becomingness, appropriateness, suitableness, (&c.) to time, place, and circumstances.

And therefore Daniel lykeneth bothe Mahumete & the Pope vnto that horne which hath manis eyes, that is, to fayre decente semely shewe of vtwarde deuotion (as they saye) of laudable rites and God's holy seruice.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 7.

And all pastimes generally, which be joyned with labour used in open place, and on the day light, containing either some fitte exercise for warre, or some pleasant pastime for peace, be not onlie comlie and decent, but also verie necessarie for a courtlie jentleman.
Ascham. The Schole Master, pt. i.

Of sortes, and sees thou must note
the manner and the guyse,
A decensie for stirring youth,
for elder folke likewise.
Drant. Horace. The Arte of Poetry.

Shall they be carried forth without any decentness, as we be wont to carry forth dead horses or dead swine.
Hunting of Purgatorye, (1561.) p. 87

Of which there is not one, I dare auow
(And now I should not lye) but will deserue
For vertue, and true beautie of the soule,
For honestie, and decent carriage,
A right good husband —Shakes. Hen. VIII. Act iv. sc. 2.

That life, that Venus of all things, which we
Conceive or show, proportion'd decency.
Is not found scatt'red in thee here or there,
But like the soul is wholly every where.
Carteright. To the Memory of B. Jonson.

He spoke: the Heavens seem'd decently to bow,
With all their bright inhabitants; and now
The jocund spheres began again to play,
Again each spirit sung Halleluia.
Cowley. The Davideis, b. i.

[He pointed at] the lawfulnesse, decentnesse, and necessitie, of subordinate degrees and ranks of men and servants, as well in ye church as state.—Evelyn. Memoirs, Feb.6,1670.

As beauty of body, with an agreeable carriage, pleases the eye, and that pleasure consists in that we observe all the parts with a certain elegance are proportioned to each other; so does decency of behaviour which appears in our lives obtain the approbation of all with whom we converse, from the order, constancy, and moderation of our words and actions.
Spectator, No. 101.

Give no countenance to busie-bodies, and those who love to talk of other men's faults: or if you cannot decently reprove them because of their quality, then divert their discourse some other way: or if you cannot do that, by seeming not to mind it, you may sufficiently signifie that you do not like it.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 42.

The Eunomians seem to have been of opinion that it was not necessary for persons to be plunged all over in water, and that it was not decent for them to be stripped at the performance of this religious rite.
Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

It is for the most part in our skill in manners, and in the observances of time and place, and of decency in general, which is only to be learned in those schools to which Horace recommends us, that what is called Taste, by way of distinction, consists —Burke. Sublime and Beautiful, Introd.

Then thus Antinoüs, Eupithes' son:
Icarius' daughter! deign but to receive
Such gifts as we shall bring, for gifts demand
That grace, nor can be decently refus'd.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xviii.

DECE'NNIAL. DECE'NNER. DECE'NNARY. } Lat. Decennis, decennium; from decem, ten, and anni, years.
Continuing for ten years.

You know also, that the whole land was divided into hundreds, and those again into decennaries: in which decennaries all men, even children of twelve years of age, are bound to take the oath of allegiance.
Hobbs. A Dialogue on the Common Law.

In case of the default of appearance in a decenner, his nine pledges had one and thirty days to bring the delinquent forth to justice. If this failed, then the chief of those decenners, by the vote of that and the neighbour decennaries, was to purge himself both of the guilt of the fact, and of being parties to the flight of the delinquent.
Fielding. On the Causes of the Increase of Robbers, c. 5.

In all these laws, the principal aim visible was, to prevent idle persons wandering from place to place, which, as we have before seen, was one great point of the decennary constitution.—Id. Ib.

DECE'RN, v. DECE'RNERS. DECE'RNING, n. DECE'RNMENT. } Fr. Décerner; It. Decernere; Lat. Decernere; (de, and cern-ere;) from the Gr. Κριν-ειν, to separate, to distinguish, to decide; because he who judges, separates or distinguishes truth from falsehood; hence, Κριν-ειν, in a secondary or consequential sense, is used for judicare; and this latter signification, Vossius adds, we have in the compound, de-cern-ere, that is, judic-are, to judge. See Discern.

To distinguish, to discriminate: to decide, to determine, to adjudge.

Hitherto pertaineth the precept of clemencye and mercy for kinges, which is to do well to the good men, decerning the good and lerned from the euil and unlerned, & to moderate the punishements of the tractable & curable & to suppresse the obstinate incurable.—Joye. Exposycion of Daniel, c. 1.

So yt this church is knowen well ynough, & therefore may bee well vsed as a sure iudge, for to deserne betwene the true doctrine and the false, & the true preacher & false concerning the right fayth & the decerning of the true woord of God written or vnwritten, frō the countrefet woorde of man, & in the decerning of ye right vnderstanding of the Scripture of God, as farfurth as of necessite perteineth vnto saluacion.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 528.

We the premisses well considering by good and diligent deliberation, by the power, name, and authoritie to vs (as above is said) committed, pronounce, decerne, and declare the same King Richard, before this to haue beene, and to be vnprofitable, vnable, vnsufficient, and vnworthie to the rule and gouernance of the foresaid realms and lordships, and of all rights and other the appertenances to the same belonging —Holinshed. Rich. II. an 1399.

Nevertheless, sir, saving your gracious pleasure, it were very necessary both for the danger of the sentence, Quæ semper timenda est, and slander of the world, that by the said most reverend cardinals, your grace should have a commission to some men in these parties to decern (i. e. decree) the same one exception, and process now made by the French, were of no strength.—Strype. Mem. Hen. VIII. an. 1515.

And till those slight and vulgar decerners, have learn't that first principle of true wisdom, To judge nothing till they thoroughly understand it, and have weighed it in the balance of impartial reason, 'Tis to no purpose to spend ones breath upon them —Granvill. Lux Orientalis, Pref.

Or furthermore that he had by a yet more refined elective discretion or decernment, culled forth a thousand actions out of all the heaps, the million of millions of his whole life, as hoping to have found some one at least of this last choice selected thousand, which he might have stood upon.
Goodwin. Works, vol. iii. pt. i. p. 188.

DECE'RPT. DECE'RPTION. } Lat. Decerp-ere, cerptum, to pluck away; de, and carpere, to pluck or pull.
Plucked, pulled, torn, rent away.

O what mysery was the people then in! O howe this moste noble Ile of the worlde was decerpt and rent to pieces.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. i. c. 2.

And Tully saith, mannes soule, being decerpt or taken of the portion of diuinite called MENS, may be compared with none other thynge (if a man moughte lefully speke it) but with God himselfe.—Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 23.

Or, if our soule are but particles and decerptions of our parents, then I must be guilty of all the sins that ever were committed by my progenitors ever since Adam; and by this time, my soul would have been so deprav'd and debauch'd, that it would be now brutish, yea diabolical.
Glanvill. Pre-existence of Souls, c. 3.

DECE'SSION. DECE'SSOR. } Lat. Deced-ere, decessum, to go away from. See Decease.
A going, departure, or separation.
Decessor vulgo Predecessor, (Du Cange.)

The Apostles were actually dispersed by persecution, and this to be sure they look'd for, and therefore (so implying the necessity of a bishop to govern in their absence or decession any ways) they ordained St. James the first Bishop of Jerusalem.—Bp. Taylor. Episcopacy Asserted, p. 65.

Tertullian fiercely declaims against the decree of Pope Zephyrinus, because against the custom of his decessors he admitted adulterers to repentance, while at the same time he refused idolators and murderers —Id. Repentance, c. 9 s 3.

It was not without the influence of a divinity, that his [Vespasian's] decessor Augustus, about the time of Christ's nativity, refused to be called Lord.
Id. Great Exemplar, pt. i. s. 4.

DECHA'RM. To charm (qv.) is to act upon by charms (carmina) or incantations; and to decharm; Fr. Descharmer—
To free or deliver from the action or agency of charms or incantations; "to frustrate a charm, dissolve a spell," (Cotgrave.)

Notwithstanding the help of physick, he was suddenly cured by decharming the witchcraft.—Harvey

DECI'DE, *v. DECI'DABLE. DECI'DEDLY. DECI'DEMENT. DECI'DER. DECI'DING, n. DECI'DINGLY. DECI'SE. DECI'SION. DECI'SIVE. DECI'SIVELY. DECI'SIVENESS. } Fr. Décider; It. Decidere; Sp. Decidir; Lat. Decidere; compounded of de, and cædere, to cut off, i. e. scindere, controversiam abscindere, to cut off, to sever; to cut short, terminate, put an end to a dispute. And thus—
To determine, to adjudge; to bring to a determination, to an end, to a conclusion. Holland uses Decisions literally, (sc.) cuttings, pieces.

Upon iii. points stant Christ's peace oppressed,
First holy church in her selfe diuided,
Which ought of reason first to be redress'd,
But yet so high a cause is not decided.
Chaucer. Balade to K. Hen. IV.

And yet the cause is nought decided.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

And nowe haue he heard Sainct Austine, whom yf Tyndall wyl beleiue, all your questiō is decided.
Sir T. More. Works, p. 692.

For herin is the estate therof from Cristes ascēsion to the ende of the worlde vndre pleasaunt figures and elegant tropes decyded —Bale Image, Pref

And therefore sayth M. Calaine: the modestie of the people herein dothe appeare, that after they had committed the decisyng of the controuersies to the Apostles, and other doctours, they were also contente to subscribe to their decree.
Whitgift. Defence, p. 1. 7.

So if before suche decision a man had agaynst his own conscience, sworn to mayntayn and defend the other side, he hadde not fayled to offende God very sore.
Sir T. More. Works, p. 1340.

No man more profoundly discusseth or more finely deciseth the vse of ceremonies.—Udal. Preface to Matthew.

All folkes would resorte to her, as a iudge hable and also sufficiente to decise any matter of controuersie or amongattis that happened among them.—Id. To Queene Katherine.

In confidence whereof I once again
Defie thee to the trial of mortal fight,
By combat to decide whose God is God,
Thine or whom I with Israel's sons adore
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

So when we say, that all controversies of religion are decidable by the Scripture, it is manifest to all but cavillers, that we do, and must, except from this generality, those which are touching the Scripture itself
Chillingworth. Rel. of Prot. pt. i. c. 2

Zanch. Fie Signior, there be times, and terms of honor
To argue these things in, decidements able
To speak ye noble gentlemen, ways punctual
And to the life of credit,—ye are too rugged.
Beaum. & Fletch. Love's Pilgrimage, Act ii. sc. 1.

——— If thou be'st
As thou art spoken, great and virtuous,
The true decider of all injuries
Say, fight again.—Id. Two Noble Kinsmen, Act iii. s. 7.

But Herodotus who wrote his [Homer's] life hath cleared this point, delivering, that passing from Samos unto Athens, he went sick ashore upon the Island Jos, where he died, and was solemnly interred upon the sea side, and so decidingly concludeth, &c.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vii. c. 13.

And especially from rocks and stones along the sea continually, washed and dashed with waves, there be decisions pass of some parcels and smal fragments, the which do cleave unto other bodies.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 627.

Amongst thy shafts of soveraign light
Choose out that sure decideo dart
Which has the key of this close heart,
Knows all the corners of't, and can control
The self shut cabinet of an unsearcht soul.
Crashaw. To the Countess of Denbigh

This success was astonishing, being obtained by men of little experience in affairs of this nature, and upon that account despised by their enemies: yet it proved the decisive battle, the king's party after this time never making any considerable opposition.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 155

We wait impatiently for the coming in of the next Dyer's, who, you must know, is our authentick intelligence, our Aristotle in politicks. And 't is indeed but fit there should be some dernier resort, the absolute decider of all controversies —Spectator, No. 43.

There is no space for repentance in the interval between death and judgment, but the soul immediately after its departure, receives a decisive irrevocable doom, that is in part executed, and shall be publicly and entirely executed at the last day.—Bates. Ser. Prov. i. 32.

——— Desisting therefore, now,
From farther conflict, we will wage anew
This strife hereafter, till deciding heav'n
Appoint clear victʼry to thyself or me.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

I have therefore been decidedly of opinion, with our declaration at Whitehall, in the beginning of this war, that the vicinage of Europe had not only a right, but an indispensable duty, and an exigent interest, to denunciate this work before it had produced the danger we have so sorely felt, and which we shall long feel.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 1.

He seemed willing to have his reader infer, that, even though they had been masters of their subject, yet these other defects would have rendered them very unqualified deciders.—Warburton. Julian, Introd.

The town's decision they no more admit,
Themselves alone the arbiters of wit,
And scorn the jurisdiction of that court,
To which they owe their being and support.
Churchill. The Apology.

The guidance of instinct, indeed, as it is more decisively determinate, seems to bring up an offspring with less deviation from the purposes of nature than the superior faculty of reason.—V. Knox, Essay 141.

DECIDENCE. DECI'DUOUS. } Lat. De, and cadere, to fall down.
A falling down.

For men observing the decidence of their [deer] hornes, do fall upon the like conceit of this part, that it annually rotteth away, and successively reneweth again.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 9.

Which some anatomists therefore call deciduous parts, such as the placenta uterina, and the different membranes that involve the fœtus.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 733.

Their summits are split into sharp cones, pillars, pipes, and other odd shapes, branched and bare; but the interstices are filled up with forests of evergreen and deciduous trees and plants.—Swinburne. Spain, Let. 8.

DE'CIMATE, v.
DECIMA'TION.
DE'CIMATOR.
DE'CIMAL.

Fr. Décimer; Lat. Decimus, the tenth; from decem, ten.

To tythe; to take or select a tenth.

Sometimes the criminals were decimated by lot, as appears in Polybius, Tacitus, Plutarch, Appian, Dio, Julius Capitolinus, who also mentions a centesimation.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 2.

Elfred was sent for by the king then at London; but in his way met at Gunford by Earl Godwin, who with all seeming friendship entertain'd him, was in the night surpriz'd and made prisoner, most of his company put to various sorts of cruel death, decimated twice over.

Milton. History of England, b. vi.

Inprimis, the first means or course intended to increase your Majesty's revenues or profits withal, is of greatest consequence, and I call it a decimation, being so termed in Italy, where in some part it is in use, importing the tenth of all subjects' estates, to be paid as a yearly rent to their prince.—State Trials. The Earl of Bedford, &c. an. 1630.

Con. You forge these things prettily; but I have heard you are as poor as a decimated cavalier, and had not one foot of land in all the world.

Dryden. The Wild Gallant, Act ii. sc. 2.

And then in the last place, they are to tell their children also of the base and brutish cruelties practised by the blood-hounds in the plunders, sequestrations, decimations, and murders of their poor fellow-subjects.—South, vol. v. Ser. 1.

But God, who weighs an evil action by the malignity of its principle, and the unjustness of its design, and not by those exterior circumstances, which only clothe its appearance, but not at all constitute its nature, has as much vengeance in store for an oppressing justice (if that be not a contradiction in the terms,) as he has for the pillaging soldier, or the insolent decimator.—Id. vol. x. Ser. 6.

This division was not made, as is generally imagined, by King Alfred, though he might have introduced better regulations concerning it; it prevailed on the continent, wherever the northern nations had obtained a settlement; and it is a species of order extremely obvious to all who use the decimal notation.—Burke. Abridg. of Eng. History, b. ii. c. 7.

It is true that in human governments, the punishment of a few is sometimes accepted as a satisfaction for the offence of many, as in military punishments, when a regiment is decimated.—Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 9.

DECIPHER, v.
DECI'PHER, n.
DECI'PHERER.
DECI'PHERING, n.
DECI'PHERLESS.

Fr. Déchiffrer; Sp. Descifrar; It. Decifrare, (de, and cypher, qv.) which Menage says is from the Hebrew. To Cypher is to write in fictitious characters; characters unknown to, and concealed from others. Decipher,—

To make known or explain such fictitious characters; and, generally, to explain, to interpret; to delineate or describe.

He then should well decypher himselfe, and well declare thereby yt he would gladly catche holde of some small handell to kepe hys money fast, rather then help his frendes in their necessitie.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 330.

This letter was deciphered, and found hidden in the duke's house under the mats of an entry, in the way as the duke went to his bed chamber. the cypher itself was found in the tiles of the house.—State Trials, an. 1571. Duke of Norfolk.

As for the taking of the pacquet, I know nothing of it: the letter I never saw in cypher; Baker brought me a decypher, telling me, That forty was for me, and thirty for the Queen of Scots.—Id. Ib.

For the better deciphering of the Riuer of Plate, & commodities thereof, was called before vs, Richard Carter, which doeth well there.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 763.

For if good and fast fall cyphers were invented and practised, many of them would delude and forestall all the cunning of the decypherer, which yet are very apt and easy to be read or written.—Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. vi. c. 1.

The knowledge of cyphering, hath drawne on with it a knowledge relative unto it, which is the knowledge of decyphering, or of discreting cyphers, though a man were utterly ignorant of the alphabet of the cypher, and the capitulations of secrecy past between the parties.—Id. Ib.

It [assurance] is writ in a private character not to be read nor understood but by the conscience, to which the spirit of God has vouchsafed to decypher it.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 2.

I cannot but observe here, after this swift and contracted method of writing according to letters, that an universal character for entire words would be of universal use; and this I apprehend is to be taken from the names of decypherers, by making use of the numbers that express the proportions of auxiliary verbs, of pronouns, particles, &c. instead of the words whose proportions they denominate.

Sharpe. Origin, &c. of Languages, Notes.

And thou, O Astrology, Goddess divine,
Celestial decypheress, gently incline
Thine ears and thine aid to a lover of science,
That bids to all learning, but thine, a defiance.

Byrom. The Astrologer.

DECK, v.
DECK, n.
DE'CKING.

A.S. Thec-an; Ger. and Dut. Deck-en, operire, vestire, to cover, to clothe.

To cover, to array; and thus, to dress, to adorn, to embellish.

The deck of a ship, so called, because it covers and conceals the rest of the ship.

For he shall put vpon me the garment of health & couer me with the mantle of ryghteousness. He shall decke me like a brydegrome, and as a bryde that hath her apparel vpon her.—Bible, 1551. Esaye, c. 61.

We wretches loe, that last day of our life,
With bowes of feat the town, and temples deck

Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

He decked and vitailed dyuers shippes of warre and sent them to the north seas to defende his subiects.

Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 25.

They goe gorgiously arayed of our Lordes goods, vnto whome they geeue none honour, and of these goods commeth the harlottes decking that thou seest daily, the game players disguising, and kynges apparell.

Barnes. Workes, p. 251.

For they couered the former parte, and the mooste parte of their decked wt copper, to the ende that the grapses shulde not fasten in them, but rather shulde slippe and slyde aboue the copper.—Nicoll. Thucydides, fol. 191.

Then in another place the fruits that be
In gallant clusters decking each good tree
Invite your hand to crop them from the stem,
And liking one, taste every sort of them.

Browne. Britannia's Pastoral, b. ii. s. 3.

That the whole world was but one great animal, and might be resembled to a vast ship, wherein there are many inferiour subordinate governours, under one supreme, the oldest and wisest; as also expert mariners of several sorts, some to attend upon the deck, and others to climb the masts and order the sails.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 270.

I and my father, have purposed a further ornament unto thee, in the more plentiful effusion of our Spirit upon thee: which shall be to thy former deckings, instead of pure gold curiously wrought with specks of silver.

Bp. Hall. Solomon's Song of Songs, c. 1.

Foul is the steed without a flowing mane,
And birds, without their feathers and their train.
Wool decks the sheep.—Dryden. Ovid. Met. b. xiii.

The crew instantly left off pumping, and being enraged at the hardships they had suffered, and the numbers they had lost, (there being at that time no less than thirty dead bodies lying on the deck,) they all with one voice cried, On shore, On shore.—Anson. Voyage round the World, b. i. c. 2.

Strike, louder strike th' ennobling strings
To those whose merchants' sons were kings,
To him, who, deck'd with pearly pride,
In Adria weds his green-hair'd bride.

Collins. Ode to Liberty.

The mode of fishing, for which this tonnage bounty in the white herring fishery has been given by busses or decked vessels from twenty to eighty tons burden,) seems not so well adapted to the situation of Scotland as to that of Holland.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. xiv. c. 5.

DECLAIM.
DECLA'IMER.
DECLA'IMING, n.
DECLAMA'TION.
DE'CLAMATOR.
DECLA'MATORY.

Fr. Déclamer; Sp. Declamar; It. Declamare; Lat. Declamare, (de, and clamare,) to call or cry out aloud. See CLAIM.

To speak aloud, earnestly, vehemently; to plead loudly, earnestly.

As when one Vibius Curius did speake much of his yeares, and made himself to be much younger then he was, quoth Tullie) why then maister Vibius, as far as I can gather by my reckening, when you and I declamed together last, you were not then borne by all likelihood, if that be true which you say.—Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 158.

Parte of their names I thinke to specifie
From olde Quintilian with his declamations.
Theocritus with his Bucolicall relations.

Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

Also they, which only teache rhetorike ought to be named rhetoricens, declamatours, artificiall speakers (named in Greeke Logodedali, or any other name) not orators.

Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. i. c. 13.

They should likewise use to declaim in Latin, and English, as the Romans did in Greek and Latin, and all this travail be rather led on by familiarity, encouragement, and emulation, than driven by severity, punishment, and terrour.

Cawley. Ess. The School.

I shall be so troublesome to this declaimer for once, as to shew him what he might have better said in their praise.

Milton. An Apology for Smectymnuus.

The king to stay these declaimings which he knew to be made against the Earl of Lenox, called the ministers to Edinburgh, and shewed them what travel he had taken to convert his cousen.

Spotswood. Church of Scotland, b. vi. an. 1580.

But these last twenty years most of the parliament men seek to improve the reputation of their wisdomes by these declamations, and no honest patriot dare oppose them, lest he incur the reputation of a fool, or a coward in his countries cause.—Cabbala. To his Sacred Majesty, ab ignoto.

Nor doth this come to passe as I suppose, because (as a certaine declamor against sciences objects against physicians) they have ever conversant before their eyes such lothesome and sad spectacles, that they must needs retire their minds from these objects, to some other contemplations.—Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. iv. c. 2.

But oh, what stock of patience wants the fool,
Who wastes his time and breath in teaching school!
To hear the speeches of declaiming boys,
Deposing tyrants with eternal noise.

Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 7.

Whosoever strives to beget or foment in his heart such persuasions concerning God, makes himself the Devil's orator, and declaims his cause; whose proper characteristick badge it is, to be the great accuser or calumniator, for that is the force of the Greek word διάβολος.

South, vol. viii. Ser. 3.

It [affectation] might be borne even here, but it often ascends the pulpit itself; and the declaimer, in that sacred place, is frequently so impertinently witty, speaks of the last day itself with so many quaint phrases, that there is no man who understands raillery, but must resolve to sin no more.—Spectator, No. 38.

I confess their verses are to me the coldest I ever read: neither indeed is it possible for them, in the way they take, so to express their passion, as that the effects of it should appear in the concernment of an audience; their speeches being so many declamations, which tire us with the length.

Dryden. Ess. on Dramatick Poesie.

Who could, I say, hear this generous declamator, without being fir'd at his noble zeal, and becoming his profess'd follower, if he might be admitted.—Tatler, No. 56.

——— He that takes
Deep in his soft credulity the stamp
Design'd by loud declaimers on the part
Of liberty, themselves the slaves of lust,
Incurs derision for his easy faith,
And lack of knowledge, and with cause enough.

Cowper. Task, b. v.

Though so many good things have been said, they have generally had the fate to be considered either as the overflowings of disgust from sated appetites, which could no longer relish the pleasures of life; or, as the declamatory opinions of recluse and speculative men, who had never tasted them at all, and consequently were thought no judges of the matter.—Sterne, Ser. 1.

DECLARE.
DECLA'RABLE.
DECLARA'TION.
DECLA'RATIVE.
DECLA'RATIVELY.
DECLA'RATORY, v.
DECLA'RATORY, n.
DECLA'RATORILY.
DECLA'REDLY.
DECLA'REMENT.
DECLA'RER.
DECLA'RING, n.

Fr. Déclarer; Sp. Declarar; It. Dichiarare; Lat. Declarare, (de, and clarus, clear, qv.) to show openly, clearly.

To show clearly, plainly, openly, manifestly; to make clearly known, to explain; to pronounce or proclaim, clearly, plainly publicly.

——— Lawe may declare
Yf matrimonie may be, of Mede and of falshede.

Piers Ploughman, p. 81.

And he bigan at Moyses & at alle the profetis and declaride to hem in alle Scripturis that weren of him.

Wiclif. Luk, c. 24.

Wherfore the ground & cause of all my pain
So as my troubled wit may it attaine
I wol reherse, nor for to have redresse
But to declare my ground of heauinesse.

Chaucer. The Complaint of Mars.

When thou hast these declarations wel understand, than shalt thou find it reasonable at proue, and that many things be not thorow necessity, but thorow liberty of wil.

Chaucer. The Testament of Loue.

There is a vice full greuable
To hyde, whiche is therof culpable.
And stant of all vertues bare
Here after as I shall declare.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

So that of generacion
To make declaration
There maie no gentilnes bee.—Id. Ib.

Notwithstanding ye sonne is the cause declaratiue wherby we know that the other is a father.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 67.

His meaning was, that he well knew, that the pretended queen of England, by the declaratory sentence of the Pope, was for manifest heresy, deprived from all right of the kingdom, and from dominion, and that therefore, no magistrate created by her, and adhering to her, could be acknowledged by him.—State Trials. Edmund Campion, an. 1581.

During which time, I only entered into general speech, sticking at our just defence in the matters that were objected against us by the said queen's commissioners, looking certainly for none other thing but a summary cognition in the cases of controversy, with a small declaratory to have followed.—Id. The Duke of Norfolk, an. 1571.

For at once as soone as Jesus had saide Loke ye vp, he had hys sight: & of a beggar became a folower of Jesus traine, and an open declarer of God's goodness.

Udal. Luke, c. 18.

But lett this be spoken now for a warning unto vs; and now wil we come to the declaring of the matter in fewe wordes.—Geneva Bible, 1561. 2 Maccabees, vi. 17.

The differences between a covenant, and a law, standeth thus: In simple covenant, the action to be done, or not done, is first limited and made known, and then followeth the promise to do or not do; but in a law, the obligation to do or not do, precedeth, and the declaration what is to be done, or not done, followeth after.

Hobbs. De Corpore Politico, c. 10.

This is a declaratiue law, and such are not to be taken by way of consequence, equity or construction, but by the letter only, otherwise they should imply a contradiction to themselves, and be no more declaratiue laws, but laws of construction or constructiue.—Baker. Charles I. an. 1641.

And I dare confidently say it, that since the act was made, the first of Henry IV., the first chapter, whereby the Provisio is repealed, no man hath ever been declared a traitor, either by king or parliament, except it were upon that, or some other statute, literally and declaratively taken.

State Trials. The Earl of Strafford, an. 1640.

Every declaratory law, althoe there be no mention of time past, yet by the force of the declaration, it is by all means to be extended to matters past; for the interpretation doth not then begin to be in force, when it is declared; but is made contemporary with the law itselfe. Wherefore never enact declaratory lawes, but in case where lawes may in equity referre and looke back one upon another.

Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. viii. c. 3.

He was the first that gave such publick approbation unto them declaratorily, though it was true doctrine in itselfe, before hee ever professed it such.

Mountagu. Appeale to Cæsar, pt. ii. c. 20.

Surely all persons of alluring fortunes, or of other followed qualities, which are noted for entertainers and cherishers of medisance and bitterness in conversation, do no better then set up a shop declaredly to take off plundered goods.

Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat 2. s. 2.

For the declarement of this, we are to observe, that every being unceasantly aspires to its own perfection, and is restless till it obtain it; as is the trembling needle, till it find its beloved north.—Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 12.

But crystal will calefie unto electricity; that is, a power to attract straws or light bodies, and convert the needle freely plac'd. Which is a declarement of very different parts; wherin we shall not enlarge.—Brown. Vulg. Err. b. ii. c. 1.

But Mr. Attorney answered them, that he is not the declarer of his intentions, he must be judged by the book, by his words, more certainly by the effect.

State Trials. Wm. Prynne, an. 1632.

But how return'd he, let us ask again!
In a poor skiff he pass'd the bloody main,
Chok'd with the slaughter'd bodies of his train
For fame he pray'd, but let th' event declare
He had no mighty penn'worth for his pray'r.

Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 10.

What slender opinions the ancients held of the efficacy of this star is declarable from their compute.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 13.

Others say, that according to Empedocles, the criterion of truth is not sense, but right reason; and also that right reason is of two sorts, the one diuine, or divine, the other anthropinon, or human: of which the divine is inexpressible, but the human declarable.—Cudworth. Intel. Sys. p. 23.

"The priest shall expiate it," that is declaratively, and it shall be forgiven him.

Bates. Harmony of Divine Attributes, c. 13.

The French were, from the very first, most declaredly averse from treating, either from writings, or from agreeing to a place of public conference.

Sir Wm. Temple. Memoirs, 1672-79.

So far are the Scriptures from giving us the least intimation, that the bishops of Rome are set up by God to be the infallible declarers and interpreters of the sense of scripture to all the Christian world, from generation to generation, and that consequently in all disputes concerning the meaning of any passage in the Bible, we ought to have recourse to that see.—Sharp, vol. vii. Ser. 4.

But we, who have no such prejudices and passions as theirs to mislead our judgments and overpower our natural feelings, must necessarily be filled with love and reverence towards him, when we read that sublime and affecting declaration of his intentions, which is conveyed in the words of the text. (Luke, iv. 17—20.)—Porteus, vol. i. Ser. 17.

If we affirm absolutely, we use the indicative or declarative mood; if relatively, conditionally, or dependently on something else, it is the subjunctive.

Beattie. Elem. Moral Science, pt. i. c. 1. s. 3.

This proceeding of Mr. Fox does not (as I conceive) amount to absolute high treason; Russia, though on bad terms, not having been then declaredly at war with this kingdom.—Burke. On the Conduct of the Minority.

DECLI'NE, v.
DECLI'NE, n.
DECLI'NABLE.
DECLINA'TION.
DECLI'NATORY.
DECLI'NING, n.
DEFLE'XION.

Fr. Décliner; Sp. Declinar; It. Declinare; Lat. Declinare; (de, and clin-are; Gr. Κλιν-ειν, to bend.) "Fr. Decliner—

To bend or fall downwards; also, to eschew, decline, bend from, wave, avoid, swarve, turn away, pass by," (Cotgrave.)

But this is the fortune (q^d she) of hem that either be put in vertue, and battailen against aspre things, or else of hem that encline, and declinen fro vices, and taken ye way of vertue.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. iv.

He was that time in Geminis, I geese,
But litel fro his declination
Of Cancer.

Id. The Marchantes Tale.

The high nobleese shal draw to declina
Of Greekes blood, in mischiefe, sorow and wo.

Lydgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. iii.

But soo was it after that the worlde wayxed worse, right good and vertuous lygnages declined and decayed.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 157.

By night she flies amid the cloudy skie,
Shrinking by the dark shadow of the earth,
So doth decline to the sweete sleepe her eyes.

Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

Your manhoode and courage is alwayes in encrease: but oure force groweth in declination.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 200.

And a better and nearer example herein may be, our most noble Queen Elizabeth, who never toke yet Greeke or Latin grammer in her hand, after the first declining of a nowne and a verbe.—Ascham. The Schole Master, b. ii.

Ecius. Mistake not;
I would not stain your honour for the empire,
Nor any way decline you to discredit,
'Tis not my profession, but a villain's.

Beaum. & Fletch. Valentinian, Act iii. sc. 1.

——— O let not,
As ye have any flesh that's humane in you
The having of a modest wife decline him,
Let not my vertue be the wedge to break him.

Id. Ib. Act ii. sc. 4.

He [Evelyn's father] was a studious decliner of honours and titles.—Evelyn. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 1.

This evening from the sun's decline arriv'd
Who tells of som infernal spirit seen
Hitherward bent (who could have thought?) escap'd
The bars of hell, on errand bad no doubt:
Such where ye find, seize fast, and hither bring.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

The preamble recites, That in time of declination of justice, under pretext of defending the country and themselues, divers great men arrogated to themselves regal authority, under the names of captains; that they acquired to themselves that government, which belonged to the crown,

State Trials. Earl of Strafford, an. 1640.

After diuers secret conferences among themselues, and returne of sundry letters into Fraunce, signifying the queen's declination from marriage, and the people's unwillingness, to match that way, (the foresaid lords) held it most conuenient that the duke should come in proper power.

Stow. Queen Elizabeth, an. 1581.

Those who are shaken and scandaliz'd at God's order ev'n in this, which is one of the most seeming declinings of his equitie, at the best, incur Oza's trespass of incredulitie, when he saw the oxen stumble, and the ark lean towards a fall.—Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 1. s. 4.

And, since the Muses do invoke my power,
I shall no more decline that sacred bower,
Where Gloriana, their great mistress lies.

Waller. The Apology of Sacr.

Upon this so palpable declension of spirit in the house, the army seem'd much quieter, and resolv'd to set other agents on their work, that they might not appear too busy and active in their own concernment.

Clarendon. Civil Wars, vol. iii. p. 5.

And is not that worthy observation (though it may serve to abate our high conceipt of our own times,) that ancient languages were more full of declensions; cases, conjugations; tenses, and the like; the moderne commonly destitute of these, doe loosely deliver themselves in many expressions by prepositions, and auxiliary verbes.

Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. vi. c. 1.

The decline of the old Roman empire making easy way for the powerful ascent of this new comet, (Mahomet) that appeared with such wonder and terror in the world, and with a flaming sword made way wherever it came, or laid all desolate that opposed it.—Sir W. Temple. Heroic Virtue.

But, this voluntary neglect of honours has been of rare example in the world: few men have frowned first upon Fortune, and precipitated themselves from the top of her wheel, before they felt at least, the declination of it.

Dryden. Amboyna, Dedication.

But generally, the extremities of old age are very peevish and querulous, and a declining and falling back to the weak and helpless condition of infancy and childhood.

Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 24.

I don't know any greater instance of the decay of wit and learning among the French (which generally follows the declension of empire,) than the endeavouring to follow this foolish kind of wit, [Bouts Rimez.]—Spectator, No. 60.

It however hurt the vogue of Mr. Rysbrach, who, though certainly not obscured, found his business decline, as it was affected considerably afterwards by the competition of Mr. Roubiliac.—Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iv. c. 5.

The strength of the frontiers, which had always consisted in arms rather than fortifications, was insensibly undermined; and the fairest provinces were left exposed to the rapaciousness or ambition of the barbarians, who soon discovered the decline of the Roman empire.

Gibbon. Roman Empire, c. 7.

Infinitives [of Hebrew words] are not declinable.

Sharpe. On the Hebrew Language, Lec. 4.

At length it was finally settled, in the reign of Henry the Sixth, that the prisoner should first be arraigned; and might either then claim his benefit of clergy, by way of declinatory plea; or, after conviction, by way of arresting judgment.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 23.

The declension of the needle was discovered, A. D. 1492, by Columbus, in his first voyage to America; and would have been highly alarming to any but one of his undaunted and philosophical turn of mind.

Grainger. The Sugar Cane, b. i. Notes.

DECLI'VITY. It. Declive, declività; Sp. Declive; Fr. Déclive, steep, deep, hanging or bending downwards, (de, and clivus;) Gr. Κλιτος; Æol. Κλιστυς, κλιστυς, from κλιν-ειν, to bend.

Declination or descent; sloping downwards.

We have, first, the river Dove, that we shall come to by and by, which divides the two counties of Derby and Stafford for many miles together, and is so called from the swiftness of its current: and that swiftness is occasioned by the declivity of its course.—Walton. Angler, pt. ii. c. 1.

And indeed such prodigious conveyances of the waters make it manifest, that no accidental currents and alterations of the waters themselves, no art, or power of man, nothing less than the fiat of the Almighty could ever have made or found so long and commodious declivities and channels for the passage of the waters.—Derham. Phys. Theol. b. ii. c. 5.

At length we descended into a valley of greater extent than the former; a river or large wintry torrent ran through it and fell down a steep declivity at the end of it, where it seemed to be lost among the rocks.

Sir W. Jones. On the Island of Hindostan.

DECOCT, v.
DECOCTION.

Fr. Décoction; It. Decozione; Sp. Decocion; Lat. Decoquere, decoctum, (de, and coquere,) to boil, to seethe. See CONCOCT.

To boil, to seethe; to reduce, to consume, to digest—by boiling or seething, by heat.

In all colenke feuers the decoction of this herbe [suckorie] or the water therof stylled, is right expedient.

Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth b. ii.

Here she attracts, and there she doth retain,
There she corrects, and doth the food prepare;
There she distributes it to every vein,
There she expels what she may fitly spare.

Davies. The Immortality of the Soul, s. 12.

If after a decoction of herbs in a winter night, we expose the liquor to the frigid air, we may observe in the morning under a crust of ice, the perfect appearance both in taste, and colour of the plants that were taken from it.

Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 3.

Holy thistle decocted in clear posset drink was heretofore much used at the beginnings of agues, fevers, unknown diseases, and especially if there be any suspicion of poison or infection.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 371.

I persuaded her to take, as hot as she could well drink it every morning, a full draught of the decoction of centaury boiled in beer or ale, and to walk after it: she did it heartily for a fortnight or more, recovered her roses, was married, hath children, and continues in health these fourteen years since, this being her only medicine at the first, and in all relapses.—Id. Ib.

DECO'LLING, n. } Lat. Decollare, (de, and DECO'LLATE. } collum, the neck.) See
DECOLLA'TION. } COLLAR.

To cut off the neck; to sever or separate the head from shoulders; to behead.

In this, XXV. yere aboute the feast of the decollation of Seynt Johne Baptyst, in the latter ende of August, a noble man of Spayne called Sir Charlys, with a stronge nauye of Spanyardes entrede the Englysshe stremys, and dyd moche harme vnto kynge Edwardes frendes.

Fabyan, an. 1350.

On tying the cord, there was a strong seam about the neck, by which the head had been, as was supposed, immediately after decollation, fastned again to the body.

State Trials. The Regicides, an. 1660.

By a speedy public dethroning and decolling of the King, and disinheriting his posterity, as the army-remonstrants advise.—Parliamentary History, an. 1648.

The said archbishop esteeming them [three last books of Hooker] as varieties, did put them into the library there, where remaining till the decollation of Archb. Laud, were then by the brethren of the predominant faction, given, with the library, to that most notorious villain Hugh Peters.

Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

Heal the poor martyr flay'd or rackt,
Shrivel'd and scorcht, and torn and hackt,
Restore the decollated head,
Revive the dying and the dead.—Cambridge. On Painting.

A fine piece of a decollated head of St. John the Baptist was shown to a Turkish Emperor; he praised many things, but he observed one defect; he observed that the skin did not shrink from the wounded part of the neck.

Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, Introd.

But one of his [Mabuse's] most striking performances was the decollation of St. John, painted in the shades of a single colour.—Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 3.

DECOMPO'SE, v. } Lat. Decomponere, ositum, componere, (de, com, and ponere,) to put, place, or set together.
DECO'MPOSITE.
DECOMPOSI'TION.
DECOMPO'UND, v.
DECOMPO'UND, n.
DECOMPO'UND, adj. } To separate or disjoin things so composed or put, placed or set together; to disorder, disarrange, unsettle. To decompound, is also, (by usage,)—

To compound compounds; or to compound things already in themselves compounded.

Decompositæ of three metals, or more, are too long to enquire of, except there be some compositions of them already observed.—Bacon. Questions touching Minerals.

Congregational presbyteries—they are the natural presbyteries, those others, they are but as step-dames, secondaries; they are but compounds and decompounds of the several presbyteries of presbyterial churches.

Goodwin. Works, vol. iv. pt. iv. p. 139.

For these more confined hypotheses may be subordinated to those more general and fertile principles, and there can be no ingredient assigned, that has a real existence in nature, that may not be derived either immediately, or by a row of decompositions, from the universal matter, modified by its mechanical affections.—Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 75.

The same may be done in all our complex ideas whatsoever; which, however compounded and decompounded, may at last be resolv'd into simple ideas, which are all the materials of knowledge or thought we have, or can have.

Locke. On Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 22.

Glass appears to be not only a compounded, but a decompounded body, since the sand or cuput (as the Venetian glass-men call their pebbles,) or other stones being themselves mixt bodies, are further compounded with the salts that dissolve them.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 656.

If, I say, we consider this, it may seem probable, that there may be among the works of nature, (not to mention those of art,) a greater number of decompound bodies, than men take notice of.—Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 524.

The naturalist who has made a thousand experiments, with the utmost care and skill; the chemist who has, in like manner, decomposed a thousand natural, and composed as many artificial bodies, are still liable to be deceived.

Bolingbroke, Lss. 1. On Human Knowledge.

The first is evident of itself, and the second will appear so too, if we consider that in learning their names, and the signification of these names, we learn to decompound them, and that by learning to decompound some, the mind was instructed to compound others.

Bolingbroke, Ess. 1. On Human Knowledge.

The change is to be confined to the peccant part only; to the part which produced the necessary deviation; and even then it is to be effected without a decomposition of the whole civil and political mass, for the purpose of originating a new civil order out of the first elements of society.

Burke. On the French Revolution.

DE'CORE, v. } Lat. Decorus; from decere.
DE'CORATE. } (See DECENT.) Fr. Décorer.
DECORA'TION. } Used, consequentially,— DECO'ROUS. } To adorn, to ornament, to DECO'ROUSNESS. } beautify, to embellish.
DECO'RUM. }

It was to theim a notable vertue to decore and benutifie the house of God, to the whiche appertened holynes, and to set a concorde in Christ's.—Hall. Hen. V. an. 2

To decore and illustre the same assembly, and to shewe their forces in armes, thei shall take counsaill & dispose themselfes to do some fayre feate of armes, as well on foot as on horseback, against all commers.

Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 11.

For God I call to record, my harte was fully sette, and my mynde deliberately determined to haue decorated this realme, wyth wholesome lawes, statues and audinaunces.

Id. Edward IV. an. 23.

For vndoubtedly as many places as thei vexed and sacked with murder and spoylynge, so many or more in conclusion they did enoble and decorate with their blood and slaughter.

Id. Hen. VII. an. 7.

Straight when one nam'd a message from the Lord,
The wicked Eglon rose, (all pride suppresst)
And (as he dream'd) with sacred robes decor'd

Sterling. Doomes-Day. Fifth Hour.

Which church he decored with many ornaments and edifices, especially the south side thereof.

Fuller. Worthies. Hant-shire.

His familie (saith Hector Boetius) hath and doth continue in great honor amongest Scotishmen euen vnto this day, and is decorated with the office of the marshalship of Scotland, to the high renowne and fame thereof, amongest the chiefest peeres of the realme.—Holinshed. Scotland. Malcolm.

I have been told by those that have seen both, that our church did even then exceed the Romish in ceremonies and decorations.—Marvel. Works, vol. ii. p. 208.

Men of embitter'd passions and of a destroying spirit, altogether devoid of civility, gentleness and moderation, kindness and benignity towards men, and altogether unacquainted with what is lovely, decorous, venerable, praiseworthy, equitable, and just, can have no part nor lot in this matter.—Mede. Works. The Author's Life.

The will of God is goodness, justice, and wisdom, decorousness, fitness.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 874.

Decorum, or decency, is all our actions that we may avoid all possible offences given, and using this decorum in our gestures, applications, speeches, habit, addresses, receptions, and generally in all we do.

Hale. Cont. Doing as we would be done to.

At this the seed of Neptune, goddess born,
"For ornament, not use, these arms are worn;
This helm, and heavy buckler, I can spare;
As only decorations of the war."

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xii.

If he [Charles Townsend] had not so great a stock, as some have had who flourished formerly, of knowledge long treasured up, he knew better by far, than any man I ever was acquainted with, how to bring together within a short time, all that was necessary to establish, to illustrate, and to decorate that side of the question he supported.

Burke. On the American Taxation.

Such is the apology, expressed or implied, of many individuals, who support a decorous character, and imagine that they are in no respect objects of compassion.

V. Knox, Ser. 9.

DECORTICATE, v. } Lat. De, and cortex,
DECORTICA'TION. } the bark.

To strip off the bark or rind.

Take great barley, dried and decorticated, after it is well washed, and boil it in water.—Arbuthnot. On Coins.

Decortication, the putting off the outward bark of trees; also the peeling or unhusking of roots.

Miller. Gardener's Dictionary.

DECOURT, v. To drive or expel from court. See COURT.

It behoveth without doubt his majestie to uphold the duke against them, who if he be but decourted, it will be the corner stone on which the demolishing of his monarchie will be builded.—Cabbala. To his Sacred Majestie, Ab ignoto.

DECOY, v. } See COY. To decoy, as to DECOY, n. } coy, is—

To quiet, to still, to lull, to appease, to soothe, to caress, to allure, to entice.

Rolph answered, "That the king might be decoy'd from thence, as he was from Hampton Court by some letters from his friends, of some danger that threaten'd him, upon which he would be willing to make an escape; and then he might easily be dispatched.

Clarendon. Civil War, vol. iii. p. 232.

Man is to man all kind of beasts: a fawning dog, a roaring lion, a thieving fox, a robbing wolf, a dissembling crocodile, a treacherous decoy, a rapacious vulture.

Cowley. The Dangers of an Honest Man, Ess. 8.

If you give any credit to this jugling rascal, you are worse than simple widgins, and will be drawn into the net by this decoy-duck, this tame cheater.

Beaum. & Fletch. Fair Maid of the Inn, Act iv. sc. 1.

One would have thought, sir, that you who keep a general decoy here for fools and coxcombs, might have found one to have recompensed a cast mistress withal, and not have endeavoured the betraying the honour of a gentleman and your friend.—Otway. Friendship in Fashion, Act iv. sc. 1.

But on the other side, where God denies a man these advantages, and casts him under all the forementioned disadvantages of virtue, and decoys to sin; it is yet most certain that they lay upon him no necessity of sinning.

South, vol. viii. Ser. 4.

When they had decoyed mankind out of the plain into a wood, they who had planted the wood were necessary guides in it.—Bolingbroke, Ess. 4.

DECREASE, v. } Lat. Decresc-ere, (de, and DECREASE, n. } crescere,) to grow, to enlarge. Gower writes dis-

To be, or cause to be, less; to lessen, to diminish.

I wote not of thilke euidence
Now at this time in her estates,
Excuse might the prelates,
Knowend how that the faith discreseth
And all morall vertue ceaseth.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

That none honour fall in discrease,
Whiche might torne into diffame.—Id. Ib. b. vii.

Never such comfort came to mortal man,
Never such joy was since the world began,
As in the ark, when Noah and his behold
The olive leaf, which certainly them told
The flood decreas'd. Drayton. Noah's Flood.

It is a position of mathematiques; that there is no proportion between somewhat and nothing; therefore the degrees of nullity and quiddity, seem larger than the degrees of increase and decrease.

Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. vi.

For the inertia of matter, causeth, not only (as this learned author observes) that velocity decreases in proportion as quantity of matter increases (which is indeed no decrease of the quantity of motion;) but also that solid and perfectly hard bodies, void of elasticity, meeting together with equal and contrary forces, lose their whole motion and active force.

Papers between Clarke and Leibnitz. Fifth Reply.

According to the latest observations the hoops are found to have increased two-tenths of an inch in diameter, and the hats to have decreased two-fifths in the brim.

Adventurer, No. 35.

In this run, the variation of the compass gradually decreased from 11° west, which it was at Ascension, to 1° west, which we found off Fernando de Noronha.

Cook. Second Voyage, b. iv. c. 10.

DECREATION. Lat. De, and creare, atum, to create. See CONCREATE.

Especially the continual decreation and annihilation of the souls of the brutes, &c.—Cudworth. Intel. System, p. 45

DECRE'E, n. } It. Decretare; Sp. Decretar; Fr. Décréter; Lat.
DECREE, v. } Decern-ere, decretum, (de,
DECRE'ER. } and cernere,) from the Gr.
DE'CREMENT. } Κριν-ειν, to separate, to DECRE'TE. } distinguish, to divide. See
DECRE'TAL, n. } DECERN, and DISCERN.
DECRE'TAL, adj. }
DECRE'TIST. } To adjudge, to order,
DECRE'TIVE. } ordain, enact, establish,
DE'CRETORY. } award, appoint.
DECRETO'RIAL. }

At London thei wer atteynt, decree was mad for thate.

R. Brunne, p. 122.

The decretal ne were ordeynd for this.—Id. p. 337.

And, eke as sayth the decree, a woman that is a wif, as long as she is a wif, she hath non auctorites to swere ne bere witnesse, without leve of hire husbonde, that is hire lord.

Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

Thilke same senate, doen through her decretes and her judgmentes, as though it were a sin and a fellony, that is, to wilne the sānacion of them.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. i.

The pope anone vpon the cas
Of his papall auctoritee
Hath made and youe the decree.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

Suche was the decreed wyll of the father, that Criste shoulde suffre these thynges for our offences.
Udal. Philippians, c. 3.

As they went thorow the cities, they delyuered theim the decrees for to kepe, ordeyned the apostles and elders, whiche were at Jerusalem.—Bible, 1551. Acts, c. 16.

For I was afraid for the weake hearers of the Scripture (which scarshe obeie the iust sentence of their pastour) much more despising this vniust decreement, through the onerous and importable transgression of their pastor, should shew themselues disobedient.
Foe. Martyre, p. 124. Huderike to Pope Nicholas, an. 867.

Ye pope, whō he hath bene enformed of a bishoppes faut, hath as by diuers decretals appereth proceded to the punishment & amendment thereof.—Sir T. More. Workes. p. 619.

——— They therefore as to right belong'd,
So were created, nor can justly accuse
Their maker, or their making, or their fate,
As if predestination over-rul'd
Their will, dispos'd by absolute decree
Or high foreknowledg; they themselves decreed
Their own revolt, not I.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

In thy book it is written of me, saye Christ; that I should do thy will; he is not willing only, but the first decreer of it, it is written of me.—Goodwin. Works, vol. i. pt. iii. p. 163.

By way of publick duel, to the decreeing whereof the lord constable and himself, with the assent of those honourable persons of counsel with the court, did intend to proceed.
State Trials. Mr. David Ramsey, an. 1631.

Further yet, and it is worth obaerving there was never any Bishop of Rome from S. Peter to S. Sylvester, that ever writ a decretal epistle now extant and transmitted to us, but either professedly or accidentally he said or intimated, that the order of bishops did come from God.
Bp. Taylor. Episcopacy Asserted, s. 12.

The decree of Gratian is concordantia discordantiarum, a heap or bundle of contrary opinions, doctrines, or rules: and they agree no otherwise than a hyæna and a dog catch'd in the same snare, or put into a bag; and the decretals and extravagants are in very great parts of them nothing but boxes of tyranny and error, usurpation and superstition.
Id. Ib. p. 400.

And this match, thus made up, fulfils that decretive word of the Almighty, they twain shall be one flesh.
Bp. Hall. Christ Mystical, c. 1. § 2.

These men are vain and light, easie and effeminate, childish and absurd; these are they of whom our blessed Saviour said those sad decretory words, many shall seek to enter in, and shall not be able.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 7.

But the main considerations, which most set off this number, are observations drawn from the motions of the moon, supposed to be measured by sevens, and the critical or decretory daies dependant on that number.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 12.

Celestial states, immortal Gods! give ear,
Hear our decree, and reverence what ye hear;
The fix'd decree, which not all heaven can move,
Thou, Fate! fulfil it; and, ye Powers, approve.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. viii.

But that there was a decretal bull sent by Campegio, will appear evidently in the sequel of this relation.
Burnet. History of the Reformation, an. 1527.

So that by this law, we are liable to have a large Bible; not only the Old and New Testament, but all the new decretals of the old gentleman at Rome, and they not apocryphal, but most properly canonical.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 311.

The will of God is either decretive or preceptive: the decretive extends to all events; nothing falls out at random, nothing by rash chance and casualty, but all things come to pass "according to the counsel of his will," by his efficiency or permission.—Bates. On Spiritual Perfection, c. 11.

God found it needful to bring up the rear of all with those decretory words, in Deut. xxx. 19. Behold, I have this day set before you life and death, blessing and cursing.
South, vol. iv. Ser. 5.

With regard to the parts and powers of nature, which the heathen world deified, they are represented in Scripture as the creatures of God's power, and the passive instruments of his decrees.—Farmer. On Miracles, c. 3. s. 3.

You would persuade the world, that I condemn Scripture doctrines in the lump, and overrule the Scripture itself, in a decretorial manner; because I do not submit to your explications of Scripture.—Id. Letters to Worthington, Let. 1.

DECRE'MENT. Lat. Decrescere, to grow less, to decrease, (qv.)
Lessening; decrease, diminution.

Spa. Thou'rt a prick-ear'd foist, a cittern headed gew gaw, a knack, a snipper-snapper! Twit me with the decrements of my pendants.—Ford. Fancies Chaste & Noble, Act i. s. 2.

For in the latter age upon the tropick and first descension from our solstice, we are scarce sensible of declination; but declining further, our decrement accelerates, we set apace, and in our last dayes precipitate into our graves.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 4.

We found it very difficult to measure, in what proportion these decrements of the mercurial cylinder did proceed.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 35.

DECRE'PIT, a. } Fr. Décrépite; It. Decrepito; Lat. Decrepitus. Scaliger says, that old men are called decrepit, by a metaphor derived from lanterns or candles; which are said decrepare, to creak or crackle, when they send forth a noise at the moment of going out. Vossius,—a metaphor, a rebus fragilibus, which from old age creak if you move them.
DECRE'PITNESS.
DECRE'PITUDE.
DECRE'PITY.
Groaning under infirmities, under the weight of age; weighed down by years.

Ages be foure.—Age decrepite, vntil the last time of lyfe accidently moist, but naturally cold and dry, wherein the powers and strength of the bodye be more and more minished.
Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. i.

And therein sate an old man, halfe blind,
And all decrepit in his feeble corse,
Yet lively vigour rested in his mind,
And recompens't him with a better scorse:
Weake body well is chang'd for minds redoubled forse.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 9.

How think you now, sir?
Gost. Even just as before,
And have more cause to think honest credulity
Is a true loadstone to draw on decrepity.
Chapman. All Fools, Act iv. sc. 1.

Nor John Apple, whose wither'd rind, intrencht
With many a furrow, aptly represents
Decrepit age, nor that from Harvey nam'd,
Quick relishing. J. Philips. Cider, b. i.

All ages, from wailing infancy to querulous decrepitness, and all conditions, from the carefull sceptre to the painfull spade, are fraught with many great inconveniences peculiar to each of them.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 8.

Last, Winter comes; decrepid, old, and dull;
Yet has his comforts too—his barns are full;
The social converse, circulating glass,
And cheerful fire are his. Jenyns. An Ode.

By the young and gay, those who are entering the world, either as a scene of business or pleasure, I [To-day] am frequently desired with much impatience, that although every moment brings on wrinkles and decrepitude with irresistible rapidity, they would be willing that the time of my absence should be annihilated, and the approach of wrinkles and decrepitude rendered yet more precipitate.
Adventurer, No. 11.

DECRE'PITATED. } Deprived of the power
DECRE'PATED, adj. } of crackling. See DECREPIT.

So will it come to pass in a pot of salt, although decrepitated, and so also in a pot of snow.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 5.

Into the leg of a worsted stocking, that has long been worn next to the flesh, put in a sufficient quantity of sea-salt exactly dried, or else decripated.
Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 363.

DECRE'W. Fr. Décru; from "décroistre, to lessen, decrease, wain," (Cotgrave.)

Thus long they tract, and trauerst to and fro,
Sometimes persewing and sometimes persewed,
Still as advantage they espied thereto:
But toward th' end, Sir Arthegall renewed
His strength still more, but she still more decrewed.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 6.

DECRO'WNING. A taking away, or depriving of the crown.

He holds it no more sin the decrowning of kings, than our puritans do the suppression of bishops.
Overbury. Characters.

DECRY', v. } To cry down, to raise a cry or clamour against. "Fr. Descrier; to cry down or call in, uncurrent or naughty coin; also publickly to discredit, disparage, disgrace; to publish the faults, divulge the imperfections, blaze the wants, proclaim the defects of," (Cotgrave.)
DECRI'AL.
DECRI'ER.
DECRY'ING, n.

And it ought to be remembered, that this was done by those men, who a few years before had so bitterly decried, and openly opposed, the king's regular and formal way of proceeding in the trial of a little ship-money.
Cowley. On the Government of Oliver Cromwell.

They preserve the authority and sacredness of government, and possibly they are therefore decried, that the reputation of authority may decline altogether.
Bp. Taylor. An Apology for authorized Forms of Liturgie.

Next, my lords to shew the decrying of the people in this time of shipping itself in the rolls of 21 and 51 of Ed. I., there the people said they were not bound to bear the charge: so it was no practice for the commons to decry it.
State Trials. John Hampden, Esq. an. 1637.

But it hath been said, that the people have always petitioned against it, and there hath been a decrying by the people, and they have petitioned in parliament against it.
Id. Ib.

Thus men are rais'd by faction, and decry'd;
And rogue and saint distinguish'd by their side.
Dryden. The Medal.

The forward wits, who without waiting their due time, or performing their requisite studys, start up in the world as authors, having with little pains or judgment, and by the strength of fancy merely, acquir'd a name with mankind, can on no account afterwards submit to a decrial or disparagement of those raw works to which they ow'd their early character and distinction.
Shaftesbury. Miscel. Reflec. Misc. 5. c. 2.

And here I cannot but reflect on the brutish folly and absurd impudence of the late fanatic decryers of the necessity of human learning, in order to the ministerial function.
South, vol. vii. Ser. 2.

What an insufferable impudence then are they guilty of, who now a-days decry all reading, study, and learning, and rely only on enthusiasm and immediate inspiration.
Bp. Burl, vol. i. Ser. 10.

DECUBA'TION. } Lat. Decumbere, to lie down; pres. part. decumbens, past, decubitus; de, and cumbere, to lie.
DECU'MBENT.
DECU'MBENCY.
DECU'MBENCE.
A lying down.

At this decubation upon boughs the Satire at seems to hint.
Evelyn, vol. iv. § 7.

Underneath is the decumbent portraiture of a woman, resting on a death's head.—Ashmol. Berkshire, vol. i. p. 2.

And yet must thus much come to pass, if we opinion they lie not down and enjoy no decumbence at all.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 1.

And therefore Casaubon justly rejecteth Theophilact; who not considering the ancient manner of decumbency, imputed this gesture of the beloved disciple unto rusticity, or an act of incivility.—Id. Ib. b. v. c. 6.

A phrenitis came on the eighth day, where the patient was in the vigour of his youth, had not been blooded, and had been kept in a dose from his first decumbiture.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 649.

If but a mile she travel out of town,
The planetary hour must first be known,
And lucky moment, if her eye but akes
Or itches, its decumbiture she takes.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 6.

DE CUPLE. Fr. Décuple; Lat. Decuplus, from Decem, ten.
Tenfold.

If the apostle (1 Tim. v. 17) requires that an elder, provided he rule well, be accounted worthy of double honour, especially those who labour in the word and doctrine, it excludes not a decuple or any further proportion, and indeed there cannot too high a value be set upon such a person.
Marvel. Works, vol. ii. p. 190.

If the same proportion holds between the insects native of England, and those of the rest of the world, as doth between plants domestick and exotick, (that is, as I guess, near a decuple) the species of insects in the whole earth, (land and water) will amount to 10,000.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

There is no impossibility or absurdity in its being double or treble or decuple to what it is, for there is abundant room for multitudes of atoms more in the empty spaces between those already in being.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. i. c. 7.

DECU'RION. } Lat. Decurio; one who is appointed over ten, decem.
DECU'RY.
See DECIMATE.

And lo a man, Joseph by name, of Aramathie a cytee of Judee that was a decurion, a good man and a just.
Wiclif. Luke, c. 23.

He equalled it also after a sort, and in some part with the verie cittie of Rome in priviledges and estimation: by devising a new kind of suffrages which the decurions or elders of colonies gave every one in their own townes hippe, as touching magistrates to bee created in Rome.
Holland. Suetonius, p. 60.

The order of it was this: All the fathers or senators, who at the first were an hundred, parted themselves into tens or decuries, and governed successively by the space of five days, one decury after another in order.

Raleigh. History of the World, b. v. c. 3. s. 7.

He instituted decurions through both these colonies, that is, one over every ten families, another over fifty, a third over a hundred, a fourth over five hundred, and a fifth over a thousand.—Sir W. Temple. On Heroic Virtue.

DECU'RRENT. } Lat. Decurrens, pres. part.
DECU'RSION. } of Decurrere, ursum; to run down, (de, and currere, to run.)

Running down.

Matter is never lost or annihilated: what is decayed by that decursion of waters is in some measure supplied by the terrene fæces which that water brings with it.

Hale. Origination of Mankind, p. 95.

[Leaves] darker and very soft above, paler below with protuberant veins, downy on both sides, mostly decurrent on the long hoary petiols.

Sir W. Jones. Botan. Obs. On Select Indian Plants.

Moreover not only things but customs, civil and religious, are preserved upon coins, as sacrifices, triumphs, congiaries, allocutions, decursions, &c.

Priestley. On History, pt. ii. Lect. 6.

DECU'RTED. Lat. Curtus; Gr. Κυρτος, cut short.

Your decurted or headlesse clause, Angelorum enim et cet, is thus Englyshed.—Bale. Apology, fol. 147.

DECU'SSATE, v. } Lat. Decussis, decem asses. From its sign or mark X (ten) is Decussare, to decussate, to reduce any thing to this form; and thus—DECUSSA'TION.
DECU'SSATIVE.
DECU'SSATIVELY.

To intersect at acute angles.

Answerable whereunto we observe the decussated characters in many Consulary coynes, and even in those of Constantine and his sons, which pretend their pattern in the sky.

Brown. Cyrus' Garden, c. 1.

Owing this name not onely unto the quintuple number of trees, but the figure declaring that number, which being doubled at the angle, makes up the letter X, that is the emphatical decussation, or fundamental figure.—Id. Ib.

The Statuæ Istaceæ, Teraphims, and little idols found about the mummies, do make decussation or Jacob's crosse, with their armes, like that on the head of Ephraim and Manasses, and this decussis is also graphically described between them.—Id. Ib. c. 3.

The incession or locall motion of animals is made with analogy unto this figure, by decussative diametrals, quincunciall lines and angles.—Id. Ib.

As the oyle was poured coronally or circularly upon the head of kings, so the high priest was anointed decussatively or in the form of a X.—Id. Ib.

This Galen, and others after him, generally thought to be from a coalition or decussation of the optick nerves, behind the os sphænoides. But whether they decussate, coalesce, or only touch one another, they do not well agree.

Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 2.

What infinite rencounters and decussations, meetings and crossings through all the parts of our solar system.

Watts. Philosophical Essays, Ess. 10. s. 1.

DEDENTITION. A falling of the teeth. Lat. Dens, dentis; if, says Vossius, of Latin origin, it is formed by apocope from edens, eating, that which eateth.

Solon divided it into ten septenaries, because in every one thereof, a man received some sensible mutation, in the first is dedentition or falling of teeth.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 12.

Brown has words still more extraordinary, as feriation, for keeping holiday, dedentition for falling of teeth.

Beattie. Moral Science, pt. iv. c. 1. s. 3.

DE'DICATE, v. } Lat. Dedicare; Sp. Dedicar; Fr. Dédier, (de, and dicare, which, says Vossius, is the same as attribuere, ac præcipuè consecrare; to attribute, and especially to consecrate.)
DE'DICATE, adj.
DEDICA'TION.
DE'DICATING, n.
DE'DICATOR.
DE'DICATORY.

To allot, to appropriate or apportion; to devote, to consecrate.

The thridde circumstance is the place, ther thou hast don synne, whether in other mennes houses or in thine owen, in feld, in chirche, or in chirchawe, in chirche dedicate, or non.

Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

Now, before we vse either to write, or speake eloquently, wee must dedicate our myndes wholy to followe the most wise and learned men, and seeke to fashion as wel their speache and gesturing, as their witte or endytyng.

Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 5.

And the princes offered vnto ye dedicatynge of the altar in the daye that it was anoynted, & brought their gyftes before the altar.—Bible, 1551. Numeri, c. 7.

To her my thoughts I daily dedicate,
To her my hart I nightly martyrize:
To her my loue I lowely do prostrate,
To her my life I wholly sacrifice.

Spenser. Colin Clout's come Home again.

Upon this vow of amendment, they had their desire; plenty was sent them, and then setting aside the dedicate portion, the tenth of all the increase of their grounds, and of their cattel, they offered it unto those Gods.

Spelman. On Tithes, p. 123.

Neither is it to be pass'd over in silence, that this dedicating of colledges and societies, only to the use of professory learning, hath, not only bin an enemy to the growth of sciences, but hath redounded likewise to the prejudice of states and governments.

Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. ii. To the King.

That which is made holy by the dedication of men, and given to God, so as to be used only in his public service, is called also sacred, and said to be consecrated.

Hobbs. Of a Christian Commonwealth, c. 25.

My Lord, this poem, which receiv'd its first occasion of birth from yourselfe and others of your noble familie, and much honour from your own person in the performance, now returns againe to make a final dedication of itselfe to you.

H. Lawes. To Ld. Visc. Brackly, in Birch's Life of Milton.

He made it his work to see what books were in the press, and to look over epistles dedicatory, and prefaces to the reader, to see what faults might be found.

State Trials, an. 1627. Abp. Abbot.

I conceive, readers, much may be guess'd at the man and his book, what depth there is, by the framing of his title; which being in this remonstrant so rash and unadvised as ye see, I conceit him to be near a-kin to him who set forth a passion sermon, with a formal dedicatory in great letters to our Saviour.—Milton. An Apology for Smectymnuus.

For to whom can I dedicate this poem, with so much justice as to you? It is the representation of your own hero: it is the picture drawn at length, which you admire and prize so much in little.

Dryden. The Medal. Epistle to the Whigs.

The feast of the dedication of churches was to be held every year, on the first Sunday in October; but the feast of the patron of the church was to be no more observed.

Burnet. History of the Reformation, an. 1536.

Leave dangerous truths to unsuccessful satires,
And flattery to some fulsome dedicators,
Whom, when they praise, the world believes no more,
Than when they promise to give scribbling o'er.

Pope. Essay on Criticism.

This digression, my lord, is not altogether to the purpose of an epistle dedicatory: yet 'tis expected that somewhat shou'd be said even here, in relation to criticism; at least in vindication of my address, that you may not be desir'd to patronize a poem, which is wholly unworthy of your protection.—Dryden. Love's Triumph, Ep. Ded.

'Tis in vain, alas! I find,
Much in vain, my zealous mind
Would to learned Wisdom's throne
Dedicate each thoughtful hour.
Nature bids a softer power
Claim some minutes for his own.—Akenside, b. ii. Ode 8.

One can hardly think otherwise than that the author of Mr. Evelyn's life must have been misinformed, and never have seen or carefully considered the inscription on the title dedicatory, and the prints themselves.

Walpole. Catalogue of Engravers, (Evelyn.)

DEDI'TION. Lat. Deditio; from Dedere, deditum, to give up.

A giving up, yielding, surrendering.

The asseige of the castell of Bridgenorth vpon Seuerne, and the compulsion of the woorthie knight Hugh Mortimer to dedition to the terrible example of all.

Holinshed. Ireland, b. ii. c. 6.

And the rather because of the custom of the eastern princes, who in token of dedition exacted from subjugated provinces earth and water. Judith, ii. 7.

Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 323.

DEDU'CE, v. } Fr. Déduir; Sp. Deduzir; It. Didurre; Eng. Deduce; Lat. Deducere, to lead away from; and deduct, from deduct-um, past part. (de, and ducere, to lead.)
DEDU'CEMENT.
DEDU'CIBLE.
DEDU'CING, n.
DEDU'CIVE.
DEDU'CT, v.
DEDU'CTION.
DEDU'CTIVE.
DEDU'CTIVELY.

To lead, draw or bring from. (See the example from Selden.) Generally used (met.) in reasoning, as to deduce a consequence from premised propositions; to infer, to bring, bear or take from, to subtract.

This werke who so shal se or rede
Of any incongruitie doe me not impeche,
Ordinately behoveth mee first to procede
In deduction thereof, in maner as the leche
His pacient's sickness oweth first for to seche.

Chaucer. The Remedie of Loue.

We deduce therupō that he wil not suffer his church fal into yt erronious belief of anie dānable vntrouthe, but lead thē into ye trouth yt is ye cotrarie of ye vntrouth.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 461.

It is easy also and lyght, and a very pure gospell, yt is to wit, a preaching of fayth & loue: deducyng the loue to God out of fayth, and the loue of a man's neighbour out of the loue of God.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 21.

Whom when he beheld coming, he sodainly lefte the matter, with which he was in hand, and without anī deducion thereunto, out of al order, & oute of al frame, began to repete those wordes again.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 61.

The Philippians are in the first parte of Macedonia, as it is declared in the xvi. of the Acts, a people deducted oute of the citie of Philippos, so called of Philip the buyldour of it.

Udal. Pref. to the Philippians.

It is justified by express assertion of an old oracle to Archias, a Corinthian, advising him he should hither deduce a colony.—Selden. Illustrations of Drayton, s. 17.

Out of these grounds, I may then in my opinion safely and with some confidence deduce and maintain this position; that the common law of England giveth to the king, as to the head of the common wealth, no perpetuall revenue or matter of profit out of the interest or property of the subject.

State Trials. Great Case of Impositions, an. 1606.

What other deducements or analogies are cited out of St. Paul, to prove a likeness between the ministers of the Old and New Testament, having tried their sinews, I judge they may pass without harm doing to our cause.

Milton. Reason of Church Government.

And so not laying to heart the greatness and goodness of God, but blinding himself with an undue zeal to his own person, he [Adam] most unnaturally made himself God's rival, as if he himself were capable of divine knowledge, or God deducible to human imbecility.

State Trials. Col. J. Lilburn, an. 1649.

For hauing yet in his deducted spright
Some sparks remaining of that heauenly fire,
He is enlumin'd with that goodly light,
Vnto like goodly semblant to aspire.

Spenser. An Hymn of Loue.

He keepeth a hundred slaves at least in the mines, each slave being bound to bring in dayly cleare gaine (all charges deducted) three pezoes of gold for himself, and two for his woman (eight shillings and three pence to the pezo.)

Sir Francis Drake Revived, p. 69.

To insist upon the declaration and deduction of this point, and pass along through the series and course of so many ages and centuries, as it would be over long for this place, so further I might herein seem as it were to gild gold.

State Trials. Henry Garnet, an. 1606.

Where he succeeds not thus high, he labours to introduce a secondary and deductive Atheism; that although men concede there is a God, yet should they deny his providence.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 10.

For although to opinion there be many Gods, may seem an access in religion, and such as cannot at all consist with Atheism, yet doth it deductively and upon inference include the same, for unity is the inseparable and essential attribute of Deity.—Id. Ib.

Some things too I have omitted, and sometimes have added of my own. Yet the omissions, I hope, are but of circumstances, and such as wou'd have no grace in English; and the additions, I also hope, are easily deduc'd from Virgil's sense.—Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, Dedication.

Our modern philosophers, nay and some of our philosophising divines, have too much exalted the faculties of our souls, when they have maintained that, by their force, mankind has been able to find out that there is one supreme agent or intellectual being, which we call God: that praise and prayer are his due worship; and the rest of those deducements, which I am confident are the remote effects of revelation, and unattainable by our discourse, I mean as simply considered, and without the benefit of divine illumination.—Id. Religio Laici, Pref.

The late king had also agreed, that two and a half per cent should be deducted out of the pay of the foreign troops, which amounted to fifteen thousand pounds.

Burnet. Own Time, an. 1711.

This is the true virtue of fortitude, which is nothing but endeavouring firmly and honestly to act as truth requires; and therefore is directly deducible from that notion on which we have founded the morality of human acts.

Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 9.

From the words of Moses cited by our Saviour, the doctrine of a future state may as clearly be deduced as from any single text which can be produced out of any one of the prophets.—Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

This uncertainty is most frequent in the vowels, which are so capriciously pronounced, and so differently modified by accident or affectation, not only in every province, but in every mouth, that to them, as is well known to etymologists, little regard is to be shewn in the deduction of one language from another.—Johnson. English Dictionary, Pref.

DEED, n. } ("Like actum and factum) means
DEE'DLESS. } something, any thing done. It is DEE'DY. } the past part. of the A. S. verb Don, to do. Do-ed, did, deed, is the same word differently spelled. It was formerly written dede, both for the past tense and past part." (See Tooke, v. 2.) See Do.

Deedy,—industrious, notable. (Berks. Grose.) It is properly applied to any one doing attentively.

Sire, heo seyde, yleue not that my sustren al soth seide. Ac for me my self. [Cordelia] ich wol soth segge of this dede.—R. Gloucester, p. 30.

Walter Spek was in that stoure, gode knight at alle nedes, The boke tellis grete honour of his douhty dedes.
R. Brunne, p. 114.

For David was the douhtiest, of dedes in hus tyme.
Piers Ploughman, p. 373.

Jerom in his prolog on the dedis of apostlis seith this.
Wiclif. Dedes, Prol.

For pitee maketh a kynge curteise
Both in his worde and in his dede.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

Howe be it in uery dede the name of the cytie was Lais at the beginninge.—Bible, 1551. Judges, c. 18.

——— Dispaire':
Who first vs greets, and after faire areedes
Of tydings straunge, and of adventures rare:
So creeping close, as snake in hidden weedes,
Inquireth of our states, and of our knightly deedes.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 9.

A true knight; they call him Troylus;
Nor yet mature, yet matchlesse, firm of words,
Speaking in deedes, and deedelesse in his tongue.
Shakespeare. Troyl. & Cress. Act iv. sc. 5.

Th' undaunted power of princes should not be
Confin'd in deedless cold calamity.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Bloody Brother, Act iv. sc. 2.

Yet thou (even Hector) deedlesse standst, and car'st not to employ,
Thy towne borne friends, to bid them stand, to fight and save their wives.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

The monarch, blinded with desire of wealth,
With steel invades his brother's life by stealth;
Before the sacred altar made him bleed,
And long from her conceal'd the cruel deed.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. i.

Whatever notions some may have of the soul in its state of separate existence, yet a mere spirit is not a man; for man is made of soul and body: and therefore to bring the man into judgment to answer for his deeds, the soul and the body must be brought together again.—Sherlock, Dis. 49.

Most usually when applied to the transactions of private subjects, it is called A deed, in Latin factum, κατ' ἐξοχην, because it is the most solemn and authentick act, that a man can possibly perform with relation to the disposal of his property.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 20.

DEEM, v. } See Doom, and Damn. A. S.
DEEM, n. } Dem-an.
To think, to judge, to determine.

He tolde, that in a uyryon he sey by hym a cas,
That he was byuore God ybrogt, hys dom vor to avonge,
And that he was there ydemd to the pyne of helle strong.
R. Gloucester, p. 420.

The barons wrote ageyn, at his demyng thei ches,
Thei held his dome certeyn, for he was prince of pes.
R. Brunne, p. 86.

And deme wel and wislyche.—Piers Ploughman, p. 194.

Nyle ye deme that ghe be not demed. For in what doom ye demen, you schulen be demed, and in what measure ye meten, it schal be meten agen to you.—Wiclif. Matt. c. 7.

Now demeth as you liste, ye that can,
For I wol tell you forth as I began.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1355.

But still Creseide heuy in her entent,
Into the church would nat herself present,
For giuing of the people any deming
Of her expulse fro Diomede the king.
Id. The Testament of Creseide.

But false Egyste aboue hem alle
Was deemed to diuers peine,
The werst that men couthe ordeine.—Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

These thre estates ordayned and stablysshed in their names, receyuers of all male totes, deames, subsidies, and other rightes, pertayning to the kyng, and to the realme.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, c. 171.

There was graunted vnto him halfe a deeme of the spiritualitie, and half a deeme of the temporaltie, to be payde at the feast of Saint Michell then next, if it seemed to the lordes and counsaylours that it was neede.
Grafton. Rich. II. an. 10.

Troy. Here me, my loue: be thou but true of heart.
Cres. I true? how now? what wicked deeme is this?
Shakespeare. Troyl. & Cress. Act iv. sc. 4.

Nor could her wretched sister once divine
These rites could cover such a dire design,
Nor deem'd a lover treacherous to his vows
Should more afflict her than her murder'd spouse.
Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. iv.

I suppose it agreed by all who admit a future judgment, that misery and happiness are set before us upon some terms: I suppose, likewise, that it will be deemed reasonable for God to act upon such terms as reason itself, the interpreter of God's will in this case, proposes to us.
Sherlock, Dis. 27.

DEEP, adj. } A. S. Deope; Dut. Diep; Ger. Tief; Sw. Djup. From A. S. Dupp-an, to dip, to dive. Depth is the third pers. sing. As now applied, deep is—DEEP, n.
DEEP, ad.
DEE'PLY.
DEE'PEN.
DEE'PNESS.
DEE'PSOME.
DEPTH.
DE'PTHLESS.

Far below the surface; sunk, depressed, immersed; (met.) not easily fathomed, not easily seen through or penetrated; profound.

Deep is much used in Composition, and supplies some phrases or expressions of strong import.

The thef, that lay byneth hym, thogte on luther bote,
And smot the kyng wyth a knyf in the breste depe ynou,
And, to gret harm to al thys lond, the gode kyng he slou.
R. Gloucester, p. 277.

Now adde heye men of the lond ytake there byuore,
Hys fader ostage god ynou, and dep oth ysuore,
Wyth hym to holde trewelyche, and breke tho her oth.
Id. p. 301.

He did Harald body do drawe vp also tite,
& thorgh the podels it drouh, that foule were & deppest,
& sithen in to Temse his body did he kest.
R. Brunne, p. 54.

Athelstan in Scotland a selcouth ded he one,
He smote depe al Donbarre, an elne in the stone.
Id. p. 29.

A water in Snowdoun runnes, Amber is the name,
An arm of the se men kennes, the depnes may none ame [tell.]—Id. p. 240.

The dupe dale and durke, un symely to see to,
What may hit by mene, madam ich by seche.
Piers Ploughman, p. 15.

He is lyk to a man that bildith an hous that diggide depe and sette the foundement on a stoon.—Wiclif. Luke, c. 6.

Thries I was at schip breche, nyght and dai I was in the depnesse of the see.—Id. 2 Corynth. c. 12.

And as he cesside to speke he seyde to Symount, lede thou into the depthe, and slake your nettis to take fish.
Wiclif. Luke, c. 5.

Alone in woods, in rockes and in caues depe,
I may at mine owne wil both waile and wepe.
Chaucer. The Lamentation of Marie Magdaleine.

Then tooke I of the nightingale kepe,
How she cast a sigh out of her depe,
And saied, alas that euer I was bore.
Id. Of the Cuckow and the Nightingale.

And here I make mine protestacioun
And deepely sweare as mine power to bene
Faithful deuoid of variation. Id. Court of Loue.

Of the darke depenesse of hell been her gestes:
Beware yong man therefore I thee rede.
Id. The Remedie of Loue.

His tales with myn eares I herde,
But to myn herte came it nouht,
Ne sanke no deeper in my thought.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

And whan the citee was a slepe,
A wilde fyre into the depe
Thei caste amonge the tymber werke. Id. Ib. b. v.

——— Geometrie
Through which a man hath the sleight
Of length, of brede, of depth, or height. Id. Ib. b. vii.

Not rashe in uttering, but ware in considering every matter: and thereby, not quick in speaking, but deepe of judgement, whether they write or give counsell in all weightie affairs.—Ascham. The Schole Master, b. i.

Thy righteousnese standeth lyke the stronge mountaynes, and thy judgements lyke the greate derpe.
Bible, 1551. Psalm 36.

We geue it [holy Sacrament] the same honour that we geue vnto the Holy Scripture and Word of God, because it expresseth vnto our senses the death of our Saulour and doth more deepely print it within vs.—Frith. Workes, p. 168.

In the meane wale there is a little broke called Cocke not very broade, but of greate deapenes, in the whiche, what for haste of escapying, and for feare of followers, a great number were drent and drowned.—Hall. Hen. VI. an. 39.

——— Dark'n'd so yet shon
Above them all th' Arch-angel: but his face
Deep scars of thunder had intrencht.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. i.

——— What can be worse
Then to dwell here, driv'n out from bliss, condemn'd
In this abhorred deep to utter woe. Id. Ib. b. ii.

Happy the man, I grant, thrice happy, he,
Who can through gross effects their causes see:
Whose courage from the deeps of knowledge springs,
Nor vainly fears inevitable things.
Cowley. Virgil. Georgics, lib. ii.

I hear that you begin to blow the coal, and offer sacrifice to Demogorgan, the God of Minerals: Be well advis'd before you engage yourself too deep.—Howell, b. i. s. 6. Let. 41.

He made forts and barricadoes, heightened the ditches, deepened the trenches.—Stow. Queen Elizabeth, an. 1601.

She brought Sir Henry Montague from delivering law on the King's Bench, to look to his bags in the Exchequer, for she made him Lord High Treasurer of England, but he parted with his white staff before the year's end, though his purse had bled deeply for it. (above 20,000.)
Howell, b. i. s. 3. Let. 1.

By these remarkable steps, among others, did the merciful hand of God, in this short space of time, not only bind up and heal all those wounds, but even make the scars as undiscernable, as, in respect of the deepness, was possible; which was a glorious addition to the deliverance.
Clarendon. Civil Wars, vol. iii. p. 773.

This said; he [Proteus] diu'd the deepsome watrie heapes: I, and my tried men, tooke vs to our ships.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. iv.

Through these his slights he many doth confound;
And eke the rocke, in which he wonts to dwell,
Is wondrous strong, and hewen far vnder ground
A dreadfull depth, how deep no man can tell.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 9.

The preservation of his life, which was in the utmost hazard, by reason of the prejudices then reigning, obliged him to confine himself to the deepest privacy.
Ludlow. Memoirs, Pref.

The water deepned and sholdned so very gently, that in heaving five or six times we could scarce have a foot difference.—Dampier. Voyage to New Holland, an. 1699.

O save me God, thy floods about me roll,
Thy wrath divine hath overflow'd my soul:
I come at length where rising waters drown,
And sink in deep affliction, deeply down.
Parnell. The Gift of Poetry.

The deepness of their soil, and wetness of seasons, which would render it unpassable, forces them, not only to exactness of paving in their streets, but to the expence of so long causeys between many of their towns, and in their highways.
Sir W. Temple. On the United Provinces, c. 4.

Achitophel had form'd it, with intent
To sound the depths, and fathom where it went,
The people's hearts, distinguish friend from foes,
And try their strength before they came to blows.
Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel, pt. i.

But now, admitted guests in heav'n, we rove
Free and familiar in the realms above:
The wonders hidden deep in earth below,
And nature's laws, before conceal'd we know.
Pawkes. Eulogy on Sir I. Newton.

Ere yet the deepening incidents prevail,
Till rous'd attention feel our plaintive tale,
Record whom chief among the gallant crew,
Th' unblest pursuit of fortune hither drew
Falconer. Shipwreck, c. i.

But Jove, in goodness ever wise,
Hath hid, in clouds of depthless night,
All that in future prospect lies,
Beyond the ken of mortal sight.
Francis. Horace, b. iii. Ode 29.

DEER, n. A. S. Deor; Dut. Dier; Ger. Thier; Sw. Djur. Somner says, "Deor; wild deer, wild beasts of all kind;" and the etymologists derive it from the Gr. Θηρ, bestia.

And the parc of Wodestoke, & der ther inne do.
R. Gloucester, p. 439.

The kyng no man suld deme in courte for wilde dere.
R. Brunne, p. 110

He shewed him, or they went to soupere,
Forestes, parkes ful of wilde dere.
Chaucer. The Frankeleines Tale, v. 11,503.

White foxes and dere-skinnes are brought thither by the men of Penninge.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 257.

First, for his weeping into the needlesse streame;
Poore deere, quoth he, thou mak'st a testament
As worldlings doe, giuing thy sum of more
To that which had too much.
Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act ii. sc. 1.

Here the brakishness of the water, and the grossenesse of the ayre, is recompensed by the goodness of the earth, abounding with deeres and pasture.
Fuller. Worthies. Lincolne-shire.

Whom [Python] Phœbus basking on a bank espy'd;
Ere now the God his arrows had not try'd,
But on the trembling deer, or mountain goat;
At this new quarry he prepares to shoot.
Dryden. Ovid. Met. b. i.

To freeze beneath the midnight air,
The huntsman leaves the sighing fair,
Pleas'd if his hounds the deer pursue,
Or hold th' entangled boar in view.
Boyse. Horace, b i. Ode 1.

DEFA'CE, v. } Cotgrave says, Desfacer, as DEFA'CEMENT, } effacer. And effacer,—"to DEFA'CER. } efface, race, blot, rub out,
DEFA'CING, n. } wipe away." And Minshew,—quasi pristinam faciem auferre, seu formam delere. It. Sfacciare. And Skinner,—pristinam faciem exuere. See EFFACE.

To take away "all the feture of the face," (Gower;) to disfigure, to deform; to destroy the face, form or figure; and, generally, to destroy.

It was conserned with the shade,
All the writing that I se,
Of a castell that stoode on hie
And stode eke in so cold a place
That heat might it not deface.
Chaucer. House of Fame, b. iii.

And all the feture of thy face
In suche a wise I shall deface,
That euery man the shall forbeare.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

For as the Apostles in the primitive age first planted the church in trueth of the Gospel: so the same trueth beyng agayne defaced and decayed by enemies in thys our latter tyme, there was none that trauayled more ernestly in restoring of the same in this realme of England, than did William Tyndall.
Tyndall. Works. Foxe's Epistle to the Reader.

The which defacynge & blottyng of the beutys of that countrey, sometyme called the quene of ye earth, and floure of the worlde, chaunced not of her awne seife or her awne cause or desert, but that Italians her awne suckyng chyldren opened the gappe, and made the waye of her destruccion.
Hall. Hen. VII. an. 7.

You may haue heard, that his grace was enforced to flye out of Britaine into France, for doubts of being betrayed; his grace would not in any sort haue that reflect vpon the Duke of Britaine, in defacement of his former benefits.
Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 55.

Hip. 'Twere pity
The ruins of so fair a monument
Should not be dipt in the defacer's blood.
Tourneur. The Revenger's Tragedy, Act i. sc. 1.

They tende to the disturbing of the quiet state of the church, the discrediting and defacing of such as be in authoritie, and maintaining of licentiousness and lewd libertie.
Whitgift. Defence, p. 31.

Better a thousand such as I,
Their grief untold, should pine and die
Than her bright morning, overcast
With sullen clouds, should be defac'd.—Waller. On Sylvia.

The will of God, saith St. Paul, is our sanctification; what is that? what, but that the decaies of our frame, and the defacements of God's image within us should be repaired; that the faculties of our soul should be restored to their original integrity and vigour.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 4.

With these honourable qualifications, and the decisive advantage of situation,—low craft and falsehood are all the abilities that are wanting to destroy the wisdom of ages, and to deface the noblest monument that human policy has erected—I know such a man.—Junius, Let. 57.

Yet in all these straits, we see him [the Pope] display, amidst the recent ruins and the new defacements of his plundered capital, along with the mild and decorated piety of the modern, all the spirit and magnanimity of ancient Rome.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 3.

DEFAIL, v. } "Fr. Défaillance; a failing,
DEFA'ILANCE. } languor, faintness; defect, want, lack, defection," (Cotgrave.) From the Fr. Défaillir, to fail; from Lat. De, and fallere, (Skinner.) See TO FAIL.

Which to withstand I boldly enter thus,
And will defail, or else prove recreant.
Machin. The Dumb Knight, Act i. sc. 1.

It was necessary that the covenant of works should begin, for the covenant of faith and repentance could not be at first; there was no need of it, no opportunity for it, it must suppose a defailance, or an infirmity, as physick supposes sickness and mortality.—Bp. Taylor. On Repentance.

Were there times by law or custom defined, (as in some places indeed there are,) when all men should be required in person solemnly to attend on their Prince, for professing their allegiance, or deferring any homage to him; would not those who should wilfully refuse or decline appearance, be justly chargeable as guilty of dishonouring and wronging him? would not their such defailance pass for sufficient proof, that they do not acknowledge him, that at least they do not much regard or value him?—Barrow, vol. i. Ser 7.

There are no cares to disturb, nor fears to allay, nor sorrows to abate those ravishments of delight for ever; there is joy which far surpasseth the half sad and mixed pleasures of this world, being nothing else but pure delight, which pleaseth by its own excellence, and by having nor fears nor possibility of defailance in degree or continuance.
Comber. Companion to the Temple, pt. ii. s. 4.

DEFA'ITED. Mr. Tyrwhitt says,—Wasted. It is Fr. Desfait or desfaict; defeated, undone; decayed in feature and colour.

He so defaite was, that no maner man
Unneth he might knowen there he went
So was he leane, and thereto pale and wan
And feble. Chaucer. Troilus, b. v.

And of himselfe imagined he oft
To ben defaited, pale and woxen lesse
Than he was wont. Id. Ib.

DEFA'LK, v. } Fr. Deffalquer; It. Difal-
DEFA'LCATE, v. } care, subtrahere, (q.d.); Lat.
DEFALCA'TION. } Defulcare, i. e. falce resecare, et quasi amputare; to cut off as with a falchion.

To cut off, prune or lop off, take away part of; to diminish, to withdraw, to deduce, to subtract.

Although philosophers applie magnificence to the substaunce and astate of princis, and to priuate personcs beneficence and liberalitie; yet ben nat these in anie parte defalcate of their codigne praises.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. ii. c. 10.

And thereupon, Dec. 31, 1622, the lord treasurer did agree with them, that they should be allowed £9500 to be defalked in 9½ years out of their rent after the rate of £1000. per ann.
State Trials., Lord Treasurer Middlesex, an. 1624.

Our actions are viewed, but account is kept; and we are sure, to receive rewards for what we have given, and vengeance for what we have defalked.
Bp. Hall. Contem. The Widow's Mite.

But how infinitely temerarious is it for vile wretches either to invert or defalcate, and as it were to decimate the laws of the great God, by the which they and all their actions, must be judged at the last day?
Hopkins. Exposition. On Tenth Commandment.

Upon this the old gentleman, being pleased, it seems, with their desire of improving themselves, has granted them the continuance both of the Spectator and their bread and butter, having given particular orders, that the tea table shall be set forth every morning with its customary bill of fare, and without any manner of defalcation.—Spectator, No. 488.

One would have thought the natural method in a plan of reformation would be, to take the present existing estimates as they stand; and then to shew what may be practicably and safely defalcated from them.
Burke. On a late State of the Nation.

Nay, it is assured, that a reversionary grant of the office of laurest has in this instance been added to the treasurership, yet with the defalcation of the annual butt of sack, which the lord steward calculates will be a great saving to the nation.—Mason. Ode to Sir Fletcher Norton, Note.

DEFA'ME, v. } Fr. Diffamer; Sp. Desfamar;
DEFA'ME, n. } It. Diffamare; Lat. Diffamare;
DEFAMA'TION. } Gr. Δυσφημ-ειν, to speak ill;
DEFA'MATORY. } (from δυς, ill, and φημ-η,
DEFA'MER. } fame.)
DEFA'MING, n. } To speak ill of, to speak against the fame, reputation or character; to speak to the discredit, disgrace or dishonour of any one; to calumniate.

Defame, the noun, is used by Chaucer and others as we now use infamy: also written diffame.

The date a thousand was, thre hundred mo bi thre,
The kyng did grete trespas, difamed the pape's se.
R. Brunne, p. 321.

Blesse ye men that cursen you, preye ye for men that defamen you.—Wiclif. Luk, c. 6.

And me were leuer die than her diffame.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. iv.

It is a sinne and eke a gret folie
To apeiren any man, or him defame,
And eke to bringen wives in swiche a name.
Id. The Milleres Prologue, v. 3149.

And to thise clerkes two he [Nero] gan to preye
To alen him, and to girden of his hed,
That to his body, whan that he were ded,
Were no despit ydon for his defame
Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,107.

Suspicious was the diffame of this man,
Suspect his face, suspect his word also,
Suspect the time in which he this began.
Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8791.

Wilom ther was dwelling in my contree
An archedeken, a man of high degree,
That boldely did execution
In punishing of fornication,
Of defamation, &c.—Id. The Freres Prologue, v. 6888.

And better it shall: for of thy dede
The worlde shall euer singe and rede,
In remembrance of thy defame.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

O euil tonges, which clap at eu'ry winde
Ye slea the quick, and eke the dead defame,
Those that liue well, some faut in them ye fynde;
Ye take no thought in slaundering their good name.
Uncertaine Auctors. Against Wicked Tongues.

And if we do, or suffre to be done to the cõtrary, by any maner of way, the which God forbede, we wyll than, yᵗ we be reputed for false and forsworne, and to ryn into suche blame and defamy as a kinge sacred ought to do in suche case.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 242.

Lastly, the end of it must be either to the diffamation of the queen's majesty, or stirring up of insurrection, sedition, and rebellion; for the former I trust, that the whole course of our behaviour, both in our ministry and conversation, declareth itself to be so far from seeking to defame her highness, as it tendeth, to the uttermost of our powers, to the advancement of her honour.—State Trials. J. Udal, an. 1590.

I meane curyous, fantasticall parsons, pryuye dyffamours of dylygent and vertuous labours.
Nicoll. Thucydides, Pref. fol. 3.

But on the tother syde now, if he saye not true, but that in the diffaming & slaundering of the spiritualitie, hys sentence stand not there, but wet there much further furth. & so farre furth also, as amounted vnto as much as I say yᵗ he sayd, and vnto much more too: then will euery man beare me record, yᵗ I misreport not him, but he me.
Sir T. More. Works, p. 1008.

But shee herselfe did thinke it done for spight,
And touched was with secret wrath and shame
Therewith, as thing deuis'd her to defame.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 5.

They that went about to excuse the defame of this slight, reported how he [Earl of Arrane] feared that he should have beene betraied to the English by his host, for hatred which they had conceiued against him for manie of his offences.
Hollinshed. Scotland. Queen Marie, an. 1544.

Their ayme is onely men's defamation, not their reformation; since they proclaime men's vices unto others, not lay them open to themselves.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act iii. sc. 6.

When C. Calvus after certaine libels and defamatorie epigrams against him, dealt by the mediation of friends for a reconciliation, he [Julius Cæsar] of his owne accord wrote first unto him.—Holland. Suetonius, p. 28.

And where my lord advocate doth urge against the pannel defaming of the noblemen, it is answered by the pannel, that the first author must be the defamer, and not the revealer.—State Trials, an. 1631. Lord Ochiltrie.

They held no torture then so great as shame,
And that to slay was less than to defame.
Butler. On the Weakness and Misery of Man.

Many virulent writers, (whether set on to it, or officiously studying to merit by it, did not appear,) threw out, in many defamatory libels, a great deal of their malice against the Duke of Marlborough: they compared him to Catiline, to Crassus, and to Anthony: and studied to represent him as a robber of the nation and as a public enemy.
Burnet. Own Time, an. 1712.

Joyn. He is a wit, you say, and what are wits? but contemners of matrons, seducers, or defamers of married women.
Wycherly. Love in a Wood, Act iii. sc. 1.

Another very easy and unexpensive method of being serviceable to others is, by vindicating the characters of those that have been unjustly defamed and traduced.
Porteus, vol. ii. Ser. 17.

He [the man of candour] never lends an open ear to those defamatory reports and dark suggestions, which, among the tribes of the censorious, circulate with so much rapidity, and meet with such ready acceptance.—Blair, vol. ii. Ser. 10.

DEFA'TIGATE. } Lat. Defatigare, atum,
DEFA'TIGABLE. } (de, and fatigare.) See
DEFATIGA'TION, v. } FATIGUE.

To drive about to an unspeakable degree, excessively. And thus—

To weary, to tire.

Why do we not spede vs hastely to come vnto that rest of eternite whiche may be obteyned by oure litel and shorte labours here rather than folow ye voluptuous pleasures of this worlde, whereby we shall come in to euerlastynge defatigacyons & weryuesse in helle.

Fisher. Seuen Psalmes, Ps. 143. pt. ii.

Up which defatigating hill, nevertheless we scrambled, but with difficulty.—Sir T. Herbert. Travels, p. 200.

It was no fault of ours that we did not uncessantly keep our spiritual powers upon the most intense exercises that they were capable of exerting; we were made on set purpose defatigable, that so all degrees of life might have their exercise.—Glanvill. Pre-existence of Souls, c. 14.

Another reprehension of this color is in respect of defatigation, which makes perseverance of greater dignity than inception, for chance or instinct of nature may cause inception, but settled affection, or judgment, maketh the continuance.

Bacon. A Table of the Colours of Good and Evil, pt. ii.

DEFA'ULT, n. } From Fr. Défaillir, to DEFA'ULT, v. } fail. (See DEFAILANCE, and DEFA'ULTER. } FAULT.) "Fr. Défault or défaut—

A fault, offence or defect; any want, lack, penury, scantness or scareeness; a defection," (Cotgrave.)

Chaucer renders, (Boethius, b. iii.) bonis pluribus carent, "there be defaut of many goods."

The verb, to default, is sanctioned by Milton;—

To fail or be deficient, or cause to fail or be deficient, or be wanting; to miss or omit.

So that of god ynow, that in other londes ys
Ther by cometh to Engelond, that no defaute nys.

R. Gloucester, p. 2.

Sir, for this hire feste & for the Trinite,
Suffre vs nought to lese, for defaute of the.

R. Brunne, p. 16.

As be yow never the furste. the defaute to blame.

Piers Ploughmon, p. 209.

And for ther is so great diuersitie
In English, and in writing of our tong
So pray to God, that none miswrite the,
Ne the misse metre, for defaut of tong.

Chaucer. Troilus, b. v.

Ye, God amend defautes, sire, quod she,
Algates welcome be ye, by my fay.

Id. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7392.

Lo, sayth the kynge, nowe male ye see,
That there is no defaute in mee.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

And yet for defaute dyed great multytude of people in sundry placys of the lâde, and whete was solde this yere and the next followyng at London for iiii. marke a quarter and aboue.—Fabyan. Edw. II. an. 1317.

Yet since it was his fortune, not his fault,
Himselfe thereof he laboured to acquite,
And pardon crau'd for his so rash default,
That he gainst courtesie so fowly did default.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 3.

So that from thence we shall not need dispute whether they have depos'd him, or what they have defaulted towards him as no king, but shew manifestly how much they have done toward the killing him.

Milton. The Tenure of Kings and Magistrates.

Were it possible that some religious Justinian might after the same manner imploy the wits of some of the best learned in examining the controversies, and selecting out of the best writers what is necessary, defaulting unnecessary and partial discourses, and so digest into order the method, and leave for the direction of posterity, as it were, theological pandects: infinite store of our books might very well lie by, and peaceably be buried; and after ages reap greater profit with smaller cost and pains.

Hales. Remains. Ser. Rom. xiv. 1.

This day hath been wholly taken up in calling the house over. The defaulters are to be called over this day se'nnight, and then they, and who shall absent themselves in the mean time, to be proceeded against.

Marvell. Works, vol. i. p. 57.

Feb. 16. A clause for doubly assessing the members, defaulters in attendance, in the bill of subsidies, was moved.

Parliamentary History, an. 1672.

Nor yet condemn me as disabled quite,
If I can do no more—you see I write:
Still make our former loves my pleasing theme,
And, in default of passion, give you fame.

Boyse. To his Wife.

DEFE'ASANCE. } Fr. Desfaire, to undo;
DEFE'ASIBLE. } (see DEFEAT.) And thus—
To annul, to abrogate, to avoid or make void.
Spenser uses defeasance as defeat.

The whiles that hoarie king, with all his traine,
Being arrived, where that champion stout
After his foes defeasance did remaine,
Him goodly greets.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 12.

He made Egerton to acknowledge a recognizance of 10,000 marks, with a defeasance, that if my lord chancellor did decree it for him, 6000 marks was to be distributed among those honourable persons that did solicit for him.

State Trials, an. 1620. Lord Bacon.

Puf. How! I tell thee, Justice Tutchin, not all
Thy bailiffs, sergeants, busy constables,
Defeasans, warrants, or thy mittimusses,
Shall save his throat from cutting, if he presume
To woo the widow eclipped Taffata;
She is my wife by oath.—Barry. Ram Tricks, Act iii. sc. 1.

If the king be seised of land by a defesible title, and dieth seised, this descent shall toll the entry of him that right hath, as it appeareth by 9 E. IV. 51.

State Trials, an. 1608. The Case of the Postnati.

DEFE'AT, v. } De, and feat, past part.
DEFE'AT, n. } of Fr. Faire; Lat. Facere, to DEFE'ATURE. } do, to make. It. Disfare;
"Fr. Desfaire—

To undo, break; defeat, discomfit, overcome, ruin, destroy, overthrow," (Cotgrave.)

And of himselfe imagined he oft
To ben defeated, pale and woxen lesse
Than he was wont.—Chaucer. Troilus, b. v

He therefore what by deceitful fraude, flaterye and fayer false promises, gote the fauour of ye Romans to defeat his brother's sone of the kingdom.—Joye. Expos. of Daniel, c. 11.

Where our Indians flayed off the skinne of his head, cut off both his armes in the high way, reserving his haire for the triumph, which their king hoped to make for the defeat of his enemy.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 340.

He all their ammunition
And feats of war defeats,
With plain heroic magnitude of mind
And celestial vigour arm'd.—Milton. Samson Agonistes.

Too well I see and rue the dire event
That with sad overthrow and foul defeat
Hath lost us heav'n.— Id. Paradise Lost, b. i.

The day before the night of my defeature,
He greets me with a casket richly wrought;
So rare, that art did seem to strive with nature,
T' express the cunning workman's curious thought.

Daniel. The Complaint of Rosamond.

And therefore hath she brib'd the destinies,
To cross the curious workmanship of nature,
To mingle beauty with infirmities,
And pure perfection with impure defeature.

Shakespeare. Venus & Adonis.

The flame spreading farre abroad declared the diffeature of the Samnites more evidently, and staied them there for going further.—Holland. Livie, p. 384.

Yea, Almighty God himself often complains, how in a manner his designs were defeated, his desires thwarted, his offers refused, his counsels rejected, his expectations deceived.—Barrow, vol. I. Ser. 1.

But if this be sufficient to convict the adventure of imposture, the best attested facts of antiquity will be in danger; such, for instance, as the defeat of Julian's impious purpose to rebuild the temple of Jerusalem; to the true circumstances of which defeat, the relators of it have added many very fabulous and absurd.

Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. ii. Notes.

DEFECATE, v. } Fr. Déféquer; to fine,
DEFECATE, adj. } purge, cleanse, purify. Lat.
DEFECA'TION. } Defecare—
To free from the fæces, lees, dregs, any filthy excrescence; to purify.

And sith ye are all seven defecate
Participant of diuine sapience,
This great iniury done to our hic estate
Methink with pain we should make recôpence.

Chaucer. The Testament of Cresside.

If the corne be good, the water holesome and clene, and the ale or biere welle and perfytelye brewed and clensed, and by the space of syx dayes or more, settled and defecate it must needs be a necessary & conuenient drynk, as well in sykness as in helth.—Sir T. Elyot. Castle of Helth, b. ii.

They were neuer yet in any age, or countrie, that I can heare, or reade of; so regulated, or reformed by lawes, or otherwise; as to be thoroughly defecated, and purged from their filthinesse, or reduced to such honest, commendable, profitable, necessary, or Christian ends, as might justly plead in their defence.—Prynne Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act ii.

Thus we are involved in inextricable perplexities about the divine nature, and attributes; and in our reasonings about those sublimities are puzled with contradictions, which are but toyings of our phancies, no absurdities to our more defæcate faculties.—Glanvill. Van. of Dogmat. c. 11.

He was afterwards an hungry, (said the Evangelist,) and his abstinence from meat might be a defecation of his faculties, and an opportunity of prayer, but we are not sure it intended any thing else.—Bp. Taylor. Gt. Exemp pt. i. s. 9.

Till the soul be defecate from the dregs of sense, and refined to an angelic temper, it can "never taste how good the Lord is," and will not forsake sensual enjoyments.

Bates. On Spiritual Perfection, c. 1.

The Cocceians [the followers of Hutchinson] have sublimed the crude nonsense of the Cabalists, so long buried in the dull amusement of picking mysteries out of letters, into a more spiritual kind of folly; a quintessence well defecated from all the impurities of sense and meaning.

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. v. s. 1.

DEFE'CT, v. } Lat. Deficere, defectum,
DEFE'CT, n. } to undo; (de, and facere, DEFE'CT, adj. } to do.)
DEFE'CTIBLE. } A defect, any thing undone, (so.) which ought to DEFECTIBI'LITY. } be done; and therefore—
DEFE'CTION. } wanting.
DEFE'CTIVE. } Defect, the verb, is used
DEFE'CTIVELY. } by some of our old writers;
DEFE'CTIVENESS. } To be wanting, to fail, to DEFE'CTUOUS. } fall off, to fall short; to be DEFECTUO'SITY. } insufficient; to be inade-
DEFI'CIENT. } quate. And,
DEFI'CIENCE. } Deficient,—wanting, fail-
DEFI'CIENCY. } ing, falling off; falling short, insufficient, inadequate.

For (qd. she) thou must nedes know, that good folke ben alwaie stronge & mighty, and the shrewes ben feeble and defect, & naked of all strengthes.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. iv.

If they had let the action fall at the height thereof in respect of those defects, which were such especially for the service at land, as would have made a mighty subject stoupe vnder thē, I do not see how any man could iustly have layd any reproch vpon him who commanded the same.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 136.

Marke this hardely, for suche a defection from Christ as Saint Paul speketh of, and of the strong delusion yt they should haue which beleeue lyes, yt they might be dampned. 2 Thess. ii.—Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii.

Defected honour neuer more
Is to be got againe.—Warner. Albion's Engl. b. v. c. 25.

After he [Earl of Essex] perceiued that nature began to faile and defect, he yeelded himselfe to die, and was verie desirous that his friends and wellwishers should have access vnto him, and to abide by him at their pleasure.

Holinshed. Ireland, an. 1576.

——— O why did God,
Creator wise, that peopl'd highest heav'n
With spirits masculine, create at last
This novelty on earth, this fair defect
Of nature. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

Now Arius maintained, the Son or word, to be κτισμα, a creature, made in time, and mutable or defectible.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 606.

It hath a defectible understanding, and a free and changeable will, and innumerable weaknesses.

Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. ii. Introd.

And some of these are the more considerable, I mean, those defectibilities in pronunciation, because the priest always speaking the words of consecration in a secret voice not to be heard.—Bp. Taylor. Disc. of the Real Presence.

And this defectibility may well be supposed, seeing it is granted by all, that there was that difference between the condition of saints and angels now in glory, and of the angels and Adam in their creation estate.

Goodwin. Works, vol. ii. pt. iii. p. 29.

The king thought it unjust to condemn a nation for the transgression of a part of it, and still hoped to redeem it from the infamy of a general defection.

Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. p. 113.

We press nature with overweighty burdens, and finding her strength defective, we take the work out of her hands, and commit it to the artificial help of strong waters, hot spices, and provoking sauces.

Raleigh. History of the World, b. i. c. 5. s. 5.

Fabius Maximus is reprehended by Polybius for defectively writing the Punicke warres.—Speed. The Preface.

And what greater nakedness or unfitness of mind than that which hinders ever the solace and peaceful society of the married couple: and what hinders that more than the unfitness and defectiveness of an unconjugal mind?

Milton. Doctrine, &c. of Divorce, c. 1.

Amongst the infirmities, therefore, of a commonwealth, I will reckon in the first place those that arise from an imperfect institution, and resemble the diseases of a natural body, which proceed from a defectious procreation.

Hobbs. Of Commonwealth, c. 29.

Diogenes supposeth that they [the souls] have an intelligence, but partly for the grosse thicknesse of their temperature, and in part for the abundance of moisture, they have neither discourse of reason nor sense, but are like unto those who be furious; for the principall part of the soul, to wit, reason, is defectuous and empeached.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 692.

We must not take this mercifull indulgence given to our defectuosities, as a dispensation for the sordidness of our loves.—Mountague. Devoute Essayes pt. i. Treat. 14. s. 2.

What, have we lived so many hundred years under such a form of justice as has been able regularly to punish all men that offended against it, and is it so deficient just now, that we must seek out new ways how to proceed
Cowley. On the Government of Oliver Cromwell.

Wherefore to encounter these inconveniences, we have with painfull and faithfull service every where sought out, and collected assistances, that supplements to deficients,—to variations, rectifications,—may be ministered.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, Pref.

It would argue doubtless in the other party great deficience and distrust of themselves, not to meet the force of his reason, in any field whatsoever, the] force and equipage of whose arms they have so often met victoriously.
Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilikè.

So may I reply, there is no more rectitude and resemblance of God in this world, than he hath ordained from eternitie; concurrently with the gift of free-will to his creature, from the perversion whereof all deficiencie and dissimilitude from God arises.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 4. s. 3.

Now his mind was to have made up this defect, by taking the picture, and placing it, as it might stand properly enough, before the whole book of the Psalms: and being fair on the back side, to have appointed his servant Lyly, an artist in such matters, to have written thereon what was defecture.—Strype. Life of Parker, b. iv. s. 3.

There were fewer instances then of leaving one sect for another, than now we have of defection to Popery, or of apostacy to Mahometism.—Bentley. On Free Thinking, § 49.

But, when this matter was in private debated, some observed, that, King James by going about to prove the truth of the birth, and yet doing it so defectively, had really made it more suspicious than it was before.
Burnet, Own Time, an. 1689.

In the same manner, self contempt supposes a self meanness or defectiveness; and may be either a just modesty, or unjust humility —Shaftesbury. The Moralist.

Nothing in Nature, or in Providence that is scant, or defectuous, can be stable and lasting.
Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 15.

All of them [philosophers] (as has been before shown) were very imperfect and deficient, and far from being able to make up an entire and compleat scheme of the whole duty of man in all cases.
Clarke. On Nat. and Rev. Relig. Prop. 10.

In under-praising thy deserts, I wrong;
Here find the first defacience of our tongue:
Words, once my stock, are wanting, to commend
So great a poet, and so good a friend.
Dryden. Epistle to Mr. Motteux.

They found the deficiencies in the former reign were of two sorts; the one was of sums that the Commons had voted, but for which they had made no sort of provision; the other was, where the supply that was given came short of the sum it was estimated at: and between these two, the deficiencies amounted to fourteen millions: this was the root of the great debt that lay on the nation.
Burnet, Own Time, an. 1702.

If they see one man beat another they readily enough discern a power in him that beats, but they cannot so easily conceive the others defeat owing to his power of being beaten, which they rather look upon as weakness and defect of power.—Search. Light of Nature, pt. i. c. 1.

He quickly therefore withdrew himself from such wretched auxiliaries, and the Regent himself seemed pleased at his defection.—Goldsmith. Life of Lord Bolingbroke.

It [revelation] was given for the instruction of all mankind, the lowest as well as the highest, the most illiterate as well as the wise and learned; and if with any difference, with a special regard to the benefit of those, who from their condition were the most deficient in the means of natural improvement —Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 8.

Hence, as this island consists of mountain-land and valley, it must always make a middling crop; for when the low grounds fail, the uplands supply the deficiency.
Grainger. Sugar Cane, b. i. Notes.

And after all, the rules of religion and virtue, which were drawn up by these philosophers, have been very imperfect and defective in many instances.
Watts. The Strength of Human Reason, Conf. 8.

DEFE'NCE, s.
DEFE'NCE, n.
DEFE'NSION.
DEFE'NCELESS.
DEFE'NCELESSLY.
DEFE'NCELESSNESS.
DEFE'ND.
DEFE'NDABLE.
DEFE'NDANT, n.
DEFE'NDANT, adj.
DEFE'NDER.
DEFE'NDING, n.
DEFE'NDRESS.
DEFE'NSATIVE.
DEFE'NSER.
DEFE'NSIBLE.
DEFE'NSIVE, adj.
DEFE'NSIVE, n.
DEFE'NSIVELY.
DEFE'NSOUR.

Fr. Défense; It. Defensione; Sp. Defensa; Fr. Défendre; It. Difendere; Sp. Defender, Lat. Defendere, proprie de se ac suis fendere, hoc est arcere, depellere.

1. To keep or hold off, ward off, repel; and thus —to guard, to secure, to fortify, to uphold, to protect.

2. To keep off, to ward off; to reject, to repel, to resist; to prohibit, to forbid, to contradict, to deny.

Mr. Tyrwhitt says, to defend, in Rom. of the Rose, is to ransom; it is, to guard, protect, save themselves, (sc.) by the gifts of lamprele; and thus, redeem or ransom themselves, or they shall be bound with a cord, &c.

From pres. part. defendens, we should write defendent.

To defence or defense, is used by our old writers as they used, to defend. And see the quotations from Blackstone.

Al her wyth out defense, by northe and eke by southe.
R. Gloucester, p 253.

Vor gret raunson he easte [asked] of hom, to helpe him spene, [spend]
Vor defendi is lond, & is worre to sousteen.—Id. p. 498.

And wo so another monne's god by nyme wol myd vnrygt,
Myd rygt he may ys owe lese, gyf the defendor ath the mygte.
Id. p. 198.

Hii hulde hom there defensables, to libbe other to dele.
Id. p. 549.

He salle at thi wille mak alle thin amendes,
& late alle be stille, that thou him defendes.
R. Brunne, p. 177.

As God to alle good folke. suche guvynge defendeth.
Piers Ploughman, p. 41.

Kynge and knyghtes. that holy churche defenden.
Id. p. 147.

Adam afterwarde. a gens hus defens [this prohibition]
Feste fret [eat] of that fruit. Id. p. 350.

But summe for enuye and stryf, summe for good wille prechen Crist, and summe of charite witynge that I am put in the defense of the Gospel.—Wiclif. Philipensis, c. 1.

As it is iust to me to feele this thing for all ghou for that I haue ghou in herte and in my boondis and in defendyng and confermyng of the Gospel that alle ghe be felowis of my ioye.—Id. Ib.

The roses weren assured all
Defenced with the strong wall.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

This Minos hath a monster, a wicked beast
That was so cruel, that without arest
Whã yt a man was brought into his presence
He would hym eat; there helpeth no defence.
Id. Legend of Ariadne.

If that I break your defence, [i. e. prohibition.]
Id. Troilus, b. iii.

At last, she saied to a yong man hartlesse
Other discrit vnware and defencelesse.
Id. The Remedie of Loue.

How may this weke woman han the strength
How to defend again this renegate!
Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 3532.

By all the saints that we preie
But they defend them with lamprele.
He shall haue of corde a longue
With which men shall him binde.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

Prudence answered; certes wel I wote, attempre weping is nothing defended, to hem that sorweful is, among folke in sorwe, but it is rather graunted him to wepe.
Id. The Tale of Melibeus.

I am seruant of these creatures to me deliuered, not lord, but defendour.—Id. The Testament of Loue, b. ii.

At euery corner of this wall
Was set a tour ful principall
And euerich had without fable
A portcolise defensable
To kepe of enemies. Id. Rom. of the Rose.

Against the proud Grekes made defence
With her victorious hand.
Id. The IX. Ladies Worthie. Balade.

And Adam eke In Paradise,
When he stode moste in all his prise,
After the state of innocence,
Ayen the God brake his defence,
And fell out of his place aweie.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

For worde is wynde, but the maistrie
Is that a man hym selfe defende
Of thynge, which is not to commende.—Gower. C. A. b. iv.

Which masse he willed to be reared hye
Toward the skies, and ribbed all with oke:
So that your gates, ne wall might it receive,
Ne yet your people might defenced be
By the good zele of old deuotion.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

But when they came thether and founde the toune better manned and more strongly defenced, then expectation imagined, thei gaue no assaute but laied seige aboute the toune.
Hall. Hen. VI. an. 5.

But when no defencion could take place, but all went by tyrannie and meere extortion, it burst in the end to an vprore and tumult.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 159. Marriage of Priests Defended.

The plaintife sayth, I require the law; which is graunted: then commeth an officer and arresteth the party defendant, and vseth him contrary to the lawes of England.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 240.

Such a bitter contention was among them, that the defendant part was driuen for a while to keepe silence.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 658. Christ's Powerfie Denied.

The more appeareth the foblenesse of their parte, and the falsehoode of theyr heresies, if they haue any greate witte, or any greate learninge in deede, and then for all that, in the defendynge of those matters wyth suche foolyshe handelynge so shamefully confounde them selfe.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 863.

What furious thought, my wretched spouse, quod she,
Did moue thee now such wepons for to weld?
Why hastest thow? This time doth not require
Such succor, ne yet such defenders now.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

The kynge sent out his comyssyoners, chargynge his lordes with theyr assygnes sowdyours, to mete with hym in defensyble arraye at the cytie of Arras by Marymawdeleyne day next ensuing.—Fabyan, vol. ii. an. 1377.

Moreouer, as thou knowest not the infirmitie, so thou approachest not to the cure & helthe. The dolour is not there, as thou haste made defensiues.—Golden Boke, c. 42.

Thei that be ill, been alwaies double ill, bycause thei beare armour defensiue to defend their own yuels: and armes offensiue, to assaile the good maners of other.—Id. c. 15.

Dyuers popes, as Alexander the Syxte, Pius the iii. and Julius the ii. nowe beynge pope, by theyr tymes, eyther of them sunderly, wyth auctorytie & consent of theyr spyrituall & deuyne counsayll, elected & chase thys excellente prynce, and admytted hym for cheyefe defensour of Chrystes church, before all other Crysten prynces.—Fabyan, vol. ii. an. 1509.

If I may know any of their fautors, comforters, counsellers or defencers, or any that haue suspect bookes or quiers of such errours and heresies: I shall let you, my lord of Canterburie, or your officers in your absence, or the dioceasans and ordinaries of such men, haue soone and readie knowing.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 591. Certain Godly Persons persecuted.

—— Human invention
Could not instruct me to dispose her where
She could be more defenced from all men's eyes;
An anchorite lives not prisoned in a wall
With more security.—Shirley. The Bird in a Cage.

He is, said he, a man of great defence
Expert in battell and in deeds of armes.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 2.

King Dermote, whom his subjects then
And long ere then did hate,
Was left defenceless, desprate of
His life, depriu'd his state,
And fled to England
Warner. Albion's England, b. v. c. 26.

Love is as subtily catch'd as a disease;
But being got it is a treasure sweet
Which to defend is harder than to get.
And ought not be profan'd on either part,
For though 'tis got by chance, 'tis kept by art.
Donne, Elegy 17.

Having battered the walls of the town on the south side, but to small purpose, because of the rampiers and ditches which the defendents had cast up within; he retired himself and his army to Leith.
Spotswood. Church of Scotland, an. 1571.

They could not inforce the duties of men's communion with a church confest to be in many things blame-worthy, vnlesse they should oftentimes seeme to speake as halfe defendors of the faults themselues, or at the least not so vehement accusers thereof as their adversaries.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 62.

Shortlie after the kyng gathered the sixt penie of the temporall men's goods through England, Ireland, and Wales, which had been granted him at the foresaid Parlement holden at Yorke, towards the defending of the realme against the Scotts.—Holinshed. England. Edw. II. an. 1323.

Who in Latine, French, and English pronounced the Queene's maiesties vsuall stile of England, France, and Ireland, defendresse of the faith, &c. crying three times largesse.—Stow. Queen Elizabeth, an. 1586.

[We] confidently rely upon God, the Holy Scriptures, right reason, and the most venerable and prime antiquity, which are the proper defensatives of truth, for its support and maintenance.—Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, Introd.

These, vnder the leading of Robin of Ridsdale, came vp both euill apparelled, and worse harnessed, in rusty armour, neither defencible for proofe, nor seowred for shew.
Speed. Rich. III. b. ix. c. 19. s. 7.

But Robert Fitz-Stephen thus aduanced, for his more assurance, beganne to raise a towne at Carricke, making the place which nature had already fortified, much more by art defencible.—Id. Henrie II. b. ix. c. 6. a. 56.

This happy breed of men, this little world,
This precious stone, set in the silver sea,
Which serues it in the office of a wall,
Or as a moate defensive to a house,
Against the enuy of lesse happier lands.
Shakespeare. Rich. II. Act II. sc. 1.

Austriaci were never so matched as with Count Mansfelt, for he is a perpetual motion and doth not stand upon the defensive (as others have done hitherto, and lost by the bargain) but he is always setting upon them, and doth make war at their cost.—Cabbala. Sir Isaac Wake to the Duke.

Camalodunum, where the Romans had seated themselves to dwell pleasantly, rather than defencirely, was not fortifyd; against that therefore the Britains make first assault.
Milton. History of England, b. ii.

But Justice bears the godlike shape of Law,
And law requires defence, and equal plea
Betwixt th' offender, and the righteous judge.
Dryden. The Duke of Guise, Act v. sc. 1.

What better texture could we give it, (the skin,) which altho' less obdurate and firm, than that of some other animals, yet is so much the more sensible of every touch, and more compliant with every motion! and being easily defendible by the power of man's reason and art, is therefore much the properest tegument for a reasonable creature.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. v. c. 6.

Now growling, spluttering, wauling, such a clutter,
'Tis just like puss defendant in a gutter
Dryden. Epilogue to the King & Queen.

Immortal offspring of my brother Jove;
My brightest nephew, and whom best I love,
Whose hands were join'd with mine to raise the wall
Of tottering Troy, now nodding to her fall;
Dost thou not mourn our power employ'd in vain,
And the defenders of our city slain?
Dryden. Ovid. Met. b. xii.

The Christian's chief defensatives lie not in that armour that is sword-proof or bullet-proof, and who wears no breast-plate upon, but within his breast, that is, his innocence, his conscience, and his confidence in a reconciled God.
South, vol. iii. Ser. 10.

Men in a town, threatened with a mighty siege, abandon their suburbs, and slight those out-works which are either weak of themselves or not well defensible for want of men; and resolve only to make good those posts which they are able fully to man, and easily to relieve.
Sir W. Temple. On the United Provinces, c. 8.

Since therefore we cannot win by an offensive war, at least a land-war, the model of our government seems naturally contriv'd for the defensive part: and the consent of a people is easily obtain'd to contribute to that power which must protect it.—Dryden. All for Love, Ep. Ded.

Defence, in it's true legal sense, signifies not a justification, protection, or guard which is now its popular signification: but merely an opposing or denial (from the French verb, defender) of the truth or validity of the complaint.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 20.

For it would be ridiculous to suppose that the defendant comes and defends (or, in the vulgar acceptation, justifies) the force and injury, in one line, and pleads that he is not guilty of the trespass complained of, in the next.—Id. Ib.

But they are so situated as to be cannonaded by shipping, and are in a manner defenceless against an enemy of any force by land.—Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 14.

In the rivers, we meet with a thousand minnows for one pike; in the sea, a million of herrings for a single shark. Compensation obtains throughout, defencelessness and devastation are repaired by fecundity.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 26.

Their [Livy and Tacitus] deviations into poetry, though not strictly defensible, yet, as they appear to be the genuine effects of their feelings excited by extraordinary occasions, are really delightful.—V. Knox. Ess. No. 23.

They came at once to a resolution of getting rid of the difficulties, which arose from the complication of their trade with their revenue; a step which despoiled them of their best defensive armour, and put them at once into the power of administration.—Burke. On a late State of the Nation.

What I have endeavoured, is only that you may be able, as St. Peter directs, to give an answer to them that ask you a reason of the hope that is in you. In doing which, remember you are concerned only to be on the defensive.
Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 34.

DEFE'R, v. } It. Differire; Sp. Diferir; Fr. Différer,— DE'FERENT, adj. }
DE'FERENT, n. }
DE'FERENCE. }
DEFE'RMENT. }
DEFE'RRER. }
DEFE'RRING, n. }

"To defer, delay, drive or put off; to protract, prolong, linger, procrastinate, shift off day after day," (Cotgrave.) Lat. Differre, in diversas partes ferre; to bear diverse ways. Also—

To put away, (sc.) our own judgment, and prefer, (sc.) that of another; and thus, to pay respect or regard, to submit.

Deferent,—that which bears, carries, or conveys.

To defer the matter, (in Bacon,) to bear it, to lay it before, (to refer.) Brevint entitles his fifth chapter—Of the Worship deferred to the Virgin, (i. e. offered in deference to.) And see the quotations from Hammond and Barrow below, and from the latter in v. DEFAIL.

The doctrine which we should be taught before we were baptized, and for lack of age is deferred vnto the yeares of discretion, is the key that bindeth and looseth, locketh and vnlocketh the conscience of all sinners.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 388.

There is no greatter paine, than whan the heart is deferred fro that it longeth sore to haue.—Golden Boke, c. 33.

Which, for it is too long here to abide,
I will deferre the end vntil another tide.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 7.

The commissioners being somewhat astonished, deferred the matter to the Earle of Northumberland, who was the principal man of authoritie in those parts.
Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 67.

Why was not John who was a virgin chosen, or preferred before the rest? (so electus est, is the ensuing words interpreted by præferretur, not in dominion over, but in place before the other apostles) his answer is, because Peter was the Elder, the deference being given to his age.
Hammond. Works, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 137.

The figures of pipes, or concaves, through which sounds pass, or the other bodies deferent: conduce to the variety and alteration of the sounds.—Bacon. Nat. Hist. § 250.

Hard bodies refuse not altogether to be mediums of sounds. But all of them are dull and unapt deferents, except the air.—Id. Ib. § 217.

If the materials I have amass'd be still in heapes blame not me, who write not for glory, unlesse you approve of what I write, and assist the deferrent, for I am no more.
Evelyn. Mem. To Lord Clifford, Nov. 1671.

But, sir, my grief, join'd with the instant business,
Begs a deferment.
Sir John Suckling.

The old man many evils doe girt round;
Either because he seekes, and having found,
Doth wretchedly the use of things forbeare,
Or does all businesse coldly and with feare;
A great deferrer, long in hope, growne numbe
With sloth, yet greedy still of what's to come.
B. Jonson. Horace. The Art of Poetrie.

The second obloquy is, That to defer the revenge so long, argues an inveterate malice, and an ill disposition. For the deferring of my revenge, I answer, that at the receiving the hurt I was so astonished that I thought I had been slain.
State Trials. Lord Sanquire, an. 1612.

Upon which account of age St. Hierome did suppose that he was preferred before the beloved disciple; why (saith he) was not St. John elected, being a batchelour? it was deferred to age, because Peter was elder, that a youth and almost a boy might not be preferred before men of good age.
Barrow. On the Pope's Supremacy.

When I got on board, I found the launch hoisted in, the ships unmoored, and ready to put to sea; but our sailing was deferred till five o'clock in the next morning, when we weighed anchor.—Cook. Third Voyage, b. i. c. 4.

Who, from a blind deference to authority, think the credibility of a witness sufficient, to evince the certainty of all facts indifferently, whether natural or supernatural, probable or improbable; and knowing no distinction between faith and credulity, take a facility of believing, to be the surest mark of a sound Christian—Middleton. Free Inquiry, Pref.

DEFFIGURE, v. } The verb is used by DEFIGURA'TION. } Weaver, as equivalent to, to figure out, describe, delineate. The noun by Hall, as Dis-figuration, (qv. and Figure.)

On the pavement of the said chappel be these two stones as they are here defigured.
Weever. Funeral Monuments, p. 844.

These traditions are defigurations and deformations of Christ exhibited.—Bp. Hall. Remains, p. 30.

DEFILE, v. } Anciently written File and DEFI'LEMENT. } Afile, (qv.) Dut. Vuylen; A.S.
DEFI'LER. } Fyl-an, afyl-an, befyl-an, in-
DEFI'LING, n. } quinare, contaminare, fœdare,
DEFO'UL, v. } to defile, pollute or make
DEFO'ULING, n. } filthy, (Somner.) See the quotation from Hall in v. Deflour.

To dirty, to pollute, to corrupt, to contaminate.

He hupte hym vp fram the bord, in gret wrathe the ynou,
And hente thys lof by the top, fram the borde hym drou,
An defouled hym vnder hym myd honde, & myd fote.
R. Gloucester, p. 277.

I haue leuer that thou do me to dethe, then defoule my body, that I have made a woo to kepe in maydon hede, while that I lyue, to my Lorde Jhesu Criste.
R. Brunne, p. 197. Pref.

Heere ye and undirstonde, That thing that entrith into the mouth defoulith not a man, but that thing that comith out of the mouth defoulith a man.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 15.

For which thing I deme hem that of hetheno men ben convirtid to God to be not diseeaid, but to write to hem, that thei absteyne hem fro defoulingis of mawmetis.
Id. Dedis, c. 15.

The holy bed, defouled of marriage
For once defouled, may not recouered be.
Chaucer. Balade. On Woman's Chastity.

Wel ought a wif rather hireselven slo
Than be defouled, as it thinketh me.
Id. The Frankeleines Tale, v. 11,708.

They haue set vp their abhominacions, in the house that hath my name, and haue defyled it.—Bible, 1551. Jer. c. 7.

But spyghtfully and malycyously he called them abortyues or chyldren of destruction, dysdaynously rebukynge the Gentyll kynge as a defyler of relygion and polluter of their holye ceremonyes.—Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii.

And after when they be defoyled agayne by sinne, they be agayne cleansed, purged, and made fayre, by grace & perdon of God and the sacramēt of penaunce, and other holy sacraments taking their effect, strength, and vertue of Christes passion.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 771.

Yet now is this so happy a meanwhile,
And interlightning times thy virtues wrought,
That discord had no leasure to defile,
So fair attempts with a tumultuous thought.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. v.

Now there are defilements of two sorts; defilements of the flesh, when men wallow in gross and sensual sins; and defilements also of the spirit, and such are they that reside in the heart, and break not forth into outward act: Now from both these the fear of God cleanseth us.
Hopkins, Ser. 25.

A wicked spirite came vppon Sobredus your predecessour, which was a defiler of virgines, and a breaker of ecclesiasticall priueledges; for sitting royally among his barons at a dinner the Diuell plucked away his soule without confession of his sinnes.—Stow. The Mercians, an. 718.

The deputie considering and bethinking with himselfe how the church of God was abused, and that God had in store some wrath and indignation for this defiling of his holie sanctuary, did for the avoiding thereof write his letters of aduertisement to her highnesse, and most earnestlie praied hir princelie authoritie for redresse thereof.
Holinshed. Ireland, an. 1576.

Where, when they saw that goodly boy, with blood
Defouled, and their lady dresse his wound,
They wondred much.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 5.

But as those poltroons that fling dirt
Do but defile, but cannot hurt;
So all the honour they have won,
Or we have lost, is much at one.—Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 2.

The same apostle adds in the very same verse, that 'tis also an equally essential part of the same religion, that a man keep himself unspotted from the world; that he preserve himself free from the defilement and corruptions of a vicious and debauched age.—Clarke, vol. ii. Ser. 124.

No sour, pedantical, abusive rage,
No vicious rant defiles her freest page;
No vile indecent salty, or prophane,
To pleasure fools or give the wise a pain.
Byrom. Dulces Ante Omnia Musæ.

Like flow'rs selected from the rest, and bound
And bundled close to fill some crowded vase,
Fades rapidly, and by compression marr'd,
Contracts defilement not to be endured.
Cowper. Task, b. iv.

DEFILE, v. } Lat. Filum, a thread; Fr.
DEFILE, n. } Filer—

To draw out threads, to prolong, to extend in length; and thus, to move off in a line or file.

The Duke of Marlborough was so satisfied with these assurances, that he came back to his army, and quickened their march, so that he brought them to Triers: and he advanced eight leagues further, through so many defyles, that the French might easily have made his march both dangerous and difficult.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1705.

Through the hollow, which lies between the hind parts of these two heads, that is to say, under the ham, between the ham strings, and within the concave recess of the bone formed by the extuberances on each side, in a word, along a defile, between rocks, pass the great vessels and nerves, which go to the leg.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 8.

DEFI'NE, v. DEFI'NEABLE. DEFI'NER. DE'FINITE. DE'FINITELY. DE'FINITENESS. DEFINI'TION. DEFI'NITIVE, adj. DEFI'NITIVE, n. DEFI'NITIVELY.

Sp. Definir; It. Diffinire; Lat. Definere, quasi finem dare; to set a bound or limit.

To bound or limit; to describe the bounds or limits, the end, the termination; and thus, consequentially, as in Cotgrave,—Definir,—"to conclude, determine or discuss; precisely to express; fully to describe; exactly to declare."

Chaucer uses definish.

But I wol not determine
Of princes power, no define,
Ne by my word comprehend iwis
Yf it so farre may stretch in this.—Chaucer. R. of the R.

But I haue defined, that blisfulness is souerain good, for which euerl wight demeth that thilke estate that he desyreth euer all thinges that it be blisfulnesse.—Id. Boecius, b. iii.

But if this ne may not be doen, then is it not possible that han be any soch thynge as I haue definished a litle here before.—Id. Ib. b. v.

But that I aske, why that the fifthe man
Was nom hosbond to the Samaritan?
How many might she have in marriage?
Yet herd I never tellen in min age
Upon this noumbre diffinitioun.
Id. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 5607.

The juge answerd, of this in his absence
I may not yeve diffinitif sentence.
Id. The Doctoures Tale, v. 12,106.

The grounde my sonne for to secho
Upon this diffinicion,
The worldes constitucion
Hath set the name of gentilnesa
Upon the fortune of richesse.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

And how then can such men define upon other regions very farre without that parallel, whether they were inhabited or not, seeing that in so neere a place they so grossly mistook the matter.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 54.

And ye king of Israel said vnto him: euen so shal thy iudgmēt be, as thou hast defyned it thyselfe.
Bible, 1551. 3 Kings, c. 20.

Where one is apprehēded for killing a mā, we lay murder to his charge; whereupon the accused person, when he graunteth the killing, & yet denieth it to be murder: we must streight after haue recourse to the definition, and aske what is murder, by defining wherof, and comparing the nature of the word with his deede done, wee shall sone knowe whether he comitted murder, or manslaughter.
Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 96.

And for the same causes we pryue hym of all kyngely dignyte and worshyp, of any kyngely worship in hym lefte, and we depose hym by our sentēce defynytyfe.
Fabyan, an. 1399.

For though thei be not cyrcuscribed in place, for lack of bodily dymēcio & measuring, yet are they & angels also diffinitively so placed where thei be for the time, yt thei be not at one time in diuers places at ones as sayntes bee in sundry countryes, & very farre a sondre called vpon at ones.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 188.

But vertue's seat is deepe within the mind
And not in outward shewes, but inward thoughts defin'd.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. Prol.

Great variety there is of those opportunities, not definable particularly, but only observable by him, that not only in his duty towards God, and toward himself, but also toward his weak or sick brother, doth ακριβως περιπατειν, walk circumspectly, and observingly.
Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 291.

When any thing is spoken by Christ to a single person or a definite number of persons, which concerns a moral duty, or a perpetual rite of universal concernment, that single person, or that little congregation, are the representatives of the whole church.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Cons. b. ii. c. 3.

It [the body of Christ] is not there definitively for the same reason, because to be definitely in a place is to be in it so as to be there, and no where else.
Id. The Real Presence, § 11.

And therefore in geometry, (which is the only science that it hath pleased God hitherto to bestow on mankind) men begin at settling the significations of their words; which settling of significations, they call definitions; and place them in the beginning of their reckoning.
Hobbs. Of Man, c. 4.

There was a sentence in the admiralty, that the Peter should be discharged; and the king's advocate, not having then any knowledge of further proof, consented to it, but this was not a definitive sentence, but a sentence interlocutory, as it is termed in that court.
State Trials, an. 1626. The D. of Buckingham.

No man, no synod, no session of men, though call'd the church, can judge definitively the sense of Scripture to another man's conscience, which is well known to be a general maxim of the Protestant religion.
Milton. Of Civil Power in Ecclesiastical Causes.

A more ready way to define controversies, is for every one not to prescribe to others, or to prosecute. for then men would more calmly see the truth and consent.
Barrow. On the Pope's Supremacy.

And indeed it is very improbable, that we, who by the strength of our faculties cannot enter into the knowledge of any being, not so much as of our own, should be able to find out by them, that Supreme nature, which we cannot otherwise define than by saying it is infinite; as if infinite were definable, or infinity a subject for our narrow understanding.—Dryden. Religio Laici, Pref.

But is he therefore found? vain searcher! no:
Let your imperfect definition show
That nothing you, the weak definer, know.
Prior. I am That I am. An Ode.

From indefinite words a definite conclusion (especially in matters of this kind) may not be inferred; it is said, do thou feed my sheep; it is not said, do thou alone feed all my sheep; this is their arbitrary gloss, or presumptuous improvement of the text.—Barrow. On the Pope's Supremacy.

Definition being nothing but making another understand by words, what idea the term defin'd stands for, a definition is best made by enumerating those simple ideas that are combin'd in the signification of the term defin'd: and if instead of such an enumeration, men have accustomed themselves to use the next general term, it has not been out of necessity, or for greater clearness, but for quickness and dispatch sake.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 3.

Upon each man, according to the true quality of his doings, thus detected, examined and stated, a definitive sentence shall pass whereby he shall be acquitted and approved, or condemned and reprobated.—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 33.

Their appellations lie from the eldership to a conference; from that to a provincial; from that to a national synod. Which must definitively end all.—Strype. Life of Whitgift.

It [gravity] was no better, but often worse, than what a French wit had long ago defined it, viz. a mysterious carriage of the body, to cover the defects of the mind.
Sterne. Tristram Shandy, vol. i. c. 11.

In the schools of early discipline, where youth is usually initiated in the studies of humanity, men are taught to believe that virtue is founded on eternal truth, and that the distinctions of right and wrong are as clearly definable as those between the meridian sunshine and the midnight shade.—V. Knox. The Spirit of Despotism, s. 32.

After all this, it is surely superfluous to answer the question that has once been asked, Whether Pope was a poet; otherwise than by asking in return, If Pope be not a poet, where is poetry to be found? To circumscribe poetry by a definition will only show the narrowness of the definer, though a definition which shall exclude Pope will not easily be made.—Johnson. Life of Pope.

As that [middle age] is the busy period in the life of man, it includes in effect the whole compass of religion, and therefore cannot have its peculiar character so definitely marked and ascertained.—Blair, vol. iii. Ser. 4.

Definitives, the subject of the present chapter, are commonly called by grammarians, articles, articuli, Αρθρα. They are of two kinds, either those properly and strictly so called, or else the pronominal articles, such as this, that, any, &c.—Harris. Hermes, b. ii. c. 1.

DEFI'X. Lat. Defigere, defixum; (de, and figere, to fix.)

To fix down, to fix or fasten firmly.

Afterward by reason of the manifold and cruell warres mooued by the Tartars, they were constrained to defixe their princely seate and habitation in that extreme prouince of the north.—Hackluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. i. pt. ii. p. 89.

DEFLAGRA'TION. DEFLA'GRABLE. DEFLAGRABI'LITY.

Lat. Deflagrare, (de, and flagrare;) Gr. Φλεγ-ειν, to burn.

See ante, CONFLAGRATION.

[I] excited in the melted mass of our transmuted salt as many deflagrations as I could.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 89.

But to return to our chymical oils, supposing that they were exactly pure; yet I hope they would be, as the best spirit of wine is, but the more inflammable and deflagrable.
Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 538.

In this way of proceeding we have been forced to spend much more time, than the opinion of the already deflagrability (if I may so speak) of salt petre did beforehand permit us to imagine.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 362.

Thus smoke and rain and serenity succeed each other, till the mountain in an instant discharges its torrent fires, which rush down with resistless fury, roll over palaces, temples, and cities, and carry with them deflagration, ruin, and horror.—Potter. Sophocles. Preface to Œdipus.

DEFLE'CT. DEFLE'CTION, or DEFLE'XION.

Lat. Deflectere, xum; (de, and flectere, to turn, bend or curve)—

To bend or curve, to turn aside, out of the straight way, to deviate.

By reference whereunto we shall discern nothing to be an evil, that doth not deflect from the rectitude of that line, which is drawen to the centre of goodness by the hand of him, who is himself this centre.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 15. s. 2.

In like manner, all good men in the way of vertuous practice tending directly towards happiness, (our common journies end,) it being their design, their interest, and their endeavour not to mistake the way, nor to deflect from the right and nearest course thereto, men are apt to think it reasonable, and safe to accompany, in their progress, or to press after them in their steps.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 2.

In consequence upon this sense, and with a little deflection from it, to justifie a person sometime denoteth to approve him, or esteem him just; a mental judgment, as it were, being passed upon him, so wisedom is said to be justified, that is, approved by her children.—Id. vol. ii. Ser. 5.

Passive matter being totally inert, its resistance to the laws impressed upon it must be extremely weak; and consequently the disorders arising from that resistance, proportionably slow and unheeded: while that active self moving principle, the mind, flies out at once from the centre of its direction, and can, every moment, deflect from the line of truth and reason.
Warburton. Natural and Revealed Religion, Ser. 2.

The one proceeds to virtue and truth by the nearest and most compendious ways: the other leads to the same point through certain deflections and durations, by a winding but pleasanter path.
Lowth. On the Poetry of the Hebrews, by Gregory, Lect. I

DEFLO'UR, v. DEFLO'URER. DEFLORA'TION. DEFLO'URING, n. DEFLO'URISH.

Fr. Déflorer, défleurer; Sp. Deflorar; Lat. Deflorare, quasi florem demere, to take away the flower.

To strip or rob of the flower; the bloom, the grace, the beauty. Used literally by Mountague. (Met.)—

To viciate, to defile, to pollute.

Deflourish is used by Drummond literally.

Defloration is used, as,—a picking or culling of the flowers, or generally, the beauties.

But Progne most of sorow made,
Whiche sigh hir sister pale and fade,
And speeheles and dishonoured,
Of what she had be defloured.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

Dany of Rothesay prince of the realme and eldest sonne to the kyng was accused to his father of dyuers heynous crymes, and in especiall of lasciuious & disolute lyuyng, as rauyshyng of wiues, defouryng of virgins, and defouling of maidens.—Hall. Hen. IV. an. 8.

As thoughe marryage were an entraunce into violent whoredome, and a filthy deflourer of virginitie, which rather sāctifieth it' to increase to God's honour, as in Abraham & Sara, Zachary and Helysabeth.
Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii.

The sayd byshop, as the fame then went, hadde disflouryshed a mayden the doughter of the sayde Sir Gautier.
Fabyan, an. 1308.

Gather therefore the rose, whilst yet is prime,
For soon comes age, that will her pride deflowre.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

If a man had deflower'd a virgin, or brought an ill name on his wife that she came not a virgin to him, he was amerc'd in certain shekels of silver, and bound never to divorce her all his days, Deut. xxii. which shows that the law gave no liberty to divorce, where the injury was palpable; and the absolute forbidding to divorce, was in part the punishment of a deflowrer and a defamer.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

He turneth his eye upon the fields, gardens, and groves, as flying into priviledged retreats, exempt from such violent distractions, and presently he findeth an earthquake, playing, as I may say, upon all of them successively in their several turns; rending the cedars, deflowering the gardens, swallowing the fruits of the campagnes and vineyards, leaving all the pleasures of his prospect inverted into objects of horror and amazement.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 19. s. 6.

Defourish'd mead, where is your heavenly hue.
Drummond, Son. 59. pt. I.

But the common printed chronicle, is indeed but an epitome or defloration made by Robert of Loraine, Bishop of Hereford, under Hen. I.—Selden. Preface to the Poly Olbion.

Whereas actual discovery (as it were) rifles and defloures the newness and freshness of the object, and so for the most part, makes it cheap, familiar and contemptible.
South, vol. I. Ser. 1.

He is ever a thief and robber of his good name, a deflowrer and dasher of his reputation, an assassine and murtherer of his honour.—Barrow, vol. I. Ser. 18.

Mothers, and guardian aunts, forbear
Your impious pains to form the fair,
Nor lay out so much cost and art,
But to deflow'r the virgin heart.—Green. The Spleen.

DEFLOW. v. } Lat. Defluere, xum, to flow
DEFLU'XION. } down; (de, and fluere, A. S.
DEFLU'X. } Flow-en, to flow.)
DEFLU'XION. } See ante, CONFLOW.

It is rather a collection of some superfluous matter deflowing from the body.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 4.

Barly meale either raw or boiled, doth discusse and resolve, assuage and ripen, all impostumes engendered either by way of gathering and collection of humors, or by some defluxe and rheumatike descent.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxii. c. 25.

When I landed in Venice, after so long a sea voyage from Spain, I was afraid the same defluxion of salt rheum, which fell from my temples into my throat in Oxford, and distilling upon the uvula, impeached my utterance a little to this day, had found the same channel again.—Howell, b. I. s. 2. Let 1.

The contained water was so far expanded by congelation, that it not only thrust up the corks, but the cold had taken away the defluency of the oil.—Boyle. Works, vol. II. p. 672.

When a sharp defluxion hath endangered the sight of the eye, I have seen it oftentimes suddenly diverted by raising a blister in the pit of the neck behind, and drawing off the moisture that way.—Id. Ib. vol. vi. p. 347.

I have received a letter from Balbus, wherein he excuses himself for not giving me an account of Antony's intentions concerning the law I inquired after: because he has gotten, it seems, a violent defluxion upon his eyes.
Mermoth, Cicero, b. xiii. Let. 8.

DEFEDATION. Lat. Fadus, foul. Of uncertain origin. "Fr. Défédation, a fowling, soyling, filing, defiling, staining, spotting of," (Cotgrave.)

Nor then be confident; successive crops
Of defedations oft will spot the skin
These thou, with turpentine and gummie pods,
Reduc'd by coction to a wholesome draught,
Total remove, and give the blood its balm.
Grainger. The Sugar Cane, b iv.

DEFOIL, v. Lat. De, and folium, a leaf. To strip off the leaves.

Over and beside, in disburgening and defoiling a vine, you must beware how you pluck off those burgeons that are like to beare the grape, or to go with it.
Holland. Plinie, b. xvii. c. 22.

DEFORCE, v. } To deprive by force, (qv.)
DEFO'RCEMENT, } "Fr. Déforcer; to disseise,
DEFO'RCIANT. } dispossess, violently take, forcibly pluck from," (Cotgrave.)

This Lowys, as affermeth the Frenshe Cronycle, maryed the doughter of Guy, Erle of Cotcheforde, the which after, for nerynesse of kynne, was deforced from the sayd Lowys, to y^e^ great displeasure of the sayd Erle Guy.
Fabyan, vol. I. c. 215.

Putting and establishing armed men in townes, castels, and other places to defend the land against him, to deforce him of his fee.—Holinshed. Edw. I. an. 1296.

In levying a fine of lands, the person, against whom the fictitious action is brought upon a supposed breach of covenant, is called the deforciant. And, lastly, by way of analogy, keeping a man by any means out of a freehold office is construed to be a deforcement: though, being an incorporeal hereditament, the deforciant has no corporeal possession.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 10.

DEFORM, v. } Fr. Déformer; Sp. Desformar; It. Difformare;
DEFO'RM, adj. } Lat. Deformare; de, and DEFO'RMATE, adj. } forma, which Tooke thinks
DEFORMA'TION. } is the A. S. Frem-an, facere,
DEFO'RMED. } to frame,—by a common
DEFO'RMEDLY. } transposition of the r.
DEFO'RMEDLY. } To strip or spoil of the DEFO'RMER. } form, shape, or figure; to DEFO'RMITY. } take it away; to disfigure,
DIFFO'RMITY. } to deface.

Difformity, in Beveridge, is equivalent to Nonconformity.

Deformed is the figure of my face,
To loke on it no people hath liking.
Chaucer. The Complaint of Cresside.

——— Then rose she up and toke
A polished glasse, and her shadowe couth loke
And whan she sawe her visage so deformate
If she in hart were wo, I ne wite God wate. Id. Ib.

For other haue their ful shap and beauty
And we (q. d. they) ben in deformity.—Id. Court of Loue.

He beseched the Scottish kyng that frō thēce forth he wou de not afflicte and plage his people, nor deforme and deface his naturall realme and countrey with such terrible fyer, flame, and hauocke.—Hall. Hen. VII. an. 11.

No man that is deformed of the seed of Aaron the priests, shall come nye to offer the sacrifices of the Lorde. Yf he haue a deformite, he shall not preace to offer the breade of hys God.—Bible, 1551. Leuiticus, c. 21.

Their fell contention still increased more,
And more thereby increased Furor's might,
That he his foe has hurt, and wounded sore,
And him in bloud and durt deformed quight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. II. c. 5.

How oft do we neglect this bodies life,
And outward comely plight, for to adorn
Our soul with virtuous ornaments! and strive
To fat our mind with truth, while it's forlorn,
Squalid, half nasty, pallid, wan, deform.
More. On the Soul, pt. II. b. III. c. 2 s 41.

Answ. I confesse 'tis hard in some sense, I e to them that suffer under you for being hereticks, (as you call those that depart from your deformations) and for being invaders, (which all may at pleasure be called) that are not able to resist.—Hammond. Works, vol. II. p. 617.

And now thir mightiest quell'd, the battel swerv'd
With many an inrode gor'd, deformed rout
Entered, and foul disorder.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. VI.

We do injuriously in thinking to taste better the pure Evangelic manna, by seasoning our mouths with the tainted scraps and fragments of an unknown table, and searching among the verminous and perrited rags dropt over worn from the toiling shoulders of time, with these deformedly to quit and interface the entire, the spotless, and undecaying robe of truth, the daughter not of time, but of heaven.
Id. Of Prelatical Episcopacy.

A matter, indeed, so distastful for me to remember, or to write of, that it abhorres my very soule to fill the pen with inke, or to blot the paper with these black spots of darknesse, and deformers of England's faire face
Speed. King James, b. x. c. 1. s. 31.

To reduce our worship &c now into the pattern of the first four or five hundred years, (which is the plausible pretence of our new deformers,) is to bring Popery again in by the same degrees now, as it at first crept in by Gauden. Works, vol. II pt II p. 129.

——— If every thing
Be not done fitly and in proportion,
To satisfy wise and good lookers on,
Since most men be such as most think they be
They're lothsome too by this deformity.
Donne. Funeral Elegies. First Anniversary.

A distempered, discomposed mind, is a limb out of joint, which is fit for no action and moves both deformedly and painfully.—Leighton. Ser. Habak. iii. 17, 18.

So parting summer bids her flowery prime
Attend the sun to dress some foreign clime,
While withering seasons in succession, here
Strip the gay gardens, and deform the year.
Parnell. To an Old Beauty.

I might add, that the works of nature, the better lights and glasses you use, the more clearer and exactly form'd they appear; whereas the effects of human art, the more curiously they are view'd and examin'd, the more of deformity they discover.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. I.

And this difformity to the will and nature of God is that we call sin, or which the word sin, in its proper notion, brings into my mind.—Beveridge. Private Thoughts, Art. 2.

Monsters, on the contrary, or what is perfectly deformed, are always most singular and odd, and have the least resemblance to the generality of that species to which they belong.
Smith. Moral Sentiments, pt. V. c. I.

——— There was discord, prowess there,
There hot pursuit, and there the feature grim
Of Gorgon, dire deformity, a sign
Oft borne portentous on the arm of Jove.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

DEFRAUD, v. } Fr. Défrauder; Sp. Defraudar; It. and Lat. Defraudare, to take away by fraud, (de, and fraud-are.)
DEFRAUDA'TION. }
DEFRA'UDER. }
DEFRA'UDING, n. }
DEFRA'UDMENT. } See FRAUD.

To take away by fraud, by deceit, by guile; to cheat.

But Sache stood: and seide to the Lord, lo Lord, I geue the half of my good to pore men, and if I haue ony thing defrauded ony man: I yelde foure so myche.
Wyclif. Luk, c. 19.

He besought, Pallas and Juno
And Diane, for to helpe also
That he be not defrauded of his boone.
Lydgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. I.

When the said Cardinall had forfeited all his good, because of prouision, as the statute thereupon more plainly declareth, by hauing the rule of you my right doubted Lorde, [he] purchased hymselfe, in greate defraudacion of your highnes, a charter of pardon.—Hall. Hen. VI. an. 20.

To denye this right yf eyther of bothe aske it, is a defraudyng, for not onlye suche defraude, whiche pay not the money, that they are bound to paye, but such also, as refuse to doe that they are bound to do.—Udal. 1 Cor. c. 7.

——— They all did so conspire
To stand out fortune, that not one would go,
To bear away a hand from blood, not one,
Defraud the field of th evil might be done.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. viii.

To this is to be applied that which here follows in this place, why do ye not rather suffer injury and defraudation? i. e. it is more Christian and excellent to do so
Hammond. Annotations on 1 Cor. c 6.

I onely observe this one thing, that St. Paul permits it [going to law] onely in the instance of defraudation, or matter of interest; such as are defending of widowes and orphans, and churches, which, in estimation of law, are by way of fiction reckoned to be in pupillage and minority.
Bp. Taylor. Great Exemplar, pt. II.

That immediately after the choice of any new duke, in the next grand council, shall be openly rehearsed all former decrees against defrauders of the publick chests.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p 257.

Thirdly, he forbids rapines, defraudyngs, gaining to ourselves by any other man's losses.
Hammond. Works, vol I p 145.

If Cæsar to his own his hand extends,
Say which of yours his charity offends!
You know he largely gives to more than are his friends.
Are you defrauded when he feeds the poor!
Our mite decreases nothing of your store
Dryden. The Hind and Panther, pt. III

Here the great masters of the healing art,
These mighty mock defraudars of the tomb,
Spite of their juleps and catholicons,
Resign to fate. Blair. The Grave.

DEFRAY, v. } Fr. Défrayer. Franz. (of
DEFRA'YER. } which Skinner says, quod si a
DEFRA'YING, n. } Lat. Paratus,) is —costs, ex-
DEFRA'YMENT. } penses, charges.

To defray, is used as equivalent to—

To bear, pay or settle the costs, charges or expenses; to discharge them.

It may admit a conjecture, that fray in defray and affray, are the same word; that defray is the reverse of affray; and signifies—to compose or settle a fray, debate or dispute; and thus, to settle damages, costs or charges.

And hereupon, we were of necessitie enforced to bestowe in giftes a great part of those things which were giuen vs by well disposed people, to defray our charges.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. I p 60.

[The King] received him [the Emperor of Constantinople] as beseemed so great a Prince, and brought him to London, and roially entertained him for a long season, defraying the charges of his diet, and giuing him many honourable presents.—Id. Ib. Hen. IV. vol. II. pt. I. p. 71.

He received 20,000 per ann. by way of imprest, for the ordinary charge only of that office; which a far less sum would have fully defrayed.
State Trials. The Lord Treasurer Middlesex, an. 1624.

For since the time of the wars of the Medes, unto the beginning of the war of Peloponnesus, in all the registers and records kept of the defrayers of the charges of common plays, there were found but two men bearing name of Aristides that obtained victory.—North. Plutarch, p. 273.

Ptolemei appointed him [Lucullus] his lodging, and his table at court, which was never before known to be done to any foreign commander, and for the discharge of his expenses, and defraying his cost, he allowed him not as usually he did to others, but four times as much.—Usher, an. 3915.

That the king of Spaine should lade eight cars with wedges of gold for the duke, or (as some write) pay two hundreth thousand nobles, towards the defrayment of the duke's huge charges.—Speed. Rich. II. b. IX. c. 13. s. 85.

He feared Cromwell might apprehend a necessity of using me with more severity than he wished; and, to soften this delay, gave a warrant for a sum of money to me, for defraying my expenses while I stay'd, together with those of my journey to London.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol II. p. 89.

The enormous expence of the late war, therefore, must have been chiefly defrayed, not by the exportation of gold and silver, but by that of British commodities of some kind or other.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv. c. 1.

DEFT, adj. DE'FTLY. DE'FTNESS. } A.S. Dæfe, meet, fit, convenient, meetly. Dæflice,—fitly, conveniently, seasonably, in good time, commodiously, (Somner.)

——— A laughter never left,
Shook all the blessed deities, to see the lame so deft
At that cup service. Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

Lo, how finely the graces can it foote
to the instrument:
They dauncen deffly and singen soote,
in their merriment.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calendar. April.

——— But far she hath not gone,
When Ivel, a clear nymph, from Shetford sallying on,
Comes deftly dancing in thro' many a dainty glade.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 22.

By her, two little isles, her handmaids (which compar'd
With those within the Pool, for deftness not out-dar'd)
The greater Haling hight. Id. Ib. s. 2.

The wanton calf may skip with many a bound,
And my cur Tray play deftest feats around.
Gay. The Shepherd's Week. Monday.

Or if ye ween, for worldly stirs,
That man does right to mar his rest.
Let me be deft, and debonair,
I am content, I do not care. Byrom. Careless Content.

Hawkins, whose lips the Muses have imbued
With all the sweetness of th' Aonian spring,
Whom emuling I deftly learn'd to sing,
And smoother tune my numbers round and rude.
Edwards, s. 16. To J. H. Browne, Esq.

DEFUNCT, adj. DEFU'NCT, n. DEFU'NCTION. DEFU'NCTIVE. } Lat. Defunctus, (de, and fungi, functus.) There is in this word, says Vossius, the notion of perfecting and bringing to an end, (ad finem,) and hence (from finis) some etymologists suppose it to be derived. Defunctus est vita, id est, finivit officium vitæ, (i. e. has ended or finished the duty of life.) In English it is used as equivalent to—
Deceased, departed from life, dead.

After that all thynges necessary, for the interment and funerall pepe of the late kyng were sumptcously prepared and done the corps of the said defunct, was brought out of his priue chambre, into the great cheber.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 1.

What, shall thy lubricall and glibberie Muse
Lave as she were defunct.
B. Jonson. Poetaster, Act v. sc. 3.

Recommending the defunct, that is, him who hath performed all the duties of life, as one who shall enjoy the everlasting conversation of pious souls.
Transl. of Plato's Apol. of Socrates, &c. (1675,) p. 295.

Nor did the French possesse the Salike land,
Vntill foure hundred one and twentie yeeres
After defunction of King Pharamond,
Idly supposd the founder of this law.
Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act i. sc. 2.

Let the priest in surplice white,
That defunctive music can,
Be the death-divining swan,
Lest the requiem lack his right.
Id. The Passionate Pilgrim, s. 20.

Seeing the soul of man is permanent, and subsists after the death of the body, and yet the body also belongs essentially to the constitution of man; when the body is defunct, either the soul must remain perpetually in a state of separation, and, as it were, of widowhood, or the body must be recalled to life, and again united to it.
Bp. Bull. Works, vol. i. p. 39.

Cause all executors of the deceased, and the widows and kindred of such as are departed intestate, living within the city and diocese of Norwich, to appear, and produce the testaments and last wills of the said defuncts.
Strype. Life of Parker, an. 1567.

I cannot, however, forbear adding, that the people were extremely solicitous concerning the fate of Sulla, till the news of his death was confirmed; but now that they are assured of the fact, they are no longer inquisitive how it happened, well contented with the intelligence that he is undoubtedly defunct.—Melmoth. Cicero, b. x. Let. 15.

DEFU'SEDLY. Confusedly. See CONFUSE.

Finally (ceasing that I saw afterward the image of a naked man grasping a serpent in each hand,) there was an inscription of a toomb or burtall wherein these words did plainelie appeare, "Vxor annos XXX:" but so defusedlie written, that letters stood for whole words, and two or three letters combined into one.—Holinshed. Description of Ireland, c. 22.

DEFY', v. DEFY', n. DEFI'ANCE. DEFI'ER. } Fr. Desfier, défier; It. Sfidare, disfidare; Low Lat. Diffidare, diffiduciare. Omnia fidem aperte resonantia. Diffidare est fidei vinculum solvere, quod prius aliquando affidare connexerat, (Spelman.) See AFFY.

To renounce, refuse, deny, or reject affiance, i. e. faith given, placed or reposed; and, consequentially, to—
Proclaim independence, hostility; to challenge, to dare. Also, simply, to deny, renounce or refuse.

Edmunde bi messengers the erle he defies.
R. Brunne, p. 46.

This was her song: The fowler we defie
And all his craft. Chaucer. The Prologue.

For I defie the suretee and the bond,
Which that thou saist that I have made to thee.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1606.

Your pleasant looke, my very lode sterre
Was made a heraude of thilke same defiaunce,
Which vtterly behight me for to barre,
My faithfull trust, and all mine affiaunce.
Id. La Belle Dame sans Mercie.

And the Philistine sayde: I haue defyed the hoost of Israel this daye, geue me a man and let vs fight together.
Bible, 1551. 1 Kings, c. 17.

The king of Fraunce hearing the fauour that was shewed vnto the Emperour, sent imediatly a defiaunce vnto our king, not without our cardinal's and bishop's counsell, thou mayst well wite.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 371.

What word gave I unto thee, Mason? What message? I defy all familiarity and friendship betwixt us! Say thy worst.—Sir T. Wyatt's Oration.

O. E. Bol. Not for the world: since I have lost my sons,
All outward joys are from my heart remov'd:
Vain pleasures I abhor, all things I defy,
That teach not to despair, or how to die.
Heywood. The Four Prentices of London.

Par. I do defie thy commisseration,
And apprehend thee for a felion here.
Shakespeare. Romeo & Juliet, Act v. sc. 3.

And calling unto him a herald, quoth he, fly
To th' earl of Leicester's tents, and publickly proclaim
Defiance to his face, and to the Mountford's name.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 22.

——— Brief I am
To those that prate, and have done, no companion
To those that boast and have not; a defyer
To those that would and cannot.
Beaum. & Fletch. Two Noble Kinsmen, Act v. sc. 1.

Will not God visit us for these things? Will he not some time or other call us to a sad account for this open and scandalous violation and defiance of his most sacred fundamental laws, by which the world is governed and doth subsist!—Sharp, vol. vi. Dis. 8.

But these defiers of sleep seem not to remember, that though it must be granted them that they are crawling about before the break of day, it can seldom be said that they are perfectly awake; they exhaust no spirits, and require no repairs.—Adventurer, No. 79.

DEGE'NER, v. DEGE'NERATE, v. DEGE'NERATE, adj. DEGE'NERATELY. DEGE'NERATENESS. DEGENERA'TION. DEGE'NERACY. DEGE'NEROUS. DEGE'NEROUSLY. } Fr. Dégénérer; Sp. Degenerar; It. Degenerare; Lat. Degenerare, (de, and generare, formed from Gr. Γεν-ειν, to beget, to bear.) Degener, verb, is used by some of our old writers. In the passages from Spenser, some editions read degendering, and degendered.

To grow out of kind, be unlike his ancestors, (Cotgrave,) to be inferior to them; to become of a worse or baser nature or kind.

Man when he was in honour he vnderstode it not, wherefore he degenereth into beastlynes.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 4.

The Gortoans came next, which sometime folowed the Mediãs out of Euboia: but at those dayes degenerated from their country customes.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 85.

The which thing declareth moste euidently that men whiche haue caste downe their myndes, hope and iudgement from the dignitie and excellencye of their nature, are so degenerat and growen out of kinde, that thei seeme vtterly to be brute beastes.—Calvine. Foure Godlye Sermons, Ser. 3.

So that next off-spring of the Maker's loue,
Next to himselfe in glorious degree,
Degenering to hate, fell from aboue
Through pride, (for pride and loue may ill agree)
Spenser. An Hymn of Heauenly Loue.

And if then those may any worse be red,
They into that ere long will be degenered.
Id. Faerie Queene, b. v. Prol.

Though God, nor what he crav'd was then not known,
Yet of religion a degener'd seed
Industrious nature in each heart had sowen;
Which fruits (though wilde) did in abundance breed.
Sterling. Doomes day. The Fifth Hour.

The spotlesse lillies shew his pure intent,
The flaming marigold his zeale present,
The purple violets his noble minde,
Degen'rate never from his princely kind.
Beaumont. On the Death of Edward Stafford.

For nothing now a days is more degenerately forgotten, than the true dignity of man, almost in every respect, but especially in this prime institution, matrimony, wherein his native preeminence ought most to shine.
Milton. Tetrachordon.

Neither does it at all check or interfere with any parties in a state or religion; but is indifferently to be embraced by all differences in opinion, and can hardly be conceived capable (as many good institutions have done,) even of degeneration unto any thing harmful.—Cowley. Ess. The School.

Which public death (receiv'd with such a chear,
As not a sigh, a look, a shrink bewrays
The least felt touch of a degenerous fear,)
Gave life to envy, to his courage praise.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. i.

Gassendus hath excellently performed it, and, I am confident, to the conviction of those, whom nobler principles have not yet emancipated from that degenerous slavery.
Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 16.

How wounding a spectacle is it to see heroes, like Hercules, at the distaff, thus degenerously employed!
Decay of Piety.

How fair and sweet the planted rose
Beyond the wild in hedges grows!
For, without art, the noblest seeds
Of flowers degenerate into weeds.
The Lady's Answer to Hudibras.

It were happy for us if we could say, that all the Lord's people are holy; for then we should have nothing to do, but to praise and commend their virtues, which were an easy and a delightful task; but what pleasure is it to rake into the sores, or to reprove the vices of a degenerate age!
Stillingfleet, vol. ii. Ser. 3.

This upbraids our degeneration and apostacy, that we who are most indebted to the goodness of our Creator, should prove disloyal and rebellious, when the inferior creatures with one consent serve and glorify him.
Bates. On the Existence of God, Ser. 1.

We incline rather, to excuse the generality of the first and most ancient Stoicks from the imputation of atheism, and to account this form of atheism which we now speak of, to be but a certain degeneracy from the right Heraclitick and Zenonian cabala.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 133.

1. There was plainly wanting a Divine Revelation, to recover mankind out of their universal corruption and degeneracy; and without such a revelation, it was not possible the world should ever be effectually reformed.
Clarke. On Natural and Revealed Religion, Prop. 7.

The base and degenerous saying of one of them [Epicureans] is very well known: that life is always sweet, and he should still desire to prolong it; though, after he had been maimed and distorted by the rack, he should lastly be condemn'd to hang on a gibbet.—Bentley, Ser. 1.

Popery is the most degenerate form of Christianity that can be conceived, and lays a heavier yoke upon the necks of Christians than the Scribes and the Pharisees ever imposed upon the Jews.—Jortin. Remarks on Eccles. History.

I am apt to think, that in monarchical governments there is a source of improvement, and in popular governments a source of degeneracy, which in time will bring these species of polity still nearer an equality.—Hume, Ess. 12.

DEGLO'RIED. Dishonoured.

And with small stars a garland interchast
Of olive-leaves they bore to crown his head,
That was before with thorns degloried.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph after Death.

DEGLUTITION. Fr. Déglutir; Lat. Deglutire, to swallow, (de, and glutire;) Gluttus, (Gr. Γλωττις,) that part of the neck by which the food is transmitted; formed from the sound, glut, glut, which liquor makes when running through a narrow neck or passage, (Vossius.)
A swallowing.

So, for instance, the tongue serves not only for tasting, but also to assist the mastication of the meat and deglutition, by turning it about and managing it in the mouth.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

We cannot easily swallow whilst we gape. This, I understand, is owing to the muscles employed in the act of deglutition being so implicated with the muscles of the lower jaw, that, whilst these last are contracted, the former cannot act with freedom.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 9.

DEGRA'DE, v. } Fr. Disgrader; It. Disgradare; Sp. Desgraduar, gradu dejicere, to cast down from his rank or degree.
DEGRADA'TION.
DEGRA'DEMENT.
DEGRA'DINGLY.
Sometimes written disgrade.

To deject, throw or cast down, (sub.) from a higher degree, rank, or state, to a lower; to deprive of honorary rank or title; to disgrace, to dishonour.

Els let vs degrade hym, and delyuer him, and let the princes keep him from the people.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 624.

Disgradinge those bishops and abbots whom the French kinge and emperor had made.—Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii.

The ix. yere aboute Mydlent, a preest named Sir Thomas Bagley, and vicar of a vyllage in Essex, called Mauenden, a lytell from Walden, was detect of heresy, vpon the whiche he was degrated, & brent in the place of Smithfelde.
Fabyan, an. 1431.

They coulde not also deny but that forthwith vpon this iugement and hys degradacion, he kneled downe before the byshoppes chauncellour in the presence of all the people, & humbly besought him of absolucion fro the sentence of excommunicacion.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 349.

These two [Censores] had power and authority to disgrade a knight, by taking away his horse, and to put any off the senate, whom they saw live dissolutely and disorderly.
North. Plutarch, p. 296.

And what can we suffer, wherein he hath not gone before us even in the same kind? Was he not degraded when they scornfully put on him a purple robe, a reed into his hand, a thorny crown upon his head, saluting him with, Hail, King of the Jews! and so disrobed him again?
State Trials. Bastwick & Others, an. 1637.

He bore the diminution very well, as he was a wise man, and an excellent temper; and quickly recover'd so much grace, that he was made Earl of Manchester, and Lord Privy Seal, and enjoy'd that office to his death; whilst he saw many removes, and degradations, in all the other offices of which he had been possess'd.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. p. 54.

Not only by their deposing and waging war against him, which besides the danger to his personal life, set him in the farthest opposite point from any vital function of a king, but by their holding him in prison vanquished and yielded into their absolute and despotic power, which brought him to the lowest degradement and incapacity of the regal name.
Milton. The Tenure of Kings and Magistrates.

When William Sautre (who was the first that was put to death upon the account of heresy) was judged relapse by Thomas Arundel, Archbishop of Canterbury, in a convocation of his province, and thereupon was degraded from priesthood, and left to secular power; a writ was issued to burn him, which in the writ is called the customary punishment, (relating, it is like, to the customs that were beyond sea)—Burnet. History of the Reformation, b. i.

The lifting of a man's self up in his own opinion, has had the credit in former ages to be thought the lowest degradation that human nature could well sink itself to.
Locke. Second Vindication of Christianity.

Moments there frequently must be, when a sinner is sensible of the degradation of his state; when he feels with pain the slavish dependence under which he is brought to fortune and the world, to violent passions and settled habits, and to fears and apprehensions arising from conscious guilt.
Blair, vol. iv. Ser. 10.

DEGRE'E. } Fr. Degré; It. Grado; Lat. Gradus, a step. It is used by DEGRE'ED. } Chaucer literally for step; the DEGRE'INGLY. } step of a stair; a step by which to go up, to ascend.

A step; a step in progress, promotion, advancement; exaltation; as degrees in rank; a step, distant or removed; degree in relationship; degree in measurement.

Degreed and degreeingly rest upon the authorities quoted.

A seruitour ther was, that serued at the mete,
He stombled at a chance, & felle on his kne,
Thorgh the tother schank he ros, & serued in his degre.
R. Brunne, p. 55.

——— Lordes children sholde serven
Bothe God and good men, as here degree taketh.
Piers Ploukman, p. 78.

For thei that mynystren wel schulen gete a good degree to hemself and mych trist in the feith that is in Crist Iesu.
Wiclif. 1 Tim. c. 3.

Into that gardin, well wrought
Who so that me coud haue brought
By ladders, or els by degree
It would well haue liked me.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

Round was the shape, in manere of a compas,
Ful of degrees, the hight of sixty pas,
That whan a man was set on o degree
He letted not his felaw for to see.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1893.

His housing, his array as honestly
To his degree was marked as a king's.
Id. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9201.

For as the philosopher tolde
Of golde and silver thei ben holde
Two principal extremitees,
To which all other by degrees
Of the metalls ben accordant.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

But sithens it was our dutie to honour a man called to that degree of fortune, I beseech you am I gyltye because I could not gesse before that hee would offende.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 165.

Take but degree away, vntune that string,
And hearke what discord followes: each thing meetes
In meere oppugnancie.—Shakes. Troyl. & Cress. Act i. sc. 1.

——— Great indeed
His name, and high was his degree in heav'n.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

Sated at length, ere long I might perceave
Strange alteration in me, to degree
Of reason in my inward powers, and speech
Wanted not long, though to this shape retain'd.
Id. Ib. b. ix.

Shall we that are degreed aboue our people,
Whom heaven hath made our vassals, raigne with them?
Heywood. Rape of Lucrece, D.

It is for God, and for omnipotency, to do mighty things in a moment: but, degreeingly to grow to greatness is the course he hath left for man.—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 97.

Since in general there are manifestly in things, various kinds of powers, and very different excellencies and degrees of perfection; it must needs be, that, in the order of causes and effects, the cause must always be more excellent than the effect. And consequently the self existent being, whatever that be supposed to be, must of necessity (being the original of all things) contain in itself the sum and highest degree of all the perfection of all things.
Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 8.

When I consider the vast quantity of ice we saw, and the vicinity of the places to the pole where it is formed, and where the degrees of longitude are very small, I am led to believe that these ice cliffs extend a good way into the sea, in some parts, especially in such as are sheltered from the violence of the winds.—Cook. Second Voyage, b. iv. c. 7.

DEGUSTA'TION. Lat. Degustare; de, and gustare, from Gr. Γευστος, and that from Γευ-εσθαι, to taste. A tasting.

If thou have tasted how sweet the Lord is, thou canst not but long for more of him, yea, for all: It is no otherwise even in carnal delights, the degustation whereof is wont to draw on the heart to a more eager appetition; much more in spiritual, the pleasures whereof as they are more pure, so they are of the heavenly-minded with far greater ardency of spirit affected.—Bp. Hall. Soul's Farewell to Earth, s. 9.

DEHO'RT, v. } Old Fr. Deshenhorter; Lat.
DEHORTA'TION. } Dehortari, (de, and hort-ari.)
DEHO'RTATORY. } The ancient Romans, Vossius says, for Hortor, wrote Horior; and Horior, he conceives to be from Gr. Ορνυ-ειν, incitare, to incite, encourage.

To discourage, to warn or admonish, or advise, from doing any thing; to dissuade.

Wherefore Jermye wel dehorted and disswaded the peple sayinge: Se that ye beleue not the lying wordes and sermos of the halfe preachers saying: The temple, the temple of the Lorde is so holy.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 1.

On the contrary part, what cã be a greater dehortation from vice, then to haue laid before ones eyes not only the heynousnesse and enormitie of the offence, but also the miseries, calamities, shame and punishmentes worthely ensewyng vpon the same.—Golding. Justine, Epis. Ded.

The places of exhorting, and dehorting are the same which wee vse in perswading and disswading, sauing that hee which vseth perswasion, seeketh by arguments to compass his deuise: he that labours to exhort, doth stirre affection.
Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 64.

Wherof shall serue all the dehortacions and cõmynacyons & threts in Scripture, by which God calleth men from synne and euyl workes, yf the world wer once of the mind that thei believed after Luther, that no manne doth any euill dede hym selfe, but God dothe them himselfe.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 273.

Exhortation and dehortation, is counsel, accompanied with signs in him that giveth it, of vehement desire to have it followed, or to say it more briefly, counsel vehemently pressed. For he that exhorteth, doth not deduce the consequence of what he adviseth to be done, and tye himself therein to the rigour of true reasoning but encourages him he counseleth, to action. As he that dehorteth, deterreth him from it.—Hobbs. Of Commonwealth, c. 25.

The text [Eph. iv. 30] you see, is a dehortatory charge to avoid the offence of God.—Bp. Hall. Ser. June, 1644.

And thus much for the first thing to be considered in the dehortation; namely, the person dehorting, who was Christ himself. Pass we now to the 2. thing to be considered in it, to wit, the thing we are dehorted from, which is covetousness.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 10.

For he cometh unto thee, poor and lowly, riding upon an ass, to wean thee from the vain hopes of the heathen, from which the prophets have so often dehorted thy forefathers.
Horne. Works, vol. iv. Dis. 5.

DEHU'SK. To strip off the husk, (qv.)

——— Forcastinge that thy neighbour should haue more
Wheate (by the dowrie of his wyfe)
dehusk'd vpon the flore.
Drant. Horace. Epistle to Numitius.

Admit on flore thou haste in store
an hundreth thousande mets
Of corne dehuskede: what cums thereby.
Id. Ib. b. i. Sat. 1.

DE'ICIDE. Sp. Deicida; Lat. Deus, God, and cædere, to kill.

Then mock thy knowledge, and confound thy pride,
Explaining how perfection suffer'd pain,
Almighty languished, and Eternal died:
How by her patient victor death was slain;
And earth profan'd, yet bless'd with deicide.
Prior. I am that I am. An Ode.

DEI'CTICALLY. Gr. Δεικτικως, from δεικ-νυ, to show, to point out.

And that gives you a farther reason, (if what was said before to your second quære were not sufficient,) that our Saviour's prediction was not conditional, but categorically enunciative, verily I say unto you that one of you shall or will betray me, and he that dippeth, at that time when Christ spake it, deictically, i. e. Judas, is that person.
Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 703.

And yet more deictically by enumeration of all particulars concern'd in it: the sea gave up its dead, and death and Hades delivered up the dead which were in them, and they were judged every man according to their works.
Id. Ib. p. 713.

DEJE'CT, v. } Fr. Dejecter; Lat. Dejicere, DEJE'CT, adj. } ctum, to cast down; (de, and DEJE'CTEDLY. } jacere, to cast or throw.)
DEJE'CTEDNESS. } To cast or throw down;
DEJE'CTION. } and thus, to humble or humi-
DEJE'CTURE. } liate, to depress, to sink, to debase, to dispirit, to dishearten.

From the moste hyghe heauen, than the whiche nothynge can be higher, Christ delected himself euen vnto the helles, than the which nothyng can be lower.—Udal. Ephes. c. 4.

This delection and humiliacion might not the kynge knowe, beinge in his weasy securite and arrogant pryde.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 4.

When she whom I a long time haue affected,
Amongst the flowers went forth to take the aire;
They being proud of such a gueste's repaire,
Though by her garments diuers times dejected,
To gaze on her againe themselves erected
Sterling. Aurora, Song 7.

Her followers such, as meerly friendless stood,
Sunk and dejected by the Spenser's pride,
Who bore the taints of treason in their blood,
And for revenge would leave no ways untry'd
Drayton. The Baron's Wars, b. iii.

What can be a more deject spirit in man, than to lay his hands under every one's horses' feet, to do him service, as thou dost?—Beaum. & Fletch. The Martial Maid, Act ii. sc. 1.

——— Had you born yourselves
Dejectedly, and base, no slavery
Had been too easy for you, but such is
The power of noble valour, that we love it
Even in our enemies.
Massinger. The Virgin Martyr, Act i. sc. 1.

With what scorn and insultation doth he look upon my dejectednesse? the very language of his eye is no other then contempt.—Bp. Hall, Soliloquy 34.

What's the reason the consciences of wicked men drag them before God, and they come with so much diffidence, dejectedness, and jealousie? Why, it is because they are conscious to themselves of guilt that lies upon them.
Hopkins, Ser. 10.

'Tis he that takes away, who can repay you:
This grief to other rods doth open lay you:
He binds your grief to patience, not dejection,
Who bears the first not well, provokes a new correction.
P. Fletcher. Eliza.

—— Shall a few loose troops, untrain'd,
But in a customary ostentation,
Presented as a sacrifice to your valours,
Cause a dejection in you?
Massinger. The Maid of Honour, Act ii. sc. 3.

When our souls are dejected, distressed, tormented with the remembrance of our former sins, he saith to us, as he did to the man in the Gospel, be of good chear, my son, thy sins are all pardoned.—Bp. Beveridge, vol. i. Ser. 70.

The one he emboldens with a manly assurance to look, speak, act, or plead before the faces of a numerous assembly; the other he dazzles out of countenance into a sheepish dejectedness.—Spectator, No. 250.

In which words we have represented to us, the unparallel'd example of courage and patience under sufferings, in our Lord and Saviour; and the great influence that it ought to have on all those who are called by his name, that they would not dishonour so excellent a pattern of enduring sufferings, by weakness or dejection of mind.—Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 6.

I have had no dignities; thou hast withheld them, and I have not thought them even worthy of a wish. Didst thou see me sad and dejected on these accounts?
Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History, Pref.

The symptoms of which are excess of animal secretions, as of perspiration, sweat, liquid dejectures, &c.
Arbuthnot. On Aliments, c. 6.

DEJERA'TION. Lat. Dejerare, (de, and jurare, to swear.)
A solemn swearing.

Doubtless with many tears and dejerations, he labours to clear his intentions to her person.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Roman Hanged.

DE'IFY. Lat. Deus, God, and fieri to be made or become. Fr. Défier; Sp. Deificar; It. Deificare; Low Lat. Deificare—in numerum deorum ascribere, (Minshew.) In Deos referre, consecrare, (Vossius, de Vitiis.)
DE'IFICAL.
DEI'FICATE.
DEIFICA'TION.
DE'IFIER.
DE'IFORM.
DEIFO'RMITY.
DE'IFYING, n.
DE'ISM.
DE'IST.
DEI'STICAL.
DE'ITY.
DE'ITATE.
To rank or class among the gods; to treat as if a god.
Deist, (or theist, qv.) one who believes that there is a God. Deity—the God-head; also, applied to the person—God. See the quotation from Clarke.

Than whan thou goest thy body fro,
Free in the aire thou shalt vp go,
And leauen all humanitie,
And purely line in deitie.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

These elementes ben creatures,
So ben those heauenly figures.
Wherof male wel be iustified,
That thei male not be deified.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

So whan that Jupiter of Crete
Was kynge, a wife vnto hym mete,
The douhter of Cybele he toke.
And that was Juno, saith the boke
Of his deificacion.
Id. Ib.

Thou didst reherse ensamples of the deifying of Hercules, and Bacchus. Thinkest thou that theyr were made Goddes vppon drinke and by the decree of one dynner?
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 223.

The ancient Catholique fathers were not afrayd to call this supper, some of them, the salue of immortality, and soverayne preseruatiue against death: other, a deificall communion, other, the sweet dainties of our Saviour, &c.
Homilies. On the Sacrament, pt. i.

He yelde his mede, that lord in deyte,
That as one God reygneth in persons thre.
Fabyan, an. 1273.

One person and one Christ, who is God incarnate, a man deitate, as Gregory Nazianzen saith, without mutation.
Abp. Cranmer to Bp. Gardiner, p. 350.

Now change the tenor of your joyous layes,
With which ye vse your loues to deife,
And blazon forth an earthly beauties praise,
Aboue the compasse of the arched skie.
Spenser. The Teares of the Muses.

Scipio. A man [Hannibal,] that more than figured Mars, and merited
A deifying by your gratitude.
Nabbes. Hannibal & Scipio, ii. 2.

One would have hoped, that the memory of so signal an interposition of heaven (the Flood) against the first deifiers of men, should have given an effectual check to the practice for some considerable time in the succeeding world.
Coventry. Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 3.

Onely souls deiform intellective
Unto that height of happinesse can get;
Yet immortalitie with other souls may sit.
More. On the Soul, pt. ii. b. i. c. 2. s. 47.

If we see him as he is, all this glory must descend to us and become ours: for we can no other ways see God (as I said before) but by becoming deiform, by being changed into the same glory.—Rust. Fun. Ser. on Bp. Taylor.

Thus the soul's numerous plurality
I have prov'd, and show'd she is not very God;
But yet a decent deiformity
Hath given her. More. On the Soul, pt. iii. s. 27.

A country maiden, then amongst the swains,
A shepherdess, she kept upon the plains;
Yet no disguise her deity could smother,
So far in beauty she exceeded other.
Drayton. The Man in the Moon.

Is it not strange, that a rational man should adore leeks and garlick, and shed penitential tears at the smell of a deified onion! Yet so did the Egyptians, once the famed masters of all arts and learning.—South, vol. i. Ser. 2.

An Idol may be undeified by many accidental causes. Marriage, in particular, is a kind of counter apotheosis, or a deification inverted. When a man becomes familiar with his Goddess, she quickly sinks into a woman.
Spectator, No. 73.

What a pure imitation of God its life is, and how exactly deiform all its motions and actions are.
Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 3.

Yet is their personation and deification meer fiction and phancy; however the first occasion thereof sprung from this theological opinion or persuasion, that God who is in all things, and is the cause of all things, ought to be worshipped in all things, especially he being himself invisible.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 531.

Which opinion is really nothing else but the deifying of the Devil, or Prince of evil spirits, making him a corrival with God, and entitling him to a right of receiving divine honour and worship.—Id. Ib.

If my supposition be true, then the consequence which I have assumed in my poem may be also true; namely, that deism, or the principle of natural worship, are only the faint remnants or dying flames of revealed religion in the posterity of Noah.—Dryden. Religio Laici, Pref.

Out of this impious school [of Epicurus] have sprung the Saduces of the Jews, the Zendichees of the Arabs, and the Deists of the present age.
Prideaux. Connection, pt. i. b. viii. an. 310.

Almost all the things that are said wisely and truly by modern deists, are plainly borrowed from that revelation, which they refuse to embrace; and without which, they could never have been able to have said the same things.
Clarke. On Natural and Revealed Religion, Prop. 7.

This great poet and philosopher, [Simonides] the more he contemplated the nature of the Deity, found that he waded but the more out of his depth; and that he lost himself in the thought, instead of finding an end to it.
Spectator, No. 531.

They worshipped God in his works, in all things, and deified the several parts of nature; they worshipped him under emblems, symbols, sensible representations, and images.—Jortin. On the Christian Religion, Disc. 7.

It was an article of the common creed amongst the Pagans, that the souls of deified men were taken up into heaven, advanced to a state of divine dominion there, and ranked with the immortal Gods. Herein their deification did properly consist.—Farmer. On Miracles.

These are some of the doctrines which have unhappily helped to propagate atheism or deism, and have made many a man say to himself, "if this be Christianity, let my soul be with the philosophers."
Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

But you are the first who ever swore that he was an infidel, concluding your deistical creed with—so help me God! I pray that God may help you: that he may, through the influence of his Holy Spirit, bring you to a right mind, convert you to the religion of his Son, whom, out of his abundant love to mankind, he sent into the world, that all who believe in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.—Watson. Apology for the Bible.

I seem, for my own part, to see the benevolence of the Deity more clearly in the pleasures of very young children, than in any thing in the world.
Paley. Moral Philosophy, b. ii. c. 5.

DEIGN, v. Fr. Daigner; It. Degnare; Lat. Dignari, dignum æstimare, to think or esteem worthy. See DIGNITY.
DE'IGNFUL.
DE'IGNFULLY.
DE'IGNOUS.
DE'IGNOUSLY.
To think or esteem worthy or deserving; to think or esteem worthy or becoming; to vouchsafe, to condescend.
Deignous is used by R. Brunne and Chaucer as—thinking or esteeming too worthy or deserving; valuing too highly; and thus, equivalent to—disdainful.

Vor so muche he tolde of himself & of is grete mizte,
That him ne deynede nozt to ligge in the castel by nizte.
R. Gloucester, p. 557.

Boste & deignouse pride & ille avisement
Mishapnes oftentide, & does many be schent.
R. Brunne, p. 259.

Bvt so sothly sciences dwelleth in a mannes soule
And doth hym to be deynous, and deem that both nat leede.
Piers Ploughman, p. 276.

What man (od he) was euer thus at ease
As I? on which the fairest, and the best
That euer I sene, deynethe her to rest.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. iii.

Touching thy letter thou art wise ynough
I wot thou nilt it deigneliche endite.
Id. Ib. b. ii

A thefe he was forsoth, of corn and mele,
And that a slie, and usant for to stele.
His name was hoten deinous Simekin.
Id. The Reves Tale, v. 3939.

Ye ben of port so daungerous
Unto this louer, and deinous
To graunt him nothing but a kisse.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

And with that worde on me she gaue a glome
With browes bente, and gan on me to staro
Ful daynously, and fro me she dyd fare,
Leuynge me stondynge as a mased man.
Skelton. Prologue to the Bouge of Court.

She deignes not my good will, but doth reproue,
And of my rural musick holdeth scorne.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calendar. January.

But when againe thou dost extend thy rigour,
And wilt not daigne to grace me with thy sight,
Thou kil'st my comfort, and so spoil'st my might
That scarce my corps retaines the vitall vigour.
Sterling. Aurora, Son. 35.

Yet tempred so her deignfull lookes alway,
That outward scorne shewd store of grace within.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Bovlogne, b. iv. s. 89.

Moth. Harlot; so
Called from one Harlotha, concubine
To deignous Wilhelme, light the conqueror.
Cartwright. The Ordinary, Act iii. sc. 1.

But if a prince shall deign to be familiar, and to converse with those upon whom he might trample, shall his condescension therefore unking him? And his familiarity rob him of his royalty. The case is the same with Christ.
South, vol. iii. Ser. 6.

Yet the governor was so imprudent and arrogant, that he despised all these reiterated overtures, and did not deign even to return the least answer to them.
Anson. Voyage round the World, b. ii. c. 6.

DE-KING, to cause to be no longer king; to deprive of a kingdom. South uses unking; see under the verb DEIGN.

Edward being thus dekinged, the embassie rode ioyfully backe to London to the parliament, with the resigned ensignes, and despatch of their employment
Speed. Edw. III. b. ix. c. 12. s. 75.

DELA'PSED. Lat. Delabi, delapsus; (de, and labi, to fall.) See LAPSE.
DELA'PSION.
Fallen away from.

Which Anne deriv'd alone, the right before all other,
Of the delapsed crown, from Philip her fair mother.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 29.

If we should grant and suppose these reflections of beams upon the superficies of the moon, to be made by way of equal angles, there is no impossibility in the matter, but that the same rays being carried so great a way, should have their frictions, fluxions, and delapsions; that thereby the light should be confused and shine the more.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 934.

DELATE, v. Lat. Deferre, delatum; (de, and ferre, to bear or carry.)
DELA'TION.
DELA'TOR.
To bear, carry or bring; (lit. as in Lord Bacon,) and (met.) with a subaudition,—of information, accusation; and thus, consequentially, to inform, to accuse.
To bear, to convey, to conduct.
Delacyon, in Lord Berners, is—delay; deferring or delaying. (See To DEFER.) In Sir Thomas More, delating seems equivalent to collating; conferring or bringing together.
Dilate was written not uncommonly delate, by older writers, as in the quotations from Goodwin and Mountague. "To delate, or speak at large of any thing; see To DILATE," (Minshew.)
Dilation, on the other hand, in Shakespeare, (first folio,) appears to be of the same import as delation in Wotton and Spotiswood; in them, it is—information, accusation: in Shakespeare, close delation,—is secret information, intimation; and thus, varying very little from the expression in the quarto,—"Close denotements." See DENOTE.

Christ shal at the last restrayn & destroy his ydolle Antechrist with the spirit of his holy mouth, repayring and delating his church again & gathering thereinto as wel the remenat of the Jewes, as all other sectes.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 288.

And after this iudgement there was no delacyon of sufferaunce nor mercy, but incōtynent he was drawen throughout London, and then set on a scaffolde.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 23.

To try exactly the time wherein sound is delated, let a man stand in a steeple, and have with him a taper, and let some veil be put before the taper, and let another man stand in a field a mile off. Then let him in the steeple strike the bell, and in the same instant withdraw the veile; and so let him in the field tell by his pulse what distance of time there is between the light seene, and the sound heard: for it is certain that the delation of light is in an instant.
Bacon. Naturall History, § 209.

Sad from thy sight so soon to be remou'd,
She so her grief delates,
O fauor'd by the fates,
Aboue the happiest states,
Who art of one so worthie well beleu'd.
Stirling. Aurora, s 9.

His warlike wife Semiramis,
Her husband being dead
And sonne in nonage, fayning him
Long ruled in his stead:
Delating in a male's attyre
The empire new begonne.
Warner. Albion's England, b i. c. 1.

For the abscission of the church is not to be us'd but after all other remedies when the crime is delated or notorious, and the person called, when he hath been admonish'd and reprov'd, and called to repentance, if after all he refuses and rebels, then he is to be cut off, else not.
Bp Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b iii. c. 4.

By which way of discourse and disquisition of all Christian veritties, the schools both deught and delate human reason, without any intrusion into the forbidden inclosures of faith.—Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. i.

By which he both illustrates and expounds his meaning in ver. 5. (Ps. xlix.) to be to utter his own blessed condition at his death, v. 15, and to that purpose it is, he further dwates upon the death of wicked men in the rest of the psalm and which is indeed a kind of summary of what in the former meditation I have prest.
Goodwin. An Unregenerate Man's Guiltiness, b xiii c 9.

The gentlemen's case was much pitied, Mains his case especially Hamilton, who made the delation, lived after this in a continual fear, and abhorred of all men
Spotswood. Church of Scotland, b vi an. 1584.

Therefore these stops of thine, fright me the more
For such things in a false disloyal knaue
Are tricks of custome: but in a man that's just,
They're close dilations working from the heart,
That passion cannot rule
Shakespeare. Othello, Act iii sc. 3.

There is among the partitions of this government a very awfull magistracy under title of Inquisitori di Stato, to which are commonly deputed three gentlemen of the gravest and severest natures, who receive all secret relations in matter of practice against the republick
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 307

What I will own is mine, what is cast upon me is my adversaries; And if I be by deductions fetch't into such error, the fault is not in my faith, but in my logick: my brain may erre, my heart doth not. Away then ye cruel tortors of opinions, dilators of errors, delators of your bretheren, incendiaries of the church, haters of peace.
Bp Hall. Christian Moderation, b. ii. § 11.

Whosoever was found pendulous and brangling in his religion, was brought by a sergeant, call'd familiar, before the said council of inquisition; his accuser or delator stands behind a piece of tapestry, to see whether he be the party, and if he be, then they put divers subtle and entrapping interrogatories to him; and whether he confess any thing or no, he is sent to prison.—Howell, b. i. s. 5. Let. 42.

Inquiries were not so much as made but as men were delated, they were marked down for such a time and all was transacted in a secret committee.
Burnet. Own Time, an 1662

The delators, a race of men discouraged, and almost extinguished, under the former reigns, again became formidable, as soon as they discovered that the emperor [Commodus] was desirous of finding disaffection and treason in the senate.—Gibbon. The Roman Empire, c. 4.

DELA'Y, v.
DELA'Y, n.
DELA'YER.
DELA'YFUL.
DELA'YING, n.
DELA'YMENT.
DELA'YOUS.

Fr. Délayer; It. Dilatare; Sp. Dilatar; from Dilatum, (Menage,) used as the past part. of Differre, to put or bear away or apart; to put off.

To put off or postpone; to procrastinate; to prolong or protract; to stop, detain or retard; to pause, to linger.

Delatory, in Warner, now Dilatory, (qv.)

As the Fr. Délayer, so the Eng. to delay, is (by some old writers) used as—to allay (qv.) or soften, or alleviate. See the examples from Fox, Spenser, and Holland.

Therfore y ne rede in no maner this nede lenger delaye.
R. Gloucester, p. 156.

Somme feynede a delay & somme al out wyth seyde.
Id. p. 421.

Sotheli Felix dilayede hem, and knew moost certeynli of the weie, & seide, whanne Lisias the tribune schal come doun I schal heere ghou.—Wiclif. Dedis, c. 24.

Therefore whanne thei camen togidre hider, withouten ony delai in the dai sayngе I sat for domesman and commaundide the man to be brouhte.—Id. Ib. c. 25.

Anon without more delaie
Withouten daunger or affraie
I become his man anone.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

And when the time is so befall,
That Troie was destroid, and brent,
He made no delayement,
But goeth hym home in all hie.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

Wherfore couertly he delayed his busines, to the entente to see the ende of yt matter; howbeit, by letters and messagers he reteyned styll the duke in loue and fauoure.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 52.

So this proude Pharisie had an answere to delaie his pride.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 1574 Maister Latimer's Reply.

I can no mo delayes deuise,
But welcome payne, let pleasure passe.
Gascoigne. The Lullabie of a Louer.

Among the Romayns Quintus Fabius for this qualitie is souerainely extolled amonge historiens: and for that cause he is often times called of them Fabius cunctator, that is to say, the tarrier or delayer.—Sir T. Elyot. Gouernour, b i c 23.

For he wil vndoubtedli heare the praiers of his seruantes, when opportunitie of time shal bee, and the delaiyng thereof shall turne to the benefite of the Godly.—Udal. Luke, c 18.

How be it that is of moche greter resorte of people, and therewith verey delayous: in soo moche, that as I have herde credyble persones say, some one mater hath hangyd there, in disputeion, ouer xx. yeres.—Fabyan, vol i. c. 153

But belike he was disposed to declare, if need were, what he was able to do in the law, in shifting off y^e^ matter by subtil delatories & friuolous cauilling about the law.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 1194. Bonar's Frivolous Shifts.

As for the leafe of the hearb, [amethyst] it hath no fresh and lively hew, but resembleth a wineless weak wine, as one may say, that either drinketh flat and hath lost the colour, or else is much delayed with water.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 560

So you, great Lord, that with your counsell sway
The burden of this kingdome mightily,
With like delights sometimes may ake delay
The rugged brow of careful policie
Spenser. To Sir Christopher Hatton.

Calme was the day, and through the trembling ayre,
Sweet-breathing Zephyrus did softly play,
A gentle spirit, that lightly did delay
Hot Titan's beames, which then did glyster faire.
Id. Prothalamion.

Then come thou man of earth, and see the way
That neuer yet was seene of Faeries sonne,
That neuer leads the trauailer astray;
But, after labours long, and sad delay,
Brings them to ioyous rest and endlesse blisse.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

——— Which impli'd
Subjection, but requir'd with gentle sway,
And by her yielded, by him best receiv'd,
Yielded with coy submission, modest pride,
And sweet reluctant amorous delay.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

God comanded them the [Israelites] at his bringing them out of Egypt to invade the Canaanites, and promised them strength to overcome them, and to possess the land, but they refused to go up; afterwards, when he bid them not, they would needs go up, and then they miscarried in the attempt: the application is easie, and terrible to the delayer or refuser.—Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 283.

Wherevpon Reimond on the next morrow, setting apart and giuing ouer all wedding pastimes, mustereth all his souldiers, and without anie delaieuges marcheth towards the enemies.—Holinshed. Conquest of Ireland, b. ii. c. 3.

——— And one of them,
Whose pride, his youth had made the more extreme,
Said now the many-woer honoured queene,
Wail[illegible] and[illegible] her complaints spleene,
And[illegible] of vs, in instant nuptiall take
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. iv.

For his shippe worke faine delatory wants, and by winter be past, he partly comming, will (feare not) bee perfectly reclaymed.—Warner. Albion's England. Add. to B. II.

Notwithstanding sinful men break his laws, and trample on them before his face; they "resist, and grieve, and quench his spirit," yet he delays the execution of his judgment, that his "long-suffering may lead them to repentance."—Bates. On the Forgiveness of Sins, Ser. i.

[The rabble] growing impatient of any farther delay, immediately broke open the doors of the prison, and divers of them rushed into the chamber where the two brothers [he Wat] were.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. iii. p 204.

The wise man alarms the sluggard with approaching poverty, and his expressions are very applicable to the delayers of repentance death comes like a traveller, gradually, by silent steps; and, as an armed man, will irresistibly arrest them.—Bates. Miscellaneous, Ser. 9.

These are they who keep no appointments, who are seldom true to their hour, who make their friends wait for them on all occasions, who often create uneasiness to all the company, and put a whole family out of order. What an unbecoming behaviour is this! What an ill aspect it bears! especially if these delayers are in any degree inferior, or the younger parts of a house.—Watts, vol. i. Ser. 9.

DE'LEBLE.
DELE'TE, v.
DELE'TION.
DELE'TIVE.
DELE'TORY.

Lat. Delere, delebilis, quod deleri potest; which may be erased, rubbed out. Tooke considers the A. S. Dilg-ian, (of the same meaning,) to be the root of the Latin. See INDELEBLE.

That may be rased or rubbed out; eradicated, obliterated, avoided or annulled.

Bp. Taylor more frequently writes deletery than deletory. (See Great Exemplar, pp. 140, 162.)

Various is the use thereof [black lead]
1. For painters (besides some mixture thereof in making lead colours,) to draw the pictures of their pictures, viz. those shadowy lines made only to be unmade again
2. For pens, so usefull for scholars to note the remarkables they read, with an impression easily delebile without prejudice to the book.—Fuller. Worthies. Cumberland.

We owe our lives, limbs, fortunes, all we have to our dear country; delete this principle out of men's hearts, and you dissolve, yea ruin all civil society.
State Trials, an. 1643. Col. Ficunes.

I stand ready with a pencil in one hand, and a sponge in the other, to add, alter, insert, expunge, enlarge, and delete, according to better information
Fuller. General Worthies, c. 25.

The obtuser end [of the stylus] was made more delitive, apt to put out and obliterate.—Evelyn. Sculpture, c. 1.

The Scriptures, therefore, are the great repository and the great security of faith. They are also the great and only deletery of heresies.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conse. b ii c 5.

Yet, unless this proceed so far as to a total deletion of the sin, to the extirpation of every vicious habit, God is not gratified by our repentance, or we secure in our eternal interest.
Id. vol. ii. Ser. 5

When the great extermination of the Jewish nation and their total deletion from being God's people, was foretold by Christ, and decreed by God: yet they had the Aveyn of forty years, in which they were perpetually called to repentance.
Id. vol. ii. Ser. 17.

As it [confession] was most certainly intended as a deletory of sin, and might do its first intention, if it were equally manag'd; so now certainly it gives confidence to many men to sin, and to most men to neglect the greater and more effective parts of essential repentance.
Id. A Dissuasive from Popery, pt. I. s. 2.

And at the last day, "as many as have sinned without the law, as delivered to the Jews, shall be judged and perish, not according to the law of Moses," Rom. ii. but the law of nature that obliged them to do good, and restrain themselves from evil; of which the counterpart was not totally deleted in their hearts.—Bates. Eternal Judgment, c. 2.

DELE'CTABLE.
DELE'CTABLY.
DELECTA'TION.

Fr. and Sp. Délectable; It. Dilettevole. The Lat. Delectare, Gesner says, is illicere et attrahere; compounded of de, and lactare, from lacere, to draw; of uncertain origin. Used actively,—

Able to attract, to allure, to entice; to hold out pleasing allurements or enticements; to please, to gratify.

I wol not long holde you in fable
Of all this gardin delectable.—Chaucer. Rom of the Rose.

Philosophy songen softely and delectablye the forseaid thynge, keping y^e^ dignity of her chere, and the weight of her words.—Id. Boecius, b. iv.

Beth wel aduised of vaine delectacion
At your beginning think on terminacion.
Id. Balade. The Craft of Louers.

Wo is me for the my brother Jonathas: delectable to me was thou excedynge.—Bible, 1551. 2 Kynge, c 1.

Therefore have I delectacion in infirmities, in rebukes, in nede, in persecucions, in anguishe, for Christ's sake.
Id. Ib. 2 Corinthians.

I view'd every plot; spent some delightful hours
In every garden, full of new-born flowers,
Delicious banks, and delectable bowers.
Quarles. To P. Fletcher.

And [Henry] therefore calling his lords vnto London in an assembly tickled their eares with these delectable and smooth words.—Speed. Hen. I. b. ix. c. 1. s. 19.

And therefore, if any two men desire the same-thing, which nevertheless they cannot both enjoy, they become enemies, and in the way to their end (which is principally their own conservation, and sometimes their delectation only), endeavour to destroy or subdue one another.
Hobbs. Of Man, c. 13.

Sin is founded in bono jucundo, something that is delectable to the carnal nature: it is the universal character of carnal men, "they are lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God."—Bates. Miscellaneous, Ser. 2.

May we not delectably consider him as there stretching forth his arms of kindness, with them to embrace the world and to receive all mankind under the wings of his protection.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 22.

Would we discharge all our duties without any reluctancy or regret, with much satisfaction and pleasure? love will certainly dispose us thereto, for it always acteth freely and essentially, without any compulsion or straining; it is ever accompanied with delectation.—Id. vol. i. Ser. 28.

Call, too, Demodocus, the bard divine,
To share my banquet, whom the Gods have blest
With pow'rs of song delectable, what theme
Soe'er his animated fancy choose.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. viii.

DELEGATE, v. DE'LEGATE, n. DE'LEGATE, adj. DELEGA'TION. DE'LEGACY. } Fr. Déléguer; Sp. Delegar; It. and Lat. Delegare, (de, and legare, from lege, when it denotes to send any one, under a certain law or rule of action, certâ lege,) Vossius.

"Fr. Déléguer,—to assign, commit or appoint into an office, charge or commission," (Cotgrave.)

This government was by immediate substitution delegated to the Apostles by Christ himself, in traditione claves, &c.—Bp. Taylor. Episcopacy Asserted.

I know the king expecteth we should say no more, than I do like this sentence, or, I do not like it. And that you know Sir Daniel Dun, is the manner of the delegates, and not to go farther.—State Trials, an. 1613. Countess of Essex.

That no jurisdiction was in the Ephesine presbyters, except a delegate, and subordinate, appears beyond all exception, by Saint Paul's first Epistle to Timothy.
Bp. Taylor. Episcopacy Asserted.

He [Pomponius] was the first of one of the first, that understanding the majesty of Rome to be indeed wholly in the people and no otherwise in the senate than by way of decency or grand commission, did not stand highly upon his birth and degree, but courted the multitude, and taught them to know and use their power over himself, and his fellow senators, in reforming their disorders.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. v. c. 2.

They are great judges, a court of the last resort, they are great counsellors of state, and not only for the present, but as law makers, counsellors for the time to come; and this not by delegation and commission, but by birth and inheritance.—State Trials, an. 1626. Duke of Buckingham, &c.

Or else before any suit begin, the plaintiffe shall have his complaint approved by a set deputacy to that purpose; if it be of moment he shall be suffered, as before, to proceed, if otherwise they shall determine Burton. Democritus to the Reader.

He presently makes delegation to William Bishop of London, Eustace of Ely, and Malgere of Worcester, that they should, with monitory advice, offer persuasion to the king of conformity to the Romish behest; if he persisted in contumacy, they should denounce England under an interdict.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 17. Selden's Illustrations.

The bishops being generally addicted to the former superstition, it was thought necessary to keep them under so arbitrary a power as that subjected them to; for they hereby held their bishopricks only during the king's pleasure, and were to exercise them as his delegates in his name, and by his authority.—Burnet. History of Reformation, an. 1547.

Then Dr Lewin spake and said, that he would be glad that Mr. Cartwright should understand, that he was greatly deceived in that he called this oath, the oath ex officio: whereas it is by express words derived from the authority of the prince, by a delegate power unto them.
Strype. Life of Whitgift, an. 1591.

Every one is at the disposure of his own will, when those who had by the delegation of the society, the declaring of the publick will, are excluded from it, and others usurp the place, who have no such authority or delegation
Locke. On Civil Government, b. ii. c. 13.

For although God allowed capital punishment to be inflicted for the crime of lese majesty, on the person of the offender, by the delegated administration of the law; yet concerning his family or posterity, he reserved the inquisition of the crime to himself, and expressly forbid the magistrate to meddle with it, in the common course of justice.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iv. s. 5.

This change from an immediate state of procuration and delegation to a course of acting as from original power, is the way in which all the popular magistracies in the world have been perverted from their purposes.
Burke. Cause of the present Discontents.

DELE'TE. See DELEBLE.

DELETE'RIAL. DELET'ERIOUS. DELE'TERY. } Gr. Δηλ-εῖν, to hurt or injure.
Hurtful, injurious, mischievous; and thus, extended to—
Poisonous, deadly.

Pisa (who learned divers of their detestable secrets from the Brasidians) relates that some of them are so skilful in the cursed art of tempering and allaying their poisons, that they will often hinder them from disclosing their deleterial nature for so long a time, that the subtile murderers do as unexpectedly as fatally execute their malice or revenge.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p 84.

And as for ranunculus, that plant being reckoned among poisonous ones, and among those that raise blisters, it will be easily granted that it hath, as other poisons, an occult, deleterial faculty.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 71.

Now that deleterious it [the Basilisk] may be at some distance, and destructive without corporal contraction, what uncertainty soever there be in the effect, there is no high improbability in the relation.—Brown. Vul. Err. b. iii. c. 7.

Disease, nor doctor epidemick
Though stor'd with deletery med'cines,
(Which whosoever took is dead since,)
E'er sent so vast a colony
To both the under worlds as he.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2.

In some places, those plants which are entirely poisonous at home, lose their deleterious quality by being carried abroad; there are serpents in Macedonia so harmless as to be used as playthings for children.
Goldsmith. The Citizen of the World, Let. 90.

DELF. Goth. Dalf, fovea, a pit. A. S. Delf-an; Dut. Delv-en, to dig or delve. The verb is also written Delf or dulf. See DELVE.

A ditch, a quarry, a mine; any thing delved or dug out.

The rock also and quarry in Carystia, it is not long since it gave over to bring forth certain bals or bottoms of soft stone, which they use to spin and draw into thread, in manner of flax, but now all this is quite gone, and hardly within the said delf shall a man meet with some few hairy threads of that matter, running here and there among the hard stones digged out from thence.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 1093.

Brim full of all those precious and exquisite commodities
Which any land or sea doth breed,
or out of rivers spring:
Which in deep mines by delfe are found,
or havens by vessels bring. Id. Ib. p. 517.

But if there be, yet could not such mines, without great pains and charges (if at all be wrought, the delfs would be so flown with waters, (it being impossible to make any addits or soughs to drain them,) that no gins or machines could suffice to lay and keep them dry.—Ray. On Creation, pt. ii.

DE'LIBATE. DELIBA'TION. } Lat. Delibare, delibatum, (de, and libare,) Gr. Λειβ-ειν, stillare, fundere, to pour.

The first wine poured, and then tasted; the first pouring, or effusion, or tasting, was called a libation.

It is used (met.) for—a taste, an effusion.

When he has travelled, and delibated the French and the Spanish.—Marmion. Antiquary.

The same must he likewise affirm concerning all other souls, as those of men, and demons, that they are either all of them the substance of God himself, together with that of the evil demon, or else certain delibations from both (if any one could understand it,) blended and confounded together.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 216.

Of these Ἐπόπται there is elsewhere mention in the Acts of the Apostles more than once; but what they were our commentators do not so fully inform us; nor can it be understood without some delibation of Jewish antiquity.
Mede. Works, b. i. Dis. 3.

The principles of motion and vegetation in living bodies seem to be delibations from the invisible fire or spirit of the universe.—Berkley. Siris, § 214.

DELI'BER, v. DELI'BERATE, v. DELI'BERATE, adj. DELI'BERATELY. DELI'BERATENESS. DELIBERA'TION. DELI'BERATIVE, adj. DELI'BERATIVE, n. DELI'BERATIVELY. DELI'BERATOR. } Fr. Délibérer; Sp. Deliberar; It. and Lat. Deliberare, liberè de aliquâ re cogitare, (Minshew.) Deliberat, cui libertas eligendi est aliquid ex duobus. He deliberates, who has the liberty of choosing one from several; where that liberty is not, there is no deliberation, (Vossius.) And Cicero, incidit enim omnis deliberatio, si intelligitur non posse fieri, aut si necessitas affertur. (De Orat. lib. ii. p. 336.)

To choose, to select, to elect; to advise, to think, to consider; to reflect with a view to choice or selection; to examine which is best, which to be preferred; to examine with caution, discretion, hesitation, wariness; with temper, calmness, coolness, slowness.

Than Dame Prudence, when she sey the good will of hire husbond, delibered unto hire, and toke avis in hire self, thinking how she might bring this nede into goode ende.
Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus.

And let him eftsones examine and rollen his thoughts, by good deliberation, or that he deme.—Id. Boecius, b. iii.

When I this supplicacion,
With good deliberacion,
In suche a wise as ye nowe witte,
Had after myn entente writte.—Gower. Con. A. b. viii

In counsell geninge, in delibering, in deeerning thinges delybred, in thinges decreed spedely to be finished, in espyinge an apte occasion, who were more ingenouse and clearer witted then Philip and Alexander?
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 8.

For thys cause they deliberated to constrayne theym to fighte by sea ymmediatly as they shulde see their aduauntage, and so embarqued there men and causedde theym to taryе there certene dayes.—Nicoll. Thucidides, fol. 107.

For I am sure whan he had preached so in so many places, he had not done it of a sodayne aduenture, but of a deliberate purpose.—Sir T. More. Workes, p 214.

My Lord Steward answered, that there was no other meaning nor intent, and that he should be heard deliberately.
State Trials, an. 1589. Earl of Arundel.

An oration deliberative, is a meane, whereby we doe perswade, entreate, or rebuke, exhorte, or dehorte, commende, or comforte any man.—Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p 29.

Whereof when the king of England was aduertised, he delibered to goe vnto them in his owne person to remoone them from this siege.—Stow. Hen. V. an. 1417.

Every spontaneous action is not therefore voluntary, for voluntary presupposes some precedent deliberation, that is to say, some consideration and meditation of what is likely to follow, both upon the doing, and abstaining from the action deliberated of.—Hobbs. Of Liberty & Necessity.

At whose deliberate and unusual birth,
The heavens were said to council to retire,
And, in aspects of happiness and mirth,
Breath'd him a spirit insatiably t' aspire.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. i.

She gave no other answer, but that she must deliberately determine of so great a matter, and that she neither could nor would confirm it, but by the advice of the nobility of Scotland.—Camden. Elizabeth, an. 1561.

It [Mount Edgecombe] was built by Sir Richard Edgecombe, Knight; take his character from one [Carew] who very well knew him, "Mildness, stoutness, diffidence and wisdom, deliberateness of undertakings, and sufficiency of effecting, made in him a more blazing mixture of virtue."
Fuller. Worthies. Cornwall.

For the feet of those that evangelize peace, are never so beautiful as when they come softly, choosing the fairest way with a calm deliberation.
Montague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 8. s. 3.

In deliberatives the point is, what is good, and what is evill, and of good what is greater, and of evil what is lesse.
Bacon. Of the Colours of Good and Evil.

And all deliberatives of state seem to depend much upon the event of Brisach, which I use to call the German Helena, long wood, but for ought I hear, yet an imperial virgin.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 480.

As to time and deliberation about the act of sin. If there be a real surprize, i. e. that the person is not aware, or hath not time to consider what he is to do, he that hath a mind well resolved, may be betrayed into what he would never have done, if he had time to deliberate about it.
Stillingfleet, vol. ii. Ser. 11.

Though, when men discard the Gospel out of a zeal to preserve the moral law of reason and nature, they may seem to act with great regard to virtue and holiness, yet they do manifestly reject the authority of God, and deliberately refuse that obedience, which reason teaches to be due to the great lawgiver of the world.—Sherlock, Dis. 46.

What the principle of self preservation is with respect to ourselves, the same is charity with respect to our neighbour: and the more real and vigorous this principle is, the more easily, and with the less deliberation, does it exert the acts of love and beneficence towards our fellow creatures.
Id. Dis. 38.

The people, by their representatives and grandees, were intrusted with a deliberative power in making laws; the king with the controul of his negative.
Burke. On the Cause of the Present Discontents.

So far as we can judge by the style of the Saxon laws, none but the thanes or nobility were considered as necessary constituent parts of this assembly, at least whilst it acted deliberatively.—Id. An Abridgement of Eng. Hist. b. ii. c 7.

I would not, indeed, refer a prince for maxims of equity and government to Puffendorf and Grotius; the dull and unfeeling deliberators of questions on which a good heart and understanding can intuitively decide; but to his own heart, to his own enlightened reason, to the page of Scripture, and to the volumes of authenticated history.
V. Knox, Essay 133.

DE'LICACY. DE'LICATE, adj. DE'LICATE, n. DE'LICATELY. DE'LICATENESS. DE'LICES. DELI'CIATE. DELI'CIOUS. DELI'CIOUSLY. DELI'CIOUSNESS. } Fr. Délicatesse; Sp. Delicadeza; It. Delicatezza; Eng. Delicacy. Fr. Délicat; Sp. Delicado; It. Delicato; Eng. Delicate; Lat. Delicatus, from Deliciæ, (de, and lacere, to draw, to attract.) See DELECTABLE. Delicate is—Attractive, alluring, enticing, tempting, holding out pleasing inducements, allurements or temptations; —pleasing, gratifying.

Opposed to plain, common, coarse, vulgar, robust.—Carried to excess,—nice, dainty, tender, soft, effeminate, luxurious, feeble.

Delicious,—Fr. Délicieux; Low Lat. Deliciosus; full of, abounding in delicacies or delights; highly pleasing or gratifying to the mind or senses. See DELIGHT.

Hyt ys ney vyf ger, that we abbyth ylyued in such vyce,
For we nadde nogt to done, and in suche delyce.
R. Gloucester, p 195.

Thenk that Dives for hus delicat lyf to the Devel went.
Piers Ploughman, p. 142.

And drynke nat over delicatliche, ne to dupe neither.
Id. p. 96.

For sche that is lyuynge in delices is deed.
Wiclif. 1 Tymo. c. 5.

He Rome brente for his delicacie.
Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,397.

And adde this also, that euery weleful man, hath a full delicate feling so that but if all thyngs befallen at his own wil, he is impacient, or is not vsed to haue anone aduersity, anon he is throwen adoune for euery little thyng.
Id. Boccius, b. ii.

But certes he, that haunteth swiche delices,
Is ded, while that he liveth in the vices.
Id. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,481.

Certainly (qd I) than, these ben faire thynge, and anointed with honey swetnesse of rhetorike and musike, and onely while they ben herd and sowne in eeres, they ben delicious.
Id. Boccius, b. ii.

Som clerkes holden that felicitee
Stant in delit, and therefore certain he
This noble January, with all his might
In honest wise as longeth to a knight,
Shope him to liven ful deliciously.
Id. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9659.

Many men there ben, that with eeres openly sprad so much swalowen yt deliciousnesse of lestes and of rime, by queint knitting coloures, that of ye goodnesse or of the badnesse of the sentence, take they litle heede or else none.
Id. Testament of Loue, Prol.

Of the seconde glotonie
Which cleped is delicacie,
Wherof ye spake here to fore,
Beseche I wolde you therfore.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

And he was eke so delicate
Of his clothyng that euery daie
Of purpre and bysse he made hym gaie,
And ete and dranke therto his fyll,
After the lustes of his wyll:
As he, whiche all stoode in delice,
And toke none hede of thilke vice.—Id. Ib. b. xvi.

Yet wolde his herte on other fall,
And thinke hem more delicious,
Than he hath in his owne hous.—Id. Ib. b. vi.

All kinde of spices and delectable fruites, both for delicate and health, are there in such abundance, as hitherto they have bene thought to haue beene bred no where else but there.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 49.

I am not now in Fraunce, to iudge the wine,
With sawcy sauce those delicates to fele,
Nor yet in Spain, where one must him incline,
Rather than to be, outwardly to scorne.
Wyat. The Courtier's Life.

And he sayth also, if we would consider what excellence and dignity is in the nature of man, we shold vnderstand, how great shame it is to wast it away riotously, and to leade the life delicately and deliciously: and howe honest it is to liue chastly, soberly, sadly, measurably.
Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b i. c. 8.

The Bactrians bee the most hardyest people amongst those nacios—vncivil men, and much abhorring from the delicatenes of the Persians.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol 68.

I will in these firste wordes saie, that in the firste ages men were more esteemed by their meke customs, and aemcatenes, than they were after reproued by their grosse and rude vnderstandynges.—Golden Boke, Prol.

But they will say, if they had not so great possessions, they coulde not kepe so many seruantes and so many dogges, so many horses, as 40, or 50, & maintayne so great pompe, and pride, and liue so deliciously, what heresye fynde you in this?—Barnes. Workes, p. 210.

Whyle thou were aliue, no kinde of wine could please thee for being cloid with them, so great was the deliciousnes of thy mouth, neither wouldest thou al the while so much as geue a litell water to Lazarus being thirstie.
Udal. Luke, c. 16.

Our delicacies are growne capitall,
And even our sports are dangers! what we call
Friendship is now mark'd hatred! justice fled,
And shamefastnesse together.
B. Jonson. An Epistle to a Friend.

The most judicial and worthy spirits of this land are not so delicate, or will owe so much to their ear, as to rest upon the outside of words, and be entertained with sound.
Daniel. Defence of Rhyme.

And what needs that (quoth he), cannot Pompey recover and live, if Lucullus were not a waster and a delicate given to belly cheare?—Holland. Plutarch, p. 361.

Guz. Yes, we will feast:—my queen, my empress, saint,
Shalt taste no delicates, but what are drest
With costlier spices than the Arabian bird
Sweetens her funeral bed with.
Ford. The Lady's Trial, Act ii. sc. 1.

He was of full stature, tall and personable, in countenance amiable, a white face, and withal somewhat ruddie, delicatelie in each limb featured.
Holinshed. Ireland, an. 1535.

When Flora is disposed to deliciate with her minions, the rose is her Adonis.—Parthenoea Sacra, (1633,) p. 18.

The third sort is reddish blacke of colour, in quantitie comparable to the pheasant and no lesse delicious in taste and sauer at the table, our countrie men call them wind cocks, and their cheefe sustenance is by wheat.
Holinshed. Scotland, c. 8.

They are like Dives, whose portion was in this life, who went in fine linnen and fared deliciously every day.
Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 9.

Tell me therefore, O soul! didst thou ever see the glory and riches that there is in a promise? wert thou ever ravished with the infinite sweetness and deliciousness that thou suckest from them?—Hopkins, Ser. 18.

Their wanton appetites not only feed
With delicates of leaves and marshy weed,
But with thy sickle reap the rankest land,
And minister the blade, with bounteous hand.
Dryden. Virgil. Geor. b. iii.

What a pleasant thing it is to account that fasting, which the unmortified epicures of old accounted their most delicious feasting, viz. fish and wine.—Stillingfleet, vol. ii. Ser. 2.

An air of robustness and strength is very prejudicial to beauty. An appearance of delicacy, and even of fragility, is almost essential to it.—Burke. Sublime and Beautiful, s. 16.

The just balance between the republican and monarchical part of our constitution is really, in itself, so extremely delicate and uncertain, that, when joined to men's passions and prejudices it is impossible but different opinions must arise concerning it, even among persons of the best understanding.—Hume. Ess. Parties of Great Britain.

Why mourns Apicius thus? Why runs his eye,
Heedless, o'er delicates, which from the sky
Might call down Jove? Churchill. The Times.

By his own dauntless heart and matchless strength,
Makes inroad on the flocks, that he may fare
Deliciously at cost of mortal man.
So Peleus' son all pity from his breast
Hath driv'n, and shame, man's blessing or his curse.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiv.

There is in the things of God, to those who practise them, a delicious savour that makes us love them, and that love admits us into God's cabinet, and strangely clarifies the understanding by the purification of the heart.
V. Knox. Christian Philosophy, s. 6.

DELI'CT. Lat. Delinquere, delictum; to leave undone, (sc.) that which ought to be done; and thus consequentially, and positively,—
A wrong doer, an offender. See DELINQUENT.

And according to the merit thereof, either deliver him by a degradation to the secular justice, or banish him the kingdom, according to the quality of the delict.
Howell, b. i. s. 3. Let. 13.

DELIGA'TION. Lat. Deligare, to bind. See LIGATURE.

Rather in these fractures do we use deligations with many rowlers, saith Albucasius.—Wiseman. Surgery, b. vii. c 1.

DELI'GHT, v. DELI'GHT, n. DELI'GHTOUS. DELI'GHTER. DELI'GHTABLE. DELI'GHTFUL. DELI'GHTFULLY. DELI'GHTFULNESS. DELI'GHTINGLY. DELI'GHTLESS. DELI'GHTSOME. } Fr. Delecter; Sp. Delectar; It. Dilettare; Lat. Delectare, (de, and lactare, from lacere, to draw, to attract.) See DELECTABLE, and DELICACY.

To please greatly; to gratify in a great degree; to fill with highly pleasing sensations.

With hem was so gret delyt, that bitwene hem there
Bi gete was the beste body, that euer was in this londe,
Kyng Arthure the noble mon. R. Gloucester, p. 179.

For thy dred delitable drynke.—Piers Ploughman, p. 14.

In many places were nightingales,
Alpes, finches, and wodwales,
That in her swete song deliten,
In thilke places as they habiten.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

We live in poverte, and in abstinence,
And borel folk in richesse and dispence
Of mete and drinke, and in her foule delit.
Id. The Sompnoures Tale, v 7457.

The smale birds singen clere
Her blisful swete song pitous
And in this seson delitous.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

And many a spice delitable
To eaten whan men rise fro table.—Id. Ib.

A still water for the nones
Renned vpon the small stones,
Whiche light of Lethes the riuer,
Under that hille in suche maner
There is, whiche yeueth great appetite
To slepe, and thus full of delite
Slepe hath his hous.—Gower. Con. A. b iv.

Thus in the deede deliteth God as farforth as we do it, either to serue our neighbour with all, as I haue sayd, or to tame the flesh that we may fulfil the commaundement from the bottom of the heart.—Tyndall. Workes, p 154.

The stately pompe of princes and their peires,
Did seeme to swimme in floudides of beaten golde,
The wonton world of yong delightful yeeres
Was not vnlyke a heauen for to beholde.
Gascoigne. Flowers. Memories.

No more all that our eyes can see of her (though when we have seen her, what else they shall ever see is but dry stubble after clover grass) is to be matched with the flock of unspeakable virtues, held up delightfully in that best builded fold.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. i.

This countrey seemed very goodly and delightsome to all of vs, in regard of the greennesse and beautie thereof, and we iudged it to be very populous within the land.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 399.

From whence he tooke his well deserued name:
He had in armes abroad wonne muchell fame
And fild farre lands with glory of his might,
Plaine, faithfull, true, and enemy of shame,
And euer lov'd to fight for ladies right,
But in vaine glorious fraies he little did delight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. s. 6.

O dear and dainty nymph, most gorgeously array'd
Of all the Driades known, the most delicious maid,
With all delights adorn'd, that any way beseem
A sylvan. Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 23.

High lifted vp were many lofty towres,
And goodly galleries faire over-laid,
Full of faire windowes and delightful bowers.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4.

Flo. The queen is all for revels; her high heart,
Unladen from the heaviness of state,
Bestows itself upon delightfulness.
Mackin. The Dumb Knight, Act iv. sc. 1.

To this the answer is easie, that Mangone is not innocent: and though he did not consent clearly and [illegible] to Seguiri's death, yet rather than die himself he was willing the other should.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Cons. b. iv. c. 1.

Most pleasant it is at first, to such as are melancholy given, to lie in bed whole days, and keep their chambers, to walk alone in some solitary grove, betwixt wood and water, by a brooke side to meditate upon some delightsome and pleasant subject, which shall affect them most Burton. Anat. of Melancholy, p. 88.

With the sweet sound of this harmonious lay,
About the keel delighted dolphins play;
Too sure a sign of sea's ensuing rage,
Which must anon this royal troop engage.
Waller. On His Majesty's Escape.

We should concerning our author consider, whether he be not a particular enemy, or disaffected to him, whether he be not ill-humoured, or a delighter in telling bad stories.
Barrow, vol i. Ser. 17.

Because it [deportment] is a nurse of peace, and greatly contributes to the delightfulness of society, [it] hath been always much commended, and hath obtained a conspicuous place in the honourable rank of vertues, under the titles of courtesie, comity, and affability.—Id. vol. i. Ser. 29.

And winter oft at eve resumes the breeze,
Chills the pale moon, and bids his driving sleets,
Deform the day delightless. Thomson. Spring

The wise man here asserts the ways of wisdom to be not only the ways of pleasantness, but likewise the paths of peace; that is, they are quiet and peaceable, as well as pleasant and delightsome to the soul.
Bp. Beveridge, vol. ii. Ser. 100.

He might as well preach this lesson [that all mirth and pleasure should be banished out of the world] to the winds as to men, who can see in all around them evident marks of God's having bountifully furnished them with various delights to refresh and divert their weary and fatigued minds.—Pearce, vol. iii. Ser. 7.

The situation was delightful. In front was the sea, and the ships at anchor; behind, and on each side, were plantations, in which were some of the richest productions of Nature.—Cook. Second Voyage, b. ii. c. 1.

How can you more profitably, or more delightfully employ your Sunday leisure, than in the performance of such duties as these, in demonstrating your piety and gratitude to God, by diffusing joy and comfort to every part you can reach of that creation, which was the work of his hands, and from which he rested on the seventh day?—Porteus, vol. i. Ser. 9.

DELI'NEATE, v. } Lat. Delineare, atum; (de, and lineare;) lineam ducere, to draw a line.
DELI'NEATE, adj.
DELINEA'TION.
DELI'NEATING, n.
DELI'NEATOR.
DELI'NEAMENT.
To draw a line or outline; to pourtray, to describe, to depicture; to sketch a picture, a profile.

If we do but consider this fabrick with minds unpossest of an affected madness, we will easily grant, that it was some skilful Archeus who delineated those comely proportions, and hath expresst such exactly geometrical elegancies in its compositions.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 5.

Wherefore it is of great import to behold the fates and affaires destinate to one age or time drawne, as it were, and delineate in one table.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. ii. c. 3.

The principall amongst these three, is the wisdome and soundnesse of direction, that is, a delineation and demonstration of a right and easy way to accomplish any enterprise.—Id. Ib. b. ii. The Proheme.

Show how that bird, how well that flow'r was done;
How this part shadow'd, and how that did rise,
This top was clouded, how that trail was spun,
The landscape, mixture, and delineatings,
And in that art a thousand curious things.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. vi.

Then by all the wide world's acknowledgment,
The sunne's a type of that eternall light
Which we call God, a fair delineament
Of that which good in Plato's school is hight.
More. On the Soul, pt. ii. b. iii. c. 3. s. 11.

Inferior art the landscape may design,
And paint the purple evening in the line:
Her [Satire's] daring thought essays a higher plan;
Her hand delineates passion, pictures man.
Brown. Ess. On Satire, pt. ii.

Dugdale from some of these illuminations has given cuts of two remarkable combats or tournaments performed in the 15th year of King Henry VI. in which the designs are far from unworthy of a better age, and the customs and habits delineated with great accuracy.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 2.

We, in the writings of the Evangelists, have a complete summary of his triennial preaching; we have, joined with the detail of many of his miracles, the delineation of his character, and the history of his wonderful life of piety and love.—Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 26.

When we compare this great man's [Bacon's] writings with some of the weaknesses of his life, we are tempted to exclaim, with a modern delineator of characters, "Alas, poor human nature"—V. Knox, Ess 52.

DELI'NQUENT, adj. } Fr. Délinquant; It. and Sp. Delinquente; Lat. Delinquens, pres. part. of Delinquere, (de, and linquere, to leave.) Delinquere proprie est praetermittere quod non oportet praeterire; to leave undone, that which ought to be done. And thus, positively,— DELI'NQUENT, n.
DELI'NQUENCY.
Doing wrong, offending;—and the noun—a wrong doer, an offender; a trespasser or transgressor.

He that politicly intendeth good to a common weal, may be called a just man, but he that practiseth either for his own profit, or any other sinister ends, may be well termed a delinquent person
State Trials, an. 1640. Earl Strafford.

But on those judges lies a heavy curse,
That measure crimes by the delinquent's purse.
Brome. Satire. On the Rebellion.

It [the doctrine of præexistence] supposeth the descent into these bodies to be a culpable lapse from an higher and better state of life, and this to be a state of incarceration for former delinquencies.
Glanvill. Pre-existence of Souls, c. 4.

Col. Gell informed Maj. Gen. Harrison, that the Lord Edward Howard, being a member of Parliament, and one of the committee at Haberdashers' Hall, had taken divers bribes for the excusing delinquents from sequestration, and easing them in their compositions.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 289.

DE'LIQUATE. Lat. De, and liquere. To melt, to dissolve.

Whether this ebullition be caused by a nitro-sulphureous ferment lodg'd especially in the left ventricle of the heart, which, mingling with the blood, excites such an ebullition, as we see made by the mixture of some chymical liquors, viz. oil of vitriol, and deliquated salt of tartar, or by the vital flame warming and boiling the blood.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

I caused an unusual brine to be made, by suffering sea-salt to deliquate in the moist air.
Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 202.

DELI'QUIUM. From the same source as Delict and Delinquent, (qv.)
A defect, or deficiency, a failing, a fainting.
Deliquium is used by chemists as if from Deliquere, to melt. See DELIQUATE.

All idolizing worms, that thus could crowd
And urge their sun into thy cloud;
Forcing his sometimes eclips'd face to be
A long deliquium to the light of thee.
Crashaw. Glorious Epiphany of our Lord God.

If he be locked in a close roome, he is afraid of being stifled for want of aire, and still carries bisket, aqua vitæ, or some strong waters about him, for fear of deliquiums, or being sick.—Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 181.

In short, their conscience was not stark dead, but under a kind of spiritual apoplexy, or deliquium.
South, vol. ii. Ser. 12.

DELIRA'TION, } Lat. Delirare. Vossius decides for the etymology given in the quotation from Pliny: that lira, originally signified, sulcus, a furrow; and that hence, (met.) he is said, delirare, who wanders from the right line of reason; quasi sulco et lira rationis evagatur.
DELI'RIOUS,
DELI'ROUS.
DELI'RIOUSNESS.
DELI'RIUM.
A wandering, erring, or straying from a right mind or understanding; raving, speaking or talking idly.

In some places, where the manner of the countrey doth require, this is performed with a tined or toothed harrow, or else with a broad planke fastened unto the plough taile, which dooth hide and cover the seed newly sowne: and in this manner to rake or harrow, is called in Latine licare [lirare], from whence came first the word delicare, [delirare] which is to leave bare balkes uncovered, and by a metaphore and borrowed speech, to rave and speak idly.
Holland. Plinie, b. x. c. 20.

To make which the more evident, we shall briefly represent a syllabus or catalogue of the many atheistick hallucinations or deliriums concerning it.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 848.

That you may rightly understand this my assertion (before I acquaint you with the reasons which induce me thereunto,) you must know that the masters of physick tell us of two kinds of deliration or alienation of the understanding.
Mede. Works, b. i. Dis. 6.

Whether a man will be so delirous as to phancy it [the aire] all endued with perception and liberty of will to resist as it pleases.—H. More. Antidote against Atheism, b. ii. c. 2

Cor. Delirium this is call'd, which is mere dotage,
Sprung from ambition first, and singularity,
Self-love and blind opinion of true merit.
Ford. The Lover's Melancholy, Act iii. sc. 3.

——— But if on bed
Delirious flung, sleep from his pillow flies,
All night he tosses, nor the balmy power
In any posture finds. Thomson. Spring.

Then, tho' we do think, yet we think wildly and extravagantly, and inconsistently, even to that degree, that we call it deliriousness or frenzy.—Sharp, vol. iii. ser. 3.

Their fancies first delirious grew,
And scenes ideal took for true. Green. The Spleen.

So spake Telemachus. Then Pallas struck
The suitors with delirium. wide they stretch'd
Their jaws with unspontaneous laughter loud;
Their meat dripp'd blood; tears fill'd their eyes, and dire
Presages of approaching wo, their hearts.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xx.

DELI'VER, v. } Fr. Délivrer; It. Delivrare; Sp. Delivrar, dalibrar, Lat. Liberare; liberum facere, in libertatem reducere; —to free or make free; to restore to freedom or liberty. See DELIBER.
DELI'VER, adj.
DELI'VERLY.
DELI'VERNESS.
DELI'VERANCE.
DELI'VERER.
DELI'VERING, n.
DELI'VERY.
To free from:—(sc.) from confinement or custody or slavery; and thus, to rescue; to release from the power or possession of an enemy; to release or surrender from our own: and thus, to give up or resign; to give up from one holder or possessor to another: and thus, simply,—to give up, throw up, cast away.
To deliver from the mouth; i. e. to utter, to speak.
In our old writers, Deliver, deliverly, deliverness, are used as applied to liberty of action, freedom of motion, unrestrained, unencumbered; and thus, to—
Activity, agility or nimbleness.

The kyng delyuerede that folk out of seruage,
And Brut deliuerede the kyng out of hys ostage.
R. Gloucester, p. 13.

'The kyng tho myd gode herte delyuery let anon
Bothe quene and byssop. Id. p. 340.

God delyuerde Athelstan of many hard affaies.
R. Brunne, p. 32

The godes that be fonden on my londe o chance,
Tille him I am not bounden to mak deliueraunce.
Id. p. 158.

——— The kynge cride to Abraam mercy
And deliuerede hym hus wif.—Piers Ploughman, p. 215.

——— Christ is us name
That shal delyuery ous som day. Id. p. 319.

If thou art Crist, seye to us, and he seide to hem, If I seye to you ye schulen not beleue to me. And if I axe, ye schulen not answere to me, neither ye schulen delyuere me.
Wiclif. Luk, c. 22.

Deliver us out of all this besy drede,
And take a wif, for highe Goddes sake.
Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8010.

Of his stature he was of even lengthe,
And wonderly deliver and grete of strengthe.
Id. The Prologue, v. 54.

Lo when thou wer imprisoned how fast they hied in help of thy deliueräce.—Id. The Testament of Love, b. i.

The fox answered, in faith it shal be don:
And as he spake the word, al sodenly
The cok brake from his mouth deliverly
And high upon a tree he flew anon.
Id. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 15,422.

Certes, the goodes of the body ben hele of body, strength, deliverness, beautee, gentrie, franchise.—Id. Persones Tale

The tyme sette of kinde is come,
This lady hath hir chambre nome,
And of a sonne borne full;
Wherof that she was loyfull.
She was deliuered saufe and soone.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

And cried was, that thei shulde come
Unto the game all and some
Of hem that ben deliuer and wight,
To do suche maistrie as thei might. Id. Ib. b. viii.

The nere this hil was vpon chance
To take his deliverance,
The more vnboxomly he crude. Id. Ib. b. vii.

But then Sir Mathewe sayd, fayre nephue, sythe ye be here with suche a puyssaunce, it behoueth you to delyuer this countre of a certayne Bretons and Frenchemen, who kepeth well a xii. fortresses bytwene this and Bayone.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 338.

Wherfore they charged this frere to go into Fraūce, and delyuered hym instructions of the effecte that he shulde saye and do.—Id. Ib. c. 193.

The whiche thre small shyppes escaped by theyr delyuer saylynge.—Fabyan, an. 1338.

The temperate may soone dispose his members to their reste,
And ryse agayne delyuerly, to labour quicke and preste.—Drant. Horace, b. ii. Sat. 2.

This, for his delyuernesse and swiftenesse, was surnamed Herefote, in whose begynnynge stryfe was amonge the lordes.—Fabyan, vol. i. c. 208.

Therefore euery orator should earnestly labour to file his tongue, that his words may slide with ease, and that in his deliuerance he may haue such grace, as the sound of a lute, or any such instrument doth giue.
Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 3.

And he sayde, the Lord is my rocke, my castel, and my deliuerer, God is my strength, and in him wyll I truste.
Bible, 1551. 2 Kings, c. 22.

Henry Piercy, late of Tinmouth, in the county of Northumberland, Knt. was indicted in the term of Easter, in the 14th year of her Majesty's reign, for that he, with divers others, did conspire for the deliverying of the Queen of Scots out of the custody of the Earl of Shrewsbury.
State Trials. Death of Northumberland, an. 1584.

And because without deliuerie of those countries, he perceued that truce could not be obtained, he agreed, to the release and deliueraunce of them.—Hall. Hen. VI an. 29.

Whom hardly he from flying forward staid
Til he these words to him deliuer might;
Sir Knight, aread who hath ye thus arraid,
And eke from whom make ye this hasty flight,
For, neuer knight I saw in such misseeming plight
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 9.

—— Gentle dame, reward enough I weene
For many labours more, then I haue found,
This, that in safety now I haue you seene,
And meane of your deliuerance haue beene.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 12.

But fortune tyr'd at length with my afflictions,
Some ships of Malta met the Ottoman fleet,
Charg'd them, and boarded them, and gave me freedom
With my deliverers I serv'd.
Beaum. & Fletch. Faire Maid of the Inn, Act iv. sc. 5.

At one side of the crosse kneeles Ch. armd, and at ye other, Joan d'Arc, armd like a cavalier, with boots and spurs, her hayre dischevel'd, as the deliverress of the towne from our countrymen, when they besieg'd it.
Evelyn. Memoirs, Ap 21. 1644.

Excommunications, as in the Apostles' times they were deliverings over to Satan, so now shall be deliverings over to a foreign enemy, or the people's rage.
Bp. Taylor. Episcopacy Asserted, s. 36.

Moreover, as they are twins of an illegitimate and scandalous conception, their delivery is commonly after such a manner, as that of Phares and Zara, where he that put his hand first into the world, came entyrely last into it.
Montague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 12. s. 1.

Plato, after having delivered very noble and almost divine truths concerning the nature and attributes of the Supreme God, weakly advises men to worship likewise inferiour Gods, Daemons, and Spirits.
Clarke. Natural and Revealed Religion, Prop. 6.

As for the presbyterians, they were so apprehensive of the fury of the commonwealth party, that they thought it a deliverance to be rescued out of their hands.
Burnet. Own Time, vol. i. b. i.

In the 15 v. we read that there was found in it a poor wise man, and he by his wisdom delivered the city. A worthy service indeed, and certainly we may expect that some honourable recompence should follow it; a deliverer of his country, and that in such distress, could not but be advanced.—South, vol. i. Ser. 5.

The investitures of bishops and abbots, which had been originally given by the delivery of the pastoral ring and staff, by the king of England, were after some opposition wrung out of their hands.—Burnet. Hist. of Reform. vol. i. b. i.

As all worldly enjoyment is uncertain, and unexpected deliverances from evil sometimes happen, a considerate mind, even when joy is predominant, will not be wholly exempt from fear; and in the deepest affliction, a pious mind will not be without hope of deliverance, or at least of consolation.—Beattie. Elem. of Moral Science, pt. i. c. 2. s. 5.

He [Vertue] was simple, modest, and scrupulous; so scrupulous, that it gave a peculiar slowness to his delivery; he never uttered his opinion hastily, nor hastily assented to others.—Walpole. Catalogue of Engravers.

DELL. Dut. and Ger. Delle. Locus declivis. Spenser writes delve, q. dell. See DELVE.

Soone after the begynnynge of the cytie, there hapned to be a great orthe quake, and after there remayned a greatte dell or dytte without botume.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. ii. c. 9.

No more the company of fresh fair maids
And wanton shepherds be to me delightful,
Nor the shrill pleasing sound of merry pipes
Under some shady dell, when the cool wind
Plays on the leaves.
Beaum. & Fletch. Faithful Shepherdess, Act i. sc. 1.

This evening as I whistl'd out my dog,
To drive my straggling flock, and pitch'd my fold,
I saw him dropping sweat, o'er-laboured, stiff,
Make faintly as he could, to yonder dell.
Dryden. The British Worthy, Act ii.

Then let me rove some wild and heathy scene,
Or find some ruin midst its dreary dells,
Whose walls more awful nod
By thy religious gleams.—Collins. Ode to Evening

DELU'DE, v. DELU'DABLE. DELU'DER. DELU'DING, n. DELU'SION. DELU'SIVE. DELU'SIVENESS. DELU'SORY. Lat. Deludere, to cease playing; de, and ludere, to play or sport; (ludere, a Lydis, who first introduced them (ludi) into Hetruria, whence the Romans received them. Vossius.) Deludere, ludendi finem facere. The Roman gladiators before the real combat had a mock battle, as a preparatory exercise, and when they ceased from this, they were said deludere. If hence deduced, the word must have been subsequently applied to the mock battle itself; and that also, when the real one was required of them; when they "counterfeited earnest," as Manning, the translator of Xiphelin, expresses it, (vol. ii. p. 204.) And thus, to delude is—

To cheat, to deceive, to beguile; (sc.) by assuming false appearances, making false pretences.

The idol of a thing in case may be
So depe emprinted in the fantasie
That it deludeth the wittes outwardly,
And so appereth in form and like estate,
Within the mind, as it was figurate.
Chaucer. The Complaint of Creseide.

To shew shortly why that he
Entred first, into that contre
From whence he came, & from what region;
But he her put in delusion
As he had done it for the nones.
Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. i.

But experience doth teach plainly howe folishe we are, howe mad and destitute of all sense, seyng that we suffer our selves so easily and so often tymes to be deluded and deceiued.—Calvine. Foure Godlye Sermons, Ser. 4.

When I see a miracle done at any image, and perceaue that it bringeth men to the worshipping of itself, contrary to the facte and doctr ne of the Apostles, which would not receaue it themselues, I must needes conclude, that it is but a delusion done by the Deuill to deceaue vs and to bring the wrath of God vpon vs.—Frith. Workes, p. 154.

—— This pure metal
So innocent is, and faithful to the mistress
Or master that possesses it, that, rather
Than hold one drop that's venomous, of itself
It flies in pieces and deludes the traitor.
Massinger. The Renegado, Act i. sc. 3.

For well understanding the omniscience of his nature, he is not so ready to deceive himself, as to falsifie unto him, whose cognition is no way deludable.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 2.

Where it was articled betwixt two kings, that there should be a free admittance of each others commodities unto their several kingdoms, and after a command should be given prohibiting either of them unto their subjects the making use thereof, it could not but be understood a defrauding and deluding of the articles, and the true intention of them.
Cabbala. Sir Walton Aston to Lord Conway.

Who ever by consulting at thy shrine
Return'd the wiser, or the more instruct,
To fly or follow what concern'd him most,
And run not sooner to his fatal snare?
For God hath justly giv'n the nations up
To thy delusions.—Milton. Paradise Regained, b. i.

To cross my innocent desires,
And make my griefs extreme,
A cruel mistress thus conspires
With a delusive dream.—Sherburne. The Dream.

Let no play-hunters therefore any longer cheat themselves or others with these delusory false pretences, which have neither truth nor substance in them.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. ii. Act iv. sc. 2.

But Tyber now thou seek'st, to be at best,
When there arrived, a poor precarious guest,
Yet it deludes thy search: perhaps it will
To thy old age be undiscovered still.—Dryden. Ovid, Ep 7

Turn, sir, survey that comely, awful man,
And to my prayers be cruel if you can.
Aring. Away deluder; who taught thee to sue?
Otway. Don Carlos, Act iii. sc. 1.

Did not the sun through heaven's wide azure roll'd,
For three long years the royal fraud behold?
While she laborious in delusion, spread
The spacious loom, and mix'd the various thread.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. ii.

What are ye, now, ye tuneful triflers! once
The eager solace of my easy hours,
Ye dear deluders of Greece or Rome,
Anacreon, Horace, Virgil, Homer, what?
The gay, the bright, the sober, the sublime?
Thompson. Sickness, b. i.

Say, however, and it is all that the wicked have to say, that such imaginations may be delusive, and such fears may be vain: but yet, weak as you suppose these fears to be, we must be much weaker than we are, before we can get rid of them that is, we must lose our reason and understanding before we can forget there is a God who will judge the world in righteousness.—Sherlock, vol. iii. Dis. 57.

When they have been driven out by opposite evidence, like servants whose faults you seldom hear of till they are turned away, then indeed we may discover their delusiveness, but then they are no longer our judgment: every judgment, while it is our present judgment, carries the same face of veracity.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. i. c. 11.

DELVE, v. DELVE, n. DE'LVER. DE'LVING, n. A. S. Delf-an; Dut. Delv-an, to dig. (See DELF.) Spenser writes Delve, a noun, (q.) dell. To dig; to cut into; to cut towards a depth or bottom.

"Lord kyng," quoth Merlyn, "gef thou wolt the sothe wyte,
Lat delue vnder the fundement, & thou schall bisethe fynde.
A water pol, that hath ymad, that this werk ys bi hynde."
Me dalf bi nethe, and fond the water as Merlyn hadde yseid.—R. Gloucester, p. 395.

The Cristynemen delue vaste, & ther wal velde adoun,
So that the Sarasons golde hem up ther toun.—Id.

—— Alle Cristyne people
To delue and dike a deop diche al about unite.
Piers Ploughman, p. 385

And the baylyf seide withynne himself, what schal I do, for my lord taketh away fro me the baylie, delue may I not I schame to begge.—Wiclif. Luk, c. 16.

Certis I haue now liued to long,
Sith I may not this closer kepe,
All quicke I would be doluen depe.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose

Alas, what was he that first dalfe vp the gobbettes or weights of gold couered vnder yerth, and the precious stones, that woulden haue be hidde.—Id. Boecius, b. ii.

That ofte whan I shulde plaie,
It maketh me drawe oute of the waie
In soleyn place by my selfe,
As doth a laborer to delfe.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

Neither onely the citizens, but also the countrie-folkes doo very well vnderstande the same. Yee maie finde, yea, euen the very dichers and deluers, and cowheardes, and gardiners disputinge the holy Trinitie, and the creation of al thinges.—Jewel. Defence of the Apologie, p. 607.

Stronge and vyolente exercises be these, delvynge (specially in toughe clay and heuy,) &c.
Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. ii.

When base desire bade men to delven low,
For needlesse metals, then gan mischief grow.
Bp. Hall, b. iii. Sat. 1.

—— He by and by
His feeble feet directed to the cry;
Which to that shady delue him brought at last.
Where Mammon earst did sunne his treasury.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 8.

It is a darksome delue farre vnder ground
With thornes and barren brakes enuiround round,
That none the same may easily out win.
Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 1.

Moreover, these rules following, are to bee observed, That when any vines do require such delving and digging, the labourers ought to go to worke betimes before the heat of the day.—Holland. Pliny, b. xvii. c. [illegible]

And hoary frosts, after the paynful toyl
Of delving hinds, will rot the mellow soil.
Dryden. Virgil, Geor. b. ii.

His health is injured, his spirits dejected; his time lost; after all, the parent finds it necessary to employ him in his own trade; in digging and delving, in shoe-making, &c.
Knox. Winter Evenings, Even 20.

DE'LUGE, v. } Fr. Déluge; It. and Sp. DE'LUGE, n. } Diluvio; Lat. Diluvium; from Diluere, dilutum; terram enim reddat dilutam, i. e. wetted, washed, soaked.

To cover with waters, to overflow, to overwhelm.

Joye writes Diluvy.

But now so wepeth Venus in her sphere
That with her teares she woll drench vs here,
Alas Scogan this is for thine offence
Thou causest this deluge of pestilence.
Chaucer. Balade of the Village. Lenuoy.

The diluuge drowned not the worlde in one daye, but at last when the hyllis were all kouered, all were drowned.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 10.

—— Torture without end
Still urges, and a fiery deluge, fed
With ever burning sulphur unconsum'd
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. i.

Then murmuring from his beds, he boils, he raves,
And a foam whitens on the purple waves;
At every step, before Achilles stood
The crimson surge, and delug'd him with blood.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xxi.

Upon this supposition there must have been infinite deluges already past: for if ever this Atheist admits of a first deluge, he is in the same noose that he was —Bentley, Ser. 3.

And as when stormy winds encountering loud,
Burst with rude violence the bellowing cloud,
Precipitate to earth, the tempest poure
The vexing hailstones thick in sounding showers.
The delug'd plains then every ploughman flies,
And every hind and traveller shelter'd lies.
Hamilton. Virgil. Æneis, b. 10.

DE'MAGOGUE. Gr. Δημαγωγος, compounded of Δημος, people, and αγ-ειν, to lead.

A leader of the people; applied to a factious or seditious leader. Milton considers the word as a novelty.

Who were the chief demagogues to send for those tumults, some alive are not ignorant. Setting aside the affrightment of this goblin word, for the king, by his leave cannot coin English, as he could money, to be current (and 'tis believ'd this wording was above his known stile and orthography, and causes the whole composure to be conscious of some other author) Yet if the people were sent for, emboldened and directed by those demagogues, who, saving his Greek, were good patriots, and by his own confession men of some repute for parts and piety, it helps well to assure us there was both urgent cause, and the less danger of their coming.
Milton. An Answer to Eikon Basilikè.

A plausible insignificant word in the mouth of an expert demagogue, is a dangerous and a dreadful weapon.
South, vol. ii. Ser. 9.

Hence Aristophanes, in banter, I suppose, of the predictions in Herodotus,—makes a pompous and ridiculous oracle, and uses the same foolish introduction, to persuade a sausage-monger to set up for a demagogue and a ruler.
Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

DEMA'IN, n. } The same word so variously written. (See DOMAIN.) Fr. DEM'EAN. DEME'SNE. DOM'AIN. } Demain or domain; Lat. Dominium; from dominus,—perhaps,—master of the house, (domus.)

"Fr. Domaine,—a man's patrimony or inheritance, proper and hereditary possessions; those whereof he is the right or true lord or possessor, and absolute owner: also, an hereditary property in, and possession of land, &c." (Cotgrave.) For the more technical usages of the word, see Dominicum in Spelman, Gloss. Arch.—And see also DEMEAN, infra.

The first of thise fiue was thorgh Romeyns,
That wan it of Casbalan into ther demeyne.
R. Brunne, p. 7.

And for the woodes in demeines
To kepe, tho ben Driades.
Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Consent at laste
Since that thou hast
My hart in thie demayne,
For service trew
On me to rewe,
And recke me love agayne.
Wyat. Of Love.

For his [Alexander] own demain and possessions at home, as also of the crown revenues, he had bestowed the most part upon his friends and followers.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 1045.

He also reuoked unto his hands certaine parcels of his demeane lands, which his father had giuen away.
Holinshed. Stephan of Buttengne, an. 1154.

William also the Earle of Mortaigne, and Warren sonne of King Stephan, were compelled to surrender to king Henrie, the castell of Pemsey, the citie of Norwich, and other tounes, and castels which he held, apperteining to the demeene of the crowne.—Holinshed. Hen. II. an. 1115.

From demesnes, whose barren soil,
Ne'er produc'd the barley oil;
From all liars, and from those
Who write nonsence, verse or prose,
Libera nos, &c.
Cotton. The Litany.

Or say, what difference, if we live confin'd
Within the bounds of nature's laws assign'd,
Whether a thousand acres of demesne,
Or one poor hundred, yield sufficient grain?
Francis. Horace, b. i. Sat. 1.

—— Peleus with a willing heart
Receiving; lov'd me as a father loves
His only son, the son of his old age,
Inheritor of all his large demesnes.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. ix.

DEMA'ND, v. } Fr. Démander; It. Domandare; Sp. Demandar, parum DEMA'ND, n. DEMA'NDABLE. DEMA'NDANT. DEMA'NDER. } deflexo sensu, from the Lat. Demandare; de, and mandare, q. d. in manus dare; so Gr. Εγχειριζειν, in manus dare, tradere, committere.

As mandare, then, is to give, deliver or commit to the hands of another—

To demand, is—to seek, ask or require, from the hands of another. And generally, to ask, to claim, to require.

"I not nout," quoth the king, "wat ower demande be"
R. Gloucester, p. 500.

And me demaunded how and in what wise
I thither come, and what my errand was.
Chaucer. The Court of Love.

But thise demaundes aske I first (quad he)
That sin it shal be don in hasty wise,
Wol ye assent, or elles you avise?
Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8224.

Of depe imaginacions,
Problemes and demaundes eke
His wisedome was to find and seke.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

When that repentant teares hath clensed clere from ill
The charged brest: and grace hath wrought therin amending will:
With bold demands then may his mercy well assaile
The speche man sayth: without the which request may none preuayle.—Surrey. Ecclesiastes, c. 5.

In the fyrst question if the demaundment had no tytle, how could he graunt to him the accion of the lande during his life, and in the second, if the plaintiffe had none interest how coulde he geue him dates of payment.
Hall. Hen. V. an. 8.

And though the requeste was pitifull and they that made it familiar, and he to whom it was made, was the father, and the demaunder was the mother, and she for whom it was made was the doubter, the emperour granted it, but not without great displeasure.—Golden Boke, c. 33.

Hereof riseth a merrie tale of a Welshman, that lieng in this place abroad all night in the weather, and peraduenture not verie well occupied, was demanded of his hostesse (where he did breake his fast the next morrow,) at what inne he laie in the night precedent, because he came so soone to hire house yer anie of hir maids were vp!
Holinshed. Description of Britaine, c. 14.

He must accustome himself to represse his tongue and take some pause, allowing a competent space of time between the demand and the answer; during which silence, both the demander may have while to bethink himself and add somewhat thereto, if he list, and also the demane time to think of an answer, and not let his tongue run before his wit.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 169.

In this case therefore the reward is not demandable, so much upon the account of the divine justice, as upon the account of the divine truth and fidelity.
Hale. Cont. vol. i. The Great Audit

In a writ of right the tenant chose trial by battle, but when every thing was prepared and performed, at the day and place appointed for the battle, the demandants being solemnly called, made default, whereupon final judgment was given against them.—State Trials. D. Ramsay, an. 1631.

Faith. Sir, though I could be pleas'd to make my ills
Only mine own, for grieving other men,
Yet to so fair and courteous a demander
That promises compassion, at worst pity,
I will relate a little of my story.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Captain, Act ii. sc. 1.

If we seriously do weigh the case, we shall find, that to require faith without reason is to demand an impossibility; for faith is an effect of persuasion, and persuasion is nothing else but the application of some reason to the mind, apt to draw forth its assent.—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 2.

I had him boldly tell his fortune past:
His present state, his lineage and his name:
Th' occasion of his fears, and whence he came.
The good Anchises rais'd him with his hand;
Who, thus encourag'd, answer'd our demand.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. iii.

The directors of some of those banks sometimes took advantage of this optional clause, and sometimes threatened those who demanded gold and silver in exchange for a considerable number of their notes, that they would take advantage of it, unless such demanders would content themselves with a part of what they demanded.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. ii. c. 2.

One penny, they allowed, was demandable every offering-day for a rent of forty shillings; but they contended no more was demandable if the rent should be forty times forty shillings.—Horsley. Speech. Stipends of London Incumbents.

It is proper to establish an invariable order in all payments; which will prevent partiality; which will give preference to services, not according to the importunity of the demandant, but the rank and order of their utility or their justice.—Burke. On the Economical Reform.

DEMARCA'TION. Cotgrave has "Desmarquer; to take away the mark from; or, to put from his mark." But, by usage, this word is equivalent to—

A mark, a marking off, (sc.) of boundaries or limits.

The speculative line of demarcation, where obedience ought to end, and resistance must begin, is faint, obscure, and not easily definable.—Burke. On the French Revolution

Still I fear the line of demarcation between spiritual and temporal, it may not always be easy to define.
Horsley. Speech, May 13, 1805.

DEME'AN, v. } Junius thinks that this DE'MEAN, n. DEME'ANOUR. DEMR'ANURE. DEME'ANING, n. } word may be from the Fr. Moyen; Lat. Modus, vel medium. Modus vel ratio decenter se gerendi in rebus gerendis. Skinner suggests other conjectures. Mr. Tyrwhitt interprets the verb Demaine, in Chaucer's Second Book of Fame, To manage: and the noun management. There are other passages in which the application seems precisely the same; and hence it admits a doubt whether this verb may not be formed upon the noun demain or domain (supra); and thus, to signify—

To rule or have dominion over; to manage, to conduct; (sub.) the behaviour, the mode and manner of acting; and thus, to treat, to behave towards; to behave or deport. It is used by some writers as if they considered it to be from the adj. mean; thus—

To act meanly; to debase, to disgrace.

Lo, is it not a great mischaunce
To let a foole haue gouernaunce
Of things that he cannot demaine.
Chaucer. House of Fame, b. ii.

Come on with me, demeane you liche a maid
With shamefast drede, for ye shal speke I wis
With her that is the myrrour, ioy, and blisse:
But somewhat straunge, and sad of her demeane
She is, beware your countenance be seene.
Id. The Court of Love.

Who shal me yeven teres to complaine
The deth of gentillesse, and of fraunchise,
That all this world welded in his demaine,
And yet him thought it mighte not suffice?
Id. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,583.

As the first finder mente I am sure
C, for calot, for if we haue O
L for leude, D, for demenure.—Id. The Remedie of Love.

I cannot report ne make no rehersaile
Of my demeaning, with the circumstaunce,
But wel I wot the speare with euery naile
Thirled my soule.—Id. The Lamen. of Marie Magdalene.

He toke good hede of the person
And saw she was a worthy wight,
And thought he wolde vpon the night
Demene hir at his owne will.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

Neuer shal ther hereafter [be a place] in which ther could anye man abide riche without the danger of eternal damnacion, euen for his riches alone, though he demeaned it neuer so wel.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1207.

Than they entreted with therle and with his counsel, and the erle who had many thynges to take hede of, bycause he knewe nat howe all the countre wolde be demeaned, therfore he toke them to mercy, and suffred them peasably to departe
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 228.

Item the boke howe men should fle synne.
Item royall demenaunce worshyp to wynne.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

Thus by this demenour the people make the saintes God's felowes, that is to saye the seruantes matcheth with theirs master and the creatures mates to the Maker.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 140.

Of which their demenure, & that in these heresyes thei meane here no better than Luther doth hym self, I haue had good experience.—Id. Ib. p 262.

Or which of them two do men set more by; and whither wil they thinke of most honest demeanor, her that they see either neuer, or but seldom, or her whome they meet in euery corner.—Vives. Instruc. of a Chris Woman, b. i. c. 16.

In this estate the thre aquyers that were sende fro therle to se their demeanynge founde them.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, c 399.

Cause have I none, quoth he, of cancred will
To quite them ill, that me demean'd so well.
But self regard of priuate good or ill,
Moues me of each.
Spenser. Colin Clout's come Home again.

That it will please his highness, that all merchants, as well denizens as strangers, coming into this realm, be well and honestly entreated and demeaned for such things whereof subsidy is granted, as they were in the time of the king's progenitors and predecessors, without oppression to them to be done.—State Trials. Great Case of Impositions, an. 1606

1. If the king do not demean himself by reason in the right of his crown, his leges be bound by oath to remove the king.—Id. The Case of the Postnati, an. 1608.

Lady. Alas good Monsieur;
A was a proper man, and fair demean'd,
A person worthy of a better temper.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Noble Gentleman, Act i. sc. 1.

They answered with a sullen confidence, that they should demean themselves according to their instructions, and would perform the trust reposed in them by the two Houses of Parliament.—Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. p. 518.

When thou hast all this done, then bring me newes
Of his demeane: thenceforth not like a louer,
But like a rebell stout I will him vse.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 8.

The prince, according to the former token,
Which faire Serene to hem deliuered had,
Pursu'd him straight, in mind to been ywroken
Of all the vile demeanne, and vsage bad,
With which he had those two so ill bestad.
Id. Ib. b. vi. c. 6.

Her name was Womanhood, that she expreſt
By her sad semblant and demeanure wise:
For, stedfast still her eyes did fixed rest,
Ne rov'd at random after gazers guise,
Whose luring bayts oft-tymes doe heedlesse hearts entise.
Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 10.

Representing unto us the manners of strange nations, the laws and customs of old time, the particular affairs of men, their consultations and enterprises, the means they have used to compass them withall, and their demeaning of themselves when they were come to the highest or thrown down to the lowest degree of state.
North. Plutarch. To the Reader.

But Gods like us have too much sense
At poets' flights to take offence:
Nor can hyperboles demean us;
Each drab has been compar'd to Venus.
Answer by Dr. Swift to Dr. Sheridan.

These she to strangers oftentimes would shew,
With grave demean and solemn vanity,
Then proudly claim as to her merit due,
The venerable praise and title of vertu.
West. On Travelling.

If by the simplicity of your unassuming demeanour, you can gain their favour and kindness, you may rest satisfied that you are modest enough, and that your head has been in no respect turned by your good fortune.
Smith. Moral Sentiments, pt. iii. c. 3.

DEME'NT, v. } Sp. Dementar; Lat. De-
DEME'NTATE, v. } mentare; dementem facere,
DEME'NTATE, adj. } (Vossius.) De-mens, (de,
DEME'NCY. } and mens,) without mind.

To deprive of the mind or senses; to be or cause to be mad, insane of understanding.

For he was thus demented and bewitched with these pestilent purswasions of his wicked rulers.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 5.

O abhominable Papystes and minysters of Sathan, whych thus seke to dementa the symple hartes of the people.
Bale. Apology, fol. 80.

And yet for all that
The king his clemency
Dispenseth with his demenure.
Skelton. Why come ye not to Court?

As if they landed in the mad haven in the Euxine Sea of Daphnis insana, which had a secret quality to dementate.
Burton. Democritus. To the Reader. p. 75.

This heaviest judgment that ever fell upon a nation, extream misery, and extream fury, is, I confess, a most direful sight, but withall a more inauspicious prognostick, a sound of a trumpet to that last more fatal day, with an ARIAN thou dementate sinner and come to judgment
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 522.

As for dementation, sopition of reason and the diviner particle from drink,—though American religion approve, and Pagan piety of old hath practised it, even at their sacrifices,—Christian morality and the doctrine of Christ will not allow.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 21.

I speak not here of men dementated with wine, or inchanted with some temptation: the thing holds true of men even in their sober and more considering seasons.
Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 5.

What! when we have not an ally, not a friend who wishes us well in all Europe, are we so dementated, so fitted for destruction, as to make an enemy of America also!
Anecdotes of Bp. Watson, vol. ii. p. 375.

DEME'RGE. } Lat. Demergere, sum; (de,
DEME'RSE. } mergere, to sink.)
To sink down, to plunge down into.

I found the receiver severed from its cover, and the air breaking forth through the water in which it was demerged.
Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 519.

The receiver being erected, the mercury will again be stagnant in the bottom of the phial, and the orifice of the tube C C will be found demersed in it.—Id. Ib. vol. iv. p. 515.

DEME'RIT, v. } Fr. Démérite; It. and Sp.
DEME'RIT, n. } Demerito; Lat. Demeritum, from demereri; Gr. Μερ-ειν, dividere, to divide, whence μερ-ος, part; and hence will come, merere, quia meritum fere partium est, sive labor, sive pretium spectetur, (Vossius.)

"Fr. Démérite,—desert, merit, deserving; also, the contrary, a disservice, demerit, misdeed, ill-carriage, ill-deserving; (in which sense it is most commonly used at this day.") Cotgrave.

Vossius says, that to use demeritum for peccatum, is to recede from the purity of the Latin tongue; whether fault or the reverse is to be learned from the context.

But she that coud so yll do and wolde,
Hers be the blame for her demerite.
Chaucer. The Remedie of Loue.

I haue nowe no more to doo on yearthe. If I haue demerited any loue or thanke at your hands, bestowe it wholly on my sonne, whan I am gone from you.
Udal. Preface vnto the King.

For thus their obstinate rebellion against Christ demeriteth, this is a reward worthy their desertes.
Id. Thessalonians, c. 2.

And therefore these men, now prisoners at the bar, but answer to their offences, and receive according to their demerite; and first for their faults.
State Trials. Sir Richard Knightly, an. 1588.

After a very fair and full trial he [Lord Macguire] was found guilty by the jury, upon a most pregnant evidence, and then condemned, executed as a traitour at Tyburn, as he well demerited.—Id. Lord Macguire, an. 1645.

The inhabitants of Rhodes are restored to their libertie, often taken from them, or confirmed, according as they had merited (meruerant) by seruice abroade, or demerited (deliquerant) by sedition at home.
Greneway. Tacitus. Annales, p. 173.

There is no father that for one demerit,
Or two, or three, a sonne will disinherit:
That as the last of punishments is meant;
No man inflicts that pain till hope is spent.
B. Jonson. An Elegie.

By the greatnesse of their power, by the number of their friends, and by many benefits and demerits whereby they obliged their adherents, [they] acquired this reputation.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 1101.

But his deserts, I suppose, you will date from the same term that I do, his great demerits, that is, from the beginning of our late calamities.
Cowley. On the Government of Oliver Cromwell.

They were all concerned, either as accessories or principals, and demerit a halter, if the repliant's opinion be law.
State Trials. Second Find. of the Magistracy, an. 1683.

If the demerit of all sins be equal, there can then be no reason for the degrees of punishment in another world; but to deny that there are degrees of punishment there, is not only contrary to reason, but to our Saviour's express assertion, that some shall be beaten with many stripes and some with fewer, and that it shall be more tolerable for some in the day of judgment than for others.
Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 35.

The facility with which testimonia are signed by men of high characters in the universities, is certainly injurious to the cause of learning and virtue. It confounds the distinctions between merit and demerit.
Knox. Liberal Education, s 49.

DEME'SNE. See DEMAIN.

DE'MI, or } Fr. Demi; Lat. Dimidium, half;
DE'MY, adj. } pars dimidiati altera; i. e. per medium divisi; either part of that which is divided through the middle.

Demy, half, is very commonly prefixed.

DEMIGRA'TION. Lat. De-migratio, from De-migrare. See MIGRATE, and EMIGRATE.

Are we so foolish, that whiles we may sweetly enjoy the settled estate of our primogeniture, we will needs bring upon ourselves the curse of Reuben, to runne abroad like water; whose qualitie it is, not easily to be kept within the proper bounds: yea, the curse of Cain, to put ourselves from the side of Eden, into the land of Nod, that is, of demigration!—Bp. Hall. A Censure of Tracell, s. 22.

DEMI'SE, v. } Fr. Démission, a demise, let-
DEMI'SE, n. } ting, or demising. Lat. Demittere vel dimittere; dimittere autem pro relinquere vel donare testamento occurit apud Ælium Lampridium: Skinner,—to leave, give or bequeath by will or testament. To demise is—

To dismiss or put away, (sc.) the possession; to part or depart, to decease; to part with (sc. to another); to transfer, to convey: and demise, n. is—

The decease or departure. See the quotations from Blackstone.

The Stoick calls it εναγγελιον αυθμενον, the promise that every man makes, the obligation that he is bound in to nature at his shaping in the womb, and upon which condition his reasonable soul is at his own conception demised to him
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. Ser 14.

Flatter my sorrow with report of it.
Tell me, what state, what dignity, what honor,
Canst thou demise to any childe of mine.
Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act iv. sc. 4.

I conceive it ridiculous to make the condition of an indenture something that is necessarily annext to the possession of the demise.—Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 725.

Two days after she went to the parliament, which, to the great happiness of the nation, and to the advantage of her government, was now continued to sit, notwithstanding the king's demise, by the act that was made five years before, upon the discovery of the assassination plot.
Burnet. Own Time. Q. Anne, an. 1702

So tender is the law of supposing even a possibility of his death, that his natural dissolution is generally called his [king's] demise; demissio regis, vel coronæ: an expression which signifies merely a transfer of property; for, as is observed in Plowden, when we say the demise of the crown, we mean only that, in consequence of the disunion of the king's natural from his body politic, the kingdom is transferred or demised to his successor, and so the royal dignity remains perpetual.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 7.

The usual words of operation in it are 'dimisi, grant, and to farm let, dimisi, concessi, et ad firmam tradidi.'
Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 20.

DEMI'T, v. } Lat. Demittere, demissum, to DEMI'SS. } send, throw or cast down; (de, DEMI'SSION. } and mittere, to send.)

To drop or sink down; to submit, to depress, to humble.

Demission, in Holinshed,—a relinquishment or surrender. See DEMISE.

The occasion of this conceit, might first arise from a common observation, that when they [peacocks] are in their pride, that is, advance their train, if they decline their neck to the ground, they presently demit and let fall the same.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 27.

This said he, and soone after when he had put upon Julian his grandfather's purple, and declared him Cæsar with the joy of the armie: he speaketh unto him somewhat sad, and carrying a demisse and lowly looke.
Holland. Ammianus, p. 44.

And I sweare vpon the holie euangelists here presentlie with my hands touched, that I shall neuer repugne to this resignation, demission or yielding vp, nor neuer impugne them in anie maner by word or deed, by myselfe nor none other.—Holinshed. Rich. II. an. 1399.

I shall instance in prostration as a lowlier and humbler act of bodily worship than kneeling is, and this is not affirmed to be particularly commanded and so voluntary, yet sure acceptable to God if it flow from that vehement zeal of spirit and dimission of mind, in confession and sense of sin, that I shall hope it doth.
Hammond. Works, vol i. p 258.

DEMO'CRACY. } Gr. Δημοκρατια; It. Democrazia; Sp. Democracia; " Fr. Démocratie, — a democratie; popular government, rule or authority," (Cotgrave.) See the quotations from Aylmer and Blackstone.
DE'MOCRAT.
DEMOCRA'TICK.
DEMOCRA'TICAL, adj.
DEMOCRA'TICAL, n.
DEMO'CRATIST.

The regiment of England is not a mere monarchy, as some for lack of consideration think, nor a mere oligarchy, nor democratie; but a mixed rule of all these. The image whereof, and not the image but the thing indeed is to be seen in the Parliament house, wherein you shall find these three estates, the king or queen, which representeth the monarchy; the noblemen, which be the aristocratie; and the burgesses and knights, the democratie.

Bp. Aylmer. Life by Strype, c. 13.

He that had seen Pericles lead the Atheniana which way he listed, haply would have said he had been their prince; and yet he was but a powerful and eloquent man in a democracy, and had no more at any time than a temporary and elective sway, which was in the will of the people when to abrogate.—Milton. Prelatical Episcopacy.

Aristocratic gouernment,
Nor democratick pleasde,
But where to one man's emperio
Is monarchia seasde.—Warner. Albion's Eng. b x. c.57.

For the people of Athens, when the Persians were chased out of Greece, did so highly value their own merits in that service, that they not only thought it fit for themselves to become the commanders over many towns and islands of the Greeks, but even within their own walls they would admit none other form of government than merely democratical.—Raleigh. History of the World, b. iii. c. 7. s. 4.

The thing which those democraticals chiefly then aimed at, was to force the king to call a parliament, which he had not done for ten years before, as having no help, but hindrance to his designs in the parliaments he had formerly called.—Hobbs. Behemoth, pt. i.

It [government] was now shred into a democracy; and the stream of government being cut into many channels, run thin and shallow, whereupon the subject having many masters, every servant had so many distinct servitudes.

South, vol. v. Ser. 2.

As though he would have all episcopacy abolished, and bring back into the church a democratical anarchy; yea, an ochlocracy, (i. e.) the government of the multitude, and would obtrude the Geneva discipline upon all churches.

Strype. Life of Whitgift, an. 1593.

The political writers of antiquity will not allow more than three regular forms of government; the first, when the sovereign power is lodged in an aggregate assembly, consisting of all the free members of a community, which is called a democracy.—Blackstone. Commentaries, Introd. s. 2.

He [the emperour] endeavours to crush the aristocratick party, and to nourish one in avowed connexion with the most furious democratists in France.

Burke. Thoughts on French Affairs.

The frame of our commonwealth did not admit of such an actual election, but it provided as well, and (while the spirit of the constitution is preserved,) better for all the effects of it than by the method of suffrage in any democratick state whatever.—Id. On the present Discontents.

DEMO'LISH, v. } Fr. Démolir; Lat. Demolari, molem dejicere; to cast down any mass, any pile or structure. And, generally—
DEMO'LISHER.
DEMO'LISHING, n.
DEMO'LISHMENT.
DEMOLI'TION.
To destroy, to ruin, to dash or break to pieces.

After this he [Jehu] surprised all the Priests of Baal by a subtilty, feigning a great sacrifice to their God, by which means he drew them together into one temple, where he slew them; and in the same zeal to God utterly demolished all the monuments of that impiety.

Raleigh. History of the World, b. ii. c. 20. s 2.

The demolishers of them can give the clearest account, how the plucking down of churches conduceth to the setting up of religion.—Fuller. Worthies. Exeter.

By the passing of this bill, so many persons in both houses would be fully satisfied, that they would join in no further alteration; but, on the other hand, if they were crossed in this, they would violently endeavour an extirpation of bishops, and a demolishing of the whole fabrick of the church.

Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. p. 427.

You have found me merciful in arguing with you.
Swords, hangmen, fires, destructions of all natures,
Demolishments of kingdoms, and whole ruines
Are wont to be my orators.

Beaum. & Fletch. The False One, Act ii. sc. 1.

And so in the end, the glory of this temple, set up after Antichrist's demolishment, will yet be rendered more glorious (as that of Zerubbabel's also was) by Christ's coming into it.

Goodwin. Works, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 143.

This man defies 'em still, threatens destruction
And demolition of their arms and worship,
Spits at their powers.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Island Princess, Act v. sc. 1.

Lys. Whatever merit this writer may have as a demolisher, I always thought he had very little as a builder.

Berkeley. The Minute Philosopher, Dial 5.

His death also was enigmatically described by the destruction, or demolishment of his bodily temple, answerable to those circumlocutions concerning our ordinary death.

Barrow, vol. ii Ser. 27.

So Theodoret tells us, that in demolishing the temples at Alexandria, the Christians found hollow statues fixed to the walls, into which the priests used to enter, and thence deliver oracles.—Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

On their coming into administration, they found the demolition of Dunkirk entirely at a stand: instead of demolition, they found construction; for the French were then at work on the repairs of the jettees.

Burke. Observations on a late State of the Nation.

DE'MON. See DÆMON.

DEMO'NSTRATE, v. } Fr. Démonstrer; Sp. Demonstrar; It. Dimostrare; Lat. De-monstrare; from Monere, to call to mind; to call the attention to. And thus, to demonstrate,— DEMONSTRA'TION.
DEMO'NSTRATING, n.
DEMO'NSTRATIVE.
DEMO'NSTRATIVELY.
DEMO'NSTRATIVENESS.
DE'MONSTRATOR.
DEMO'NSTRABLE.
DEMO'NSTRABLY.
DEMO'NSTRABLENESS.
DEMO'NSTRANCE.
To show, to exhibit; to present to the senses, to the mind, the understanding; to make manifest, clear, plain; to prove. See the quotation from Locke.

I would (said Reason) thee lere
Sith thou to learne hast soch desire,
And shew thee withouten fable
A thing that is not demonstrable.—Chaucer. R. of the R.

Thou thy selfe art he, to whom it hath been shewed, and preued by ful many demonstrations, as I wotte well, that the soules of men, ne mowen not dien in no wise.

Id. Boecius, b. ii.

And ye shull seen, up peril of my lif,
By veray preef that is demonstratif.

Id. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7854.

He maketh his calculacione,
He maketh his demonstrations. Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

Now come we to yt special point wherin Tindall gyueth vs a glorius demonstration of hys excellent highe witte and learning, farre surmounting the capacitie of poore popishe men to perceiue, howe it might be possible that any mā sinneth not, and yet for all that sinneth alwaye styll.

Sir T. More. Workes, p 538.

The oration demonstrative standeth either in praise or dispraise of some one man, or some one thing, or some one deed doen.—Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 11.

In other things we have been willing so far to descend to the desires of our good subjects, as might fully satisfy all moderate minds, and free from all just fears and jealousies which those messages, which we have hitherto sent unto the commons house, will well demonstrate unto the world.

State Trials, an. 1628. Letter from the King.

But this law which Thomas Aquinas calleth An Act of Reason taken properly, and not a habit, as it is an evident natural judgment of practic reason they divide into indemonstrable, or needing no demonstration, (as that good is to be followed, and evil to be eschewed;) and demonstrable, which is evidently proved, out of higher and more universal propositions.—Raleigh History of the World, b. ii. c. 4. s. 6.

I answer, that seducement is to be hinder'd by fit and proper means ordain'd in church discipline, by instant and powerful demonstration to the contrary; by opposing truth to error, no unequal match; truth the strong, to error the weak, though sly and shifting.

Milton. Of Civil Power in Ecclesiastical Causes.

My reason hereof is convincing and demonstrative; because nothing is necessary to be believed, but what is plainly revealed.—Chillingworth. Rel. of Protestants, pt. i. c. 2.

You commend humility, as the great and sovereign antidote against pride, the common disturber of mankind; and certainly what you say is demonstratively true, if all the world could be persuaded to it; but this never was nor can be expected.—Hale. Cont. vol. i. Of Humility.

And to this, I that did not really adhere to that, will not be so far concerned in it, as to make any reply, or at all to endeavour to defend it, or to add of it farther than this, that the bare possibility that it might so signifie supersedes all demonstrativeness of proof from this text for the criminousness of will-worship.

Hammond. Works, vol. ii. pt. iv. p. 178.

Here sure 'tis evident, that the truth of the minor is taken as confess'd, and then I am not to have so mean an opinion of the demonstratour's skill, that he will impertinently attempt to prove, what he takes for confess'd.

Id. Of Tradition, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 246.

Not that I covet any of your dross,
But that the power of this art may be
More demonstrably evident, leave in
My hands all but some smaller sum, to set
Something to stake at first.

Carteright. The Ordinary, Act ii. sc. 3.

He is to beseech them, yea, and to persuade with them particularly one by another, by good reasons and demonstrances of how many calamities peevish obstinacy is the cause.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 303.

Whether therefore the being and attributes of God can be demonstrated, or not; it must at least be confess'd by all rational and wise men, to be a thing very desirable, and which they would heartily wish to be true, that there was a God, an intelligent and wise, a just and good being to govern the world.—Clarke. On the Attributes, Introd.

Those intervening ideas which serve to shew the agreement of any two others, are call'd proofs; and where the agreement or disagreement is by this means plainly and clearly perceiv'd, it is call'd demonstration, it being shewn to the understanding, and the mind made to see that it is so.

Locke. Of Hum. Understanding, b. iv. c. 2. s. 3.

As the proving of these two things will overthrow all atheism, so it will likewise lay a clear foundation, for the demonstrating of a Deity distinct from the corporeal world.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 145.

Eloquent men do never more exceed in their indulgence to fancy, than in the demonstrative kind, in panegyricks, in their commendations of persons.

Barrow. On the Pope's Supremacy.

Pythagoras, Plato, and Aristotle in some measure, had a knowledge of these principles; but I pretend to have established them demonstratively in my Theodicæa, though I have done it in a popular manner.

Clarke & Leibnitz. Leibnitz's Second Paper, p. 21.

The demonstrator confounds in it two contrary propositions; and sliding, insensibly to many readers, from that which no reasonable man can admit into that which every reasonable man must admit, he means nothing by a pomp of words, or he means to make the proofs of the latter pass for proofs of the former.

Bolingbroke. Fragments or Minutes of Essays.

Qu. 43. Whether an algebraist, fluxionist, geometrician, or demonstrator of any kind can expect indulgence for obscure principles or incorrect reasonings?—Berkeley. Analyst.

The being of a God is not mathematically demonstrable, nor can it be expected it should, because only mathematical matters admit of this kind of evidence.

Filliteon, vol. i. Ser. 1.

And now, consequently, he must of necessity affirm all the conclusions, which I have before shown to follow demonstrably from that opinion.

Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 3.

For these reasons (I say) 'tis very fit, that notwithstanding the natural demonstrableness both of the obligations and motives of morality, yet considering the manifest corruptness of the present estate which humane nature is in, the generality of men should not be left wholly to the workings of their own minds, to the use of their natural faculties, and to the bare convictions of their own reason.

Id. On Natural and Revealed Religion, Prop. 5.

May no storm ever come, which will put the firmness of their attachment to the proof; and which in the midst of confusions, and terrours, and sufferings, may demonstrate the eternal difference between a true and severe friend to the monarchy, and a slippery sycophant of the court.

Burke. On the Cause of the present Discontents.

But nothing can be more demonstrative evidence of their ingenuity than the construction and make of their canoes, which, in point of neatness and workmanship, exceed every thing of this kind we saw in this sea.

Cook. Voyage, vol. iii. b. ii. c. 3.

Virtue, according to Plato, might be considered as a species of science, and no man, he thought, could see clearly and demonstratively, what was right and what was wrong, and not act accordingly.

Smith. Moral Sentiments, pt. vii. s. 2.

It is to be attributed to the early intellectual habits of some among the students in theology who receive holy orders, without having had time to attend closely to any thing but mathematics, that they are willing to assent to nothing but what is nearly demonstrable, and explain away every thing mysterious or irreconcilable to their preconceived notions of truth and rectitude.

Knox. On the Lord's Supper, s. 20.

Which demonstrably proved that he and his religion had a divine original, and that therefore the sufferings they underwent for his sake in the present life would be amply repaid by the glorious rewards reserved for them hereafter.

Porteus, vol. i. Lect. 5.

DEMU'LCE. } Lat. Demulcere, (de, and mulc-ere, to soften,) A. S. Milesc-ian.
DEMU'LCENT, adj.
DEMULSA'TION.
DEMU'LSION.
To soften, to soothe, to lull, to assuage.

Jupyter was cõueyed into Phrigia, where Saturne also pursuyng hym, Rhea semblably taught the people there, called Coribantes, to dãce in another fourme: where with Saturne was eftsones demuted and appaised.
Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 20.

And this grave Incomparable Solomon, though he could precept the erring world against all the seducing crafts of women, yet we see he could not save himself from being entangled by their demulcations.
Feltham. On St. Luke, xiv. 20.

It is to be considered, from whence it comes to pass, that wise men, and mostly such, should chuse goodness and virtue with affliction, and the burthens of unpleasing accidents, rather than vice garlanded with all the soft demulsions of a present contentment.—Id. pt. ii. Res. 57.

There are other substances, which are opposite to both sorts of acrimony, which are called demulcent or mild, because they blunt or sharpen salts.
Arbuthnot. On Aliments, c. 5.

DEMU'R, v. }
DEMU'R, n. }
DEMU'RRER. }
DEMU'RRAGE. }
DEMO'RANCE. }

Also written Demour. Fr. Démeurer, démourer; It. Demorare; Lat. Demorari; de, and morari, from mora, delay; and this from Gr. Μερ-αν, dividere quia morantes tempus intervallis trahunt ac dividunt, (Vossius.)

To abide, to remain, to tarry or retard; to stay, linger, stand long on; to dwell upon, to pause, to hesitate. See the quotation from Blackstone.

And in this question, if the parties demurred in our iudgemẽt we might ask aduyse further of learned mẽ & iudges.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 215.

The man is a very foole to make his demorraunce vpon such an olde wife.—Skelton. The Boke of Three Fooles.

And the sa de Peloponesyans demoured in the land.
Nicoll. Thucidides, fol. 72.

And hauyng made one assaulte vpon the campe of the Athenyans, though they had not had the worst, yet durst they not demoure nor abyde vpon the campe.—Id. Ib. fol. 73.

And therefore as soone as the storme began to asswage of his fury (which was a long half hour) willing to give his men no longer leisure to demurre of those doubts, nor yet allow the enemy farther respite to gather themselves together, he stept forward.—Sir Francis Drake Revived, p. 15.

Plot. Slater, 'tis so projected, therefore make
No more demurs; the life of both our fortunes
Lies in your carriage of things well.
Mayne. The City Match, Act iv. sc. 2.

Most Serene King,—Wherens there is a considerable sum of money owing from certain Portugal merchants of the Brazil company to several English merchants, upon the account of freightage and demorage, in the yeers 1649 and 1650.
Milton. Cromwel to K. of Portugal.

Notwithstanding he hoped that matters would have been long since brought to an issue, the fair one still demurrs. I am so well pleased with this gentleman's phrase, that I shall distinguish this sect of women by the title of demurrers.
Spectator, No. 89.

[A demurrer] denies that by the law arising upon these facts, any injury is done to the plaintiff, or that the defendant has made out a legitimate excuse; according to the party which first demurs, demoratur, rests or abides upon the point in question.—Blackstone. Comment. b. iii. c. 31.

The ship was delayed, at a demurrage of an hundred dollars a day, for upwards of three months, waiting in vain for a better market.
Burke. Articles of Charge against Warren Hastings.

DEMU'RE, adj. }
DEMU'RELY. }
DEMU'RENESS. }

De bon mœurs; one of good manners, (Minshew.) This, Junius thinks, is trifling; and prefers Casaubon's derivation from Gr. Θεμερος, grave, honest. Skinner thinks, from des mœurs, as we now say, over mannerly, —molesté, superstitiosé modestus; but, by our old writers, it is used without any subaudition of such excess.

Attentive to, observant or regardful of, manners or morals; now frequently with a sub. of—affectation.—Thus the verb in Shakespeare—

To regard or look upon with affected modesty.

When this lady had heard all this language
She gaue answere, ful softe and demurely
Without chaunging of colour or courage.
Chaucer. La belle Dame sans Mercie.

In this apparell she goynge betwene the Erle of Ouersteyne & the Graunde Master Hostoden, which had the conduyte & ordre of the performaunce of maryage, with most demure countynaunce & sad behaviour, passed through the king's chaumbre.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 31.

And it is a world to see how demurely & sadly some sit, beholding them that dance, and with what gesture, pase, and mouing of the body, & with what sober footynge some of them dance.—Vives. Instruc. of a Chris. Woman, b. i. c. 13.

After that Gabriel had al thys sayed, the maiden made answer in fewe wordes but wordes of suche sorte, as might be a witnesse of exceeding great demurenesse in hir, coupled with passing great athaunce and zele towardes God.
Udal. Luke, c. 1.

——— I am safe:
Your wife, Octauia, with her modest eyes,
And still conclusion, shall acquire no honour
Demuring upon me.
Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act iv. sc. 13.

Lo two most goodly virgins came in place,
Ynlinked arme in arme in lonely wise,
With countenance demure, and modest grace,
They numbred euen steps, and equall pase.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

——— Give me
My gallant prentice I he parts with his money
So civilly, and demurely, keeps no account
Of his expenses, and comes ever furnish'd
Massinger. The City Madam, Act iii. sc. 1.

And though the maids did shew themselves thus naked openly, yet was there no dishonesty seen or offered, but all this sport was full of playe and toys without any youthfull part or wantonness; and rather carried a shew of demureness and a desire to have their best made bodies seen and spyed.—North. Plutarch, p 40.

So cat transform'd sat gravely and demure,
Till mouse appear'd, and thought himself secure,
But soon the lady had him in her eye,
And from her friend did just as oddly fly.
Dryden. An Essay upon Satire.

'Tis true, they proclaim'd themselves poets by sound of trumpet, and poets they were upon pain of death to any man who durst call them otherwise. The audience had a fine time on t, you may imagine; they sate in a bodily fear, and look'd as demurely as they could: For 'twas a hanging matter to laugh unseasonably.—Id. Preface to All for Love.

'Twas on a lofty vase's side,
Where China's gayest art had dy'd
The azure flowers that blow;
Demurest of the tabby kind,
The pensive Selima reclin'd,
Gaz'd on the lake below.
Gray. On the Death of a favourite Cat.

Under a serious deportment, and the demureness of religion, still we see such a constant attention to worldly happiness—so much anxiety about worldly good—so much fear and distress about worldly evil, that it is beyond the power of charity to suppose this heavenly secret is perfectly discovered even here.—Gilpin, vol. ii Ser. 36.

DEN, v. }
DEN, n. }

A. S. Den, vallis, a valley, a vale, a dale; it. Cubile, a couch, a den. Sommer,—who adds, Also—

A pathless place, woody, rugged, and uncultivated, suited for feeding swine and cattle.—The word may probably be akin to Down, (qv.)

Den is a frequent termination in English names of places, and always implies a situation in a valley. Good den is a corruption of Good even, (Good e'en, Gooden.)

She dorst the wilde beastes dennes seke,
And rennen in the mountaignes all the night,
And slepe under the bush.
Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,269.

And when the hande of the Medianites was sore vpon Israel, the childré of Israel made them dennes in the mountaynes and caues and stronge holdes.
Bible, 1551. Judges, c. 6.

——— This care fashion'd
By provident nature, in this solid rock
To be a den for beasts, alone, receives me,
And having prov'd an enemy to mankind,
All humane helps forsake me.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Knight of Malta, Act iv. sc. 1.

Twice had Diana bent her golden bow,
And shot from heav'n her silver shafts, to rouse
The sluggish salvages, that den below.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph on Earth.

See, from afar, yon rock that meets the sky;
About whose feet such heaps of rubbish lye:
Such indigested ruin; bleak and bare,
How desert now it stands, expos'd in air!
'Twas once a robber's den; inclos'd around
With living stone, and deep beneath the ground
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. viii

The most usual method of taking this animal is while a cub, and incapable of resistance. The place near the den of the lioness is generally well known by the greatness of her depredations on that occasion; the natives, therefore, watch the time of her absence, and, aided by a swift horse, carry off the cubs.—Goldsmith. Animated Nature. The Lion.

DE'NARY. Fr. Dénaire; Lat. Denarius, ten. Decem, decenus, denus, denarius.

A denarius,—a Roman silver coin marked with the letter X, valued at ten asses or ten pounds of brass, 7½*d.* English.

But that seruaunte beeyng nowe free and at libertie as soone as he was gone out of his maister's sight, met by chaunce with one of his felowe seruauntes which aught hym a lytle money: that is, an hundreth denarees, or pieces of syluer coyne.—Udal. Matthew, c. 18.

This prince therefore hauing made the generall partition of his kingdom into shires, or shares, he divided againe the same into lathes, as lathes into hundreds, and hundreds into tithings, or denaries, as diuers haue written.
Holinshed. Description of England, c. 4.

In the early times of Rome, the price of a sheep was a denarius, or eight pence, and the price of an ox, ten times as much.—Priestley. Lectures on History, pt. iii. Lect. 15.

DENA'Y, v. }
DENA'Y, n. }

Deny, (qv.) anciently so written. Fr. Dénier; Sp. Denegar; Lat. Denegare; (de, ne, and agere, q. d.) Be it not. Let it not be done.

The Grecian king had not
The powre for to denay,
His owne deare childe, and sonne in lawe
The thing that both did pray.
Gascoigne. The Complaint of Phylomene.

Amonges other of his tyranyes, he asked a great sũme of money of Seynt Edmundes landes, whiche the rulers denayed; for so moche as they claymed to be free of all kynges tribute.—Fabyan, vol. i. c. 200.

Thus was the noble heart long time betwixt
Feare and remorse, not granting nor denaying;
Vpon his eyes the dame her lookings fixt,
As if her life and death lay on his saying.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Bovlogne, b. iv. s. 67

——— Nor
Was libertie denayde
Of hawking, hunting, and disports.
That, had she been content,
Her merriest and securest daies,
A prisoner she spent.
Warner. Albion's England, b. ix. c. 35.

Of mild denaies, of tender scornes, of sweet
Repulses, war, peace, hope, despaire, ioy, feare,
Of smiles, teats, mirth, woe, griefe, and sad regreet.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Bovlogne, b. xvi. s. 25

DENEGA'TION. Lat. Denegare, atum, to deny. And see DENAY.

A refusal, a denial.

He speaketh another language to all the world in deeds, and thereby so toucheth vs in honour and denegation of iustice, as we be inforced and compelled to vse the sword, which God hath put in our hands as an extreme remedie, whereby to obtaine both quietnesse for our subiects, and also that is due to vs by right, pacts, and leagues.
Holinshed. Scotland, an. 1542

Sore did they assault me and craftily tempt me to their wicked wales, or at least to a denegation of my faith and true opinions, though it were but by colour and dissimulation.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 867. Let. of T. Whittel to J. Carles.

DE'NIGRATE, v. }
DENIGRA'TION. }
DE'NIGRATOR. }

Lat. Denigrate, atum. Niger, from the Gr. Νεκρος, nam mortui, atri. (Vossius.) Fr. Dénigrer—

To blacken, to smear with black.

For first, if we derive the curse on Cham, or in general upon his posterity, we shall denigrate a greater part of the earth than was ever so conceived.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 11.

We shall emperically and sensible discourse hereof; deducing the causes of blacknesse from such originals in nature, as we do generally observe things are denigrated by art.—Id. Ib. b. vi. c. 12.

These are the advenient and artificial wayes of denigration, answerably whereto may be the natural progress.—Id. Ib.

However in this way of tincture, it seemeth plain, that iron and vitriol are the powerful denigrators.—Id. Ib.

And I could not find, that though in retorts hartshorn and other white bodies will be denigrated by heat, yet camphire would not at all loose its whiteness, though I have purposely kept it in such a heat, as made it melt and boil.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 711.

To which I shall only add, that, whereas in these several instances of denigration, the metals are worn off, or otherwise reduced into very minute parts, that circumstance may prove not unworthy your notice.—Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 714

DENI'ZE, v. }
DE'NIZEN, n. }
DE'NIZEN, v. }
DENIZA'TION. }

Variously written, Denizen, denisen, denison. Minshew suggests, Donatio, Fr. Donaison, a gift or donation, (sc.) of liberty.

A denizen, says Blackstone, is an alien born, but who has obtained ex donatione regis letters patent to make him an English subject.

The world lamenteth, and counteth them vnfortunate which be banished and dryuen out of theyr countrey but Christ pronounceth them blessed, whiche be banished for the gospel sake; for they be made denizens in heauen.
Udal. Matthew, c. 5.

There was a private act made, for denizing the children of Richard Hills, an eminent merchant abroad.
Strype. Mem. an. 1552. Edw. IV.

But when their posteritie became not altogither so wearie in keeping, as their ancestors were valiant in conquering, the Irish language was free denized in the English pale.
Holinshed. Desc. of Ireland, c. 1.

If this be death, our best part to untie
(By running the jail) from lust and wrath,
And every drowsy languor here beneath,
To be made denizd citizen of sky.
Drummond. Flowers of Sion.

Lan-frane.—It should rightly be Land-frane, and seemeth first to have bin a name of naturalizing or making the bearer thereof a free denizen, whereby hee became land-frane, to wit, free of the country.
Verstegan. Restit. of Decayed Intelligence, c. 8.

The pear-main, which to France long ere to us was known,
Which careful fruitrers now have denizen'd our own.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 18.

Others there be of the same nature, that the king may exercise out of parliament, which right is grown unto him in them, more in those others by the use and practice of the common-wealth, as denization, coynage, making warre.
State Trials. The great Case of Impositions, an. 1606.

Poor refugees at first, they purchase here,
And, soon as denizen'd, they domineer
Grow to the great, a flatt'ring servile rout:
Work themselves inward, and their patrons out.
Dryden. Jurenal, Sat. 3.

It [denization] is basilicon doron, it is the bounty and kindness of the king to one born out of his dominions, to give him the capacity of a subject, to sue and be sued, and the like, which cannot be forfeited even for breach of conditions in the letters patents of denization.—State Trials, an 1682. Proceedings between the King and the City of London.

DENO'MINATE, v. } Fr. Dénominer; Sp. Denominar; It. and Lat. Denominare, (de, and nominare, to name;) a word common to the Northern, as well as to the Greek and Latin languages. See Cognomen.
DENOMINA'TION.
DENO'MINATIVE.
DENO'MINATOR.
DENO'MINABLE.

To name or call by name; to give or apply a name.

Of whiche worchings and possession of hours, ye daies of the week haue take her names, after denominacion in these seuen planets.—Chaucer. The Testament of Love, b. ii.

But although all these complexions be assembled in euery body of man and woman, yet the body taketh his denomination of those qualyties, which abounde in hym, more than in other.—Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. i

When as multiplicity of reading, the best it can signifie, doth but speak them to have taken pains for it: and this alone is but the dry, and barren part of learning, and hath little reason to denominate.
Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 15.

With that writ were sent to each sheriff instructions, that, "Instead of a ship, he should levy upon his county such a sum of money, and return the same to the treasurer of the navy for his majesties use, with direction in what manner he should proceed against such as refused: and from hence that tax had the denomination of ship-money; a word of a lasting sound in the memory of this kingdom.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. p. 68.

For sanctity and to sanctifie being conjugates or denominatives, as logicians call them; the one openeth the way to the knowledge of the other.—Mede. Works, b. i. Dis. 2.

Against this opinion that Aram the son of Sem, was the father and denominator of the Syrians in general, (and not only of those in Syria Inter-amnis, which is Mesopotamia,) some read Gen. xxii 21. Kemuel, the father of the Syrians: where others out of the original read Kemuel the son of Aram.—Raleigh. History of the World, b. i. c. 8. s. 15.

An inflammation either simple, consisting only of an hot and sanguineous affluxion, or else denominable from other humors according to the predominancy of melancholy, flegm or choler.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 3.

Nor as if the relation of friends had actually discharged them from that of servants; but that of the two relations, Christ was pleased to over-look the meaner, and without any mention of that to entitle and denominate them solely from the more honourable.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 2.

They would not baptize their children; held as the Arians in the doctrine of the Godhead, and as Pelagius in the doctrine of free-will and predestination: all these came under the denomination of Anabaptists.
Strype. Life of Abp Parker, an. 1550.

Eber dyeth; read Gen xi. 17. He was the longest liver borne since the flood, the father of the Hebrews, and denominator of the Hebrew tongue.
Lightfoot. Harmony, &c. of the Old Testament, p 27.

On the contrary, those other passions, commonly denominated selfish, both produce different sentiments in each individual, according to his particular situation; and also contemplate the greater part of mankind with the utmost indifference and unconcern.
Hume. On the Principles of Morals, Conclusion.

If the qualities which I have ranged under the head of the sublime be all found consistent with each other, and all different from those which I place under the head of beauty; and if those which compose the class of the beautiful have the same consistency with themselves, and the same opposition to those which are classed under the denomination of sublime, I am in little pain whether any body chuses to follow the name I give them or not, provided he allows that what I dispose under different heads are in reality different things in nature
Burke. Of the Sublime and Beautiful, Pref.

DENOTE, v. } Lat. De, and notare, to mark; notare from supine notum, known. See Connote.
DE'NOTATE.
DENOTA'TION.
DENO'TATIVE.
DENO'TEMENT.

To mark, signify or designate; to betoken.

Denotement, in the passage cited below from Shakespeare, is the reading of the first quarto; the first folio reads Dilation, (qv.)

Where though the word Gods be used generally, so as to comprehend both the supreme and inferiour Gods under it, yet Deus Ipse, God himself, denotes the Supreme God only.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 262.

Those termes of all and for ever in Scripture, are not eternall, but only denotate a longer time, which by many examples they prove.—Burton. Anat. of Melancholy, p 716.

It is not their having agreed to take several relations or offices to us, and for our salvation, which he specifies and denotates them by (as in that other in Ephes. iv.) but simply their oneness and communion one with another.
Goodwin. Works, vol. ii. pt. iv. p. 127.

C. You will see that by reviewing the place even now cited, Acts, iii. 26. God having raised up his son Jesus, sent him to bless us; which now you perceive is a denotation of his priestly office, every priest, especially the Melchizedik priest, being to bless.—Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 8.

——— But in a man that's just,
They are close denotements, working from the heart,
That passion cannot rule.—Shakes. Othello, Act iii. sc. 3.

What are the effects of sickness? the alteration it produces is so denotative, that a person is known to be sick by those who never saw him in health.
Letters upon Physiognomy, p. 121.

He hath given to the poor. These words denote the freeness of his bounty, and determine the principal object thereof.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 31.

The filthiness of flesh and spirit, is a general expression to denote wickedness of every kind.—Gilpin, vol. i. Ser. 18.

DENOUNCE, v. } Fr. Dénoncer; Sp. Denunciar; It. Denunciare; Lat. Denunciare, (de, and nunciare, to bring something new.) See Announce.
DENOU'NCEMENT.
DENOU'NCER.
DENOU'NCING, n.
DENU'NCIATE.
DENUNCIA'TION.
DENU'NCIATOR.

To give information; to inform against, to publish, to proclaim, (sc.) an accusation, a menace or threatening; and thus, to accuse, to menace, to threaten.

For also whanne we weren among ghou we denounceden this thing to ghou, that if ony man wole not worche neithir ete he.—Wiclif. 2 Tessal. c. 2.

For surely at such time as he was denounced for an heritike there laye his Englishe Byble open, and some other Englishe bookes of hys, that euery mā might see the places noted with his own hand.—Sir T. More. Works, p. 240.

For as for the minoure of thys good mannes argument, that he that enquyreth of heresye, taketh knowledge of heresye, so dooeth euery denouncer, euerye accuser, and in a manner euerye witnesse too, tak vpon them knowledge of heresy in some maner wyse.—Id. Ib. p. 1013.

Yet hath there not from time to time, been wanting amongst us mischevious and evil disposed enemies of her felicity, which either by insolent and open denouncing of war or by secret and privy practices of sinister devices, have ambitiously and most disloyally attempted to spoil her of her right, and us of those blessings.
State Trials. Edmund Campion, an. 1581.

And if upon such denunciation, as in excommunication hath been used, the party shall not submit himself, nor stand to, nor abide such order as to him assigned, within forty days, then it shall be lawfull to signifie his contumacy in such manner and sort, and to such court, as heretofore hath been used for persons so long standing excommunicate.
Strype. Originals, No. 16. an. 1580. Life of Grindal.

These Hebrews ent'ring the Egyptian court,
Their great commission publicly proclaim,
Which there repulsed as a slight report,
Doth soon denounce defiance to the same.
Drayton. Moses, his Birth and Miracles, b ii.

The whole commandment concerning discipline, being the main purpose of the epistle: although Hooker would feign have this denouncement refer'd to the particular precept going before, because the word commandment is in the singular number.—Milton. Of Church Government, b. i. c. 2.

The more shame for the over-easie denouncers of that censure, that inflict it on every trivial commission, without consideration whether repented of or no.
Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 453.

He [William Rufus] raised a great armie and before anie denouncing of warre by him made, inuaded Northumberland, and took the castell of Anwike, putting all such to the sword as were found in the same.—Holinshed. Scotland, an. 1087.

But Gracchus's soldiers, which were all (in a manner) the late armed slaves, had received from their general a peremptory denuntiation, that this day, or never, they must purchase their liberty, bringing every man, for price thereof, an enemy's head.—Raleigh. Hist. of the World, b.v. c. 3. s.13.

The denunciator does not make himself a party in judgement, as the accuser does.—Ayliffe. Parergon.

The prophet who my future woes reveal'd,
Yet this, the greatest and the worst, conceal'd.
And dire Celæno, whose foreboding skill
Denounc'd all else, was silent of this ill.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. iii.

For guilty of, may mean liable to; the Scripture saith, guilty of death, as well as of sin: and then, guilty of all, may mean, liable to all the punishments denounced by the law, in his proper degree.—Secker, vol. iv Ser. 3.

I have therefore been decidedly of opinion, with our declaration at Whitehall, in the beginning of this war, that the vicinage of Europe had not only a right, but an indispensable duty, and an exigent interest to denunciate this new work before it had produced the danger we have so sorely felt, and which we shall long feel.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 1.

DENSE, adj. } Lat. Densus, thick. Varro says, densum, a dentibus pectinis, quibus feritur, (sc. tela.)
DE'NSITY.

Thick, compressed or compacted into a close mass.

It sheweth, that air may be made so to be condensed, as to be converted into a dense body; whereas the race and period of all things, here about the earth, is to extenuate and turn things to be more pneumaticall, and rare; and not to be retrograde, from pneumaticall to that which is dense.
Bacon. Nat. Hist. § 29.

The greatest winds, if they have no coarctation, or blow not hollow, give an interiour sound; the whistling or hollow wind yeeldeth a singing, or exteriour sound. The former being pent by some other body, the latter being pent in by his own density.—Id. Ib. § 188.

What can we say of the subtlety, activity, and penetrancy of its effluvia, which no obstacle can stop or repel, but they will make their way through all sorts of bodies, firm and fluid, dense and rare, heavy and light, pellucid and opake?
Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

Because if there were every where an absolute plenitude and density without any empty pores and interstices between the particles of bodies, then all bodies of equal dimensions would contain an equal quantity of matter, and consequently, as we have shewed before, would be equally ponderous.
Bentley, Ser. 7.

—— The watchful Hours—to whom the charge
Of the Olympian summit appertains,
And of the boundless ether, back to roll,
And to replace the cloudy barrier dense.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

It may seem astonishing that so small a difference of distance from the earth as between the upper and under side of a common leaden weight in the grocer's shop should increase the density of ether in so sensible a degree as that it may be felt by taking the lead into one's hand.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. c. 22.

DENT, s. } Tooke says, past part. of A. S.
DENT, v. } Dyn-an, strepere, to din.

As if first applied to the din or noise of blows; and then to the mark or impression made. See Din, and Dint, and also Indent.

But neuer was that dent of thunder,—
That so swithe gan downward discend
As this foule whan it beheld
That I a rowme was in the field.
Chaucer. House of Fame, b. ii.

And truly sone, I toke my leue and went
When she had me enquired, what I was
For more and more, impressen gan the dent
Of Loue's dart, while I beheld her face.
Chaucer. The Court of Loue.

Thus thoughtful as I lay, I saw my withered skin,
How it doth shew my dented chewes, the flesh was worn so thyn,
And eke my toothless chaps, the gates of my right way,
That opes and shuttes as I do speake, do thus vnto me say.
Surrey. No Age is Content.

Wherfore he willynge to saue his people from famyne whom he knewe to be from the dent of the Frenche swerde clearely exempte and vntouched, returned ouer the riuer of Leyre.—Hall. Hen. V. an. 9.

When stormy courses answer'd cuff for cuff,
Denting proud beavers with the counter-buff,
Upon an altar, burnt with holy flame,
I sacrific'd, as incense to thy fame.
Drayton. Surrey to Geraldine.

We two have kept its homage in suspence,
And bent the globe, on whose each side we trod,
Till it was dented inwards.—Dryden. All for Love, Act v.

There are a whole genus of birds called Pici Martii, or woodpeckers, that in like manner have a tongue which they can shoot forth to a very great length, ending in a sharp stiff bony tip, dented on each side.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

DE'NTISE, v. } Lat. Dens, a tooth, (q.)
DENTI'TION. } edens, eating; that which DE'NTIST. } eateth. To dentise,— DE'NTAL, n. } To tooth; to have, to
DE'NTAL, adj. } form or produce, teeth.
DE'NTATE. } Dentrifice, (dentes fricare,)—to rub the teeth.
DENTA'TION. } For the technical usage
DE'NTRIFICE. } of Dentate, see the exam-
DENTICULA'TION. } ples from Paley.

They tell a tale of the old Countesse of Desmonds, who lived till she was sevenscore yeares old, that she did dentise twice, or thrice; casting her old teeth, and others comming in their place.—Bacon. Naturall History, § 755.

The ashes of the ankle bones of a female goat whilest it is fresh and new, are counted an excellent dentrifice to whiten the teeth.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxviii. c. 11.

Sem. Is this gray poulder, a good dentrifice?
Pul. You see I use it.
Sem. I have one that is whiter.—B. Jonson. Catiline, Act ii.

He omits the denticulation of the edges of the bill, or those small oblique incisions made for the better retention of the prey.—Grew. Museum.

Take mastic and dragon's blood, of each a sufficient quantity: powder them, and mix them together, and let the patient use them as a dentrifice.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 376.

It causes dentition in so regular a manner, and that not only in infants, but also adult persons.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 167.

Next came different classes of dentals, and among the first of them should be placed the sibilants, which most nations express by an indented figure.
Sir W. Jones. Orthography of Asiatic Words.

Each of the dental sounds is hard or soft, sharp or obtuse, and by thrusting the tip of the tongue between the teeth, we form two sounds exceedingly common in Arabic and English, but changed into lisping sibilants by the Persians and French.—Id. Ib.

They are what naturalists call serrated or dentated bills; the inside of them, towards the edge, being thickly set with parallel or concentric rows of short, strong, sharp pointed prickles. These though they should be called teeth, are not for the purpose of mastication. They form a filter.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 12.

Should it be said, that, by continual endeavours to shoot out the tongue to the stretch, the woodpecker's species may by degrees have lengthened the organ itself, beyond that of other birds, what account can be given of its form, of its tip? how in particular did it get its barb, its dentation?
Id. Natural Philosophy, c. 13.

A kind dentist restored my spirits, by declaring that he was possessed of an art which would prevent all bad consequences, and continue the beauty of my pearly ornaments, set between rubies (for so he expressed himself) unsullied during life.—Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 58.

DENU'DE, v. } Fr. Dénuer; Lat. Denud-
DENU'DATE, v. } are; de, and nudare, to strip
DENUDA'TION. } or lay bare. See NUDE.

To strip off the covering or clothing; to lay bare or naked.

Denude occurs in Chaucer, in a passage not very intelligible.

——— And whereby is ment
This foresaide prouerbe and similitude
But that thou ridde thee plainly to denude.
Chaucer. The Remedie of Loue.

For his colour, my pains and your trouble I'll spare.
For the creature was wholly denuded of hair.
Cotton. A Voyage to Ireland in Burlesque.

Desiring to compleate my charge in all points, and to denude this offending liberty of her most potent patronages, it is requisite to impeach some circumstances, as guilty of great aggravations in these offences.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 12. a. 3.

Victor Uticensis tells us, That when Dionisia, a noble matron, was immodestly denudated and barbarously scourged, with a courage beyond her sex, and in the midst of blood she told her tormentors, that what they intended for her shame should hereafter be her glory.—Feltham, pt. ii. Res 11.

And we may consequently, with much ease, bear the disfurniture of such transitorie movables, as were rather ornaments then materials of our fabrick; considering that this denudation may prove the greatest beautifying of our spiritual edifice.—Mountague. Dev. Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 8. a. 3.

If in summer time you denude a vine of its leaves, the grapes will never come to maturity.—Ray. Creation, pt. i.

DENU'LL. Used by Fabyan as Annull, (qv.)

But after the deth of Kinge Edwarde that banysshemento was soone denulled by Edwarde his soone, whereof ensuyd moche harme and trouble as after shall be shewed.
Fabyan, an. 1300.

DENUNCIA'TION. See DENOUNCE.

DENY', v. } Fr. Dénier; Sp. Denegar;
DENI'ABLE. } Lat. Denegare; de, ne, and agere,
DENI'AL. } (qd.) Be it not: let it not be
DENI'ANCE. } done. See DENAY, and DENE-
DENI'ER. } GATE.
DENY'ING, n. } To refuse, to contradict, to disown.

It myght not be denied, for thing that mot betide.
R. Brunne, p. 249.

And anoon the cok eftsoones crew: and Petir bethoughte on the word that Jhesus hadde seide to him bifore the cok crowe twyes, thries thou schalt denye me, and he began to wepe.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 14.

I woll in no wise, saith Daungere
Deny, that ye haue asked here
It were to great vncurtesie.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

And there vpon goth he so farforth, that no Scripture can be euident to proue any thing that he lyst to deny.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 161.

The womā was not weryed with so many repulses and denyals insomuche that she durst yet drawe nere vnto Jesus, and fallynge downe at hys knees sayde, Succour me.
Udal. Matt. c. 15.

As touchyng the article of mariage, to take effect betwene their prince and the Lady Cicille of England, he knew not the determinat pleasure of ye king his master and brother, either for the affirmaunce or denyall of the same.
Hall. Edw. IV. an. 22.

And some of thē let not with lyes and periury to defend thē selfe, and some to stande in defence of their errours or false denying of theyr owne dede, to their gret paril of the flet.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 151.

Arriued there, they passed in forth right;
For still, to all, the gate stood open wide;
Yet charge of them was to a porter hight
Call'd Maluenu, who entrance none denide.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4.

As if some divine truths, viz. those which are plainly revealed, might not be such, as of necessity were not to be denied, and others for want of sufficient declaration, deniable without danger.—Chillingworth. Rel. of Prot. Ch. pt. i. c. 3

Again, beside the negative of authority; it is also deniable, namely, by way of Aristotle's death.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vii. c. 14.

Begin then, sisters of the sacred well,
That from beneath the seat of Jove do spring;
Begin, and somewhat loudly sweep the string.
Hence with denial vain, and coy excuse.—Milton. Lycidas.

The separatists are profest denyers of one article, that of the holy Catholic Church, resolving the end and the effect of the Holy Ghost's descent to have been only to constitute particular congregations, and none else.
Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 372.

And thus to rack the sacred writings, to force them whether they will or no to bring evidence to our opinions; is an affront to their authority that's next to the denying on't.
Glanvill. Pre-existence of Souls, c. 3.

This is that simplicity of conversation which our Saviour requires when he saith, let your communication be yea, yea, nay, nay, i. e. you ought to converse with so much sincerity, that your bare affirmation or denial may be sufficient: this being the proper use of speech, that men may understand each others minds by their words.

Stillingfleet, vol. ii. Ser. 5.

That the variation may be found, with a share of accuracy more than sufficient to determine the ship's course, is allowed, but that it can be found so exactly as to fix the longitude within a degree, or sixty miles, I absolutely deny.
Cook. Voyage, vol. v. b. i. c. 3.

For the fourth council of Lateran, held in the year 1215, and pretended to be a general, and therefore infallible one, after beginning with a creed, of which transubstantiation, then first established, made a part: proceeds, in the third canon, to decree that all deniers of that, or any other of the (pretended) Catholic doctrines, be excommunicated, and punished by the secular arm.—Secker, vol. v. Ser. 13.

DEOBSTRUENT. Lat. De, ob, and struere. See OBSTRUCT.

That which destroys obstructions; separates parts closed or blocked up.

At least to answer the physician's scope, where he would employ an emetic, a cathartic, a diaphoretic, a deobstruent, a diuretic, a bezoardic or cordial medicine.
Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 118.

It (tar-water) is useful not only as a pectoral and balsamic, but also as a powerful and safe deobstruent in cachectic and hysteric cases.—Berkeley. Siris, § 6.

DEODAND. Lat. Deo dandum;—
That which ought to be, which must be, given to God.

A man that hath been long in office vnder dyuers of the kynges almoygners, to whome the goodes of such men as kyll themselfe be apoynted by the lawe, and hys office, as deodandes to be geue in almes.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 285.

If beside the laws of murther, men have thought fit, out of respect to humane nature, that whatsoever else moves to the death of man should be forfeit to pious uses, why should there not as well be deodands for reputation?
Marvell. Works, vol. ii p. 250.

For love should, like a deodand,
Still fall to th' owner of the land.
Butler. The Lady's Answer to the Knight.

DEOPPILATE, v. } Lat. De, and oppi-
DEOPPILA'TION. } lare; pilare, densare, to DEO'PPILATIVE. } thicken, to close or stop.

Fr. "Déoppilatif, opening or unstopping obstructions."

When for medical uses, we take down the filings of iron or steel, we must not conceive it passeth unaltered from us; for though the grosser parts be excluded again, yet are the dissoluble parts extracted, whereby it becomes effectual in deoppilations.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 22.

Some bodies taken into that of a man are deoppilating others inciding, resolving, &c.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 293.

Indeed I have found them generally to agree in divers of them (as in their being somewhat diaphoretick and very deoppilative.)—Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 535.

As in bezoardicum minerale, skilfully prepared, (for it very seldom is so) the laxative and emetick virulency of the antimony is changed into a diaphoretick, resolving, and deoppilative power.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. p 122.

DEORDINA'TION. Used as Disorder is. See COORDAIN, and DISORDER.

(The Church of England) being thus clens'd and wash'd is accus'd by the Roman parties of novelties, and condemn'd because she refuses to run into the same excess of riot and deordination.
Bp. Taylor. A Dissuasive from Popery, pt. i. c. 1.

For although the fall of man did neither alter the essential constituents of mankind, nor wholly raze out the engravings of those common notions, sentiments, and rational instincts that were in them; yet it did in a great measure impair and weaken them, and brought in a very great deordination and discomposure, setting up the lower faculties in rebellion against the superior.—Hale. Orig. of Mankind, p. 355.

DEPA'INT, v. } Fr. Dépeindre; Lat. De-
DEPE'INCT. } pingere, (de, and pingere,) to form or figure, (fingere,) to express a real object by imitation.

To imitate the likeness of any thing, (coloured;) to draw, portray, describe or delineate, (to depicture, qv.)

And whan this Eneas and Achates
Hadden in this temple been ouer all,
Than found they depainted on a wall
How Troie and all the land destroyed was
Chaucer. Legend of Dido.

And all aboue depeinted in a tour
Saw I Conquest, sitting in gret honour,
With thilke sharp sword over his hed
Yhanging by a subtil twined thred.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2029.

Her armes long in just proportion cast,
Her hands depaint with veins all blue and white.
Uncertaine Auctore. Descrip. and Praise of his Loue.

What should I speak in praise of Surrey's skil
Unlesse I had a thousand tongues at will?
No one is able to depaint at full,
The flowing fountaine of his sacred skull.
Turberville. In Prayse of the Erle of Surrey.

—— Through great constraint
He made him stoupe perforce vnto his knee,
And doe unwilling worship to the saint,
That on his shield depainted he did see.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 5.

The reading thereof, in my conceit, will not hinder the rest of your affaires, nor take up any time due thereto, considering that in few words you shall there see the nature of many memorable persons lively described and depainted.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 331.

The red rose medled with the white yfere,
In either cheeke depeincten lively chere.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. April.

I was naturally as much inclined as others, to play with the gilded leaves and outside of my books, and handsomely depaint the letters before I understood the sense.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 516.

DEPA'RT, v.
DEPA'RT, n.
DEPA'RTABLE, adj.
DEPA'RTER.
DEPA'RTING, n.
DEPARTI'TION.
DEPA'RTMENT.
DEPARTME'NTAL.
DEPA'RTURE.

Fr. Départir; It. Dipartire; Lat. Dispartiri, to separate; dis, and partiri, to divide.

To divide or separate, to deal, share, or distribute; to part with or give up, to part from or relinquish, to quit, leave, go away.

This fole hem armede anon, and baneres gonne rere,
And departede here ost in twolf partyes there.
R. Gloucester, p. 18.

The folk was mykille & strong, of mete thei had gret nede,
Tham burd [behoved] departe ther throng, that lond mot tham not fede. R. Brunne, p. 180.

Let no kynne conseil. ne couetyse gow departe.
Piers Ploughman, p. 85.

What is hus conysaunce quath ich. in hus cote armure
Thre psones in o pensel. quath he dep̄ table, from other.
Id. p. 314.

And thanne I shal knowleche to hem, that I knewe you never, departe awey from me ye that worcken wickednesse.
Wiclif. Matthew, c. 7.

And aftir that thei hadden crucifiid him, they departiden his clothis and kisten lott, to fulfil that is seyde bi the prophete seiynge, thei departiden to hem my clothis, and on my cloth their kisten lotte.—Id. Ib. c. 27.

For I am sacrifised now, and the tyme of my departyng is nygh.—Id. Tyte, c. 4.

And oon of the puple seide to him, maister seye to my brother that he departe with me the eritage. And he seyde to him, man, who ordeynede me a domesman or a departer on you?—Id. Luke, c. 12.

This false blasphemour, that charged me
To parten that wol not departed be,
To every man ylike, with meschance.
Chaucer. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7821.

The same law yt ioyneth by wedlocke without forsaking, the same law yeueth libell of departicion bicause of diuorce, both demed and declared.—Id. Testament of Loue, b. iii.

The sonnes thre, of whiche I tolde,
Right after that hem selfe wolde,
This worlde departe they begonne.—Gower Con. A. b vii.

And I wolde not departe hym fro
Suche loue was betwene hem two. Id. Ib. b. viii.

Phil. Mary inderd you, maister Doctor, put me in good remembrance of the meaning of Saint Paul in that place, for apostasie is properlie a departing from the faith, and therefore commeth apostata, which properlie signifieth one that departeth from his faith.
Fox Martyrs, p. 1635. Fourth Examin. of Mr J. Philpot.

And at their departure was shot off all the ordinance of the ship, and about nine of the clocke at night the same day they weyed anker, and departed with their ship from Astracan.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 421.

Which when she saw, she left her locks vndight,
And running to her boat withouten ore,
From the departing land it launched light,
And after them did drive with all her power and might.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

But that lewd louer did the most lament
For her depart, that euer man did hear,
He knockt his breast with desperate intent,
And scratcht his face, and with his teeth did tear
His rugged flesh, and rent his ragged heare.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 7.

It hath been subtilly, and indeed truly noted, that our sight is not well contented with those sudden departments from one extream to another. Therefore let them have rather a duskish tincture, than an absolute black.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 61.

My lord being in the gallery of my ship, at my departure, I remember your honour took me by the hand, and said you would request one thing of me, which was, that whether I made a good voyage or a bad, I should not fail, but to return again into England: which I then promised you, and gave you my faith I would, and so I have.
State Trials. Sir Walter Raleigh, an. 1603.

Although when the divine providence does itself offer us a just occasion of leaving this world, (as when a man chooses to suffer death rather than commit wickedness) a wise man will then indeed depart joyfully, as out of a place of sorrow and darkness into light; yet he will not be in such haste as to break his prison contrary to law; but will go when God calls him, as a prisoner when dismissed by the magistrate or lawful power.—Clarke. Nat. & Rev. Religion, Prop. 1.

But Mr. Locke ascribes the change of action solely to uneasiness, and the continuance of it to satisfaction; it behoves me then to give my reason for departing from so great an authority.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. c. 6.

In order to resume that character, let him consider what virtues his department of life particularly requires. He will find them to be industry, honesty, and frugality.
Anox. Ess. No. 8.

M. de la Tour du Pin, on the fourth of last June, comes to give an account of the state of his department, as it exists under the auspices of the national assembly.
Burke. On the French Revolution.

The game played by the revolutionists in 1789, with respect to the French guards of the unhappy king, was now played against the departmental guards, called together for the protection of the revolutionists.
Id. Preface to M. Brissot's Address to his Constituents.

This is a picture drawn from life: what it represents often occurs: and the whole of it is occasioned by the merchant's departure from his natural and his most becoming character.
Knox. Ess. No. 8.

DEPA'STURE, v. Lat. Depascere, astum; de, and pascere, to feed. Gr. Πα-ειν.

To feed upon, to eat, to browze or graze upon.

Earth, like the patient was, whose lively blood
Hath ouercome at last some sicknesse strong,
Whose feeble limmes had been the bait and food,
Whereon his strange disease depastred long,
But now restor'd, in health and welfare stood
As sound as earst, as fresh, as faire, as young.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Bovlogne, b. xiv. s. 79.

And thus, if a horse be delivered either to an agisting farmer for the purpose of depasturing in his meadows, or to an hostler to be dressed and fed in his stable, the bailees are answerable for the loss of the horse, if it be occasioned by the ordinary neglect of themselves or their servants.
Sir W. Jones. The Law of Bailments.

DEPA'TRIATE, v. Lat. De, and patria, his country.

To go or cause to go from, to quit—his country.

I fear, sir, here you beg the question.
A subject born in any state
May, if he please, depatriate,
And go, for reasons weak or weighty
To Zeeland-new, or Otaheite.
Mason. The Dean and the Squire.

DEPAUPERATE, v. Lat. Depauperare, atum; de, and pauper, poor.

To impoverish.

And because the residence of this blessed poverty is the mind, it followes that it be here understood, that all that examination and renunciation, abjection and humility of mind, which depauperates the spirit, making it less worldly, and more spiritual, is the duty here enjoyned.
Bp. Taylor. Great Exemplar, pt. ii. s. 12.

DEPE'ACH, v. Skinner says, abadvere, (i. e. to acquit, to discharge,) from the Fr. Despescher. See DESPATCH.

They shall be forthwith heard as soon as the party which they shal find before our justices shall be depeached, which party being heard forthwith, and as soone as may be, the said English merchants shall be ridde and despatched.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 367.

DEPECULATION. Lat. Peculari, whence Depeculari, (to plunder,) is from Pecus. Vossius says, Peculari is properly applied to public theft, though it may be extended more widely. See PECULATE.

Also robbery, and depeculation of the public treasure or revenues, is a greater crime than the robbing or defrauding of a private man; because to rob the public, is to rob many at once.—Hobbs. Of Commonwealth, c. 27.

DEPE'ND, v.
DEPE'NDANT.
DEPE'NDANCE.
DEPE'NDANCY.
DEPE'NDENT.
DEPE'NDENCE.
DEPE'NDENCY.
DEPE'NDENTLY.
DEPE'NDER.
DEPE'NDING, n.
DEPE'NDINGLY.

Fr. Dépendre; Sp. Depender; It. Dependere; Lat. Dependere, (de, and pendere,) to hang from.

To hang down, to rest, to repose, to rely upon—in a hanging position; to rest, to repose or rely upon, generally; and thus, (met.) to trust to, to confide in.

To rely upon; to have as a support; and thus, to be connected with as an inferior, to be subordinate, subservient or subject to.

To hang, (sc.) upon the balance, under examination; investigation, trial; and thus, to be undetermined, undecided.

Archdeacon Nares, (Gloss. ad v.) gives several instances from our elder dramatists, in which Dependance or Dependency, is used for the subject of a quarrel, i. e. the affair depending. See in v. CARTEL, from B. Jonson. See also Gifford's Note thereon, and his Massinger, iii. 9.

Dependent and Dependant are used indiscriminately; ent from ens is the right.

And now the cause driuen is so far,
Sodainly peace, either hasty war
Mot follow anon, for the fatall chance
Of life and death dependeth in balance.
Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. iii.

And hereby ye see that it is a playne and an euident conclusiō as bright as the sunne shynyng that the truth of God's word dependeth not of the truth of the congregation.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 268.

The Prenchemen in their treatie demaunded to haue Calays beaten downe, and to haue the sygnorie of Guysnes Hammes, Marke, and Oye, and all the landes of Froyten, and the dependauntes of Guysnes vnto the lymyttes of the water of Graueling.—Berners. Froiss. Cron. vol. i. c. 177.

And we would thē aske him such questions further either of holdinge of God's hande over them, or withdrawing hys hande of help from them, with other diuerse dependaunces therupon, which eurie learned manne may soone fynd oute himself & almost vnlearned to.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 594.

Considering nowe that of hys electes, whiche is of hys woordes muche adoe to perceiue, they be so dark and so intriked of purpose without any dependence or order, yet in the ende when all is gathered together and aduysed well, thys is the whole summe, that God chooseth a certayne whom he lyketh.
Id. Ib. p. 611.

Then let your hopes on those sure joys depend,
Which live and grow by death, and waste not when they spend.—P. Fletcher. Eliza. An Elegy.

Unity which the fathers press so often, they make to be dependant on the bishop.
Bp. Taylor. Episcopacy Asserted, s. 46.

Sanctify him in his authority and sovereignty, by calling upon him in obedience to his command and will, who hath commanded it, by acknowledgment of thy dependence upon him.—Bp. Hall. Cont. On the Lord's Prayer.

When here he adds,—and we by him; this imports their being a chosen generation, a peculiar people to God, the chosen of God out of all things else: and his being a peculiar special founder unto them of a super creation-state, and a dependancy upon him for the whole of it, as he is Jesus Christ the Lord.—Goodwin. Works, vol. ii. pt ii. p. 169.

Nor didst thou feel their drought, their pangs, their qualms,
Their rack in writing, who do write for alms,
Whose wretched genius, and dependent fires
But to their benefactors' dole aspires.
Cartwright. Upon the Poems of Fletcher

But yet the parliament of 1 H. IV. c. 3, 4. repealed this parliament of 21 R. II. with all its circumstances and dependents.
Prynne. Treachery and Disloyalty of Papists, pt. i. p. 32.

Having no relation to, or dependence upon the court, he [Sir Henry Slingsby] was sway'd only by his conscience to detest the violent and undutiful behaviour of that parliament.—Clarendon. Civil War, vol. iii. p. 623.

If we make a farther advance and progression into the region of philosophy, it will leade the mind up to religion, and shows the congruous dependency and subordination of all causes of divine providence.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, Treat. 16. s. 1.

The absolute stoical depender on fate may starve for want of industry, die for want of physick, and be damned for want of repentance.—Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 87.

Delay is bad, doubt worse, depending worst;
Each best day of our life escapes us first.
B. Jonson. To William Roe.

If thou givest me this day supplies beyond the expense of this day, I will use it thankfully, and nevertheless dependingly; for I will renew my petition for my daily bread still.
Hale. Cont. vol. II. On the Lord's Prayer.

As heaven with stars, the roof with jewels glows,
And ever living lamps depend in rows.
Pope. Temple of Fame.

Then, since those forms begin, and have their end,
On some unalter'd cause they sure depend:
Parts of the whole are we; but God the whole;
Who gave us life and animating soul.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

That desire was to fix and preserve a few lasting dependable friendships: and the accidents, which have disappointed me in it, have put an end to all my aims.
Pope. To Gay, Let. 21.

What freeborn man, who, though of mungrel strain,
Wou'd twice support the scorn and proud disdain
With which those idols you adore, the great,
Their wretched vassals and dependants treat?
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 5.

Dark as a cloud they make a wheeling flight,
Then on a neighbouring tree, descending, light;
Like a large cluster of black grapes they show,
And make a large dependance from the bough.
Id. Virgil, Geor. 4.

Well, but to this it is objected, that these witnesses we speak of, were all of them Christ's friends, and followers and dependents.—Sharp, vol. ii. Ser. 8.

His followers afterward so understood and explained it, as if, by the creation of the world, was not to be understood a creation in time; but only an order of nature. Causality and dependence: that is, that the will of God, and his power of acting, being necessarily as eternal as his essence, the effects of that will and power might be supposed coeval to the will and power themselves.
Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 3.

It is also natural and can hardly be otherwise, but that the bishop of a chief city, finding himself to exceed in wealth, in power, in advantages of friendships, dependencies, &c. should not affect to raise himself above the level: it is an ambition, that easily will seize on the most moderate, and otherwise religious minds.
Barrow. Of the Pope's Supremacy.

Yet, though I always have my will,
I'm but a mere depender still;
An humble hanger on at best,
Of whom all people make a jest.—Swift. Riddle the Fourth.

Eternity, depending on an hour,
Makes serious thought man's wisdom, joy, and praise.
Young. Complaint, Night 8.

No regal pageant deck'd with casual honours,
Scorn'd by his subjects, trampled by his foes,
No feeble tyrant of a petty state,
Courts thee to shake on a dependant throne.
Johnson. Irene, Act ii. sc. 2.

It is precisely the same, whether the ministers of the crown can disqualify by a dependent house of commons, or by a dependent court of star chamber, or by a dependent court of king's bench.—Burke. Of the Present Discontents.

We behold (and it seems some people rejoice in beholding) our native land, which used to sit the envied arbiter of all her neighbours, reduced to a servile dependance on their mercy.—Id. Letter to the Sheriffs of Bristol.

For if they once quit this natural, rational, and liberal obedience, having deserted the only proper foundation of their power, they must seek a support in an abject and unnatural dependence somewhere else.
Id. Of the Present Discontents.

There are many subjects which, though very interesting to the reader, would make no figure in representation: such are those subjects which consist in any long series of action, the parts of which have very much dependency each on the other.—Sir J. Reynolds. On the Art of Painting, Note 10.

If we affirm absolutely, we use the indicative or declarative mood; if relatively, conditionally, or dependently on something else, it is the subjunctive.
Beattie. Elements of Moral Science, pt. I. c. 1. s. 3.

DEPE'OPLE, v. To destroy the people.
To Depopulate, (qv.)

—— Yet undone the great worke is, all eyes
Must see Achilles in first sight, depeopling enemies,
As well as counsell it in court.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. ix.

—— I depeopled it,
Slue all men, and did their wiues remit,
With much spoile taken.—Id. Ib. Odyssey, b. ix.

DEPE'RDIT, n. } Fr. Déperir; Lat. De-
DEPE'RDITELY. } perdere, itum; de, and per-
DEPERDI'TION. } dere, perhaps from the Gr. Περθειν, to lay waste or destroy.
Any thing lost, destroyed, ruined.

Our bodies may be said to be daily repaired by new sustenance, which begets new blood, and consequently new spirits, new humours, and I may say new flesh, the old by continual deperdition and insensible transpirations evaporating still out of us, and giving way to flesh.
Howell, b i. s. 1. Let. 31.

Wine, and even water has been, not only by Helmont, but by divers other physicians, observed to be enriched, [with wormes] after a quantity of quicksilver has been for some hours shaken in it, though without any sensible deperdition of the substance of the mercury.
Boyle. Works, pt. ii. Exs. 5.

The most deperditely wicked of all others, in whom was the root of wickedness.—Dean King. Sermon, (1608,) p. 17.

No reason can be given why, if these deperdits ever existed, they have now disappeared. Yet if all possible existences have been tried, they must have formed part of the catalogue.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 5.

DEPE'RTIBLE, adj. In some editions this word is written Depectible.
Bacon appears to mean—that may be distributed, or spread.

It may be also, that some bodies have a kinde of lentour, and more depertible nature than others, as we see it evident in colouration.—Bacon. Naturall History, § 857.

DEPHLE'GM, v. } Gr. Φλεγμα, from Φλεγ-
DEPHLE'GMATE. } ειν, to burn. Vossius
DEPHLEGMA'TION. } thinks, not so called be-
DEPHLE'GMEDNESS. } cause it is—per se igneum, but because—per accidens causet febres. "For," he adds, "a sharp and salt phlegm is the fountain of all such diseases as are produced by a defluxion of humours; as Plato says in Timæus." See PHLEGM.
To clear or purify from phlegm,—in chymistry,—to free from pituitous, aqueous or watery parts.

We found that the oil that was wont to swim upon spirit of wine, not freed from its aqueous parts, did readily sink, and quietly lie in the bottom of that, which was carefully dephlegmed.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 349.

Our favourable thoughts of that expert chymist making us think it possible, that the spirits we employed had not been sufficiently exalted, we dephlegmated some by more frequent, and indeed tedious rectifications
Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 329

And let me on this occasion advertise you, Pyrophilus, that in divers cases it is not enough to separate the aqueous parts by dephlegmation, as many chemists content themselves to do.—Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 321.

Fifthly, that the proportion betwixt the coralline solution and the spirit of wine depends so much upon the strength of the former liquor, and the dephlegmedness of the latter, that it is scarce possible to determine generally and exactly, what quantity of each ought to be taken.—Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 442.

DEPI'CT, v. } Lat. Depingere, depictum,
DEPI'CTURE, v. } to depaint, (qv.)
To imitate the likeness of any thing; to draw, portray, describe or delineate.
Speed distinguishes depict, and depaint.

I remember he [Simon Steward, Mil.] lived (after he was knighted,) a fellow-commoner in Trinity-hall, where these his armes are fairly depicted in his chamber.
Fuller. Worthies. Cambridgeshire.

Wherein is the malice? in adding to the narration, pictures (sc. the prints in Fox's Martyrs,) also of the fact, so to moue hatred to Monkes, and their religion, whereas of truth, either Monkes, or men of that religion, were the very first, who not onely so depictured, but also liuely and richly depainted it in their goodliest manuscripts.
Speed. King John, b. ix. c. 8. s. 62.

Why the man has a perception of sound which the drum has not, or an idea of figure depicted on the choroides or retina of the eye, (whichever of them be the seat of vision,) which the camera has not; in other words, how perception is excited from material impulse, must ever, I think, exceed the apprehension of human intellect.
Anecdotes of the Life of Bp. Watson, vol. ii. p. 401.

I next mounted through a large painted staircase, where several persons were depictured in caricature.
Fielding. A Journey from this World to the Next

DEPILA'TION, n. } "Fr. Dépile; bauld,
DEPI'LATORY. } bare or bared of hair,"
DEPI'LATOUS. } (Cotgrave.) Lat. Depilare; de, and pilus, hair.
To take away, strip off or destroy the hair.
Depilation is used by Dryden, in his translation of Persius, Sat. 4.

The crocodiles have a certaine fat in them which is depilatorie; for no sooner is the haire rubbed therewith, but presently it sheddeth.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxvii. c. 8.

The same depilatorie effect, the ashes of horse-leeches are supposed to have, if they be reduced into a liniment with vinegre, and used accordingly.—Id. Ib. b. xxxii. c. 7.

This animal [the Salamander] is a kind of lizard, a quadruped corticated and depilous, that is, without wool, fur, or hair.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 14.

I shall demand how they [dogs] of some countryes became depilous, and without any hair at all, whereas some sorts in excess abound therewith.—Id. Ib. b. vi. c. 10.

DEPLICA'TION. Lat. De, and plicare, Gr. Πλεκ-ειν, to knit, twist, fold. "Fr. Déplicer,—to unplait or unfold, to undo the plaits, to open the folds of," (Cotgrave.)
Unplaiting, unfolding, untwisting.

For which effect there needeth onely an unfolding and deplication of the inside of this order, to shew it is not so asperous and thorny as our nature apprehendeth it by the first glances that light upon it.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. I. Treat. 15. s. 3.

DEPLO'RE, v. } Fr. Déplorer; Sp. De-
DEPLO'RABLE. } plorar; It. Deplorare; Lat.
DEPLO'RABLENESS. } Deplorare, (de, and plo- DEPLO'RABLY. } rare:) distinguished from DEPLO'RATE. } lacrymare, in degree. La-
DEPLORA'TION. } crimandum est, non plo-
DEPLO'REDLY. } randum, (Seneca, Ep. 63.)
DEPLO'REDNESS. } To weep for, to bewail,
DEPLO'REMENT. } to bemoan, to mourn, to DEPLO'RER. } lament.

The same day [the two and twentieth day of January, 1596] Sir Francis Drake our general departed this life, whose death was exceedingly deplored; his interment was after this manner; his corps being laid in a cophin of lead, he was let down into the sea, the trumpets in dolefull manner echoing out this lamentation for so great a losse, and all the cannons of the fleet were discharged according to the custome of all sea funerall obsequies.
Sir Francis Drake. West Indian Voyage, p. 58.

He who against thee does inveigh
Never yet knew where beauty lay,
And does betray
A deplorable want of sense,
Blindness, or age, or impotence.
Cotton. Pindaric Ode. Beauty.

To discern the sadness, and deplorableness of this estate, I shall need give you no sharper character of it, than only this, that 'tis a condition that forceth God to forsake us in meer mercy, to give over all thoughts of kindness to us, and that the only degree of kindness left, whereof we are capable
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p 556

Which way of proof is most proper, and suitable to the course of the text; which hath recourse to an exemplary instance of election, continued in age, as deplorate as [any] whatever in the Old Testament.
Goodwin. Works, vol. ii. pt. iv. p. 24.

But seeing it now evident and certain, that my [Qu. Elizabeth] safety without her [Qu. Mary] destruction, is in a more deplorate estate, I am most grievously affected with inward sorrow.—Baker. Queen Elizabeth, an. 1586.

He will leane to those her beneficiaries the farther search of this argument, and deploration of her fortune.
Speed. Hen. VII. b. ix. c. 20. s. 16.

The states lie still and close oppressed with the adversities of the last year; and with nothing more than the late ruine of forty well laden ships by the Texel, wherein with deploration of the whole province were lost one thousand mariners.
Reliquiæ Hottonianæ, p. 474

To be deploredly old, and affectedly young, is not only a great folly, but a gross deformity!
Bp. Taylor. Artificial Handsomeness, p. 72

But for thee, O blessed Jesu, so ardent was thy love to us, that it was not in the power of our extreme misery to abate it, yea so, as that the deploredness of our condition did but lighten that holy flame.
Bp. Hall. A Pathetical Meditation, s. 2.

Home when she came, her secret woe she vents,
And fills the palace with her loud laments;
Those loud laments her echoing maids restore
And Hector, yet alive, as dead deplore.
Dryden. Homer. Iliad, b. vi.

After this, I have in the fire, the most deplorable, but with all the greatest argument that can be imagined; the destruction being so swift, so sudden, so vast and miserable, as nothing can parallel in story.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis. Account of.

It has been more than sufficiently proved from thence [Scripture] already, how deplorably unable the heart of man is, not only to conquer, but even to contend with the difficulties of a spiritual course, without a steady view of such promises as may supply new life, spirit, and vigour to its obedience.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 5.

I was invited not to be a mere spectator, or a lazy deplorer of the danger I saw religion in.
Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 153.

So that bating those few barbarians, whose superstition and malice brought her to that condition, all the other spectators of her sufferings were deplorers of them too.
Id. Ib. vol. v. p 309.

Aristides, in a discourse which he addresses to the people of Smyrna, to congratulate their re-establishment, says, that their calamity had been deplored by all the inhabitants of Greece and Asia, as a distress common to them.
Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

The editions of Greek and Latin classics produced within these few years from the English press, are deplorably incorrect, and seem to indicate a declension of an art which has afforded light, and given honour to empires.
Knox, Ess. 134.

DEPLU'ME, v. Lat. De, and pluma, a feather. To strip off the feathers.

Such a person is like Homer's bird, deplumes himself to feather all the naked callows that he sees.
Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 15.

DEPO'NE, v. } The Scotch use, to depone; the DEPO'NENT. } English, to depose. See
DEPO'NER. } DEPOSE.

A deponent,—one who gives evidence, bears witness or testimony; so called, says Skinner, because the witness depones, (deponit,) places his hand upon the book of the holy evangelists, while he is bound by the obligation of an oath.

Fyrste the sayde deponent sayeth, that on Saturdaye, the seconde daye of December, Anno. M. D. xliii he toke the charge of the pryson at foure of the clocke at afternone by the commaundemente of master Chaunceller.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 6.

And further, Sprot deponeth, that he entered himself thereafter in conference with Bour, and demanded what was done betwixt the laird and the Earl of Gowrie.
State Trials. George Sprot, an. 1606.

Whereupon he began to read: and before he had ended it, he said to the deponer, Mr. John, I intreat you heartily that I may have this paper to Naughtoun, that I may read it, and consider it at leisure.—Id. Lord Balmerino, an. 1634.

Item, this deponent being demanded by the said Margery what she did every daie at church, she answered that she kneeled down and said 5 Pater nosters, in worshippe of the crucifix, and as manie Aue Maries, in worshipp of our Ladie.
Fox. Martyrs, p 610. The Story of Margery Backster.

The pleader, having spoke his best,
Had witness ready to attest,
Who fairly could on oath depose,
When question on the fact arose,
That every article was true;
No further these deponents knew.
Swift Cadenus & Vanessa.

The verbs called deponent, desiderative, frequentative, inceptive, &c need not to be considered here, being found in some languages only, and therefore not essential to speech.
Beattie. Moral Science, vol. i. pt i. c. i. s. 3.

DEPOPULATE, v. } Sp. Despoblar; It. Dispopolare; Fr. Dépopuler; Lat. Depopulare, to de-people.
DEPOPULA'TE, adj. }
DEPOPULA'TION. }
DEPOPULA'TER. }
DEPO'PULACY. }

"To unpeople or dispeople, to waste, ravage, ruin or destroy," (Cotgrave.) See DEPEOPLE.

So that the Jewes were euer ouerrunne and depopulated of both the hostes, now of the Egyptians, and then of the Assyrians and Grekis.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 11.

And so in that realme were continually two kynges, vntyll the kynge of Mede had depopulate the countrey, and brought the people in captiuytie to the citie of Babylon.
Sir T. Elyot. The Governor, b. i. c. 2.

O poore and miserable citie, what sondry tormētes, exciasions, subuertions, depopulations, and other euyll aduentures hath hapned vnto the, eens thou were byreft of that noble ensurte of Sapience.—Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 22.

By which means the year ensuing, he with Edrick the traytor passing the Thames at Creclad, about Twelftide, enter'd into Mercia, and especially Warwickshire, depopulating all places in their way.—Milton. Hist. of Eng. b. iv.

It might reasonably be concluded that this wild and barbarous depopulation, would even extirpate all that learning, religion and loyalty, which had so eminently flourished there
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. iii. p. 74.

The persons agreeing in this one mischief, are of divers sorts and humours; 1st, meddling and busy persons, who love popular speeches: 2. covetous landlords, inclosers, depopulators, &c.—State Trials, an. 1626. D. of Buckingham.

Mars answered: O Joue; neither she nor I
(With both our aides) can keep depopulacie
From off the Froggs.
Chapman. Homer. Batrachomyomachia.

So two young mountain lions, nurs'd with blood,
In deep recesses of the gloomy wood,
Rush fearless to the plains, and uncontrol'd
Depopulate the stalls, and waste the fold.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

Each man, being a sovereign in his own family, has the same interest with regard to it, as the prince with regard to the state; and has not, like the prince, any opposite motives of ambition or vain-glory, which may lead him to depopulate his little sovereignty.
Hume. Ess. Populousness of Ancient Nations.

But Plutarch says, that the general depopulation had been more sensibly felt in Greece than any other country. How is this reconcileable to its superior privileges and advantages!—Id. Ib.

DEPORT, v. } Fr. Déporter; Lat. Deportare; (de, and portare,) to DEPO'RT, n. } bear or carry away.
DEPORTA'TION. }
DEPO'RTMENT. }

To bear or carry away; (sc.) to a place of exile or banishment; and thus,—to exile or banish.

To bear or carry,—applied to the bearing, carriage, conduct or behaviour.

No assurance of better dealing then was used to the deported House of Saxe, by a better emperour than this accounted.—Cabbala. Sir Dudley Carleton, to the Duke.

The third consideration should be, how a man may bee valued, and may deport himselfe as he is compared with his equals and rivals.—Bacon. Learning, by G Watts, b. viii. c. 2.

——— Like a wood-nymph light,
Oread or Dryad, or of Delia's traine
Betook her to the groves, but Delia's self
In gait surpass'd and goddess-like deport.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

——— At last
Of middle age one rising, eminent
In wise deport, spake much of right and wrong,
Of justice, of religion, truth and peace,
And judgment from above. Id. Ib. b. xi.

Now where to begin or end this compute, ariseth no small difficulty; for there were three remarkable captivities and deportations of the Jews.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 1.

A sinne which sundry fathers have plentifully condemned, as mis beseeming Christians, whose very outward gestures and deportment ought to be modest, chaste, and holy, as becometh the Gospel of Christ.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act v. sc. 2.

Thus did our Lord deport himself toward his spiteful adversaries, who being reviled, did not revile again: when he suffered, did not threaten, but committed it to him that judgeth righteously.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 10.

In their deportations, they had often the favour of their conquerors; were permitted by them freely and publicly to exercise their religion, and even to make proselytes, to live under their own laws and customs, and to retain some shadow of their domestic polity and government.
Atterbury, vol. iii. Ser. 5.

Thus from the pattern of our Saviour's deportment, the point of doctrine is this:
The entire resignation of our wills to the disposing will of God, is the indispensable duty of Christians under the sharpest afflictions.—Bates. Great Duty of Resignation.

Virgil lived in an age of more refinement, and was, perhaps, too much conversant in courtly life, as well as too bashful in his deportment, and delicate in his constitution, to studie the varieties of human nature, where in a monarchy they are most conspicuous: namely, in the middle and lower ranks of mankind.—Beattie. On Truth, pt. iii. c. 2.

DEPORTRAIED. Depainted, depictured, pourtrayed, (qv.)

Solinus thus deliuereth: the country is in part (note that hee makes it not general) inhabited by the people barbarous, who, by artificial forms of incision, haue from their childhood sundry shapes of beasts deportraied in their bodies.
Speed. The more Civil Britaines, b. v. c. 1. s. 11.

DEPOSE, v. } Fr. Déposer; Sp. Deponer; It. Deponere; Lat. Deponere, depositum, to put down, (de, and ponere, to put, place or fix.)
DEPO'SER. }
DEPO'SABLE. }
DEPO'SAL. }
DEPO'SER. }
DEPO'SING, n. }
DEPO'SIT, v. }
DEPO'SIT, n. }
DEPO'SITARY. }
DEPO'SITING. }
DEPOSI'TION. }
DEPO'SITOR. }
DEPO'SITORY. }
DEPO'SITURE. }

To put down, as to depose a crown; to put it down from the head.

To put, place or lay, (sc.) in the hands, custody or power of another, as a pledge or security, in safety, at use, at interest. Now more usually, to deposit.

To depose, or, as the Scotch say, to depone, (qv.) to give evidence, bear witness or testimony. See DEPONE.

And depose gow for goure pruyde prophecie.
Piers Ploukman, p. 297.

——— Where many a daie
In sorie plite and poore he laie,
The corone on his head deposed,
Within walles fast enclosed.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

For God, whiche al thyng hath bounded,
And sighe the falsehead of his gyle,
Hath set him but a liteil whyle,
That he shall reign, vpon depose,
For sodeinly right as he rose,
So sodeinly downe he felle.—Id. Ib. b. ii.

For thei or that were worse falle,
Through common counsele of hem all
They haue her wrongful kyng deposed.—Id. Ib. b. vii.

Peraduenture he may be borne a subiect and after made king, or else he may bee borne a king, and after deposed and made a subject.—Frith. Workes, p. 17.

I answer unto you, that what remaineth be oaths, and those not to rest as proofs unto you, but to be duly examined and fully considered, whether they be true and their deposers of credit.—State Trials. Edmund Campion, an. 1581.

This seisme, as before is towchyd, began by reason of the deposicion of ye sayd Eugeny at the counsayll of Basile, for that he wolde nat observe the decree before made in the counsayll of Costaunce, and other causes to hym layde. But yet that deposyng, natwithstādyng, perforse he reygned pope by ye terme of xiiii. yeres after.—Fabyan, an. 1548.

Their aged syre, thus eased of his crowne,
A private life led in Albania,
With Gonorill, long had in great renowne,
That nought him grieu'd to beene from rule deposed downe.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10.

And to the intent the commone might be perswaded, that he was an unjust and unprofitable prince, and a tyrant over his subjects, and therefore worthy to be deposed; there were set forth certaine articles (to the number of 32 or 38, as some record) very hainous to the eares of many: some whereof I have formerly recited, and the residue you may read in Hall, Grafton, Haywood, Trussell, and others.
Prynne. Treachery and Disloyalty, pt. i. p. 80.

So hereafter they shall only be keepers of the great seal, which for title and office, are deposable: but they say the Lord Chancellor's title is indelible.—Howell, b. i. s. 4. let. 8.

But all other inferiour magistrates, officers, and princes whatsoever are resistible, questionable, censurable, and deposable for their tyranny, wickednesse, and misgovernment by the parliament's censure, as I have proved.
Prynne. Treachery and Disloyalty, pt. v. p. 201.

Then through the casement ventur'd as much face
As kings depos'd show, when through gates they peep.
To see deposers to their crowning passe,
But straight shrink back, and at the trumpet weep.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. iii. c. 3.

The offence, therefore, wherewith I charge this Talbot, prisoner at the bar, is this in brief and in effect: that he hath maintained and maintaineth under his hand a power in the pope for the deposing and murdering of kings.
State Trials, an. 1613. William Talbot.

The fear is deposited in conscience, and is begotten and kept by this proposition, that God is a rewarder of all men according to their works.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 1. Rule 3.

At least, if it have not, it seems your church is not so faithful a guardian of her deposit, as her dear friends (moved by partiality or ends) would make us believe.
Hammond. Works, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 677

Whereas it is most manifest by the occasion, and whole contexture, that I mentioned the Scripture, and those, as the safest depositaries of all that faith which was delivered by Christ and his Apostles.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 141.

I have now gone through your papers and wearied you, and almost myself, yet if what is written prove usefull to you, to the depositing that which I cannot but deem an errour, although I lay no epithet upon it, it will be far from burthenous.—Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 704.

The influence of princes upon the dispositions of their courts, needs not the deposition of examples, since it hath the authority of a knowne principle.

Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 9. s. 2.

For as to his answer to my addition, that if we held these doctrines deposited in the church as zealously as the Romanist, we must hold them as of faith, and that the depositary is so trusty, as it cannot deceive us, I reply, &c.

Hammond. Works, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 138.

The Ægyptians were afraid of fire, not as a Deity, but a devouring element, mercilesly consuming their bodies, and leaving too little of them; and therefore by precious embalments, depositure in dry earths, or handsome inclosure in glasses, contrived notablest wayes of integrall conservation.

Brown. Urn Burial, c. 1.

Thus when the state one Edward did depose,
A greater Edward in his room arose.
But now, not 1, but poetry is curs'd;
For Tom the second reigns like Tom the first

Dryden, Ep. 10. To Mr. Congreve.

To them were committed the oracles of God; i. e. with them were intrusted all the revelations of the will of God, the law and the prophesies, as the people with whom God thought fit to deposit these things for the benefit of the world.—Clarke, vol. ii. Ser. 163.

If a person of clear fame assert a thing which he is ready to maintain with the loss of his life, there is no reason to doubt of the truth of his deposition.

Bates. Harmony of the Divine Attributes, c. 22.

They [schoolmasters] are indeed the great depositories and trustees of the peace of it; as having the growing hopes and fears of the nation in their hands.—South, vol. v. Ser. 1.

In this very year the sceptre of royal power departed from Judah; for it was in this year that Archelaus, the son of Herod the Great, was deposed by the Roman emperor, and banished to Lyons, and the Jews became wholly subject to the dominion of the Romans.—Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 30.

The swell of pity, not to be confin'd
Within the scanty limits of the mind,
Disdains the bank, and throws the golden sands,
A rich deposit, on the bord'ring lands.—Cowper. Charity.

Thus it is ordained by the sages of Hindustán, that "a depositor shall carefully enquire into the character of his intended depositary, who, if he undertake to keep the goods, shall preserve them with care and attention."

Sir W. Jones. The Law of Bailments.

If I am a vain man, my gratification lies within a narrow circle. I am the sole depositary of my own secret, and it shall perish with me.—Junius. Ded. to the English Nation.

DEPO'VERISH. To impoverish. See DEPAUPERATE.

So is your power depoverished, and lordes and great men brought to infelicitie, and all your people to great debilitie.

Grafton. Rich. II. an. 10.

DEPRA'VE, v. } Fr. Déprayer; Sp. Depravar; It. Depravare, (Lat. De, and pravus;) perhaps from the Gr. Πραος, mild, gentle; and by warlike people, in contempt, cowardly.
DEPRAVA'TION.
DEPRA'VABLE.
DEPRA'VEDLY.
DEPRA'VEDNESS.
DEPRA'VEMENT.
DEPRA'VER.
DEPRA'VERESS.
DEPRA'VITY.

To deprave, says Minshew, is to vitiate and corrupt that which before was good.

To vitiate, to corrupt, to degrade; to put a bad meaning or construction upon; and thus, to vilify, to defame.

And that knoweth conscience. ich eam nogt to chiden
Ne to deprave the pëone.—Piers Ploughman, p. 49.

And yet good Lord, of a presumpcion
I nll deprave thy might and Deite
I liue but vnder thy protection,
I am thy subiect, and wear thy liuery.

Chaucer. The Remedie of Loue.

We began to lose, whan our capitaines began to deserue to be depraued and condempned.—Golden Boke, c. 49.

As though all the false religion that euer was amonge the heithen, was not a corrupting & depravation of the true religiõ of God.—Calvine. Foure Godlye Sermons, Ser. 1

O temerous tauntresse that delights in toyes,
Tumbling cockboat tot'ring too and fro,
Jangling lestres, depraveresse of swete loyes,
Ground of the graffe whence all my grief doth grow.

Uncertaine Auctors. Against an Unstedfast Woman.

Ah! why hath nature to so hard a hart
Given so goodly gifts of beauties grace?
Whose pride depraues each other better part,
And all those precious ornaments deface.

Spenser, Son. 31.

[I omit] the scrutiny all over the kingdom, to find out men of arbitrary principles, that will bow the knee to Baal, in order to their promotion to all publick commissions and employments and the disgracing on the contrary and displacing of such as yet dare in so universal a depravation be honest and faithful in their trust and offices.

Marvell. Works, vol. i. p. 645.

Human nature is so mutable and depravable, as that notwithstanding the connate idea and prolepsis of God in the minds of men, some unquestionably do degenerate and lapse into atheism.—Cudworth. Intel. System, p. 631.

I have lived to behold the name of his Majesty defamed, the honour of Parliament depraved; the writings of both depravedly, anticipatively, counterfeitly imprinted.

Brown. Rel. Medici. To the Reader.

Yet in the worst of the depravedness of Israel, there were some which both drouped under the deplored idolatry of the times, and congratulated to Jehu this seuere vindication of God's inheritance.

Bp. Hall. Cont. Jehu killing the Sons of Ahab.

And to this effect he maketh men believe that apparitions, and such as confirm his existence, are either deceptions of sight, or melancholy depravements of phancy.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 10.

The rest, which the text ensuing shall lay abroad, we will to our abilitie perform and permit more exactly, not fearing all the backbiters and depravers of this so long a worke, as they hold it.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 29.

By aberration of conceit they extenuate his depravitie, and ascribe some goodnesse unto him.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vii. c. 1.

And still much less inconsistent will it be with the same divine goodness, to permit the posterity of a sinful and depraved creature to continue by natural consequence in a lower and more obnoctious rank of beings, than possibly they would have been placed in, had no such depravation been introduced, either by our first parent, or by any of his successors.—Clarke, vol. i. ser. 30.

If there be no designed depravedness, and pestilent perverseness of the mind, charity will make an indulgent allowance for it.—Bates. Spiritual Perfection unfolded, c. 11.

Over-great concern for self preservation [is owned to be] meanness and cowardice; too little, rashness; and none at all, or that which is contrary, (viz. a passion leading to self-destruction) a mad and desperate depravity.

Shaftesbury. On Virtue, b. i. pt. i. s. 2.

When reason and understanding are depraved and as far corrupted as the very passions of the heart; when thus the blind leads the blind, what else can we expect, but that both fall into the ditch?—Sherlock, vol. ii. Disc. 33.

Which, if it, [refinement] does not lead directly to purity of manners, obviates at least their greatest depravation, by disentangling the mind from appetite, and conducting the thoughts, through successive stages of excellence, till that contemplation of universal rectitude and harmony, which began by taste, may, as it is exalted and refined, conclude in virtue.—Sir J. Reynolds, Disc. 9.

The term of years that elapsed between the middle of the 17th century and the year 1759,—a period in the history of Spain, when all arts and sciences were fallen to the lowest ebb of depravement.—Swinburne. Spain, Let. 41.

It is the artificial theologer, the depraver, as he says, of the gospel, who would draw him into so absurd a system.

Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. v. App.

DE'PRECATE, v. } Fr. Déprécation; Sp. Deprecacion; Lat. Deprecatio. Lat. Deprecari, deprecatus, (de, and precari, to pray.) Fr. Desprier,—to unpray, disintreat; revoke a suit, recall prayers; desire to the contrary," (Cotgrave.)
DEPRECA'TION.
DE'PRECATIVE.
DEPRECA'TORY.

A deprecation, says Minshew, or begging of God to turn away his heauie displeasure from us, for our sins committed.

He then muttered in a broken and imperfect kind of tone, that the prayers he made, and the masses he performed, were in order to deprecate a massacre he had heard was designed against the Catholics.

State Trials, an. 1589. The Earl of Arundel

Deprecacions of evil to a malicious man are no better than advices. An unknown idiom is fit to keep counsel: they are familiar words, that must convey ought to the understanding.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Hezekiah & Sennacherib.

And in the Opuscular of Thomas Aquinas, he tells that a doctor said to him, that the optative form, or deprecatory, was the usual.

Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, b. i. s. 9. pt. ii.

In petitioning for ourselves, the first thing to be explained, is deprecation, which concerns the prevention, or removal, or lessening of evil.

The first evil to be prayed against is that of sin; and therein we should deprecate both the { Guilt. / Power.

Wilkins. On Prayer, c. 10.

First of all Aeneas, which we here render supplications, but may more properly be rendered deprecations, that is to say, such prayers as we put to God for the pardon of our sins, and the averting from us all those evils that we deserve upon account of them.—Sharp, vol. iv. Ser. 7.

The form itself is very ancient, consisting now as it did of old, of two parts, the first deprecative, the second indicative; the one intreating for pardon, the other, dispensing it

Comber, vol. i. p. 752

I fear he is a fraudulent dealer, and we may with too much justice apply to him the Scriptural deprecation, He that withholdeth his corn, the people shall curse him; but blessing shall be upon the head of him who selleth it.

Gilpin, vol. iii. Se . 11.

But a city without the knowledge of a God, or the practice of religion: without the use of vows, oaths, oracles, and sacrifices to procure good, or of deprecatory rites to avert evil, no man can or ever will find.

Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. ii. s 1.

DEPRE'CIATE, v. } Low Lat. Depreciare, minuere pretio; Fr. Déprizer. Du Cange: (de, and pretium, price or value.)
DEPRECIA'TION.
DEPRE'CIATORS.

To lower, lessen or diminish the price or value; to deny the price or value; to dis-esteem.

Lest those unintelligent maligners take an advantage from our discourse, to depreciate and detract from what hath been alway the object of their hate, because never of their knowledge, and capacities.

Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 24.

In the other parts of the book, we do often give an account, of the doctrine of the ancients: which however some over-severe philosophers may look upon fastidiously, or undervalue and depreciate, yet, as we conceived it often necessary, so possibly may the variety thereof not be ungrateful to others.—Cudworth. Intel. System, Pref. to the Reader.

Others are so unhappily attentive to party considerations or personal prejudices, that if a design, ever so valuable, comes from a wrong quarter, instead of being ambitious to share the merit and the honour of it, they set themselves immediately to depreciate it, and suggest mischievous intentions in it.—Secker, vol. v. Ser. 7.

This depreciation of their funds has not much the air of a nation lightening burthens and discharging debts.

Burke. On a late State of the Nation.

The depreciators of the Eucharist have maintained, among other strange and conceited opinions, that the prayers, hymns, and thanksgivings contained in our communion service have no real connection with the sacrament, which, according to them, consists merely of eating the bread, and drinking the wine, in commemoration of our Lord's death and passion.—Knox. Consideration on the Lord's Supper.

DE'PREDATE, v. } Fr. Dépréder; Lat. Depredari, atum, (de, and præda, prey, plunder.)
DEPREDA'TION.
DE'PREDATOR.
DEPREDA'TORY.
DE'PREDABLE.

To prey upon, plunder, pillage, despoil, ravage, waste or lay waste.

I have now a plentiful estate, external affluence; what if, at this moment I were bereft of all, either by fire or depredation, how were my mind fitted with humility and patience to submit to a poor, strait, wanting condition?

Hale. Cont. vol. i. Of Afflictions.

It is reported, that the shrub called our ladies seale, (which is a kind of briony,) and coleworts, set near together, one or both will die. The cause is, for they be both great depredatours of the earth, and one of them starveth the other.—Bacon. Naturall History, § 492.

The two precedent intend this, That the spirits and aire in their actions may be the lesse depredatory; and the two latter, that the blood and juice of the body may be the lesse depredable.—Id. History of Life and Death.

The juyce and succulencies of the body, are made lesse depredable, if either they be made more indurate, or more dewy, and oyly.—Id. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. iv. c. 2.

The visitors found, in some of the richest abbeys in England, as St. Alban's and Battel, such depredations made that at St. Alban's an abbot could not subsist any longer, the rents were so low.—Burnet. Hist. of Reformation, an. 1537.

Nevertheless, I shall, in this case, send my brother with a detachment of horse to harass Antony in his retreat, and to protect Italy from his depredations.

Melmoth. Cicero, b. xiv. Let. 9

The prostitution of praise for venal purposes, is a species of deception, which deserves to be ranked among the frauds of the vilest depredator on property.

Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 40.

They are a stout, well made, bold, warlike race of people redoubtable neighbours to both nations of the Koriacs, who often feel the effects of their depredatory incursions

Cook. Voyage, vol. vii. b. v. c. 7.

DEPRE'DICATE, v. } Lat. De, and prædi-
DEPRE'DICATING, n. } care, to attribute; (præ, and dicare, which Vossius says is the same as attribuere, ac præcipuè consecrare; perhaps, he adds, of the same origin as dicere.)

To proclaim, to commemorate.

The Hebrew which signifies to praise, or celebrate, or deprædicate, doth import no more, than hymnes or lauds; accordingly the singing them is (Mat. xxvi. 30,) expresst by ὑμνησαντες, having sung an hymn.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 1.

The negative flattery being as truly, though not so grosly such as the affirmative; the concealing of faults, as the deprædicating of vertues.—Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 294.

DEPREHE'ND. } Lat. Deprehendere, (de, DEPREHE'NSION. } pre, and hendere, used only in composition; A.S. Hent-an, to hunt, seize, catch.)

To catch or seize; to seize the intent or meaning; to discover; to detect.

In so moche as Cornelius Tacitus, an excellente oratour, historian, and lawyar, sayth, Surely in the bookes of Tulli, men maye deprehende that in hym lacked not the knowlege of geometrye, ne musyke, ne grammer, finally of no maner of arte that was honest.—Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. i. c. 14.

Yet hitherto the reliques of youre old lyfe are deprehended in you, you haue not yet all together caste of the olde manne.
Udal. James, c. 4

For that God is ready to forgive the greatest criminals if they repent, appears in the instances of Ahab and Manasses, of Mary Magdalen and S. Paul, of the thief on the cross and the deprehended adultress, and of the Jews themselves.
Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 9. s. 1.

—— And askt, what God hath been so rude,
(Sweet daughter) to chastise thee thus? as if thou wert pursude,
Euen to the act of some light sinne, and deprehended so.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

Her deprehension is made an aggravation of her shame: such is the corrupt judgment of the world: to do ill troubles not man; but to be taken in doing it.
Bp. Hall. Cont. The Woman taken in Adultery.

DEPRE'SS, v. } Lat. Deprimere, depressum;
DEPRE'SS. } to press down; de, and
DEPRE'SSION. } prem-ere, Vossius thinks, is DEPRE'SSIVE. } properly to lean against or lie upon any thing, cum pondere. See COMPRESS.

To press down; to thrust or squeeze down; to deject, to sink, to debase, to degrade.

The same houre, when this child was borne
Uenus direct, and contrarious
And depressed in Mercurius hous.
Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. 1.

And thã is the depression of the pole artentike beneath the orizont, yᵉ same quantity of space, neither more ne lesse.
Id. Of the Astrolabie.

Perceyuynge thus the tyrannye of synne,
That with hys weyght hath humbled and depreat
My pride; by gnawyng of the worme within,
That neuer dyeth, I lyue withouten rest.—Wyat, Ps. 38.

I meane not his materiall crosse that he himselfe dyed on, but a spirituall crosse which is aduersitie, tribulation, worldly depression, &c.—Frith. Workes, p. 5.

Close smother'd lay the low depressed fire
Whose after-issuing flames confounded all.
Daniel. Civil War, b. v.

He specifies very nicely that a ring that hath for a seal the figure of a man, if it be gibbous, or swelling out, is not itself lawful to be worn, but yet 'tis lawful to seal with it, because the impression in that case is hollow, not swelling out; and on the other side if the seal be depress, or hollow, 'tis lawful to wear, but not to seal with it.
Hammond. Works, vol. f. p. 250.

I speake to this effect; That they would forbear too much depressing of the clergy, either in their reputation or maintenance, in regard it was not impossible that their profession, now as high as ours once was, may fall to be as low as ours now is.—State Trials. Archbishop Laud, an. 1640.

Lambert, in great depression of spirit, twice pray'd him to let him escape, but when he saw he could not prevail, submitted as all the rest did except Okley, Axtel, and Cleer, who escaped.—Baker. Charles II. an. 1660.

The Gods with ease frail man depress or raise,
Exalt the lowly, or the proud debase.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xvi.

Should he [one born blind] draw his hand over a picture, where all is smooth and uniform, he would never be able to imagine how the several prominencies and depressions of a human body could be shewn on a plain piece of canvas, that has in it no unevenness or irregularity.—Spectator, No. 416.

—— May Liberty,
The light of life, the sun of human kind,
Whence heroes, bards, and patriots borrow flame,
Ev'n where the keen depressive north descends,
Still spread, exalt, and actuate your powers.
Thomson. Britannia.

An illustrious scene will open, in which the world and all its views, and pageantry, will be depressed; and heavenly truth shine out in all its splendour.
Gilpin, vol. i. Hints for Sermons, § 2.

DEPRI'SURE. "Fr. Despris—
Disesteem, disprisal, neglect, little regard, small respect, contempt or disdain of," (Cotgrave.) See DEPRECIATE.

Nor can any, upon consideration, expect less then a great abatement and deprisure of their souls in the account of God, when his pure sight beholds this protected impuritie.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, Treat. 6. s. 2.

DE'PRIMENT. Lat. Deprimens, pres. part. of Deprimere, to depress, (qv.)

Pressing down.

Partly by the equality of their strength; which is the case of the adducent and abducent muscles: partly by their peculiar origine, or the addition of the trochlea; which is the case of the oblique muscles: and partly by the natural posture of the body, and the eye; which is the case of the attollent and depriment muscles.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 2.

DEPRI'VE, v. } Fr. Priver; Sp. Privar;
DEPRI'VABLE. } It. Privare; Lat. Privare,
DEPRIVA'TION. } deprivare. See PRIVATE.
DEPRI'VEMENT. } To make our own private
DEPRI'VER. } and peculiar property, to ap-
DEPRI'VING, n. } propriate; and thus—

To take away, withdraw or withhold from another; to take away, bereave or despoil.

Almerck or Mountfort deprived was thare
& the tresorie, that he had in kepyng.—R. Brunne, p. 222.

Haue I the nat honoured all my liue,
As thou wel wotest, aboue the goddes all?
Why wilt thou me fro ioy thus depriue.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. iii.

To what end then pursued you the marriage? to no other end surely, but to advance and maintain the false and pretended title to the present possession of the crown of England, and for the attaining thereof, to practice the deprivation, death and destruction of the Queen's majesty. [Elizabeth.]
State Trials, an. 1571. Duke of Norfolk.

Love fleeth my hart, while fortune is depriuer
Of all my comfort.
Wyat. Of Loue, Fortune, and the Louer's Minde.

And on the tother syde, if, some saye be a good proofe, than the suspending wil be as long as a deprywing for euer.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 919.

If then violence, injury, terrour, and depriving of that which is more dear than life itself, liberty, be fit orators for affection, you may expect that I will be easily perswaded.
Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

Though perhaps we might escape the sword, yet would our life have been worse then death, not alone in respect of our wofull captivity, and bodily miseries, but most of all in respect of our Christian liberty, being to be deprived of all publique meanes of serving the true God.
Sir F. Drake. The World Encompassed, p. 101.

Mr. Pym, in a long form'd discourse, lamented the miserable state and condition of the kingdom, aggravated all the particulars which had been done amiss in the government, as done and contriv'd maliciously, and upon deliberation, to change the whole frame, and deprive the nation of all the liberty and property which was their birthright by the laws of the land.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. p. 171.

I might prosecute and draw down the histories of all the Spanish kings and kingdoms from his dayes till this present, which are fully fraught with presidents of this nature, to prove all the kings of Spaine inferiour to their kingdomes, assemblies of the estates, lawes, resistible, deprivable for their tyrannyes.—Prynne. Treachery & Disloyalty, pt. v. p. 75.

Why should I think a priest will not reveal confession? I am sure he will do any thing that is forbidden him, haply not so often as I. The utmost punishment is deprivation.
Selden. Table Talk. Confession.

God might freely have ordered the contrary, and they could no way have claimed it as a due, or a depriement of their right; it was no natural due that was the consequent of its being.—Goodwin. Works, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 115.

Scarce had he said, when on the mountain's brow,
We saw the giant-shepherd stalk before
His following flock, and leading to the shore.
A monstrous bulk, deform'd, depriv'd of sight,
His staff a trunk of pine, to guide his steps aright.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. iii.

We can sooner leave our place, and all our present outward enjoyments than leave that, which was the first ground of our wandering from our native country; nor are we thereby made such strangers thereunto, but we can rather chuse to return, and take our lot with our brethren, than abide here under the deprivement of the ends of our travels.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 215. App. to the Life.

And, in this business, these deprivers were so quick, and went so roundly to work, that they stayed not for the appearances of the priests to answer for themselves, nor sometimes so much as cited them to answer, but deprived them to rights without any more ado.
Strype. Memorials, an. 1553. Queen Mary.

Thus a punishment of this kind was inflicted on the rebellious Israelites. they were deprived of the extraordinary providence, and were yet held subject to the theocracy, as appears from the sentence pronounced upon them, by the mouth of the prophet Ezekiel.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. v. s. 4.

DEPU'DORATED. Lat. De, and pudor, shame.

Rendered shameless or void of shame.

Their [Atheists] minds are partly petrified and benummed into a kind of sottish and stupid insensibility, so that they are not able to discern things that are most evident; and partly depudorated or become so void of shame, as that though they do perceive, yet they will obstinately and impudently deny the plainest things.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 193.

DEPU'LSION. Lat. Depellere, depulsum, to drive away, (de and pellere, to drive; perhaps from Gr. Πελ-ειν, to move or remove.)

A driving away.

In the meane time (the errour or weaknesse of the Burgundian Dutchesse and her Perkin, suffering their enemy in this sort, to pursue for his owne security, and their depulsion) King Henry for farther assurance of himselfe makes a progress into Lancashire.
Speed. Hen. VII. b. ix. c. 20. s 38.

DEPU'RE, v. } Lat. De, and purus, from DE'PURATE, v. } Πυρ, fire; properly spoken of DE'PURATE, adj. } metals which are purified by DEPURA'TION. } fire. "Fr. Dépurer—
To purge, clear, purifie, clarifie," (Cotgrave.)

He shall fyrst bee well purged, and all the spottes & wrincles that thē remayn, shal be cleane burned out by the hote fyre of purgatory, or by other men's prayers and almes dede, and other suffrages of the churche doone for hym, be depured and clensed before that he shalbe layde vp for pure gold in the treasures of God.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 800.

We say, Spirits are where they operate: but strictly to be in a place, or ubi, is a material attribute, and incompatible with so depurate a nature.—Glanvill. Van. of Dogm. c. 11.

For all the excoctions and depurations of metalls it is a familiar error, that to advance excoction, they augment the heate of the fornace, or the quantity of the iniection.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. v. c. 1.

Or this manner of depuration and clarifying of it by a strainer, first doth enervate and cut as it were the sinews of the vigour and vertue, yea, and quench the native heat that it hath.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 603.

Recrements of the blood, whose seasonable expulsion is required to depurate the mass of blood and make it fit, both to circulate and to maintain the vital heat residing in the heart.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 104.

You will obtain together with the spirit of wine the spirit of soot, and also a very depurate oil, smelling like camphor.
Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 209.

This is requisite to be done only when, to master some stubborn disease, the medicine is to be exalted either to its supreme, or at least to some approaching degree of purity and efficacy; for otherwise so exquisite a depuration is not always necessary.—Id. Ib. p. 215.

Fast flows the liquor through the lead-lin'd spouts;
And depurated by opposing wires
In the receiver floats the limpid stream.
Grainger. The Sugar Cane, b. iii.

DEPU'TE, v. } The Fr. Député; It. Depu-
DEPUTA'TION. } tato; Sp. Deputado, are from DE'PUTATIVE. } the Barb. Lat. Deputare pro
DE'PUTY. } delegare. Rectius itaque, de-
DE'PUTISHIP. } legatos dixeris, quos vulgo deputatos vocant, (Junius.) And Vossius says, "They are rashly called deputies, who ought to be called delegates." And see Deputer, in Menage; and Deputati, in Du Cange.

To appoint, authorize or empower one or more to act for others.

Some old authors write debyty for deputy.

But for he maie not all hym one
In sondry places do iustice,
He shall of his riall office
With wise consideracion
Ordeine his deputacion.
Of suche iudges, as ben lerned,
So that his people be gouerned
By hem, that true ben and wise.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

Then sayde Absalom vnto hym: se, thy matter is good and ryghteous, and yet no manne is deputed of the kyng to heare the.—Bible, 1551. 2 Kings, c. 15.

Now is it profytable and good, that we take hede, make search thereafter, and consydre, not only what hath happened vnto vs of olde: but the shamefull, vnhonest, and noysome thynges, that the debytyes haue now taken in hande before our eyes.—Id. Esther, c. 16.

And yet he wyll be named like the lamb, and Christes deputie or vicar, and wyll haue all power as Christ hathe bothe in heauen and in earthe.—Udal. Reuelacion, c. 13.

I then delivered him the six broad pieces, and telling him, that I was deputed to blushe on your behalfe for the meannesse of the present &c. but he took me off, and said, he thanked you for it, and accepted it as a token of your kindnesse.—Marvell. Works, vol. i. p. 211.

Some few days after the Parliament was holden at Westminster begun by a deputative commission granted by the Queen to the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Treasurer, and the Earl of Derby, and that not without former precedents.—Camden. Queen Elizabeth, an. 1586.

And with a velle the iudge's eyes were hid,
Who should not see the partie but the cause:
God's deputies, which his tribunall reare,
Should have a patient, not a partiall eare.
Sterling. A Parænesis to Prince Henry.

This earle of Bedford as ambassador from the Queene of England, was sent to the Queene of Scots by waie of deputiship to present the person of his mistress.
Holinshed. History of Scotland, an. 1585.

The assembling of persons, deputed from people at great distances one from another, is trouble to them that are sent, and charge to them that send.
Sir W. Temple. Original and Nature of Government.

We see others also in regard to their designment and deputation to offices of power and dignity, although indeed subordinate and inferior to those he received, to be entitled to be the sons of God.—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser 21.

Our Saviour pleads our cause, and manages our affairs there; and the Holy Spirit, as his deputy and vicegerent, doth it here.—Sharp, vol. v. Dis. 2.

He thinks he believes, because he is pleased to take certain points of trust, and to be sure that sōmething is right, of which he himself knows nothing, because another, whom he deputes to think for him, tells him that it is so.
Hoadly. Works, vol. iii. Ser. 2.

When I was at Apamea, some of the principal inhabitants of several different cities, complained to me of the excessive appointments that were decreed to their deputies; assuring me that their respective communities were by no means in a condition to support the assessments levied upon them for that purpose.—Melmoth. Cicero, b. iv. Let. 11.

DEQUA'CE, v. Mr. Tyrwhitt says, To shake down, as if from the Lat. Quatere, to shake. The A.S. Cwys-an, to quash, to crush, to bruise, to squeeze, seems to offer a more satisfactory etymology. Skinner says, q. Dequash. See QUASH.

And thus with sleight shalte thou surmount and dequace the yuel in their heartes.—Chaucer. Test. of Love, b. i.

Wherefore (as I sayd) with reason I think, thilk foresaid errours to distroy and dequace.—Id. Ib.

DEQUA'NTITATE, v. See QUANTITY; and the example from Beattie.

This we affirm of pure gold: for that which is current, and passeth in stamp amongst us, by reason of its allay, which is a proportion of silver or copper mixed therewith, is actually dequantitated by fire, and possibly by frequent extinction.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c 5.

Brown has words still more extraordinary, as feriation, for keeping holiday, dedentition for falling of teeth, dequantitate for diminish.
Beattie. Elements of Moral Science, pt. v. c. 1. s. 3.

DERA'CINATE, v. Fr. Racine, a root; Lat. Radix, iris; radicina, racine. See Menage.
To root up, tear or cut up by the roots.

——— Frights, changes, horrors
Diuert, and cracke, rend and deracinate
The vnity, and married calme of states
Quite from their fixure.
Shakespeare. Troyl. & Cress. Act i. sc. 3.

——— Her hedges euen pleach'd,
Like prisoners wildly ouer-growne with hayre,
Put forth disorder'd twigs: her fallow leas,
The darnell, hemlock, and ranke femetary,
Doth root vpon; while that the culter rusts,
That should deracinate such sauagery
Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act v. sc 2.

DERA'NGE, v. } See ARRANGE, and DISARDERA'NGEMENT. } RANGE. The word is modern; though Cotgrave uses deranged in interpreting the French part. desrangé.

"Fr. Desranger,—to disrank, disarray, disorder, to thrust out of his rank, put out of array; turn out of order."

Whether the expence [fine apparel] great as it is, be the greatest evil; but whether this folly may not produce many other follies, an entire derangement of domestic life, absurd manners, neglect of duties, bad mothers, a general corruption of both sexes?—Berkeley. The Querist.

A casual blow, or a sudden fall, deranges some of our internal parts; and the rest of life is distress and misery.
Blair, vol. iv. Ser. 18.

Both these kinds of monopolies derange more or less the natural distribution of the stock of the society; but they do not always derange it in the same way.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv c 7.

It is in the highest degree improbable, and I know not, indeed, whether it hath ever been the fact, that the same derangement of the mental organs should seize different persons at the same time: a derangement, I mean, so much the same, as to represent to their imagination the same objects.
Paley. Evidences, vol. i. c. 1. Prop. 2.

DERE. See DEAR.

DE'RELICT, v. } Lat. Derelinquere, dere-
DE'RELICT, adj. } lictum, to forsake, to aban-
DERELI'CTION. } don, (de, re, and linquere, to leave.)
Forsaken, abandoned, deserted, left destitute.

And therefore the affections, which these exposed or derelict children bear to their mothers, have no grounds of nature or assiduity, but civility and opinion
Bp. Taylor. Great Exemplar, pt. i Dis. 1.

And however such symbolical intimations receive their efficacy from the fancy of the contriver, yet here, whether this apparition [the dove] did intend any such morall representment or no, it is certain that wherever the Holy Spirit does dwell, there also peace and sanctity, meekness and charity, a mortified will, and an active dereliction of our desires do inhabite.—Id. Ib. pt. i. s. 9 Ad.

The state of idolaters is two ways miserable. First, in that which they worship they finde no succour, and secondly, at his hands whom they ought to serue, there is no other thing to be looked for, but the effects of most iust displeasure, the withdrawing of grace, derelicion in this world, and in the world to come confusion.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 17.

You must mean, without an explicite and particular repentance, and derelection of their errors.
Chillingworth. Rel of Prot. Answer to the Pref

When I am a little disposed to a gay turn of thinking, I consider, as I was a derelict from my cradle, I have the honour of a lawful claim to the best protection in Europe.
Savage. The Wanderer, c. 5. Note.

It was one of those subtile artifices of Julian the Apostate, to mingle the images of the heathen Gods with those of the emperors, that the doing reverence (as the Christians were commanded) to all together, might imply a derelection and renouncing of their religion, and their simplicity seem impiety —Bates. Eternal Judgment, c. 5.

As those who joined with them in manning the vessels were the most directly opposite to his [Lord Chatham] opinions, measures, and character, and far the most artful and most powerful of the set, they easily prevailed, so as to seize upon the vacant, unoccupied, and derelict minds of his friends; and instantly they turned the vessel wholly out of the course of his policy.—Burke. On American Taxation.

It [this holy sacrament] is a professed derelection of former evil habits; a solemn return, on our part, to God and virtue, under the firm trust that God will, through Jesus Christ, show mercy to the frailties of the penitent.
Blair, vol. iii. Ser. 15.

DERI'DE, v. } It. Deridere; Lat. Deridere,
DERI'DER. } (de, and ridere, to laugh.)
DERI'DINGLY. } To laugh at; to mock or
DERI'SION. } make a mockery of; to jeer,
DERI'SIVE. } to scorn, to treat scornfully or
DERI'SIVELY. } jeeringly.
DERI'SORY. }

As in al tymes haue the tyranis derided the Godly, whyls they pacietly waited for God's helpe.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 3.

But nowe they that are myne inferyours and younger than I, haue me in derision; yea, euen they whose fathers I would haue thoughte scorne to haue set with the dogges of my cattell.—Bible, 1551. Job, c. 30.

And in the same epistle deridingthe commendeth them, as wise men, that had rather lose their faith than their flocke.
Fox. Martyrs, p 635. Council of Basill

But loe, the Gods, that mortall follies view,
Did worthilie revenge this maiden's pride;
And nought regarding her so goodly hew,
Did laugh at her, that many did deride
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi c. 7.

If Moses had told the Israelites, that Nilus had been a river of Paradise, they might justly have thought that he had derided them.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. i. c. 3. s. 14.

When Diogenes fell into the school of the Stoicks; he answers his deriders, with this question: Why, do you laugh at me for falling backward, when you yourselves do retrograde your lives?—Feltham, pt i. Res. 8.

——— And now and then
A tear or two, as in derision of
The toughness of his rugged temper, would Fall on his hollow cheeks, which but once felt,
A sudden flash of fury did dry up.
Massinger. The Unnatural Combat, Act. II. sc. 1.

The Persians [were] thence called Magusæi derisively by other ethnicks.—Sir T. Herbert. Travels, p. 243.

Mr. Richard Cromwel, besides other reproachful language, asking him in a deriding manner, whether he would have him prefer none but those that were Godly? "Here, continued he, is Dick Ingoldsby, who can neither pray nor preach, and yet I will trust him before ye all."
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. ii. p. 171

Of all sorts of sinners, there is the least hopes of a prophane derider and scoffer at religion other men may do as bad things, but they have something left within them which may in time reclaim them; but these cast off the very means of reforming them.—Stillingfleet, vol iii. Ser. 1.

The appellation of esquire is the most notoriously abused in this kind of any class amongst men, insomuch that it is become almost the subject of derision.—Tatler, No. 19.

Meantime, o'er all the dome, they quaff, they feast,
Derisive taunts were spread from guest to guest,
And each in jovial mood his mate addrest.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. ii.

The comick or derisory manner, is further still from making show of method.
Shaftesbury. Advice to an Author, pt. ii. s. 2.

Like the rake of antiquity, who mingled in the audience of a philosopher, with a design to ridicule him, but who was made a convert before his departure, many of the loose and profligate votaries of vice have been enticed by the music, afterwards reformed by the sermon, which they intended to slight, and perhaps had begun to deride.—Knox. Ess. No. 149.

British policy is brought into derision in those nations, that a while ago trembled at the power of our arms, whilst they looked up with confidence to the equity, firmness, and candour, which shone in all our negotiations.
Burke. On the Present Discontents.

DERI'VE, v. } Fr. Dériver; Sp. Derivar;
DERI'VABLE. } It. Derivare; Lat. Deri- DERIVA'TION. } vare, (de, and rivus, from DERI'VATIVE, adj. } Ῥε-ειν, to flow.) See the DERI'VATIVE, s. } quotation from Holland's
DERI'VATIVELY. } Livy.
DERI'VEMENT. }
DERI'VER. }
DERI'VING, s. }

To flow, or cause to flow from, or deflow; to flow down, to descend; to have the source or origin from, to rise or spring from; to take, draw or deduce the source or origin from; generally, to draw, to draw down, to drain, to deduce or educe. Also, to flow, to diffuse.

Wel may men knowen, but if he be a fool,
That every part deriveth from his hool.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 3008.

So through the ryghteousnes of one, which is derived into all suche as beleue and submitte themselfe vnto the kyngdome of lyfe, are all men of God made righteous and partakers of the kyngdome of lyfe.—Udal. Romaines, c. 5.

Then went hee on still, and shewed what was the solemne and right manner of deriving the water.
Holland. Livy, p. 190.

Ne henceforth be rebellious vnto loue,
That is the crowne of knighthood, and the band
Of noble minds derived from aboue:
Which being knit with virtue neuer will remoue.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 6.

Nay, rather, how should those works which are constant and ordinary, and so consequently derivable to all successions to the end of the world, be imposed upon a mere extraordinary agent.
Bp. Hall. Episcopacy by Divine Right, pt. ii. s. 6.

But this kind of writing, which seems to be reformed, which is, that writing should be consonant to speaking, is a branch of unprofitable subtelties; for pronunciation it selfe every day encreases and alters the fashion; and the derivation of words, especially from forrain languages, are utterly defac'd and extinguish't.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. vi. c. 5.

But created beings have but a derivative participation hereof [truth], their understandings being obscure, and they erring in many things, and being ignorant of more.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 720.

If therefore any humane constitution, as such, can bind the conscience, it must be of such instances which either are derivatives from the law of nature, or of things which before the law did bind at all, that is, of things which in their own nature are indifferent.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 1.

It is certain, and affirmed by all antiquity upon many grounds of Scripture, That Adam sinned, and his sin was personally his, but derivatively ours; that is, it did great hurt to us, to our bodies directly, to our soules indirectly and accidentally.—Id. On Repentance, c. 7. s. 1.

For our experiments are onely such as do ever ascend a degree to the deriving of causes and extracting of axiomes.
Bacon. Naturall History, §. 176.

I offer these derivements from these subjects, to raise our affections upward.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 4. s. 4.

These grounds have not any patent passages, whereby to derive water and fatness from the river.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 408.

Resume your ancient care; and if the God
Your sire, and you, resolve on foreign blood:
Know all are foreign, in a larger sense,
Not born your subjects, or deriv'd from hence.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. vii.

I might add to all the past dissuasives, the ill repute that curses gain a man amongst the most scrupulous and precise sort of people, who, judging of the greatness of the vice by the smallness of the advantage that is derivable from it, will hardly believe him to be the owner of much piety, that will slight it upon so little a temptation.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 32.

Derivation [of humours] is always made in the remove parts, and according to the rectitude of the vessels, either by opening a vein by lancet, or by the application of leeches, &c.—Wiseman. Surgery, b. ii. c. 1.

The Scripture, in declaring the Son's derivation from the Father, never makes mention of any limitation of time; but always supposes and affirms him to have existed with the Father from the beginning and before all worlds.
Clarke. On the Trinity, pt. ii. s. 15.

But I think the words should rather be rendered, the antientest of all derivative beings, for so the word [Ἀνωτερικὸν] may be understood in a larger sense.—Id. Ib. s. 14.

Such an one to be sure, it is that makes a man, not only (according to the Apostle's phrase) a partner of other men's sins, but also a deriver of the whole entire guilt of them to himself: and yet so, as to leave the committer of them as full of guilt as he was before.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 6.

If they mean that a contempt of these miracles, which they would persuade us to believe, would necessarily derive the same contempt on history itself, all experience has shown the contrary; for though there have been doubters and contemners of such miracles in all ages, yet history has maintained its grounds through them all.
Middleton. An Enquiry into the Miraculous Powers, &c.

The Apostle, in the preceding verse, had warned Timothy against giving heed to fables and endless genealogies, meaning by genealogies, the derivation of angelic and spiritual natures according to a fantastic system, invented by the oriental philosophers, and thence adopted by some of the Grecian sects.—Hurd, vol. vi. Ser. 8.

Since the disciples of this new and great high priest become righteous in him, and are by the spirit conformed to his image, the character which essentially and inherently belongs only to him, will derivatively belong to them also, who must follow his steps below, if they would reign with him above.—Horne. Commentary on Psalm 15.

DERN, adj. } A. S. Dyrran, occultare, to DE'RNFUL. } hide, to conceal, to secrete. See
DE'RNFULLY. } DARN.

Hidden, secreted, concealed. Used, consequentially,—

Solitary, lonely, sad, dismal, melancholy, mournful, lamentable.

Tho he hadde the kyng in priuete al clene at ys wille,
Elre, he seide of derne cas ich wol the warre stille.
R. Gloucester, p. 114.

Tho thys holy man ymartred was, hii, that hym ther brogte to,
By thogte how hii mygte best myd the holy body do.
Hii porueyde an derne stude, & ther inne yt caste,
Vyliyche & stylleiyche, & bured yt ther vaste.—Id. p. 289.

For that derne dede, do no man sholde
Bot wedded men with wyves, as holy writ telleth.
Piers Ploughman, p. 181.

And also Dominikes dedes weren dernelich yvsed.
Id. Crede.

Ye mosten be ful derne as in this cas.
Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3207.

For loue is of him selfe so derne.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Gow. By many a dearn and painful perch
Of Pericles the careful search
Is made. Shakespeare. Pericles, Act iii. Chorus.

—— Next stroke him should haue slaine
Had not the lady which by him stood bound
Dernely vnto her called to abstaine,
From doing him to dye.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 12.

At last, as chaunc't them by a forest side
To pass, (for succour from the scorching ray)
They heard a rueful voice, that dearnly cride
With piercing shrieks, and many a dolefull lay.
Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 1.

Long they thus trauelled in friendly wise,
Through countries waste and eke well edyfide,
Seeking adventures hard, to exercise
Their puissance, whylome full dernly tride.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 1.

—— Unweetingly dismay'd,
A cold foreboding impulse thrills his breast:
And who but Kathrin now is dearnly fray'd
When entering in she kens the stranger guest.
Mickle. Syr Martyn, c. 2.

DE'ROGATE, v. } Lat. Derogare, atum; (de, and rogare, from Gr. Ὀρέγειν, to stretch, to reach after; and thus, to seek, to ask, to demand.) Rogare legem proferre, abrogare cum tollitur, derogare, si pars tollatur, (Vossius.) See ARROGATE. And Festus,—Derogare, proprié est, cum quid ex lege vetere, quo minus fiat, sancitur lege novâ. Derogare ergo detrahere est.—To derogate, then, is—
DE'ROGATE, adj.
DE'ROGATELY.
DEROGA'TION.
DERO'GATIVE.
DERO'GATORY.
DERO'GATORILY.

To take or detract, (sc.) from any thing established by law or otherwise; to deduct from, lessen or diminish the authority, the reputation; to degrade, disparage, debase.

And neither willeth he, nor may not doe any thinge including repugnaunce, imperfection, or that should derogate, minish or hurt his glory & his name.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1121.

The Cardinall of Wincheester, whiche at this time would haue no man to hym egall, commaunded the Duke of Bedforde to leaue of the name of Regent, duryng the tyme that the kyng was in Fraunce: affirmyng the chief ruler beyng in presence, the authoritie of the substitute was clerely derogate.—Hall. Hen. VI. an. 10.

Than ye stryfe was renewed, which Lamfranke before, as ye haue harde in the iii. chapitre of Wyllyam Conqueroure, dyd appease, & was brought i argumēt before the Pope, the whiche, at the Kynges request, promysed yt he wolde nothynge do nor ordeyn yt shulde be derogacion to the Archebyshop of Canterbury, or to the dygnytie of his churche.
Fabyan, vol. i. c. 228.

Oft (that he thus the world may more amaze)
Weake instruments worke wonderfull effects:
That, due to him, none may usurpe one thought,
Nor from his glory derogate in ought.—Stirling. Jonathan.

Into her wombe conuey sterrility,
Drie up in her the organs of increase,
And from her derogate body, neuer spring
A babe to honor her.—Shakespeare. Lear, Act i. sc. 4.

—— More laught at, that I should
Once name you derogately: when to sound your name
It not concern'd me.—Id. Antony & Cleopatra, Act ii. sc. 2.

There is none so much carried with a corrupt mind, nor so enuious of his countries honour, nor so bent against you, that he will derogate the praise and honour due to so worthie an enterprise.—Holinshed. Ireland, Ep. Ded. by Hooker.

The last week I heard of a play the Jesuits of Antwerp made, in derogation, or rather in derision of the proceedings of the Prince Palsgrave.—Howell, b. i. s. 2. Let. 16.

It may rationally be presumed, that I had been a very senseless fool, if ever I had been for promoting such an authority and interest over me, as levelled all, and was so totally destructive to all that differenced myself and other noblemen, from their own vassals, which many say I was too earnest in, yea, it being absurdly derogative to all true nobility.—State Trials. The Marquis of Argyle, an. 1661.

Nor have my actions been derogatory,
Unto my clients profit, or the glory
Of this renowned court, and therefore I
Now humbly beg to be at liberty.
Brome. To the Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench.

He was of a high rough spirit, and spake derogatorily of Sir Amias Paulet.
Aubrey. Of Cardinal Wolsey, Anec. 2. p. 187.

There is no room therefore to object, that we derogate from the majesty of the Father; seeing that whatever majesty we shall ascribe to the Son must all redound to the magnifying of the power of him, who begat a Son of such divinity and majesty.—Clarke. On the Trinity, pt. ii. s. 45.

I hope it is no derogation to the Christian religion, to say that the fundamentals of it, i. e. all that is necessary to be believed in it by all men, is easy to be understood by all men.—Locke. Of the Reasonableness of Christianity, &c.

So vain are the cavils of those who say, we have nothing but meer probabilities for our faith, and do interpret that manner of proof which matters of fact are capable of, in a sense derogatory to the firmness of our Christian faith.
Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 5.

Let no one imagine that in the religious part of this character there is any thing which casts over it a gloomy shade, or derogates from that esteem which men are generally disposed to yield to exemplary virtues.—Blair, vol. iii. ser. 1.

False: because their breviaries and litanies shew, that they supplicate the saints to befriend them by their own inherent power, or to intercede for them to the throne of God by virtue of their own personal merits, in blasphemous derogation to the all-atoning and incommunicable intercession of Jesus.—Hurd, vol. v. Ser. 11.

DE'RRING, in Spenser, seems plainly to mean Daring.

So from immortal race he does proceed
That mortall hands may not withstand his might,
Drad for his derring doe and bloudy deed;
For all in bloud and spoile is his delight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 4.

One day, when all the troupe of warlike wooers
Assembled were, to weet whose she should bee;
All mightie men, and dreadful derring doers
(The harder it to make them well agree)
Amongst them all this end he did decree.—Id. Ib. b. iv.

From thence I durst in derring to compare
With shepheards swaine, whatever fed in field.
Id. Shepheard's Calendar. December.

DE'SCANT, v. } Fr. Deschanter; It. Biscantare; Sp. Discantar.—Descant, Archdeacon Nares says, is now called variation in musick; and the subject varied was called the plain song or ground. The word is formed upon the Lat. Cantare, to sing or chant. (See CHANT.) As generally applied—
DE'SCANT, n.
DESCA'NTING, n.

To touch or treat upon, to discourse upon various topics, different heads or divisions of a subject. To discourse, make remarks or observations.

And with wresting of Scripture vnto their owne purpose, contrary vnto the processe, order, and meaning of the text, [they] would so delude them in deskanting vpon it with allegoryes, and amase them, expounding it in many sences layed before the vnlearned laye people, that though thou felt in thy heart, and were sure that all were false that they sayd, yet couldest thou not solue their subtile ryddells.
Tyndall. Works. Life.

In somuch that twenty doctours expounde one text xx. wayes, as children make descant vpon playne song.
Id. Ib. p. 168.

For, otherwise, it had been very unequally provided that upon the descanting and flourishes of affected speeches, a man's life should be brought into danger and extremity.
State Trials. Edmund Campion, an. 1581.

Once; when this match was at a point,
They, merrily disposed,
Did descant what from vulgar tongues
Thereof would be supposed.
Warner. Albion's England, b. vi. c. 29.

So I at each sad strain will strain a tear,
And with deep groans the diapason bear;
For burthen-wise I'll hum on Tarquin still,
While thou on Tereus descant'st, better skill.
Shakespeare. Rape of Lucrece.

Audi. Lingua, thou strikest too much upon one string. Thy tedious plain-song grates my tender ears.
Lin. 'Tis plain indeed, for truth no descant needs.
Brewer. Lingua, Act i. sc. 1

I soon discovered the malady, and descanted on the nature of it, till I convinc'd both the patient and his nurse, that the spleen is not to be cured by medicine, but by poetry.
Tatler, No. 47.

Let every sober, humble, and discreet Christian therefore be advised to dread all tampering with the mysteries of our faith, either by any new, and unwarrantable explications of them, or descants upon them.—South, vol. iii. Ser. 6.

The scene is so fatally altered, that I can scarce restrain myself from giving vent to a just indignation, in severe complaints: but an historian must tell things truly as they are, and leave the descanting on them to others.
Burnet. Own Time, an. 1713.

While fields of pleasantry amuse us there,
With merry descants on a nation's woe.
Cowper. The Task, b. iv.

——— For know the lively scene,
That you still more enliven, to my soul
Darts inspiration, and impels the song
To roll in bolder descant.—Mason. English Garden, b. ii.

DESCE'ND, v.
DESCE'NDANT, or DESCE'NDENT, n.
DESCE'NDIBLE.
DESCENDIBI'LITY.
DESCE'NDING, n.
DESCE'NSION.
DESCE'NSIONAL.
DESCE'NSORY.
DESCE'NT.

Fr. Désendre; Sp. Descender; It. Discendere; Lat. Descendere, (de, and scandere, to climb.)

To climb down; generally, to come or go down; to fall or drop down; to move or go from higher to lower, on a slope, to or towards the bottom.

To move or flow downwards; to be derived or deduced from; to follow in succession of time, (sc.) from generation to generation.

Descendent, though from descendens, is not uncommonly written -ent.

Gour wrath him forgyue, the trespas to amend,
In pes with gow to lyue, & at gour consell descend.
R. Brunne, p. 134.

Alle that Leulyn held lond and tenement,
Holy to haf the scheld thorgh heritage descend.
Id. p. 243.

And sythen his blessed body was in a stone byried
And descended a doun to the derk helle.
Piers Ploughman. Crede.

For swifter course cometh thing yt is of wight
When it discendeth than don thingis light.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. ii.

Ransake yet we would if we might
Of this worde the true orthographie
The verie discent of ethimologie.—Id. "Remedie of Loue.

And sondry vessels made of earthe and glas,
Our urinales, and our descensories,
Viols, croslettes, and sublimatories.
Id. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,260.

To be briefe, where it is sayde: he ascended, doth it not consequently folowe, that he before descended? And there is no descension but from aboue: so that the descencion is before, and the ascension after.—Udal. Ephesians, c. 4.

This descending of the heuenly citie Jerusalem or holy Chrysten churche signifieth the comon felowshyp and participacion of the churche triumphant that reygnyth in victory, with the churche mylytant, that contyneweth and remaineth in battel and warefare.—Id. Reuelacion, c. 21.

Therefore it shall not bee farre from our purpose to examine the first originall of these blacke men, and howe by a lineall discent they haue hitherto continued thus blacke.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 52.

At length, when most in perrill it was brought
Two angels downe descending with swift flight,
Out of the swelling streame it lightly caught,
And twixt their blessed armes it carried quight,
Aboue the reach of any liuing sight.
Spenser. The Ruins of Time.

If there had been yet an absolute necessity of visible intellectual creatures, to be participants of his goodness, and the active instruments of his glory: the same power that created men at first, could have created a new generation of men, that might have supplied the defection of our first parents and their descendants.
Hale. Cont. Of the Knowledge of Christ Crucified.

Against these descendents the church doth not press the canon-law, though against the former sort it did, and had just cause given so to doe.
Hammond. Works, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 593.

There shall your lordshipe also find us to insist upon lawe not inflicting penalties upon offenders, in malas prohibitis, but laws declarative or positive, conferring or confirming, ipso facto, an inherent right and interest of liberty and freedom in the subjects of this realm, and as their birth rights and inheritance descendable to their heirs and posterity.
State Trials. Liberty of the Subject, an. 1628.

So pure an innocent as that same lambe,
She was in life and euery vertuous lore,
And by descent from royall lineage came
Of ancient kings and queens.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 1.

So growing great through arrogant delight,
Of th' high descent, whereof he was yborne,
And through presumption of his matchlesse might
All other powres and knighthood he did scorne.
Id. Ib. b. i. c. 7.

Of these kind of men are the civil officers of this government generally composed, being descended of families who have many times been constantly in the magistracy of their native towns for many years, and some for several ages.
Sir W. Temple. On the United Provinces, c. 4.

But the torrent was too strong to be resisted by any direct strength he could raise against it, and therefore he resolv'd to endeavour to divide and reduce them by the most gracious descending to their pretended fears and apprehensions.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. p. 370.

We hear these accents in an awful sound:
Ye valiant sons of Troy, the land that bore
Your mighty ancestors to fight before,
Once more their great descendants shall embrace.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. iii.

Which was, from the beginning, a very plain declaration, that God did not principally intend his promise, to take place in Abraham's descendents according to the flesh, but in those who, by a faith or fidelity like his, were in a truer and higher sense the children and followers of that great father of the faithful.—Clarke. On the Evidences, Prop. 14.

As every motion is bounded with two periods and terms; the one relinquished, the other to be acquired by it, so in Christ's descension we are to consider both the place from which it did commence, and the place to which it did proceed. The place from whence, we are told, was heaven.
South, vol. viii. Ser. 1.

Muse, raise thy voice to Beaufort's spotless fame,
To Beaufort, in a long descent derived
From royal ancestry, of kingly rights
Faithfull asserters. J. Philips. Cider, b. i.

I ask by what natural sagacity did the patriarch foresee that Shem's family, rather than any branch of the other two, should retain the knowledge and worship of Jehovah? that the condition of slavery should be fixed upon a particular branch of Ham's descendants.
Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 17.

Or lastly, whether it only means that, in general, those who take by the name of heirs, must take in the capacity of heirs, that is by descent, and consequently, that their ancestor must have a descendible estate.
Sir W. Jones. Commentary on Isæus.

And therefore, as the English laws still remained in force, he must necessarily take the crown subject to those laws, and with all its inherent properties; the first and principal of which was its descendibility.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 3.

The united provinces having ordered public prayer to God, when they feared that the French and English fleets would make a descent upon their coasts, it came to pass, that when these fleets only waited for the tide to land their smaller vessels, it was retarded, contrary to its usual course, for twelve hours.—Jortin. Remarks on Eccles. History.

DESCRI'BE, v.
DESCRI'BABLE.
DESCRI'BER.
DESCRI'PTION.
DESCRI'PTIVE.

Written by old writers, Descrive. It. Descrivere; Sp. Describir; Lat. Describere, (de, and scribere, to write, to grave.)

To write, to mark out, to trace out, to delineate, to depicture; to define, trace or mark out the boundaries; to present or represent the likeness or similarity.

The this August hadde y be emperour two & fourti ger,
He let make a descriuing, that ymad nas neuer er.
R. Gloucester, p. 60.

Thanne cam Coveteyse ich can nat hym discryve
So hongerliche and so holwe.—Piers Ploughman, p. 97.

And it was don in tho dayes, a maundement wente out fro the Emperour August, that al the worlde schuide be discryued [describi] This first discryuyng [descriptio] was mad of Cyryn Justise of Syrye.—Wiclif. Luk, c. 2.

Who could tell all or fully discrive
His wo, his plaint, his langour, and his pine:
Nat all the men that han or been on liue.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. v.

Now to the temple of Diane the chaste
As shortly as I can I wol me haste,
To telien you of the descriptioun.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2055.

And the mē departed & walked thorow the lande, and described it by cities into seuen parts in a boke.
Bible, 1551. Joshua, c. 23.

Diligence also must be used in keepyng truly the order of tyme; and describyng lyuely both the site of places and nature of persons, not only for the outward shape of the body, but also for the inward disposition of the mynde.
Ascham. Discourse of Germany.

The describers of yᵗ primatiue church, Egesippus & Eusebius, maketh no maner of mencion of that prestysh vowe of yours.—Bale. Apology, fol. 18.

And when they be ashamed of all theyr workes, then shewe theym the fourme and fashyon of the temple: the commynge in, the goynge oute, all the maner and descripcyon thereof.—Bible, 1551. Ezechiel, c. 43.

How shall fraile pen discrive her heauenly face
For feare through want of skill her beautie to disgrace.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 3.

Yet indeed the ignorance, growing from distance of place allows not such liberty to a describer, as that which ariseth from the remedilesa oblivion of consuming time.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. ii. c. 23.

By strange descriptions mystically showne,
He figur'd forth the state of every age.
Sterling. Doomes-day. Eighth Houre.

In all which description there is no one passage which does not speak something extraordinary and supernatural of the person described, and withal represent the describer [Isaiah] of it in the highest degree of extasy and rapture.
South, vol. iii. Ser. 9.

Keill has reckoned up, in the human body, four hundred and forty-six muscles, dissectible and describable; and hath assigned a use to every one of the number.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 9.

Here then the Muse, tho' perfect beauty towers
Above the reach of her descriptive powers,
Yet will she strive some leading rules to draw
From sovereign nature's universal law.
Sir J. Reynolds. Art of Painting, v. 92.

DESCRY', v.
DESCRY', n.
DESCRI'ER.
DESCRY'ING, n.

Dut. Schreyer, Ger. Schreier; Sw. Skria, to cry out, to vociferate. A. S. Schrewing, a crying out, a shrieking. Skry, Scotch, is of common occurrence in G. Douglas; and the Glossarist says, "The word is frequently used on the Scottish border for cry: as to skry a fair; to proclaim it." The Fr. Descrier, décrier, is applied as the Eng. Decry, i. e. to cry down. (See ASCRY.) Skinner says, Descry is, in common speech, merely to detect; properly, to detect, discover or make known by a loud cry; a cry of joy or encouragement. Such for instance as the Italiam, Italiam, of the comrades of Æneas; and The Sea, The Sea, of the soldiers of Xenophon, (Anab. lib. iv.) And thus, generally, to descry, is—

To act as scout, as spy, (watching the enemy, for instance, and crying or proclaiming their approach;) to spy into, investigate or examine, detect or discover.

Thus yourselfe your counsail may descrie,
Make priuy to your deling as few as ye may,
For lit. may kepe counsel if twain be away.
Chaucer. Balade. Secretnesse.

Their spiale in the meane time discrying from the top of an high mountaine the Duke of Austria, the King of Bohemia, the Patriarch of Aquilea, the Duke of Carinthia, and (as some report,) the Earle of Baden, with a mightie power, and in battell aray, approaching towards them, that accursed crew immediately vanished.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 21.

——— Others from dawning hills
Look'd round, and scouts each coast light armed scoure,
Each quarter to descrie the distant foe,
Where lodg'd, or whither fled; or if for fight,
In motion or in alt.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

O yes! if any happy eye
This roving wanton shall descry,
Let the finder surely know,
Mine is the wag; 'tis I that owe
The winged wand'rer, and that none
May think his labour vainly gone,
The glad descrier shall not miss
To taste the nectar of a kiss
From Venus' lips.—Crashaw. Cupid's Crier.

Edg. But by your fauour:
How neere's the other army?
Gent. Neere, and on speedy foot: the maine descry
Stands on the hourely thought.
Shakespeare. King Lear, Act iv. sc. 6.

Antonius caused to be fortified with bastillons, one placed so neere to another, as trumpets being appointed in each of them, the sound might be heard betwixt to warne one another vpon the first descrieng of the enimies approach.
Holinshed. History of Scotland. Donald.

Lucullus took one of the greatest of them [boats], put it in a cart, and so carried it to the sea, and there put as many souldiers in her as she could well carry, who by night entered into the city, the skout of the enemies never discrying them.
North. Plutarch, p. 426.

Through this we pass, and round the tow'r from whence
With unavailing arms the Trojans make defence.
From this the trembling king had oft descry'd
The Grecian camp, and saw their navy ride.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. ii.

For now, saith he, we know only in part, and we prophecy in part. Now we see through a glass darkly, as [ἐν αἰνίγματι] through a descrying glass, which makes some small and imperfect discovery of things at a great distance.
Clarke, vol. i. Ser. 113.

As one, descrying in the woodland heights
A dreadful serpent, at the sight recoils,
His limbs quake under him, his ruddy cheeks
Turn deadly pale, he flies, he disappears.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. iii.

DE'SECRATE, v. } Fr. Désacrer, to un-
DESECRA'TION. } hallow. Lat. Desecratus, unhallowed, profaned. See CONSECRATE.

For it cannot with decency be imagined, that the most holy vessel, which was once consecrated to be a receptacle of the Deity, should afterwards be desecrated and prophaned by human use.—Bp. Bull, vol. i. Ser. 4.

When animosities break forth, and contentions are raised in the church, "fire is cast into the sanctuary," when the soul sinks under a temptation, the dwelling-place of God's name is desecrated to the ground.
Horne. On the Psalms, Ps. 74.

Having with great concern, observed that various profanations of the sabbath have of late years been evidently gaining ground among us, so as to threaten a gradual desecration of that holy day, I must very earnestly request you to exert your utmost efforts within the precincts of your parishes that are committed to your care, to counteract, as much as possible, the progress of this alarming evil.
Porteus. On the Profanation of the Lord's Day.

DESE'RT, v. } Fr. Déserter; Sp. Desertar;
DE'SERT, n. } It. Disertare; Lat. Deserere,
DESE'RT, adj. } desertum, (de, and serere; Gr.
DESE'RTER, or } Ερ-ειν, to knit, to join.) And DESE'RTOR. } deserere properly denotes—id
DESE'RTION. } quod prius connexum pro de-
DESE'RTNESS. } relicto habere. To disjoin
DESE'RTRICE. } what was before connected,
(Vossius.)

To disjoin, to dissever, to sunder or separate from; to depart from, forsake, quit, leave or abandon.

A desert,—(frequently, though improperly, written desart,)—any place deserted, forsaken, quitted, left or abandoned, (sc.) by all inhabitants, settlers, &c. And, therefore—

A wilderness, a wild, waste, untilled, uncultivated or uninhabited place.

The decyples, that he hyder sonde, Cristendom to brynge,
Hyleuede in a wylderneese, after prechynge,
That me cleputh now Glastynbury, that desert was tho.
R. Gloucester, p. 232.

As it is wrytun in the book of the wordis of Isaye the profete, the voys of a crier in desert, make ye redy the waye of the Lord, make ye his pathis right.—Wiclif. Luk, c. 3.

And whanne Jhesus had herde this thing, he wente out fro thennis in a boot into disert place bisidis.
Id. Matthew, c. 14.

Thou were that one shepe emongs the hundred, [which] were lost in desert, and out of the waye had erred, and now to the flocke art restored.
Chaucer. The Testament of Loue, b. i.

This knight the two pilers of brass,
The whiche yet a man maye fynde,
Set vp in the deserte of Inde.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

And when the daye was now farre spent, his disciples came vnto him, saying: this is a deserte place, and now the day is farre passed, let them depart.
Bible, 1551. Mark, c. 7.

What flying of her company and desertnes, when euery mother will keepe not only their daughters, but also their sonnes from the inspection of such an vnthrifty maid.
Vives. The Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 7.

The desertnesse of the countrey lying waste & saluage, did nothing feare them from coming to him.—Udal. Luke, c. 5.

Hadst thou before thy flight but left with me
A young Æneas, who, resembling thee,
Might in my sight have sported, I had then
Not wholly lost, nor quite deserted been.
Denham. The Passion of Dido for Æneas.

The seuen holie ilands are desert and breed nothing but a kind of wild sheepe which are often hunted, but seldom or neuer eaten.—Holinshed. Description of Britaine, c. 10.

Neither could Moses forget the length of the way through those discomfortable deserts wherein himself and Israel had wandered 40 years.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. ii. c. 4. s. 2.

Meanwhile this youth like a poor shepherd clad,
(Of whom such care the God of Israel had)
His father's flock was following day by day
Upon a desert near at hand that lay.
Drayton. David & Goliah.

Moses compares the deserters of their brethren, to the rebels at Kadesbarnea; now none of these, by God's own decree, entered into Canaan
Prynne. Treachery & Disloyalty, pt. v. p. 212.

Sleep hath forsook and giv'n me o'er
To death's benumbing opium as my only cure.
Thence faintings, swoonings of despair,
And sense of heaven's desertion.—Milton. Samson Agon.

'Twere easie and prone (and not at all improbable) for us to glide insensibly into all rebellions and impieties, to swear fealty to Satan, that hath entertain'd us so hospitably, and suddenly to engage so deep under his colours, that there would be no retiring with honour, no returning to God without being infamous, without undergoing the brand of apostates from Satan, of a kind of fœdi fraci, covenant-breakers, and desertors.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 534.

Cleave to a wife, but let her be a wife, let her be a meet help, a solace, not a nothing, not an adversary, not a desertrice.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

When churls rebel against their native prince,
I arm their hands, and furnish the pretence;
And, housing in the lion's hateful sign,
Bought senates and deserting troops are mine.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

Tell her that's young,
And shuns to have her graces spy'd,
That hadst thou sprung
In deserts where no men abide,
Thou must have uncommended dy'd.—Waller. Song.

But rough, in open air he chose to lye;
Earth was his couch, his cov'ring was the sky.
On hills unshorn, or in a desart den,
He shunn'd the dire society of men.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. xi.

Slaves, who before did cruel masters serve,
May flie to deserts, and in freedom starve.
The noblest part of liberty they loose,
Who can but shun, and want the power to choose
Id. The Rival Ladies, Act iv. sc. 1.

No more excuses or delays: I stand
In arms prepar'd to combat, hand to hand,
The base deserter of his native land.
Id. Virgil. Æneid, b. xii.

Neither surely was it any other cause than excess of love, which made that temporary desertion [by God] so grievous and bitter to him, extorting from his most meek and patient heart that woeful complaint, My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken me.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 23.

Moses fasted in the desert forty days and nights before he gave the law: so did Elias, the restorer of the law; and so did Christ before he entered into his ministry.
Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

When I questioned the petty officer concerning what had happened on shore, he told me, that neither the natives who went with him, nor those whom they met on their way, would give them any intelligence of the deserters.
Cook. Voyages, vol. i. b. i. c. 16.

It being no uncommon thing to see malefactors die stupid and senseless, and go out of the world as wickedly as they have lived in it; and what can this be attributed to, but to the desertion of God's Holy Spirit, which will not always strive with sinners, but sometimes leaves them to perish in the hardness of their hearts.—Sherlock. On Death, Dis. 24.

DESE'RVE, v. } Fr. Déservir, to earn by DESE'RVEDLY. } service; Lat. Deservire, (de, DESE'RVEDNESS. } and servire, to serve.)
DESE'RVER. } To earn by service; to DESE'RVING, n. } merit or to be worthy of,
DESE'RVINGLY. } (sc.) as a reward or payment
DESE'RT, n. } for service; for any thing
DESE'RTFUL. } done or to be done; and,
DESE'RTLESS. } generally, to merit, to be
DESE'RTLESSLY. } worthy of — whether good or ill.

Desert,—formed from the past part. deserved, deserv'd, desert.

——— He, that mygtuol ys
Dethe [doth] after oure deserte.—R. Gloucester, p. 253.

I herd neuer telle, for what maner descrt.
R. Brunne, p. 316.

Thei asken hure huyre. [their hire] or thei hit have deserued.—Piers Ploukman, p. 53.

The best and greatest of valour
Dideu Richesse full great honour,
And busie weren her to serue,
For that they would her loue deserue
Chaucer. The Rom. of the Rose.

Thus wicked tong, God yeve him shame,
Can put hem euerichone in blame
Without desert and causelesse.—Id. Ib.

For they haue pryuily layed theyr net to destroye me without a cause, yea and made a pytte for my soule, whiche I neuer deserued.—Bible, 1551. Psalm 35.

For more is to be done for ye deseruour than for the exactour, more for the louyng maister than imperious comaundyng maister.—Udal. 1 Timothye, c. 6.

But the New Testamẽt is an euerlastyng couenaũt, made vnto the children of God through faith in Christ, vpon the deseruynges of Christ; where eternall life is promised to all that beleue, and death to all that are vnbeleuyng.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 36.

But this we must desire of his highness, and of your goodness, that you would not require more from us, by reason of his majesty's great deservings of us, than we can without offending God perform; and then you may assure yourselves of all the good offices which can be expected from us.—State Trials. Divorce of Catharine of Arragon, an. 1528.

It cannot be, but this so great desart
In basest breast doth breede thus due regarde,
With worlde of thankes, to praise this friendly part
And wish that woorth mought pay a iust rewarde
E. C. in Prayse of Gascoigne's Posies.

For-thy great wonder were it, if such shame
Should euer enter in his bountious thought,
Or euer doe that mote deserues blame:
The noble courage neuer weeneth ought,
That may vnworthy of itselfe be thought.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 2.

The valiant Cecil last, for great employment fit,
Deservedly in war the lat'st of ours that rose.
Whose honour euery hour, and fame still greater grows.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 18.

And this disposition ariseth out of two things: first, a thorough conviction of a man's sins, and the offence to God in them, and obnoxiousness and deservedness to be destroyed for them.—Goodwin. Works, vol. i. pt. iii. p. 170.

Besides this, to Elwes your majesty has given an estate, (which is a greater gift than life, because it extends to posterity,) who was the worst deserver in this business.
State Trials. Murderers of Sir T. Overbury, an. 1616.

Then Sir John Bushie stept foorth, and made request on the behalfe of the communaltie, that it might please the kings highnesse for their heinous acts attempted against his lawes and roiall majestie, to appoint them punishment according to their deservings.—Holinshed. Rich. II. an. 1397.

Is this the ioy of armes? be these the parts
Of glorious knighthood, after bloud to thirst
And not regard due rights and iust deserts?
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 2.

Till I be more desertful in your eye;
And till my duty shall make known, I honour ye,
Noblest of women, do me but this favour,
To accept this back again, as a poor testimony.
Beaum. & Fletch. Wild Goose Chase, Act iv. sc. 6.

He shew'd his generous spirit; all the town
Speak nobly of him, pity him and pray for him;
And, were he not desertful, by this time
The general vote had hang'd him.
Anonymous. The Gamester, Act ii.

If mine [friend] be but so wise, and apprehensive,
As my opinion gives him to my heart,
It stayes not long on thy desertless arme.
Beaum. & Fletch. Wit at several Weapons, Act iii. sc. 1.

Bee. But now people will call you valiant, desertlessly I think, yet for their satisfaction I will have you fight with me.—Id. Ib. A King and no King, Act iii.

If these words seem not decent enough, I will make no other apology, but that I use them because I cannot find worse: for as they are the worst of men, so they deserve the worst of language.—Burnet. Own Time, vol. iv. Conclusion.

If we speak of our desert, that is death, death is the only wages we have all deserved.—Bp. Beveridge, vol. ii. Ser. 90.

And in all his illness, which lasted some yeers, she [the queen] would never leave his bed; but sat up, sometimes half the night, in the bed by him, with such care and concern, that she was looked on, very deservedly, as a pattern in this respect.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1708.

But after-days, my friend, must do thee right,
And set thy virtues in unenvy'd light,
Fame due to vast desert is kept in store,
Unpaid, till the deserver is no more.
Congreve. To Sir Godfrey Kneller.

Among all the ancient records in the Exchequer, Doomesday book is deservedly of the greatest reputation and value.
Priestley. On History, Lect. 31

DESI'CCATE, v. } Lat. Desiccare, atum,
DESI'CCANT, n. } (de, and siccare, to dry,
DESICCA'TION. } to drain.)
DESI'CCATIVE. } To dry or become dry; to drain of all moisture.

But where there is moisture enough, or superfluous, there wine helpeth to digest, and desiccate the moisture.
Bacon. Nat. Hist. § 727

They speak much of the elementary quality of siccity, or drieness: and of things dessicating.
Id. Ib. The History of Life and Death

And it is well to be noted, that the pneumatical substance is in some bodies, the native spirit of the body; and in some other, plain air that is gotten in, as in bodies desiccate, by heat or age.—Id. Ib. § 842.

Desiccation or consumption, in the process thereof, is finished by three actions, and all these (as was said before) have their original from the native spirit of bodies.
Bacon. The History of Life and Death.

All those authors that have written of mineral waters, do generally agree, that they are of a desiccative or drying nature.—Perrand. Love of Melancholy (1640.) p. 358.

We endeavour by moderate detergents & deiccants, to cleanse and dry the diseased parts.
Wiseman. Surgery, b. viii. c. 5.

DESI'DERATE, v.
DESI'DERATE, adj.
DESI'DERABLE.
DESI'DERATIVE.
DESI'DERATUM.
DESI'DERY.

Præ-siderare cum maturiùs hiberna tempestas movetur, quasi ante sideris tempus. Gr. Προ-χειμαζειν; sic desiderare, sit ανα-χειμαζειν, cum sideris tempus desit; unde desiderari dicuntur quæ desunt:—whence those things are said to be desiderated or desired, which are wanting, (Festus.) See Vossius, in v. Sidus. Pliny speaks at large, (lib. xviii. c. 26,) of the different stars, which mark or announce to the husbandman the approach and progress of the different seasons.

To look anxiously for, to wish, seek for or covet, (sc.) any thing deficient or wanting; any thing whose coming promises good, (sc.) as certain stars or constellations to the husbandmen.

Desideratum is in common use.

My name is True love—of cardinal desidery.
* * * * * * * the very exemplary.
Chaucer. Ballade. Craft of Lovers.

So these are the parts which in the knowledge of medicine, touching the cure of diseases, are desiderate.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. iv. c. 2.

Having acquired our end, if any way, or under any name, we may obtain a work so much desired, and yet desiderated of truth.—Brown. Vulgar Errours. To the Reader.

And most men verily are of the same nature, passing good and desiderable things.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 124.

You may readily understand what I mean, when you meet with any particulars delivered as thoughts, or desiderata, or wishes tending to, or aiming at the improvement of medicine.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 584.

The verbs, called deponent, desiderative, frequentative, inceptive, &c. need not be considered here, being found in some languages only, and therefore not essential to speech.
Beattie. Elements of Moral Science, pt. i. c. 1. s. 3.

Pencils of light, passing through glass lenses, are separated into different colours, thereby tinging the object, especially the edges of it, as if it were viewed through a prism. To correct this inconvenience had been long a desideratum in that art.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 3.

DESI'DIOUSNESS. Lat. Desidia, desidiosus, a desidendo, id est, valde sedendo; sitting too much. Slothfulness, idleness, carelessness.

Now the Germans perceiving our desidiousness and negligence, do send daily young scholars hither, that spoileth them [ancient authors] and cutteth them out of libraries, returning home and putting them abroad as monuments of their own country, &c.
Leland, to Secretary Cromwell, in Wood's Athenæ.

DESI'GN, v.
DESI'GN, n.
DESI'GNABLE.
DE'SIGNATE, v.
DE'SIGNATE, adj.
DESIGNA'TION.
DESI'GNEDLY.
DESI'GNER.
DESI'GNFULNESS, n.
DESI'GNING, n.
DESI'GNLESS.
DESI'GNLESSLY.
DESI'GNMENT.

Fr. Désigner; It. Disegnare; Sp. Designar; Lat. Designare, to mark out, (de, and signum, a mark or sign, qv.)

To mark out, to frame or form; and thus, (met.) to form in the mind, to scheme or plan, to intend, to purpose, to project.

And therefore, whatsoeuer wicked designement shal be conspired and plotted against her majesty hereafter, shall be thought to be conspired, plotted, and intended against the Almighty himselfe.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 619.

For as the soul's essential pow'rs are three:
The quick'ning pow'r, the pow'r of sense and reason;
Three kinds of life to her designed be,
Which perfect these three pow'rs in their due season.
Davies. Immortality of the Soul, s. 33.

Why do ye seek for feigned Palladines,
(Out of the smoke of idle vanity,)
Who may give glory to the true designe
Of Bouchier, Talbot, Neville, Willoughby?
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. v.

A very small portion of any ingenious art will stop up all those gaps of our time: either music, or painting, or designing, or chemistry, or history, or gardening, or twenty other things, will do it usefully and pleasantly.
Cowley. Ess. Of Solitude.

Twere more to his purpose to demand, what advantageth it him to gain not one atome, or most diminutive part of the world, not the least acquisition of any thing desirable even to the carnal man, satisfactory to any part of his appetite, save that in a manner Platonick, designless of love of sinning, and ruining his own soul, and yet to do that as sure, as if he had Satan's totum hoc, his whole exchequer of wealth and honour in exchange for it!—Hammond. Works, vol. ii.

The second bulwark was the hearing sense,
Gainst which the second troupe designment makes.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 11.

After this hee presented himselfe againe at sundry times and that to this purpose (as may probably be conjectured) to hold her still in his possession, who was not able, eyther to look further into these subtilties, then the superficiall barke thereof, or not discover the depth of his designements.
State Trials. Mary Smith, an. 1616.

Since then, the power of all natural agents is limited, the mover (be it never so powerful) must be confined to observe these proportions, and cannot pass over all these infinite designable degrees in an instant.—Digby. Of Bodies, c. 9.

He is an High Priest and a Saviour all-sufficient. First, by his Father's eternal designation, Psalm lxxxix. 90. I have laid help upon one that is mighty, &c.
Hopkins, Ser. 25.

Again the atomick atheists further alledge, that though there be many things in the world, which serve well for uses, yet it does not at all follow that therefore they were made intentionally and designedly for those uses.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 670.

It being the usual method in which divine providence delighteth it self, to use and sanctify those very means, which ill men design for the satisfaction of private and particular ends and ambition, and other wicked purposes, to wholesome and publick ends, and to establish that good which is most contrary to the designers.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. iii. p. 743.

Now what has Ajax done, or what design'd?
A noisy nothing, and an empty wind.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xiii.

To whom the Thunderer made this stern reply:
My houshold curse, my lawful plague, the spy
Of Jove's designs, his other squinting eye!
Why this vain prying, and for what avail?
Id. Homer. Iliad, b. xiii.

The designable parts of these corpuscles are therefore unseparable, because there is no vacuity at all intercepted between them.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 413.

And a wise designation of time this is, well becoming the divine care and precaution; serving for the recruiting our bodies, and dispatching our affairs, and at the same time to keep up a spiritual temper of mind.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. ii. c. 6.

As for the reason hereof, I shall refer to the opticians, particularly the famous Kepler, who in his Opticis Astronom. hath designedly handled this point.
Id. Astro-Theology, Ded.

Both these, Sir William D'Avenant had began to shadow; but it was so, as first discoverers drew their maps, with headlands, and promontories, and some few outlines of somewhat taken at a distance, and which the designer saw not clearly.—Dryden. Of Heroick Plays. An Essay.

All is drawn over with dusky shades, and irregular features of base designfulness, and malitious cunning.
Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 7.

Ignorantly thankful creature, thou beggest in such a way, that by what would appear an antedated gratitude, if it were not a designless action, the manner of thy petitioning beforehand, rewards the grant of thy request.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 359.

Since Solomon does discreetly affirm, that all the cross and happy lucks at play are not rashly or designlessly shuffled by a blind hazard, but are dispensed by an all-ruling Providence.—Id. Ib. vol. vi. p. 80.

And the rather, because whilst men, by the coldness of the season, are more than ordinarily careful, to stop up the passages, at which the external air may get in, they do, though designlessly, stop up the vents, at which the subterraneous exhalations might go out.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 675.

We sufficiently understand that the scenes which represent cities and countries to us, are not really such, but only painted on boards and canvass: but shall that excuse the ill painture or designment of them?
Dryden. Essay. Of Dramatick Poesie.

Ask of politicians the end for which laws were originally designed; and they will answer, that the laws were designed as a protection for the poor and weak, against the oppression of the rich and powerful.—Burke. Vindic. of Nat. Society.

Is their original mode of instruction and discipline altered? By no means. Are the instructors of a different description from those designated by the founders? By no means.
Anox. On Grammar Schools.

The only difference between God's appointment of the Judges and of Saul being this, that they were chosen by internal impulse. He, by lots, or external designation.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. v. s. 3.

The machine, which we are inspecting, demonstrates, by its construction, contrivance and design. Contrivance must have had a contriver, design, a designer; whether the machine immediately proceeded from another machine or not.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 2.

This designment appears both injurious and absurd.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. ii. s. 4.

DE'SINENT, adj.
DE'SINENCE.
DE'SITIVE, n.

Lat. Desinere, desinens, to leave off, to cease; de, and sinere.

Leaving off, ending, terminating.

In front of this sea were placed six Tritons, in moving and sprightly actions, their upper parts humane, save that their haires were blue, as partaking to the sea-colour; their desinent parts fish, mounted above their heads, and all varied in disposition.—B. Jonson. Masque of Blackenesse.

In their poesies, the fettering together the series of the verses, with the bonds of like cadence or desinence of rhyme, which, if it be unusually abrupt, and not dependent in sense upon so near affinity of words, I know not what a loathsome kind of harshness and discordance it breedeth to any judicial ear.—Bp. Hall. Postscript to Satires.

4. Inceptives and desitives, which relate to the beginning or ending of any thing; as, the Latin tongue is not yet forgotten. No man before Orpheus wrote Greek verse. Peter, Czar of Muscovy, began to civilize his nation.
Watts. Logic, pt. ii. c. 2. s. 6.

DESI'RE, v.
DESI'RE, n.
DESI'RABLE, adj.
DESI'RABLE, n.
DESI'RABLENESS.
DESI'RER.
DESI'RING, n.
DESI'RELESS.
DESI'ROUS.
DESI'ROUSLY.
DESI'ROUSNESS.
DESI'REFUL.
DESI'REFULNESS.

Fr. Désirer; Sp. Desear; It. Disiare or Desiderare. See DESIDERATE.

To wish for, covet, long for, to be eager to obtain; to have a love or passion for; to ask for, intreat, require or demand.

See the quotations from Locke and Cogan.

War vore yeh dowry mest thyn grace & thyn loue.
R. Gloucester, p. 309.

Of the north Suane had a partie, the south he desired.
R. Brunne, p. 42.

Ye ben of the fadir the Deuil, and ye wolen do the desires of youre fadir.—Wiclif. Jon, c. 8.

My liege lady, generally, quad he,
Women desiren to han sovereinetee,
As well over hir housond as hir love,
And for to ben in maistrie him aboue
This is your most desire, though ye me kille
Doth as you list, I am here at your wille
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Tale, v. 6623.

——— For my desiring
Was him to seen ouer all thing
His countenaunce and his maneres.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

Yong, fresh, and strong, in armes desirous,
As any bacheler of all his hous
Id. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,337

Affeccion of this instrument is a thinge, by whiche ye bee drawe desirously any thinge to wilne in couetous maner, all be it for the tyme out of your mind.
Id. The Testament of Love, b. iii.

And so there whyle I me reioie,
Unto my herte a great desyre,
The whiche is hotter than the fire,
All sodenliche upon me renneth.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

Wyfeles he was, Florent he hight,
He was a man, that mochell might:
Of armes he was desyrous.—Id. Ib. b. i.

Whereas God wil haue beuen so sore desyred and sought for, that he wyll haue the desyrers thereof, set by the pleasures of this worlde, not onely nothyng at all, but also seke for the contrary and suffer displeasure and payne.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1290.

For it [the lawe] knew yt theyr heartes wer desyrful of reuenging.—Udal. Matthew, c. 5.

Ye haue heard it wt your eares, but ye hane need of readie & desirefull heartes, if ye wil be apt to receiue so great a blissefulnes.—Id. Luke, c. 4.

A greate benefite is much the sweter that it is not obteined without great and long suit. The pleasure of a goode turne is muche diminished whan it is at first obteyned. The desirefulnesse of our mindes muche augmenteth and encreaseth our pleasure.

Udal. Preface onto the Kinges Maiestie.

Than Jesus because he would ye more enkendle desirefulnes, sẽbled & made countenaunce as though he would not make ani tariaunce at Emaus, but made as though he had yet somewhat ferther wal to goe.—Id. Luke, c. 23.

I reken also, that this booke shall be very profytable for yonge scolers of this realme which are desyrous to learn the Latin tong.—J. C. To the Christen Reader, an. 1550.

For the Hebrewes to expresse a thynge vehementlye, vse often tymes as it appeareth in sundrie places of Scripture, to double a word, as our Sauioure dydde here, saying: wyth desyre haue I desyred: that is to witte, very sore haue I desyred, or very desyrouslye haue I longed for to eate this paschal lambe with you.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1321.

Whome Ptolemy to cloke his deceit wythall, desirously and beyond all measure of true loue and affection embraced and kissed a great while together.—Goldinge. Justine, fol. 108.

But he was content with the recouery of the cities that he had lost, and so concluding a peace, desirously tooke the occasion of quietness when it was offered him.

Id. Ib. fol. 121.

For to the highest she did still aspire,
Or if ought higher were then that, did it desire

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. 1. c. 4.

O wherefore did God grant me my request,
And as a blessing with such pomp adorn'd?
Why are his gifts desirable, to tempt
Our earnest prayers, then, giv'n with solemn hand
As graces, draw a scorpion's tail behind.

Milton. Samson Agonistes.

And therefore being all of a sudden bid to hold up my hand at the bar, I cannot chuse but a little demur upon it, and yet with all respect to you, to declare my desireableness to keep within the bounds of reason, moderation, and discretion, and so carry myself as doth become a man, that knows what it is to answer for his life.

State Trials. Lieut.-Col. John Lilburne, an. 1649.

He [Sir James Crofts] was an able man to manage war, and yet an earnest desirer and advancer of peace, being one of the commissioners in 1588 to treat with the Spaniard in Flanders.—Fuller. Worthies. Hertfordshire.

Life is the passing of a shadow, short, troublesome, and dangerous; a place which God hath given us in time for the desiring of eternity.—Bp. Taylor. Cont. b. i. c. 6.

This golden show made him so desirous also of like successe, that he left off his former voyage and returned home to bring news of such things as he had seene.

Holinshed. Desc. of England, c. 11.

That desire is a state of vneasiness, every one who reflects on himself will quickly find. Who is there that has not felt in desire what the wise man said of hope, (which is not much different from it) that it being defer'd makes the heart sick; and that still proportionable to the greatness of the desire which sometimes raises the uneasiness to that pitch, that it makes people cry out, give me children, give me the thing desir'd, or I die.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 21.

If you demand by what impulsive force
The under Gods begin their circling course;
He says, as things desirable excite
Desire, and objects move the appetite:
So his first God by kindling ardent love,
Does all the Gods in seats inferior move.

Blackmore. Creation, b. v.

But of the desirableness of the skill, and willingness to cure the sick, and relieve not only those that languish in hospitals, but those that are rich enough to build them (I have) else where purposely discoursed.

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 201.

If they were indeed desirous to approve themselves to God, they would strive against those sins which hold them in captivity.—Sharp, vol. iii. Ser. 16.

The greatest part of the world keep the crown upon the Devil's head; they are his servants, and yield him the throne of their hearts, and he reigns in them: but those that are the people of God, they do with their hearts acknowledge his right and title to them, and do most desirously close with him.—Bates. The Everlasting Rest of the Saints.

Desire (influential to action) may be defined, that uneasy sensation excited in the mind by the view or by the contemplation of any desirable good, which is not in our possession, which we are solicitous to obtain, and of which the attainment appears at least possible.

Cogan. On the Passions, pt. i. c. 2. s. 3.

He neglects his ease and his honours together, and despises fame as well as pleasure and riches, and all mortal desirables, when they stand in competition with his immortal hopes.—Watts, vol. i. Ser. 2.

As the natural man neglects the two chief spirits he has any concern with, that is God and his own soul; so fleshly objects are his chief desire: but the spiritual man despises them all, in comparison of the unseen desirables of the spiritual world.—Ib. Ib. Ser. 4.

It is only the honest, sincere enquirer, who comes to his Bible with a heart desirous to learn his duty in the conscientious discharge of a good life, who can hope to find it in the words of eternal life.—Gilpin, vol. iv. Ser. 25.

DESI'ST, v.
DESI'STANCE.
DESI'STING, n.

Fr. Désister; Sp. Desistir; It. and Lat. Desistere, (de, and sistere, to stand.)

To stand off, or away from; to quit, to leave off, to cease, to give over, to stop or to stay, to forbear.

Thus Owen Glendor glorifying hym self in these two victories, laden with praies and bloudy handes returning againe into Wales neuer desistyng to do euill.—Hall. Hen IV. an. 1.

The more thei here suffere for teachinge the trewth the greater ioye abydethe them: let vs not therfor desiste, nor be afraide, but let vs not neglecte our office for Crystes sake, (good Cryste bretheren,) but speke and wryte as long as we may.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 12.

And again, the going into the city was a pursuance and carrying on of the enterprize against the court, and not a desisting or departing from it.

State Trials. Sir Christopher Blunt, an. 1600.

——— When no persuasion
Could win him to desist from his bad practice,
To change the aristocracy of Corinth
Into an absolute monarchy, I chose rather
To prove a pious and obedient son
To my country, my best mother, than to lend
Assistance to Timophanes, tho' my brother,
That, like a tyrant, strove to set his foot
Upon the city's freedom.

Massinger. The Bondman, Act i. sc. 3.

What frenzy, goddesses! what rage can move
Celestial minds to tempt the wrath of Jove?
Desist, obedient to his high command:
This is his word: and know, his word shall stand.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. viii.

Whereas men usually give freeliest where they have not given before, and make it both the motive and excuse of their desistance from giving any more, that they have given already; God's bounty hath a very different method: for he uses to give, because he hath given, and that he may give

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 269.

A politician desists from his designs, when he finds they are impracticable; he renounces the court, because he hath been affronted by it, he quits ambition for study or retirement, and leaves off his attendance on the great as he becomes weary of it.—Blair, vol. i. Lect. 10.

DESK, v.
DESK, n.

A table to write upon. Dut. Disch; Ger. Tisch, a table; perhaps from the Lat. Discus, because a table resembles a discus in its broad form or shape, (Skinner.) Sometimes written Dess, (qv.)

To desk,—to shut up or enclose, as in a desk.

The egle sang Venite bodies all
And let vs ioy to loue that is our health,
And to the deske anon they gan to fall.

Chaucer. The Court of Loue.

And whyle he sayd his orysons for that soule and other, he layed his gloues vpon a deske by him.

Fabyan, vol. i. c. 201.

Sir, 'tis a perspicil, the best under heaven,
With this I'll read a leaf of that small Iliad,
That in a walnut-shell was desked, as plainly
Twelve long miles off, as you see Paul's from Highgate.

Tomkis. Albumazar, Act i. sc. 3.

Where (at the west end of the great hall at Westminster) the lord president, in a crimson velvet chair, fixed in the midst of the court, placed himself, having a desk with a crimson velvet cushion before him.

State Trials. Charles I. an. 1649.

Never can they who from the miserable servitude of the desk have been raised to empire, again submit to the bondage of a starving bureau, or the pront of copying musick, or writing plaidoyers by the sheet.

Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 3.

DE'SOLATE, v.
DE'SOLATE, adj.
DE'SOLATE, n.
DE'SOLATELY.
DE'SOLATER.
DESOLA'TION.
DE'SOLATORY.

Fr. Désoler; It. Desolare; Sp. Dessolar; Lat. Desolare; q. solum et desertum; to make or cause to be solitary and desert.

To be or cause to be solitary, lonely, desert; forsaken or abandoned; to reduce to solitude or dreariness; to lay waste, to ravage.

And Jhesus wityngе her thoughtis, seide to hem ech kyngdom departid agens itself, schal be desolatid, and ech citee or hous departid agens it silf schal not stonde.

Wiclif. Matthew, c. 12.

Every rewme departid agens itself schal be desolat, and an hous schal falle on an hous. Id. Luke, c. 11.

I were right now of tales desolat,
N'ere that a marchant, goon in many a yere,
Me taught a tale, which that ye shull here.

Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4551.

Now therfor [our God] heare the supplicacion of thy seruant, hear his prayers beseeching thee to showe a merciable countenaunce vpon thy holy temple, thus desolated and destroid.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 9.

When she had passed the sea and taken lande, it was to her declared, how that King Edward had gotten again the garland, and that king Henry her husband, was desolately left post alone, and take prisoner.—Hall. Edw. IV. an. 10.

She [Lady Elizabeth] againe likewise saluting them saide, my lordes, (quoth she) I am glad to see you for me thinke I haue been kept a great while from you desolately alone

Fox. Martyrs, p. 1906.

They came vnto Man with a mightie army and wasted all the south part of Man, spoiled the churches, and slue all the men, whom they could take, insomuch, the south part of the saide island was brought almost into desolation.

Hacklugt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 14.

There, all alone, she spy'd, alas, the while!
In shady darkness, a poor desolate,
That now had measured many a weary mile
Through a waste desert, whither heav'nly fate,
And his own will, him brought.

G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph on Earth.

Though he was afterwards set at liberty, and had a pension from the king, he was in great want to the very last, living obscurely in his chambers at Gray's Inn, where his lonely and desolate condition so wrought upon his melancholy temper that he pined away.

State Trials. Lord Bacon, an. 1620.

Let never spring visit his habitation,
But nettles, kix, and all the weedy nation
With empty elders grow, sad signs of desolation.

G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph over Death.

Who is this desolater, or maker of desolations?

Mede. On Daniel, p. 44.

Where these two things are taken by these expositors for granted. 1. That the taking away of the dayly sacrifice, and this desolatory abomination, is to be understood of the last destruction of Jerusalem by Titus.

Bp. Hall. Revelation Unrevealed.

O righteous Themis! if the pow'rs above
By pray'rs are bent to pity, and to love:
If human miseries can move their mind;
If yet they can forget, and yet be kind;
Tell how we may restore, by second birth,
Mankind, and people desolated earth.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. i.

There is an eminent instance of this in Nehemiah, whom all the pleasures of the Persian court could not satisfy, whilst Jerusalem was desolately miserable.

Bates. Works, vol. iv. Ser. 4.

——— On the self same day
When we embark'd from Greece, designing death
And desolation to the race of Troy;
Both by his right hand thunders, and the sign
Of which ye hear, Jove ratified our hopes.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

DESPA'IR, v.
DESPA'IR, n.
DESPA'IRER.
DESPA'IRFUL.
DESPA'IRINGLY.
DE'SPERATE, adj.
DE'SPERATELY.
DE'SPERATENESS.
DESPERA'TION.
DESPERA'DO.
DE'SPERANCE.

Fr. Désespérer; Sp. Desesperar; It. Disperare; Lat. Desperare, to be without hope, (de, and sperare, to hope.) See the quotations from Locke and Cogan.

To be or cause to be without hope, hopeless.

Desperate,—without hope, hopeless; and, therefore, careless, reckless, fearless, having no regard to consequences.

And ich shal sende gow myselve Seynte Michel myn aungel,
That no Devel shal gow dere, ne despeir in goure deyenge.

Piers Ploughman, p. 149.

Drede of desperacion theune dryveth a wey grace.

Id. p. 336.

He was dispeired, nothing dorst he say
Sauf in his songes somwhat wold he wray
His wo, as in a general complaining;
He said, he loved, and was beloved nothing.

Chaucer. The Frankeleines Tale, v. 11,255

And he that wil not after counsaile do,
His sute he putteth into disperaunce,
And all the good that should fal him to
Is lost and dedde.—Id. La belle Dame sans Mercie.

Whereof my wittes ben empeired,
And I, as who saith, all dispeired.—Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

For in suche drede he shall us brynge,
That if we haden flight of wynge,
The weye one foote in dispaire
We shull leue, and flee in the ayre.—Id. Ib. b. vii

I am in tristesse all amidde,
And fulfilled of desperance:
And thereof yeue me my penaunce
Myn holy father, as you liketh —Gower. Con. A. b. v.

He is our God if we despaire in our selues, and trust in him, and his is the glory.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 456.

A mã childe was it that she despered of the Lord, and such a one as should be the firste fruit of her wõbe.
Bale. Apology, fol. 30.

Of these thinges springeth eyther cõtempt, or else desperance of the kingdõ of heauen.—Udal. Mark, c. 13.

But Gynecia laying open in all her gestures the despairful affliction, to which all the might of her reason was converted, with such like words stopped Philanax, as he was entering into his invective oration.
Sydney. Arcadia, b. v.

And the Deuel is desperate and hath not nor cannot haue faith and trust in God's promises.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 266.

But a child whẽ he is beaten for his faute, or whẽ he thinketh his father is angry & loueth him not, is anone desperate and discouraged.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 219.

Whom when I saw assembled in such wise,
So desperately the battail to desire,
Then furthermore thus sayd I vnto them
Surrey. Virgile. Æneid, b. ii.

And if for desperatenesse ye care not for yourselues, yet remember your wiues, your children, your countrie, and forsake this rebellion.—Sir J. Cheeke. The Hurt of Sedition.

And yf we loke vnto the lande, beholde, it shall be all darckenesse and sorowe. If we loke to heauen, beholde, it shal be darcke with carefull desperacion.
Bible, 1551. Isaye, c. 5.

Come, come away, fraile, silly, fleshly wight,
Ne let vaine words bewitch thy manly hart,
Ne deuelish thoughts dismay thy constant spright.
In heauenly mercies hast thou not a part?
Why should'st thou then despaire, that chosen art.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. I. c 9.

How can I expiate my sin? or hope
Though now I write myself thy slave, the service
Of my whole life can win thee to pronounce
Despair'd of pardon.—Massinger. Guardian, Act iii. sc. 6.

What wight art thou? a foe? or else what fawning frend?
If Death thou art, I pray thee make an end.—
With that she spake I am (quoth she) thy friend Despaire,
Which in distresse each worldly wight with speede do aide;
I rid them from their foes, if I to them repaire.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 66.

Which still sat waiting on that wastfull cliff,
For spoyle of wretches, whose vnhappy case,
After lost credite and consumed thrift,
At last them driuen hath to this despairefull drift.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

There be other sorts of cryes also used among the Irish, which favour greatly of the Scythian barbarisme; as their lamentations at their buryals, with dispairfull out-cryes.
Id. State of Ireland.

Whereas were there any such thing really, tis not likely but that the more cunning and subtle desperados, who might the more successfully carry on the mischievous designs of the dark kingdom, should be oftener engaged in those black confederacies —Glanvill. Witchcraft, s. 8. p. 34.

So Satan, whom repulse upon repulse
Met ever; and to shamefull silence brought,
Yet gives not o'er though desperate of success,
And his vain importunity pursues.—Milton. Par. Reg. b. iv.

Then with such eager blows each other they pursue,
As every offer made should threaten imminent death;
Until, through heat and toil both hardly drawing death,
They desperately do close.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 12.

Consider, I beseech you, of the desperateness and excessive unavoidable destructiveness of these monstrous ways to the speedy peace and settlement of our church and state, and of the safety and security of the things yourselves have pitched on for peace and settlement, in and by the treaty.
Parliamentary Hist. Charles I. 1648. Prynne. Speech.

The Lord Digby, being by himself, quickly considered the desperateness of his condition: That it would not be possible to conceal himself long, being so well known to many who were in the Providence, and the garrison quickly knowing whatsoever was spoken in the country.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. I. p. 705.

That place for paine so fearfull to the minde,
That dreames of it have desperation wrought,
Hath beene by some (to search such deeps inclin'd)
No locall ground, but a privation thought.
Sterling. Domes-Day. The Eleventh Houre.

Despair is the thought of the unattainableness of any good, which works differently in men's minds, sometimes producing uneasiness or pain, sometimes rest and indolency.
Locke. Hum. Und. b. ii. c. 20.

Nor with an idle care did he behold:
(Subjects may grieve, but monarchs must redress;)
He cheers the fearful, and commends the bold,
And makes despairers hope for good success.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

But though I thought it not amiss to make these animadversions upon Mr. Hobbes's ratiocination, yet as to the opinion itself for whose sake he speaks so severely and so despairingly of our society, if it be considered as I proposed it, he shews me as yet no cause at all to renounce it.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 237.

For on the rocks it bore where Scylla raves,
And dire Charybdis rolls her thundering waves.
All night I drove; and at the dawn of day,
Fast by the rocks, beheld the desperate way.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xviii.

After he hath lain some time under these terrors and affrightments, and even upon the brink of desperation, it pleaseth God, at length, by his Spirit to break through this cloud, and to dart some beams of light and comfort into his conscience.—Sharp, vol. iii. Ser. 13.

To whom the sire of Gods and men replied:
Juno, despair to be inform'd of all
My plans and views: Jove's consort as thou art,
Thou could'st not learn them.—Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

Despair: this is a permanent fear of losing some valuable good, of suffering some dreadful evil, or remaining in a state of actual misery, without any mixture of hope.
Cogan. On the Passions, pt. i. c. 2. s. 3.

It is true, indeed, that no man becomes at once desperately and irretrievably wicked.—Hurd. Works, vol. vi. Ser. 16.

This institution provides a retreat for these wretched outcasts of society,—not for those only who by a single fault, seldom without its extenuations, have forfeited the protection of their nearest friends; but even for these, generally the most unpitied, but not always the most undeserving of pity among the daughters of Eve, whom desperation, the effect of their first false step, hath driven to the lowest walks of vulgar prostitution.—Bp. Horsley, Ser. 43.

DESPA'TCH. See DISPATCH.

DESPE'ED. To send with speed, haste, or despatch. Found only in Speed.

Out of hand they despeeded certaine of their crue, to craue both pardon of their fact, and licence for choyce of some worthier primate.—Speed. King John, b. ix. c. 8. s. 31.

But King John, being no lesse earnest to further the present general cause, then they their particular ends, delayed not their desires; and despeeding his charters and safe conducts to the Archbishop and his fellow exiles, hee as speedily arriued.—Id. Ib. b. ix. c. 8. s. 51.

DE'SPICABLE, adj.
DE'SPICABLENESS.
DE'SPICABLY.
DESPI'CIENCE.
DESPI'CIENCY.
DESPE'CTION.
Lat. Despicari, despicabilis, to look down upon, (sc.) as worthless. And thus, consequentially,— Worthless, vile, mean, contemptible. See DESPISE.

But if our shepherdes had been as well willing to feede as to shere, we had needed no such dispicience, nor they to haue burnt so many as they haue.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 287.

In other terms, Christian humilitie is a clear inspection into, and a full despection of ourselves.
Montague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 9. s. 1.

They who take then either of these guides, reason or grace, to carry them up the cliff of meditation, may cast down their thoughts in a calm despection of all those shining attractions, which they see to be so transitory.—Id. Ib. pt. i. Treat. 19. s. 6.

How have the histories of all ages, and our own experience, shown us by very frequent examples, men unexpectedly, and upon many moments and occurrences, seemingly most small and inconsiderable, tumbled in a moment from the most eminent and high degree of power, into a most despised and despicable condition?
Hale. Cont. vol. I. Of Humility.

We are men, which is a mercy far above any temporal affliction that we can suffer. God might have made us worms instead of men, such despicable creatures as are below common notice.—Bp. Wilkins. Of Nat. Religion, b. I. c. 17.

Consider again, that he who is a servant to men, may be the Lord's free-man; whereas he that is free among men, may be a slave to his lusts, and by them to the Devil: and therefore we ought neither to think despicably of them, nor to use them severely.—Hopkins. Expos. on 5th Commandm.

It is very probable, that to shew their despiciency of the poor Gentiles, and to pride themselves in their prerogative and discretion from them, they [the Jews] affected to have such acts there done.—Mede. Distr. p. 191.

But when my power is despicable grown,
And rebel appetites usurp the throne,
The soul no longer quiet thoughts enjoys,
But all is tumult and eternal noise.
Pomfret. Love triumphant over Reason.

And, as he says rarely well, though some creatures seem to be made of much coarser stuff than others, yet even in the vilest, the maker's art shines through the despicableness of the matter.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 13.

He that is but moderately skilled in androtomy, (as some of the moderns call the dissection of man's body, to distinguish it from zootomy, as they name the dissections of the bodies of other animals,) may, with due diligence and industry, not despicably improve his anatomical knowledge.
Id. Ib. p. 68.

The affections which have their seat in the body can yield us no honour; they are capable of no improvement; the higher they rise, the more despicable we grow.
Sherlock, vol. I. Dis 23.

DESPI'SE, v.
DESPI'SABLE.
DESPI'SAL.
DESPI'SEDNESS.
DESPI'SEMENT.
DESPI'SER.
DESPI'SING, n.
DESPI'CION.
Lat. Despicere, -ectum, to look down upon, (sc.) as worthless, contemptible. See DESPICABLE.
To look at or upon with contempt, with scorn; to contemn, to scorn.
Chaucer renders—Spernendus est, it is to despise; the only mode then adopted for rendering the participles in rus and dus.
Despicion is frequent in Sir T. More.

For he seide, "thou ne louest me nogt as thi eostren doth,
As despisest me in myn olde liue, thou ne schalt never ywis
Part habbe of my kyndom, ne of lond that myn ys.
R. Gloucester, p. 31.

And Favel hathe wt false speche. fetted hem by this lettere
To be prynces of prude. and poverte to dispice.
Piers Ploughman, p. 28.

Paule primus heremite, put vs hym selue
Awey into wildernesse, the world to despisen.—Id. Crede.

Wher ye han not rad this Scripture the stoon which the bilders han despised this is mad into the heed of the corner.
Wiclif. Mark, c. 12.

Crist Kyng of Israel com down now fro the cros that we seen and bileeve: and thei that waren crucified with him despisiden him.—Id. Ib. c. 15.

God chees the feble thingis and dispisable thingis of the world to confounde the stronge thingis.—Id. 1 Corynth. c. 1.

Therefore se ghe that it come not to ghou that is bifore seid in the prophetis, ghe dispiseris, se ghe and woundre ghe, and be ghe scaterid abrood.—Id. Dedis, c. 13.

For which thing I am plesid in myn ynfyrmytees, in dispisingis, in nedis, in persecutiouns, in angwischis for Crist.
Id. 2 Corynth. c. 12.

Of which shrewes, all be the hoost neuer so great, it is to dispise, for it is not gouerned with no leader of reason, but it is rauished onely by fletyng errour, folily, and lightly.
Chaucer. Boecius, b. I.

Of which though there be an huge armie, yet it is to be despised, because it is not gouerned by any captaine, but is carried vp and downe by phantasticall errour without any order at all.—Translation of Boecius, by I. T. 1609.

And so my fadir in this wise
The slepy nightes I despise;
And euer a middes of my tale
I thinke vpon the nightingale.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

Behold ye despysers and wonder, and perishe ye: for I do a worke in your dayes, which ye shall not beleue, yf a mã woulde declare it you.—Bible, 1551. Actes, c. 13.

So I say agayne, that we make none necessarye article of the fayth of our parte, but leaue it indifferent for all men to iudge therein, as God shall open his hart, and no side to condemne or despise the other but to nourish in all thynges brotherly love, and to beare others infirmities.
Frith. Workes, p. 170.

But it were rather to bee iudged, that I were a tempter of God, & a despiser of his holy ordinaunce, and would not bee content with those remedies, that God hath appointed.
Barnes. Workes, p. 337.

They shall neither be gathered together nor buryed, but shal lye vpon the earth, to theyr shame and despysynge.
Bible, 1551. Jeremye, c. 8.

The author sheweth manye of Luther's heresies to be so abhominable, & some part also so peuish, that the very bare rehearsall is ynough without any ferther despicion therupo, to cause anye good menne abhorre them, and to be ashamed also to seme so foolyshe as to holde them.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 245

Lest we ascribe to the one that which belongeth to the other, and make of Christ, Moses, of the gospell, the law, despise grace and robbe fayth: & fal from meke learnyng into idle despitions, drawling and scoldyng about wordes
Tyndall. Workes, p. 377

For-thy, she would not in discourteous wise
Scorne the faire offer of good will profest;
For great rebuke it is, loue to despise,
Or rudely adeigne a gentle hart's request.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 1.

The interests of religion, in the maintenance of truth, are not so despisable, as that he that hath appeared or embarked in them, can safely neglect the advantages which evil arts may yield, or furnish an adversary against him.
Hammond. Works, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 415.

Therefore he sent foolishness to confute wisdom, weakness to blind strength, despisedness to vanquish pride.
Milton. Reason of Church Government, b. ii. c. 1.

For he [Pyrrhus] was a man that could tell how to humble himself towards the great (by whom he might win benefit) and know also how to creep into their credit; and in like manner was he a great scorner and despiser of such as were his inferiours.—North. Plutarch, p. 331.

And lastly, in regard of his easie passage through Italie without resistance, hee [Charles VIII.] entred into an ouermuch despising of the armies of the Italians.
Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 143.

Surely it is the contempt and despisement of worldly wealth, that is a great help and meanes to learning and philosophy.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 128.

The appearance of the service he did him was such, that the king thought it fit to treat him [Monk] with great distinction, even after he saw into him, and despised him.
Burnet. Own Time, an. 1660.

Policy, the great idol of a carnal reason, is that which insensibly works the soul to a despisal of religion.
South, vol. viii. Ser. 13.

I suppose it will be easily granted, that he who acts in a continual repugnancy to God's Spirit, by a despisal of all his holy motions and suggestions, sins, and that at a very high strain.—Id. vol. xi. ser. 11. 12.

The waters of Jordan had no natural efficacy to cleanse a leper; in the rod of Moses there was no power to divide the sea; but, when ordained by God to these purposes, the sea fled back at the touch of Moses's rod, and the leprosy of Naaman was purged by the so much despised waters of Israel.—Sherlock, vol. i. Dis. 3.

To such a being as I have just mentioned the difference may be as considerable and imperceptible between the despiser and the despised, as the difference between two of the meanest insects may seem to us.
Fielding. The Covent Garden Journal, No. 61.

DESPITE, v.
DESPI'TE, n.
DESPI'TEFUL.
DESPI'TEFULLY.
DESPI'TEFULNESS.
DESPI'TEOUS.
DESPI'TEOUSLY.

Fr. Despiter, despit; It. Dispetto. This word is usually referred to the same origin as despise. But the existence of the uncompounded spite in English, and spit, spitten in Dutch, causes Junius to hesitate. If these words be of northern origin, he fixes upon the Ger. Spitten, spuere, despuere,—to spit, to spit down, as the root. In Goth. Spey-an; A. S. Spat-an. Spite being—dedignatio et contemptus rei, ad cujus mentionem fastidiosè despuimus,—disdain or contempt of any thing, at the mention of which we spit contumeliously. A forcible illustration occurs, Mar. viii. 65, "Sume agunnum him on spætan;" which Wiclif renders, "Summe bigunnen to bi-spete him;" manifesting their spite or despite strongly enough. And to this day, "To spit his spite" is a common expression. And G. Douglas, (in the Preface, l. 44.) "I spitte for dispitte." The applications of despite are more various and extensive than those of despise.

To act with spite, with contempt, with malignity, with malicious anger, mischievous resentment, resistance or opposition; to harass, to vex, to cross, to thwart, to defy.

And hadden despit, that wommon kyng schulde be.
R. Gloucester, p. 37.

Tille Emme, Hardknoute's moder, he did a grete outrage
His brother a foule despite, him self vileyn skandre, [i. e. slander.]
R. Brunne, p. 53.

For he litheth and loveth that Godes lawe despiteth.
Piers Ploughman, p. 116.

An hep of eremites. henten hem spades
Spitten & spradde donge. in despit of hunger.—Id. p. 137.

Wher a pottere of cley hath no power to make of the same gobet oo vessel into onour, a nothir into dispyte.
Wiclif. Romaynes, c. 9.

And whan she herde him werne her so,
She had in hert so great woo
And toke it in so great despite
That she without more respite
Was deed anon.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

On which he said how that his wives three
Honged hemself for hertes despitous.
Id. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6343.

Sone after cometh this constable home again,
And eke Alla, that king was of that lond,
And saw his wife despitously yslain,
For which ful oft he wept and wrong his hond.
Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5025.

Where their sect hath already fordone the faith, pulled down the churches, polluted the temples, put out and spoyled al good religious folke, ioyned frers and nũnes together in lechery, despited al sayntes, &c.
Sir T. More. Workes p. 284.

The gouernour allowed vs horses and a guide vnto another towne, wherein wee found one Michaas to be gouernour, a man full of malice and despight.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 64.

First we trust that among the clergy ther be many men of that goodnes & vertue, yⁱ scante a deuyll could finde in his harte to handle them in such despitous and despightfull manner.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 308.

Thẽ shall they be in carefulnesse, whyche nowe haue abused my wayes. and they that haue cast them oute despightfullye, shal dwell in paynes.
Bible, 1551. Esdras, b. iii. c. 9.

And so shal the princesses in Persia, and Media saye lykewise vnto all the kinges prices whẽ they heare of this dede of the quene; thus shall there aryse despytefulnes and wrathe ynoughe.—Id. Esther, c. 1.

Both I and hee that siely beast sustaine
For louing well and bearing faithfull harts,
Despitous checks, and rigorous disdaine,
Where both hath well deserued for our parts,
For friendship I, for offred seruice hee,
And yet thou neyther loouste the dog nor me.
Turbervile. To his Loue.

While diuerse partes of Christendome, some by the cruell Turkes are assaulted, and some by sundry sectes of heretikes through inward deuisiõ dispiteously mangled and torne.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1379.

Then having taken certain players and minstrels that came from Massina, he [Cleomenes] set up a stage within the enemies countrey, made a game of forty minas for the victor, and sate a whole day to look upon them, for no pleasure he took in the sight of it, but more to despight the enemies withall, in making them see how much he was stronger than they to make such a maygame in their own country, in despight of them.—North. Plutarch, p. 672.

Which when shee heard, as in despightfull wise,
She wilfully her sorrow did augment
And offred hope of comfort did despise.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 1.

But chiefely Paridell his hart did grate,
To heare him threaten so despightfully,
As if he did a dogge to kennell rate
That durst not bark. Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 9.

They are not pleased again, till they have gotten him into their inquisition, to examine him with despightfulness and torture.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 679.

Nath'lesse it fell with so despitious dreare
And heauy sway, that hard vnto his crowne
The shield it droue, and did the couering reare.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 8.

Despiteous reproaches are never seemely and decent in the mouth of a magistrate and man of honour.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 299.

Some of whom formerly hee had caused to bee despiteously dragged at horse-heeles, for the terrour of others.
Speed. King John, b. ix. c. 8. s. 23.

She look'd to sea-ward, but the sea was void,
And scarce in ken the sailing ships descry'd:
Stung with despight, and furious with despair,
She struck her trembling breast, and tore her hair.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. iv.

This with the hazard of the squire,
Inflam'd him with despiteful ire;
Courageously he fac'd about
And drew his other pistol out.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3.

Let the lying lips be put to silence: which cruelly, disdainfully, and despitefully speak against the righteous.
Bible. Psalm xxxi. 18.

Let us examine him with despitefulness and torture that we may know his meekness and prove his patience.
Id. Wisdom, ii. 19.

DESPOIL, v. Fr. Despouiller; It. Dispogliare; Lat. Despoliare. The Lat. Spolium, Tooke derives from the A. S. Spill-an, privare. Vossius merely conjectures.

"Fr. Despouiller,—to strip, uncloath, dis-array; despoyl; take away, unfurnish, deprive or bare of; to rob," (Cotgrave.)

Tho the Romeyns were wythout chef, dyscomfortd hii were
And to spradde hem her & ther & the othere after vaste,
And slowe & despoyiede, and to grounde hem caste.
R. Gloucester, p. 212.

——— And he in derke mete
With robbours and with revers. that riche men despoilen.
Piers Ploukman, p. 218.

And I that am put away from good men, and dispoiled of dignities, and defouled of my name by geasyng, haue suffred turmentes for my good deeds.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. i.

And for that nothing of hire olde gere
She shoulde bring into his hous, he bad
That women shuld despoilen hir right there,
Of which thise ladies weren nothing glad
To handle hire clothes wherin she was clad.
Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8250.

The clothed erth is than bare,
Dispoiled is the summer fare.—Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

Then the kynge rose and wente downe the scaffolde to the hygh auter to be sacred, at whiche consecracyon there were two archbyssahoppes, and ten byssahoppes, and before the aulter ther he was despoyled out of all his vestures of estate.
Berners. Froissart. Cronicle, vol. ii. c. 245.

Luc. What's that?
Lam. My poor life,
Which do not leave me as a farther torment,
Having despoil'd me of my sword, mine honor,
Hope of my ladies grace, fame and all else
That made it worth the keeping.
Beaum. & Fletch. Love's Cure, Act v. sc. 1.

But that which gladded all the warrior-train,
Though most were sorely wounded, none were slain,
The surgeons soon despoil'd them of their arms,
And some with salves they cure, and some with charms.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

What money was obtained is unknown, or what terms were stipulated for the maintenance of these despoiled and forlorne creatures; for by some particulars it appears as if an engagement of the kind was made.
Burke. On Mr. Fox's East India Bill.

DESPO'ND, v.
DESPO'NDENT.
DESPO'NDENCE.
DESPO'NDENCY.
DESPO'NDER.
DESPO'NDINGLY.

Despond is not in Junius, Skinner, or Minshew. Lat. Despond-eo, to pledge, to betroth, (de, and spondere, to pledge.) See To CORRESPOND.

Despondere is, also, to despair of. Holland renders Livy (3. 38) desponderant animos; they let fall their hearts and were discouraged. And Varro says, "Qui desponderat filiam, despondisse dicebatur, quod de sponte ejus, id est, ex voluntate exierat." And, "Sic despondisse animum quoque dicitur, ut despondisse filiam, quod suæ spontis statuerat finem;" because he had put an end to his own free will; his own freedom or liberty of action. And thus—

To yield, resign or abandon; (sc.) from hopelessness or despair; to give up or relinquish hope; to despair.

To morrow is in God's hand, and the care of it is his, and not ours, and therefore he bids us take no thought of tomorrow; that is, with no tormenting, carking, and desponding, thoughts.—Hopkins. Pract. Expos. on the Lord's Prayer

Tho' it becomes the best of men to have a yielding and a soft spirit under the afflicting hand of God, yet be careful to bear up thyself under the power and goodness of God from fainting and despondence.—Hale. Cont. vol. i. Of Afflictions.

To insist upon every particular circumstance, whereby men may aggravate their afflictions, is the ready means to add fuel to their impatience, and to drive them to despondency.—Bp Wilkins. Natural Religion, b. i. c. 17.

Thus mercy stretches out her hand, and saves
Despondng Peter sinking in the waves.
Dryden. Britannia Rediviva.

This [sincerity and integrity of the heart] enables a man to look back without horror, to look about him without shame, to look within without confusion, and to look forward without despondency.—Stillingfleet, vol. ii. Ser. 5.

For a despondent sinner to think thus of himself, that God will expect perfection from a man answerable to the measure of an angel, or that God will triumph in the mere torments of his creatures, or that he delights in their ruin; it is a sin equal to atheism; yea it is in some respects worse than atheism.—Bates. On the Fear of God, c. 15.

I am no desponder in my nature.—Swift.

The people, when once infected, lose their relish for happiness, saunter about with looks of despondence, ask after the calamities of the day, and receive no comfort but in heightening each others distress.

Goldsmith. Citizen of the World, Let. 68.

Mr Banks set out without delay and found his Indian friend leaning his head against a post, in an attitude of the utmost languor and despondency.

Cook. Voyage, vol. i. b. i. c. 11.

Swift, without a penny in his purse, was despondingly looking out of his window to gape away his time.

Sheridan. Life of Swift.

DESPONSAGE. } Lat. Desponsum, past
DESPONSA'TION. } part. of Despondere, to DESPO'NSORY. } pledge, to betroth. See DESPOND. Cockeram has desponsated, betrothed.

Of the same name there was also another Ethelbert of the East Angles, a good prince, who by the aduice of his councell persuaded to marriage (though against his will) went peaceable to King Offa for desponsage of Athulrid his daughter.

Fox. Martyrs, p. 103.

Yet she was a person of a rare sanctity, and so mortified a spirit, that for all this desponsation of her according to the desires of her parents, and the custome of the nation, she had not set one step toward the consummation of her marriage, so much as in thought.

Bp. Taylor. The Great Exemplar, pt. i. s. 1.

Insomuch that afterwards, upon the news from Rome that the dispensation was granted, the Prince having left the desponsorios in the hands of the Earl of Bristol, in which the Infanta Don Carlos was constituted the Prince's proxy to marry the Infanta on his behalf, &c.

Clarendon. Civil War, vol i. p. 36.

That in case the said Earl should insist upon the delivering of the desponsories, he would hold himself freed from the treaty by the said Earl's infringing of the capitulation.

State Trials. The Duke of Buckingham, an. 1626.

DE'SPOT, n. } Fr. Despote; It. and Sp.
DESPO'TICK, adj. } Despota; Mid. Lat. Des-
DESPO'TICAL. } pota; Gr. Δεσποτης, δεσπο-
DESPO'TICALLY. } ζειν, to rule or govern.
DE'SPOTISM. } " Fr. Despote,—a despot,—the chief or sovereign lord of a country." (Cotgrave.)

A husband's power over his wife is paternal and friendly, not magisterial and despotick.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 16.

Egypt, another Paradise, now barbarous and desart, and almost waste by a despoticall government of an imperious Turk.—Burton. Democritus, to the Reader, p. 48.

What Kings decree, the soldier must obey
Wag'd against foes: and when the wars are o'er,
Fit only to maintain despotick power.

Dryden. Sigismonda & Guiscardo.

This liberty is best preserved when the legislative power is lodged in several persons, especially if those persons are of different ranks and interests; for were they all of the same rank, and consequently have an interest to manage peculiar to that rank, it differs but little from a despotical government in a single person.—Spectator, No. 287.

To their favourite sons or brothers, they imparted the more lofty appellation of lord or despot, which was illustrated with new ornaments and prerogatives, and placed immediately after the person of the emperor himself.

Gibbon. Roman Empire, c. 53.

As virtue is necessary in a republic, and in a monarchy, honour, so fear is necessary in despotic government; with regard to virtue, there is no occasion for it; honour would be extremely dangerous.

Montesquieu. The Spirit of Laws, b. iii. c. 9.

What torments then must curse their guilty hours,
Who live immur'd in citadels and towers!
Who think, mistrustful of their menial band,
Each slave conceals a dagger in his hand!
Such chastisements the Gods for those ordain
Who uncontrol'd despotically reign.

Fawkes. Fragments of Menander.

Despotism,—sincere, unalloy'd rigid despotism, is the only form of government which may with safety to itself neglect the education of its infant poor.—Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 10.

DE-SPREAD, v. To spread abroad.

Her ivorie forehead, full of bounty braue
Like a broad table did itself dispread.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 3.

Her yellowe locks crisped like golden wire,
About her shoulders weren loosely shed.
And when the wind amongst them did inspire,
They waved like a penon wide dispred.—Id. Ib.

DE-SPUME. } Lat. Spuma, from spu-ere,
DESPUMA'TION. } and that from A. S. Speow-ian. " Fr. Despumer,—to clarifie, to scum the foam or froath off." (Cotgrave.)

Note by the way, that if honey be despumed, that is to say, skummed and clarified, it is evermore the better for any use.

Holland. Pinie, b. xxii. c. 24.

As touching the former hydromel, if it be made as it should be, of despumed and clarified honey, it is of singular use in that exquisite and spaire diet fit for sicke persons.

Id. Ib.

The fluids of the body appear to possess a power of separating and expelling any noxious substance which may have mixed itself with them. This they do in eruptive fevers, by a kind of despumation, as Sydenham calls it, analogous in some measure to the intestine action by which fermenting liquors work the yest to the surface.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 26.

DESSE'RT. Fr. Dessert, from Lat. Deservire. A word in Skinner's time but lately introduced. The last course or service at table; of fruits, comfits, sweetmeats, &c.

We shall, to make amends, endeavour afterwards, in our following miscellany, to entertain him again with more chearful fare, and afford him a dessert, to rectify his palat, and leave his mouth at last in good relish.

Shaftesbury. Miscel. Reflec. vol. iii. Misc. 4.

'Tis the dessert that graces all the feast,
For an ill end disparages the rest
A thousand things well done, and one forgot,
Defaces obligation by that blot.—King. Art of Cookery.

DE'STINE, v. } Fr. Destiner; It. Desti-
DE'STINABLE, adj. } nare; Sp. Destinar; Lat.
DE'STINABLY, ad. } Destinare, (de, and stare, DE'STINATE, v. } to stand.) Destinare est
DE'STINATE, adj. } aliquid ad finem certum
DESTINA'TION. } ordinare.
DE'STINAL, adj. } To stand, set or place,
DE'STINY, n. } (sc.) any fixed or certain end or purpose; to ordain, to appoint, to doom, to adjudge, to determine, to devote.

Thei don men deye thorgh here drynkes. er destyne hit wolde. Piers Ploughman, p. 143.

Wherfore it is none inconuenient if in that manner bee said, God to forne haue destenied both balde; and her badde werkes, whan hem ne their yuell deedes neither amēdeth, ne therto hem grace leaueth.—Chaucer. Test. of Love, b. iii.

Lo, herof cometh & herof is doen this miracle of the order destinable.—Id. Boecius, b. iv.

And all be it so, that these things ben diuers, yet neuertheless, hanged that one on that other, for why, the order destinably procedeth of the simplicitie of purueighaunce.

Id. Ib.

But I aske if there by any liberty of free wil, in this order of causes, yt cleauē thus togither in himselfe, or else I would weten if that the destinall chaine, constraineth the mouing of the courages of men.—Id. Ib. b. v.

And if so be thou wilt not do me grace,
Or if my destinee be shapen so,
That I shall nedes have on of hem two,
As sende me him that most desireth me.

Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2325.

But nowe I am nothyng agast,
I thank God: for Lachesis.
Ne Cloto, whiche hir felawe is,
Me shapen no suche destinee,
Whan thei at my natiuitee
My wordes setten as thei wolde.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

When the chylde is borne, thou as the father shalt geue it a name, not a name after thine own fantasie, but that name that God, agreeably vnto the thyng, did destinate and appoynt vnto hym, before the creation of the worlde.

Udal. Matthew, c. 1.

They hold moreouer, to be no purgatorie, nor that the suffrages of the church doo auaile the dead, either to lesse the paine of them that be destinat to hell, or to increase the glorie of them that be ordeined to saluation.

Fox. Martyrs, p. 170. Articles of the Greek Church.

Neuertheles these fortuned not vnto me either by myne owne peculyar destenye, neythet yet for any euill that I dyd.

Udal. 2 Timothye, c. 3.

The King [Edgar] inflam'd with her [Elfrida] love the more for that he had been so long defrauded and robb'd of her, resolv'd not only to recover his intercepted right, but to punish the interloper of his destin'd spouse.

Milton. History of England, b. v.

Stage-playes—they had their rise from Hell, wee Christians our nattiuite, and descent from Heauen: they were at first deuoted (yea, yet continue destinated) vnto Satan: we were at first baptized into, yea, consecrated wholy vnto Christ.

Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act ii.

For I. they might both die and be damned too, or if as Volkelius saith, the word κοιμωνται, obdormiscunt, sleep, be never used in the New Testament, of those that are destined to eternal destruction, then still may this be very reconcileable with our interpretation that many for this cause are weak and sickly and many others sleep.

Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 315.

For in this terrestrial state there are few things transacted, even in our intellectual part, but through the help and furtherance of corporal instruments; which by more than ordinary usage loose their edge and fitness for action, and so grow inept for their respective destination.

Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 12.

It is vndoubtedly true that the destinating, and deuoting of vnprofitable, pleasureable, heathenish, scandalous, and vnnecessary inventions, doeth make not onely the deuoted individualls; but likewise the whole kinde it selfe, vnlawfull vnto Christians.—Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act ii.

For the destinie whereof they were worthy, drew them unto this end, and made them forget the things that had already happened, that they might fulfil the punishment which was wanting to their torments.—Bible. Wisdome, c. 19.

But who can turne the streame of destinie,
Or breake the chaine of strong necessitie,
Which fast is tide to Joue's eternall seate?

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 5.

Mark well the place where first she lays her down,
There measure out thy walls, and build thy town,
And from thy guide Boeotia call the land,
In which the destin'd walls and town shall stand

Addison. Ovid Metam. b. iii.

[Who can withhold love from one] resembling him not in temper of body or lineaments of face, but in conformity of judgment and practice: partner of the one inheritance, and destinated to lead a life with him through all eternity, in peacefull consortship of joy and bliss!

Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 3.

Those temporary parts appear to have been designed by nature, not so much for the personal preservation of the female as for the propagation of the species: which destination not coming to be accomplished, till a woman, for instance, has attained to a competent age, appears to have been preordained by the author of mankind for the continuation of it.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 423.

But 'tis agreed, that there is Fatum Christianum, a certain destiny of every thing, regulated by the foreknowledge and providence of God.

Clark & Leibnitz. Mr. Leibnitz's Fifth Paper.

—— Hence in the race,
All emulous, he hears the clashing whips,
He feels the animating shouts: exerts
With eagerness his utmost powers; and strains,
And springs, and flies, to reach the destin'd goal.

Dodsley. Agriculture, c. 3.

Which of us in setting out upon a visit, a diversion, or an affair of business, apprehends a possibility of not arriving at the place of his destination: yet at the same time does not apprehend himself at liberty to alter his course in any part of his progress.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. iii. c. 26.

Thus the Pagans had the same notion with that which is mentioned in Scripture, of a double destiny depending upon human choice.—Jortin. Remarks on Eccles. History.

DE'STITUTE, v. } Fr. Destituer; Sp. Des-
DE'STITUTE, n. } tituir; Lat. Destituere, des-
DE'STITUTE, adj. } titutum. The Fr. and Sp.
DE'STITUTELY. } from the verb; the Eng.
DESTITU'TION. } from the past part. The Lat. destituere, (composed of de, and statuere, to fix,) is, defigere, deponere, to unfix, to displace or pull down; and then, derelinquere, to leave helpless.

To leave weak, or helpless, or in want; to desert, to forsake, to abandon, to deprive.

This faire lady on this wise destitute
Of all comfort and consolation.—Chaucer. Test. of Cres.

For the princes and magistrates ought to conuerte the goodis of these ydle erth burdens into the sustentacion of the poore, and maintayne teachers and scolers lerning the tongues and Holy Scriptures, so that the churches and cure ministracion be not destituted lerned men at any tyme.

Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 5.

Sirs, quod the Lorde of Couey, we repute you for good and trewe and valyant men, but we haue considred diuers thynges: wynter aprocheth, and we are destytute of victayles and other prouysions.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 174.

She beyng destitutely lefte withoute comforte of husbande, of children, of children's children, of all the worlde's solace, hath reposed all her whole hope in God.
Udal. 1 Timothye, c. 5.

His ladie and wife destituted of all honour and liuings, liueth a dolefull and miserable life.
Holinshed. Ireland, Epist. Ded. by Hooker.

It is the sinfullest thing in the world, to forsake or destitute a plantation, once in forwardness. For besides the dishonour, it is the guiltinesse of bloud, of many commiserable persons.—Bacon. Ess. Of Plantations.

As for the rest of the rebels, they (being destituted of their head) without stroke stricken, submitted themselues vnto the King's mercie.—Id. Hen. VII. p. 183.

With granted leave officious I return,
But much more wonder that the Son of God
In this wild solitude so long should bide
Of all things destitute, and well I know,
Not without hunger. Milton. Par. Reg. b. ii.

The understanding, when it ceases to be ennobled with excellent things, is made ignorant as a swine, dull as the foot of a rock; and the affections are in the destitution of their perfective actions made tumultuous, vexed and discomposed, to the height of rage and violence.
Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 19.

Sometime to gentle Tiber I retire,
And the fam'd river's empty shores admire,
That destitute of strength derives its course
From thirsty urns and an unfruitful source.
Addison. A Letter from Italy.

O, my friends, have pity on this poor destitute, for the hand of God hath touched her.
P. St. John. Sermon, (1737,) p. 224.

Giving my body to be burned—martyrdom itself—laying down my life for religion—has nothing in it acceptable to God, if it be destitute of this great principle, [charity.]
Gilpin, vol. iv. Ser. 6.

Friendship is the balm and cordial of life, and, without it, 'tis a heavy load not worth sustaining.—I am unhappy,—thy mother and thyself at a distance from me; and what can compensate for such a destitution.—Sterne, Let. 91.

DESTRO'Y, v.
DESTRO'YABLE.
DESTRO'YER.
DESTRO'YING, n.
DESTRU'CT, v.
DESTRU'CTIBLE.
DESTRU'CTION.
DESTRU'CTIVE.
DESTRU'CTIVELY.
DESTRU'CTIVENESS.
DESTRU'CTOR.

Fr. Destruire, détruire; Sp. Destruir; It. Distruggere; Lat. Destruere, destructum; de, and struere, which Vossius thinks is from Gr. Στερε-οειν; i. e. firmum solidumque reddere; and thus, equivalent to the English verb, to build, (see To CONSTRUCT;) and to destroy;—

To pull down any building or structure; any thing built or constructed; to demolish; to overthrow, to subvert, to lay waste, to ruin; to put to death, to kill.

Edwyne wende tho anon out of ys owe lond,
And destrude wyde aboute. R. Gloucester, p 242.

Laste the hye emperour for his outrage
Come and distruye al hys lond. Id. p. 46.

The ferthe sorow of this lond com thorgh the Danes,
The folk of the north slouh, destroied ther wanes
R. Brunne, p. 8.

My castels he takes, & seises my cites
Destruction he makes of rentes and fees. Id. p. 208.

And the Pariseen wenten out and maden a counsell agens him, how thei schulden distrye him.—Wiclif. Matt. c. 11.

And thei hadden on hem a kyng the aungel of depnesse to whom the name bi Ebrew is Labadon, but bi Greek Appolloun, and by Latyn he hath a name Extermynans, that is a destrier.—Id. Apocalips, c. 9.

For if I schal glorie ony thing more of oure power which the Lord ghaf to us into edifying and not into ghoure distruccioun I schal not be schamed.—Id. 2 Cor. c. 10.

The time eke that chaungeth all,
And all doeth waxe, and fostred be
And all thing destroyeth he.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

But how this toune came to destruction
Ne falleth not to purpose me to tel,
For it were a long digression. Id. Troilus, b. i.

Upon a tyme as it befelle
Ayenst Jude and Israell,
Whan sondry kynges come were
In purpose to destroie there
The people, whiche God kept tho.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

Wherof it melt, and from the hight
Withoutten helpe of any slight,
He [Icarus] fell to his destruction. Id. Ib. b iv.

For ye Romains ar but destroiers of peasible people, and theues to rob from other, that they sweate for.
Golden Boke, c. 31.

Loe good readers, nowe haue you a great high tragicall warning with not a little taut but a gret tunne fulle at once, of my mischeuious pernicious false pestilent peruertinge and destroyinge of the pure sense of Goddes holye woordes in this one place, which he wil shal stade for a playne profe that I dooe the same in all other places.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1103.

O come hither, and behold the workes of the Lorde, what destructions he hath brought vpon the earthe.
Bible, 1551. Psalme 46.

——— And now,
Through all restraint broke loose, he wings his way
Not far off heav'n, in precincts of light
Directly towards the new created world,
And man there plac't, with purpose to assay
If him by force he can destroy, or worse,
By some false guile pervert. Milton. Par. Lost, b. iii.

Whatsoever is in the world is but ὑλη πως εχουσα, matter so and so modified or qualified, all which modifications and qualifications of matter are in their own nature destroyable, and the matter itself (as the basis of them, not necessarily determin'd to this or that accident) is the only αγενητον και ανωλεθρον, the only necessary existent.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 70.

Hugo amongst these troops spy'd many more,
Who had, as brave destroyers, got renown;
And many forward wounds in boast they wore,
Which if not well reveng'd, had ne'er been shown.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. i. c. 2.

What little ground there is to persuade a man, left to his own free reason, that God should be pleased with the killing and burning of beasts, or with the destroying of such things by fire of which better use may be made, if they were disposed of some other way.
Bp. Wilkins. Of Natural Religon, b. i. c. 12.

The world which perished by water, was no other than the sublunary world; the heaven whereof is that which we call air, but the Scripture heaven; which sublunary heaven, together with the earth, was marred by that general deluge; and the creatures, belonging to them both, either wholly destructed, or marvellously corrupted from that they were before.—Mede. Paraphrase on St. Peter, (1642) p. 12.

We fear'd, that the fanatic war,
Which men against God's houses did declare,
Would from the Almighty enemy bring down
A sure destruction on our own.
Cowley. Ode upon his Majesty's Restoration and Return.

Thou fly'st thy country and more happy state
To seek in some strange land a stranger fate,
And under foreign climes and unknown stars,
T' encounter hazards and destructive wars
Sherburne. Forsaken Lydia.

The main of our affliction ariseth from the destructiveness of the sentence, as being therein contrary to that other our fundamental native right which enjoins, That fines should have regard to the qualities of the persons.
State Trials. John Lilburne, an. 1653.

Consider I beseech you, of the desperateness and excessive unavoidable destructiveness of these monstrous ways to the speedy peace and settlement of our church and state, and of the safety and security of the things yourselves have pitched on for peace and settlement in and by the treaty.
Parliament. Hist. an. 1648. Mr. Prynne's Speech.

Why should we not rather permit men to use their understandings as well as they can; and where they fail of the truth, to bear with them, as God himself without question will; than by stickling for every unnecessary truth, destroy that peace, and love, and amity, that ought to be among Christians.—Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 1.

The dry land surface we find naturally every where almost carpeted over with grass, and other agreeable wholesome plants; propagating themselves in a manner every where, and scarcely destroyable by the weather, the plough or any art.—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 11.

A victory so early, so complete and so cheaply purchased, that we have some reason to hope it may fix the fortune of the war, and put an end to the destructions of the destroyer.
Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 1.

That heavenly virgin, that exalted goodness
Could see me tortur'd with despairing love,
With artful tears could mourn my monstrous sufferings,
While her base malice plotted my destruction.
Smith. Phædra & Hippolitus, Act iii,

Loaded with gold, he sent his darling, far
From noise and tumults, and destructive war:
Committed to the faithless tyrant's care.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. iii.

And first, for the doctrine that states the time of repentance destructively to a pious life.—South, vol. vii. Ser. 6.

Helmont doth somewhere wittily call the fire the destructor and artificial death of things.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 527.

Sweet nature, stripp'd of her embroider'd robe,
Deplores the wasted regions of her globe;
And stands a witness at truth's awful bar,
To prove you there destroyers as ye are.
Cowper. Heroism.

Therefore forms, qualities and essences are producible by composition, destructible by dissolution, and interchangeable among one another by the various stationing of the materials composing them.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. i. c. 2.

DESU'ETUDE. Lat. De, and suere, quasi non ire,—to go by use or usage, to accustom.
Disuse; neglect or forbearance of use.

It is easily seen, that those things which a man useth himself unto, so that they seem to become another nature, yet some desuetude from them evidences to him, that they are not so necessary and unseparable as he once thought them.—Hale. Cont. vol. ii. Of Self-denial.

As this assistance of Presbyters was at first for necessity, and after by custom it grew a law, so now retro, first the necessity failed, and then the desuetude abrogated the law, which before, custome had established.
Bp. Taylor. Episcopacy Asserted.

A defect or desuetude of these latter [confirmations] must no less starve and alter, than a superfluity of the former [ordinations] overstock the church. Both of them, I am sure, likely to prove fatal to it.—South, vol. v. Ser. 1.

This is the only instance in which wise laws have suffered a sort of tacit repeal by a general consent in the neglect of them, and have passed into desuetude; and in such cases the old law cannot safely be restored but by new enactments.—Horsley. Speech on the Adultery Bill.

DESU'LTORY, adj.
DESU'LTORILY.
DESU'LTORINESS.
DESULTO'RIOUS.

Lat. Desilire, -sultum, (de, and salire, to leap.) Desultor, qui binos trahens equos, ex uno mira celeritate in alterum transiliret, (Vossius.)
Leaping, starting, moving quickly from one thing to another; moving by fits and starts; unsteady, inconstant, unsettled, wavering.

For as it happens in dreams and madnes, where the argument is good, and the discourse reasonable oftentimes, but because it is inferred from weak phantasms, and trifling and imperfect notices of things and obscure apprehensions, therefore it is not only desultorious and light, but insignificant, and far from ministering to knowledge.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 2.

Most readers, and even many learned men, peruse the Scripture so slightly and desultorily, that so transient and superficial a view makes them overlook in it a multitude of excellent and instructive things.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 786.

I say therefore, in which epistles, are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable (that are unlearned, i. e. unskilled and unversed in divine things: unstable, i. e. of light, desultory, unbalanced minds,) wrest as they do other Scriptures, to their own destruction.
Atterbury, vol. iii. Ser. 9.

Much of the seeming desultoriness of my method, and frequency of my rambling excursions, have been but intentional and charitable digressions out of my way, to bring some wandering friends unto theirs, and may closely enough pursue my intentions, even when they seem most to deviate from my theme.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 254. To the Reader.

This makes my reading wild and desultory: and I seek refuge from the uneasiness of thought from any book, let it be what it will, that can engage my attention.
Warburton. Let. Feb. 2, 1740.

DESU'ME. Lat. Desumere, (de, and sumere, to take.) See CONSUME.
To take away.

It is not with intent to reproach the Scripture, or those phrases that are desumed from it, but to shew the boldness and mistakes of them that have misapplied or abused them.
Hale. Cont. vol. i. Of Religion.

Nor is this Salamander's wool desumed from any animal but a minerall substance, metaphorically so called from this received opinion.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b iii. c. 14.

Every man must needs see that in the natural course of things this pebble doth suppose, as preexistent to it, the more simple matter out of which it is desumed, the heat and influence of the sun, and the due preparation of the matter, which takes up a competent time, and that necessarily, before this pebble had its complete being.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 76.

In some cases this kind of vessel is inferiour to those tubulated retorts, that were of old in use, and mentioned by Basilius Valentinus, and from which Glauber probably desumed that, which we have been speaking of.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 140.

Which may appear by that part of our eighteenth experiment whence the matter of fact is desumed.
Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 132.

DETA'CH, v. } De, and tach, from the
DETA'CHED. } A.S. Tæc-an, capere, to take.
DETA'CHEDLY. } To take from or away; to
DETA'CHMENT. } remove any thing attached, (qv.) any thing fixed, fastened, united or conjoined.—to disunite, disjoin, separate, send part away.

The Elector sent Count Mercy with a considerable body, to pass the Rhine near Basil, and on design to break into Franche Comte: but a detached body of the French lying in their way there followed a very sharp engagement.
Burnet. Own Time, an. 1709.

Brief notices of different particulars of this case, are given detachedly by Rushworth and Whitelocke; and the judge himself has left us some very bold and spirited accounts of his bold and spirited carriage, and arguments in the course of it.—State Trials. Judge Jenkins, an. 1647.

It was pretended that he [the Duke of Marlborough] ought to have sent a force to support Opdam, or made an attempt on Villeroy's army, when it was weakened by the detachment sent with Boufflers.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1703.

They are, in short, instruments in the hands of our Maker, to improve our minds, to rectify our failings, to detach us from the present scene, to fix our affections on things above.
Porteus, vol. ii. Ser. 1.

'Tis not for our own strength, brother Shandy; a centinel in a wooden centry-box might as well pretend to stand it out against a detachment of fifty men. We are upheld by the grace and the assistance of the best of beings.
Sterne. Tristram Shandy, vol. iv. c. 7.

DETAIL, v. } "Fr. Détailler,—to piecemeal,
DETA'IL, n. } to cut into pieces or parcels. Tale, the past part. of A.S. verb Tell-an,—something told; to tell by tale, i. e. by numeration, not by weight or measure, but by the number told. Retail, told over again," (Tooke, ii. 352.) To detail—

To tell or enumerate the particulars, to particularize, to state minutely.

As if a man would say, that necessary it is for him to offer wrong in detaile, who mindeth to do right in the gross.
Holland. Plutarch, p 306.

But I shall not enter into a detail of the arguments of the earth's motion, and the objections made against it, because I have done this in the preface.
Derham. Astro-Theology, b. iv. c. 3.

I mean not to write his [Evelyn] life, which may be found detailed in the new edition of his Sculptura, in Collins's Baronetage, in the General Dictionary, and in the New Biographical Dictionary.
Walpole. Catalogue of Engravers, vol. v. p. 145.

Though Homer describes Laertes in his rural occupations as busied in this part of agriculture; yet Hesiod, in a professed and detailed poem on the subject, never once mentions the method of dunging the land.
Warburton. Div. Leg. b. iv. p. 83. Note.

He [Job] makes a transition from the singular to the plural, and back again, a remarkable amplification intervening, expressive of his desire of death, the force and boldness of which is incomparable: at last, as if suddenly recollecting himself, he returns to the former subject, which he had apparently quitted, and resumes the detail of his own misery.
Lowth. Poetry of the Hebrews, by Gregory, vol. i. Lec. 14.

DETAIN. } Fr. Détenir; It. Detenere;
DETA'INER. } Sp. Detener; Lat. Detin-ere, DETA'INING, n. } detentum, (de, and tenere, to DETA'INMENT. } hold.)
DETE'NTION. } To hold from, or withhold;
DETI'NUE. } to hold or keep back, (sc.) from going away; to stop or stay, to retard or delay.

Thomas Archbishop of Yorke, of his great goodnes
Unto this place did restore willingly again
Those lands, which Aldred his precessor dubtless
By 29 yeare wrongfully did detayne.
R. Gloucester, p. 582. Ap.

There is not so ranke a traytor, nor so arrant a thiefe, not so cruel a murderer, which is apprehended and deteigned in prisone for his offence, but he shal be brought before the justice to heare his iudgemente.—Hall. Hen. IV. an. 1.

For some of thê be fayne for their soluciô, to graunt almost that their paine in the fire wer but a detaining therin by some stronger power then themselfe, & then wer the pain but as a prisônent and restraint of lybertie, if the fyre burn them not.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 886.

And lest, some bad and untrue conceits might be had as well of the cause of the earl's detainment, as of the manner of his death, it was therefore thought necessary to have the truth thereof made known in that presence.
State Trials. Death of Northumberland, an. 1585.

So craving expedition of his demand, minding to proceede further south without long detention in those partes, he dismissed them after promise given to their best endeauour to satisfie speedily his so reasonable request.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p 150.

For pity now she can no more detain him;
The poor fool prays her that he may depart:
She is resolv'd no longer to restrain him:
Bids him farewell, and look well to her heart.
Shakespeare. Venus & Adonis.

The commandment of the writ being to shew the cause of his detaining in prison, the keeper of the gate-house doth not give a full answer unto the writ, unless the cause of the detainment in prison be returned.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 9.

That no freemen ought to be committed or detained in prison by the command of the king or privy council, or any other, unless some cause of the commitment, detainer, or restraint be expressed, for which by law he ought to be committed, detained, or restrained.—State Trials. Proceedings in Parliament. Liberty of the Subject, an. 1628.

'Twere better and safer to venture the casting away one almes sometimes, then by scruples and prudence to endanger the detaining a thousand, when they are due and necessary.—Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 295.

In regard whereof there was nothing could assure the quiet of both realms in their opinions but their detention under safe custody, which could not be esteemed dishonourable, the just causes and occasions being published and made manifest to the world.—Spotswood. Ch. of Scot. an. 1570.

His pious mother, anxious for his life,
Detain'd her son; and me, my pious wife.
To them the blossoms of our youth were due;
Our riper manhood we reserv'd for you.
Dryden. Ovid. Met. b xiii.

When the same eye, without the least detainment in any of the particular parts, and resting, as it were, immoveable in the middle, or center of the tablature, may see at once, in an agreeable and perfect correspondency, all which is there exhibited to the sight.
Shaftesbury. The Judgment of Hercules, c. 5.

That which is got by those means [fraud, &c] is not our own; nor is the possession of it truly wealth, but usurpation, and detention of spoil and rapine which we ought to disengage.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 5.

But I'll play fast and loose with you yet, if there be law, and my Minor and writings are not forth coming, I'll bring my action of detinue or trover.
Wycherley. The Plain Dealer, Act iii. sc. 1.

Most pressing instances were still made that the canoes might be restored; and having now the greatest reason to believe, either that the things for which I detained them were not in the island, or that those, who suffered by their detention, had not sufficient influence over the thieves to prevail upon them to relinquish their booty, I determined at length to give them up.—Cook. Voyage, vol. i. b. i. c. 14.

For there can never be a deposit without the owner's consent, and a depositary would be chargeable only for gross negligence, whereas the pawnee, whose special property is determined by the wrongful detainer, becomes liable in all possible events to make good the thing lost, or to relinquish his debt.—Sir W. Jones. Works. The Law of Bailments.

If I lend a man a horse, and he afterwards refuses to restore it, this injury consists in the detaining, and not in the original taking, and the regular method for me, to recover possession, is by action of detinue.
State Trials. Proceedings on Habeas Corpus, an. 1627.

DETE'CT, v. } Lat. Detegere, detectum, to DETE'CT, adj. } uncover, (de, and tegere, to DETE'CTOR. } cover.)
DETE'CTION. } To uncover, to discover, to disclose, to lay bare, to expose, (sc. the guilt, the criminality;) to reveal, to bring to light, to see or search through any concealment: and hence, to try, to prove, to put upon trial, to accuse.

If he be denoûced or detected unto him, either by cômon fame, or other iformation, &c.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 219.

He was vntruly judged to have preached such articles as he was detected of.—Id. Ib. p. 112.

If he that weareth it [an auncient robe] be vyciouse, it more detecteth howe moch he is vnworthy to wear it;—the remembraunce of his noble auncetour makynge men to abhorre the reproche gyuen by an yuell successour.
Sir T. Elyot. Governor, b. ii. c. 4.

But the wiely and wicked thoughtes of such, the light of the truth of the Gospel when it ariseth, shal plainly find out & detect.—Udal. Luke, c. 2.

This ix. yere, aboute Mydlent a preest named Sir Thomas Bagley, and vicar of a vyllage in Essex, called Manuedeñ, a lytell from Walden, was detect of heresy, vpon the whiche he was degrated, and then brent in the place of Smythfielde.
Fabyan, an. 1531.

He sheweth incidêtly wherfore it were not reason in a detection of heresy, to suffer the witnesses published and the crime wel proued, any new witnesses to be receiued for the partie that is accused.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 211.

Duke. I never heard the absent Duke much detected for women, he was not enclin'd that way.
Shakespeare. Meas. for Meas. Act iii. sc. 2.

I mean not in speaking this to upbraid or detect Timoleon, for that he accepted a fair house the Syracusans gave him in the city, and a goodly manor also in the countrey: for in such cases there is no dishonesty in receiving, but yet it is greater honesty to refuse then to take.
North. Plutarch, p. 237.

Now before I leave this, I shall take the opportunity, which this head offers, to endeavour the detection of some grand prejudices of sense, in two instances.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 9.

In which bargain, that the city might receive no loss, the tenth part of the fine was ordained as a reward unto the detectors of lands concealed.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. v. c. 3. s. 13.

——— While he with watchful eye
Observes, and shoots their treasons as they fly;
Their weekly frauds his keen replies detect;
He undeceives more fast than they infect.
Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

And that no man whatsoever, so presented and detected by the virtue of the oaths of such questmen, shall molest or trouble at the law any of the questmen for such presenting, upon pain that every such detected offender commencing any such action against the detector in such case, shall forfeit to the queen's majesty's use ten pound.
Strype. Life of Grindal. Original Papers, b. i. No. 6.

These things so happily meeting, may argue God (who mouldeth the hearts, who guideth the hands, who enlighteneth the minds of man) to have been engaged in the detection of this day's black conspiracy.
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 11.

For were not such miracles and oracles at last generally believed? or, if several impostures were detected, does the author imagine that such detection would utterly sink the credit of all future miracles.
Hurd. Remarks on Mr. Weston's Enquiry.

The Romans were plagued with a set of public officers, belonging to the emperor's court, called Curiosi, and Imperatoris oculi, part of whose employment was to go about as detectors of frauds and misdemeanors.
Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

DETE'NEBRATE. Lat. De, and tenebræ, darkness, which Vossius thinks is from ten-ere, to hold; because men in darkness, (in tenebris,) are held (quasi teneantur,) and dare not move themselves freely least they strike against any thing, or fall from an eminence.

To darken, to obscure.

Yet are their tractates little auxiliary unto ours, nor afford us any light to detenebrate and clear the truth.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 6.

DETE'R, v. } Lat. Deterrere, to frighten
DETE'RMENT. } from, (de, and terrere, Gr.
DETE'RRING, n. } Ταράσσ-ω, to frighten.)

To frighten from, (sc. doing any thing;) to cause to cease or desist; and thus, to hinder, to prevent.

So much the horror of so vile a deed,
In vilest minds, deters them to proceed.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iii.

C. It is, first, a determent from this sin; secondly, a direction how to avoid it. The determent this; to consider how fearful a thing it were, if God should judge us without mercy; and how reasonable it is, that he should so do, if we be so unmercifull to other men.
Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 91.

For although on her head there seems to be crownes of gold, and her haire like the haire of women, yet her teeth appeare as the teeth of lions and her sting like that of scorpions; so that the deterrings and disabuses appeare together with the delectations.
Mountague. Dev. Ess. pt. i. Treat. 10. c. 4.

So that upon consideration of the whole matter, there is no reason why any man should be deterr'd from a holy and virtuous life for fear of the labour and paine of it. Because every one that is wicked takes more paine in another way, and is more industrious only to a worse purpose.
Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 7.

As piety doth require duties somewhat high and hard, as much crossing the natural inclinations and desires of men, it particularly for the over-ruling such aversion, doth need answerably great encouragements to the practice, and determents from the transgression of what it requireth.
Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 32.

Behaving with the agility and boldness peculiar to sailors, they were rather animated than deterred by the flames and falling buildings amongst which they wrought.
Anson. Voyage round the World, b. iii. c. 10.

DETE'RGE, v. DETE'RGENT, adj. DETE'RGENT, s. DETE'RSION. DETE'RSIVE, s. } Lat. Detergere, detersum, to wipe away, (de, and tergere, tersum, to wipe, which Vossius thinks is from Τερσ-ειν, Æol. for Τειρ-ειν, which signifies Ξηραι-ειν, or siccare, to dry; and, consequentially, to wipe or rub dry.)

To wipe off or away, to cleanse, to purify.

When it is burnt, there is made of the ashes a strong lele, very detersive, and scouring.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 607.

After I was secured of the bleeding, I made way for the easy discharge of matter, and deterged the abscess.
Wiseman. Surgery, b. i. c. 16.

The food ought to be nourishing and detergent.
Arburthnot.

If too mild detergents caused the flesh to grow lax and spongy, then more powerful driers are required.
Wiseman. Surgery, b. ii. c. 6.

I furthered the detersion of the ulcer by rubbing it with vitriol stone.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 9.

The other ulcers and excoriations I dressed, some with detersives.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 7.

DETE'RIORATE, v. DETERIORA'TION. } Lat. Deterius a terendo; because things are the worse, the more they are worn.

"Fr. Détériorer,—to impair, make worse, mar, spoyl, (destroy,)" Cotgrave.

And besides, the refined gold, there lay upon the cavity of the coppel some dark-coloured recrements, which we concluded to have proceeded from the deteriorated metal, not from the lead.—Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 367.

It is not, therefore, without deep concern that I observe a measure proposed to the legislature which has a direct tendency to degrade grammar schools; and, if not absolutely to abolish them or diminish their number, yet to alter and deteriorate their constitution.
Knox. Remarks on Grammar Schools.

Such changes are falsely imputed to levity, falshood, or caprice in the patron, since they may be more justly ascribed to the client's gradual deterioration.
Goldsmith. Citizen of the World, Let. 99.

DETE'RMINE, v. DETE'RMINABLE. DETE'RMINATE, adj. DETE'RMINATELY. DETERMINA'TION. DETE'RMINATIVE, adj. DETE'RMINATOR. DETE'RMINER. DETE'RMINING, s. DETE'RMINEDLY. } Fr. Déterminer; Sp. Determinar; It. Determinare; Lat. Determinare, terminum dare, to bound, to fix the bound or terminus. Gr. Τερμων, ονος.

To bound, to limit, to define, to end; to confine, fix or settle the bounds, the limits, the ends; and thus, (met.)—

To conclude, to decide, to resolve.

Chaucer writes determission.

But I sei as longe tyme as the eyr is a litil child, he diuerith no thing fro a seruant whanne he is lord of alle thingis, but he is undir keperis and tutouris into the tyme determined of the fadir.—Wiclif. Galathies, c. 4.

As Tullius can determine
Which in his time was full sage.—Chaucer. R. of the R.

Have ye than a figure determinat
In hells, ther ye ben in your estat?
Id. The Freres Tale, v. 7041.

But nowe to enforme thee, that yee been lich to Goddes, these clerkes sain, and in determinacion shewen, that three things hauen the names of Goddes been cleaped, that is to saine: Man, Deuill, and Images.
Id. The Testament of Love, b. i.

This dualitie after Clerkes determission, is founden in euery creature, be it neuer so single of ouhed.—Id. Ib. b. ii.

——— They determine,
That in the maner as it stoode,
They wolde hym hath in childes blood
Within seuen winter age.—Gower. Con. A b. ii.

For I am determined to gather the people and to brynge the kyngdomes together that I maye poure out myne anger, yea all my wrathful displeasure vpon them.
Bible, 1551. Sophony, c. 3.

And so the matter was a determynge (concernynge the men that had outlandysh wyves) vntyll the new moone of the fyrst moneth.—Id. Esdras, b. iii. c. 9.

Item, that he contrary to the great Charter of England caused dyuers lustie men to appele diuers olde men, vpon matters determinable at the common law, in the court marciall, because that in that court is no triall but onely by battaile.—Hall. Henry IV. Introd.

Therefore I have not thought amisse now to finish and pece up the said Complaynt of Philomene, observing neuerthelesse the same determinate inuention which I had propounded and begonne (as it is saide) twelue yeeres now past.
Gascoigne. The Complaynt of Philomene.

But whē it [a kynge to raygne ouer thē] was ones determinally graunted them, what was more earnestly requyred of God in that magnifycent mynystracyon, then were the necessary affayres of relygion.—Bale. Apology, Ep. Ded.

At such time as Alexander assembled the Grecians in Isthmos for the determinacion of his iourney into Perse, many oratours & philosophers came to visite him, onely Diogenes that remayned about Corinth, kept him selfe away.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 15.

Then y^e iiii. day of May was an Oyer & determiner at Londo before y^e Mayre, the Duke of Norffolke, the Erle of Surrey and other.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 9.

He said likewise, he would undertake (and he could not but be believ'd from the reasonableness of it,) that his presence, would in a moment, determine the restitution of the Palatinate to his brother and sister.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. p. 13.

The circuit thereof, through divers creeks, is not well determinable; but as astronomers use to measure the stars, we may account it a city of the first magnitude.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 215

And it seemeth that upon this aduise they tooke their determinate resolution for this course, and to put it into execution with all speede, eyther that night or the next at the furthest.—Stow. Queen Elizabeth, an. 1601.

And the necessitie which might have secured more the creature, would not have honoured so much the Creator; God would have receiv'd no voluntary love for his only creatures indued with that capacitie, if the affections of angels and men had been determinately fix'd by their creation.—Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 3. s. 1.

Why do we stick in this point [in reforming the church] and not rather proceed in it with all expedition? For indeed according to the laws of this kingdom, as it hath the dignity of pre-eminence, so let us give it the priority in our determinations.
State Trials. Proceedings against the Bp. of Ely, an. 1640.

Upon the same account, as our Lord Christ's body could not be longer detained under the power of death, then the determinate time of three days, because the debt which he undertook was paid: so that "it was not possible he should be holden of it." Acts, ii. 24.
Hale. Cont. vol. ii. The Knowl. of Christ Crucified.

From whence notwithstanding we cannot conclude the non-existence of the rainbow; nor is that chronology naturally established, which computeth the antiquity of effects arising from physical and setled causes, by additional impositions from voluntary determinators.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vii. c. 4.

So that the Sanhedrin and Congregation of the people were the highest soveraigne power, and principall determiners of publike matters concerning warre and peace.
Prynne. Treachery and Disloyalty, &c. pt. v. p. 141.

Amongst the rest for the determining of quarrels that might arise in case of doubtful title, or of false accusation or the like, they put themselves upon many unusual forms of tryal; as to handle red hot iron, to walk bare foot on burning coals.—Hales. Rem. Sermon on Duels.

But the answer to this, is not difficult, viz: That the point now before us is not wholly determinable from the bare grammatical use of the words; but the sense of these words must be sometimes also determined, by the particular state and circumstance of the objects to which they are applied.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 6.

Now measure alone in any modern language, does not constitute verse; those of the ancients in Greek and Latin, consisted in quantity of words, and a determinate number of feet.—Dryden. Ess. On Dramatick Poesie.

The parliament having received an account of the hopeful condition of their affairs in Ireland, and of the great appearance there was of a speedy determination of that war, appointed a committee to summon before them those adventurers who, in the year 1641, had advanced monies upon the lands in Ireland.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 339.

We own it [Scripture] to be the rule of our lives, and the foundation of our faith, and in all our considerable controversies we place it in the throne (as the councils of Ephesus and Aquileia did) for the moderator and determiner of such doubts and differences.
Comber. Comp. to the Temple. The Lessons, pt. i. s. 9.

By determining the will, if the phrase be used with any meaning, must be intended, causing that the act of the will or choice should be thus, and not otherwise: and the will is said to be determined, when, in consequence of some action, or influence, its choice is directed to, and fixed upon a particular object.—Edwards. Freed. of the Will, pt. i. s. 2.

Their true and real character, as to virtue and vice, is determinable only by their inward principles and sentiments, which are known to God alone, who searcheth the heart and reins.—Sherlock, vol. i. Dis. 25.

We perceive the distance of visible objects more exactly and determinately with two eyes than with one.
Reid. Enquiry, c. 6. s. 22.

But if the term, added to make up the complex subject, does not necessarily or constantly belong to it, then it is determinative, and limits the subject to a particular part of its extension; as, Every pious man shall be happy.
Watts. Logic, pt. ii. c. 2.

——— And where is he,
So stubborn and determinedly stiff,
But shall at some time bend the knee to love,
And make obeisance to his mighty shrine?
Cumberland. From Alexis. Observer, No. 143.

To talk of the determination of the will, supposes an effect, which must have a cause. If the will be determined, there is a determiner.
J. Edwards. Freedom of the Will, pt. i. s. 2.

DETE'ST, v. DETE'STABLE. DETE'STABLY. DETE'STABLENESS. DETE'STATE. DETESTA'TION. DETE'STER. DETE'STING, s. } Fr. Détester; It. Detestare; Sp. Detestar; Lat. Detestari. Obtestatio est cum Deus testis in meliorem partem vocatur. Detestatio, cum in deteriorem, (Festus.) Deum testari hoc vel illud mihi odiosum. To call God to witness that this or that is odious or hateful to me. And, generally,

To loathe, abhor, hate, abominate; dislike in a great degree. See ATTEST, OBTEST, &c.

But I finde in Erasmus my derlyng yt he detesteth and abhorreth the errours and heresies that Tyndall plainly teacheth and abideth by, and therefore Erasmus my derlyng shalbe my dere derlyng stil.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 422.

And doubtlesse if you bryng not foorth the holy fathers that make for you, you shall not alonely bee taken for abhominable and open lyers, but also for shameful and detestable sclaunderers both of holy church, and also of holy fathers.
Barnes. Works, p. 302.

Yet it hath been tolde vs by diuers great clerkes that neither she is our lawful doughter nor her mother our lawful wife, but that we liue together abhominably and detestably in open adultery.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 20.

How dare he bee ▪ impudente as to embrace and worshippe this holie booke, the whiche in all kinde of liuing and conuersacion is viterly geuen and married vnto this worlde, whiche as a mortall enemy the doctrine of the Ghospel dooeth detestate & abhorre.—Udal. John, Pref.

For if an open sinner be found among vs, we must immediatly amende him or caste him out of the congregation with defiance and detestation of his sinne.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 426.

Daily he tempted her with this or that,
And neuer suffred her to be at rest:
But euermore she him refused flat
And all his fained kindnesse did detest.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 8.

By reason of his cruelty, he became detestable, not onely to his owne subjects but also to his neighbours round about.
Usher. Annals, an. 3867.

Lycurgus detestably abhorring this brutish and savage unnaturalness of the woman, did not reject her offer made him, but seemed rather to be very glad, then to dislike it.
North. Plutarch, p. 34.

Well therefore might the lord president, whom I shall always mention with as much honour, as you with contempt, nay whom your contempt confirms to me to be the more honourable, well might he detestate star-chamber examinations, as they had been abused in the late king's days.
State Trials. Col. J. Lilburne, an. 1649.

The Earle of Kildare being charged before King Henry the Seauenth, for burning the metropolitane church of Casellis in Ireland, and many witnesses procured to auouch the trueth of the article against him, he sodainly confessed it to the great wondring and detestation of the counsel.
Camden. Remains. Wise Speeches.

Which is nothing else but to rob men, and make God the receiver, who is the detester, and will be the punisher, of such crimes.—Hopkins. Expos. upon the 1st Commandment.

And yet this is not enough to inferre, that we consent with the Lutherans, eyther in their abhorring and detesting of it, or in those opinions which they hold against it; except there could be given, Nihil tertium.
Mountagu. Appeale to Cæsar, p. 57.

Amidst our course Zacynthian woods appear;
And next by rocky Neriots we steer:
We fly from Ithaca's detested shore,
And curse the land which dire Ulysses bore.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. iii.

All that had made defection from their cause, or that were thought indifferent as to either side, which they call detestable neutrality, were put out of commission.
Burnet. Own Time, b. i.

Other occasions will put us upon this thought: but chiefly a strong view of merit in a generous character, oppos'd to some detestably vile one.

Shaftesbury. Of Wit and Humour, pt iv. s. 2.

Under the strong image of the unfitness and abominableness, and detestableness and profaneness of any uncleanness or impurity appearing in the Temple of God, the odiousness of all moral impurity, of all debauched practices whatsoever, in any person who professes himself to be a worshipper of God, is set forth after a more lively and affecting manner.—Clarke, vol. i. Ser. 40.

But here I had a lingering view of approaching death, and little or no hopes of escaping it; and I must confess that my courage, which I had hitherto kept up, failed me here; and I made very sad reflections on my former life, and look'd back with horrour and detestation, on actions which before I disliked, but now I trembled at the remembrance of.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1688.

It grew high time for the English nation to think of recovering itself from some of that infamy and loud reproach, that the spilling of innocent royal blood, and the prophane invasion of all that was sacred or civil had brought upon it in the opinion of all the nations round about, that stood as spectators and detesters of those religious barbarities, those villanies cloaked and sanctified with the name of reformation.—South, vol. ix. Ser. 4.

For as the gates of Hades I detest
The sordid wretch, whom want can tempt to lie.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xiv.

DE-THRONE, v. DETHRO'NIZE. DETHRONIZA'TION. DETHRO'NEMENT. } Ger. Thron; Dut. Troon; Fr. Throne, thron; Sp. Trono; It. Trono; Lat. Thronus; Gr. Θρονος, from the unused θρα-ειν, sedere, to sit. See THRONE, and ENTHRONE.

To remove from the throne, or seat.

The king in signe of amitie stayed his cosen the Earle of Derbie (the same who afterward dethroned him) to supper.

Speed. Rich. II. b. ix. c. 13.

As for the queene, when shee was (God knows how farre guilty) adiertised of her husband's dethronization, shee outwardly expressed so great extremity of passion (notwithstanding that at the same time shee was tolde of her sonnes surrogation) as if shee had beene distraught of her wittes.

Id. Edw. II. b. ix. c. 12. s. 73.

——Sesostris; (proud Egyptian King,
That monarchs harness'd to his chariot yok'd,
Base servitude! and his dethron'd compeers
Lash'd furious; they in sullen majesty
Drew the uneasy load.) J. Philips. Blenheim.

In December 1647 he [Silas Titus] was taken into favour for a time by Ol. Cromwell and the army, to persuade the king, then in the Isle of Wight, to consent to the 4 votes of dethronizing him.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

The contingency of uniting France and Spain under the same prince appeared more remote, about the middle of the last great war, when the dethronement of Philip in favour of Charles was made a condition of peace sine qua non, than the contingency of a union of the Imperial and Spanish crowns.

Bolingbroke. On History, Let. 8.

The question of dethroning, or, if these gentlemen like the phrase better, "cashiering kings," will always be, as it has always been, an extraordinary question of state, and wholly out of the law; a question (like all other questions of state) of dispositions, and of means, and of probable consequences, rather than positive rights.—Burke. On the French Revol.

DETI'NUE. See DETAIN.

DE-TOMB, v. To remove from the tomb.

Crownes, throwne from thrones to tombes, detomb'd arise
To match thy Muse with a monarchicke theame,
That whilst her sacred soaring cuts the skyes,
A vulgar subject may not wrong the same.

Stirling. To the Author of the Monarchicke Tragedies.

DE'TONATE, v. DETONA'TION. DE'TONIZE. } Lat. De, and ton-are; Gr. Τον-σειν, intendere, (sc.) vocem, to stretch the voice, to shout.

To make a loud noise, to crack, to explode. A word brought much into use lately by the invention of detonating balls.

For the clear comprehending of this experiment, you may be pleased, Pyrophilus, to take notice, 1. That a new coal is not to be cast on the nitre, till the detonation occasioned by the former be either quite or altogether ended.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 362.

Nineteen parts in twenty of detonized nitre is destroyed in eighteen days.—Arbuthnot. On Air.

DETO'RT. DETO'RSION. } Lat. Detorquere, detortum, (de, and torquere, to twist, to wrest.) See DISTORT.

But [the author] hath only wrested and detorted such actions of state, as in times of his service have been managed.—Bacon. Observations on a Libel.

The Arians opposed the apostolick tradition, and by corrupting detorted the words of Scripture to their sence.

Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 475.

And 'tis worth observing that many authorities, which the Papists produce for the external sacrifice of the body of Christ in the masse, are but the detortion and disguising of those places which belong to the offertory of the people.

Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 375.

His ninth section hath somewhat new in it—but perfectly agreeable to the mistakes and detortions gleaned from the Catholick gentleman.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 75.

It is of great moment to take off all possible misconstruction that can be wrested or detorted from the tenor and expressions of the libelled explication.

State Trials. The Earle of Argyle, an. 1681.

Thus much is intimated by the original word στρεβλουν, which signifies, either to detort or turn away, or to torment, and put to the question.—Atterbury, vol. iii. Ser. 11.

DETO'URS, n. "Fr. Détours,—a turning, by-way, crooked way; also, a cunning shift, a subtile evasion, crafty avoidance," (Cotgrave.) See DETURN.

The ablest advocates of necessity now inveloping it in systems; and insinuating it in all the artful detours of what they call a sufficient reason.—Warburton. Def. of Mr. Pope.

DETRA'CT, v. DETRA'CTER. DETRA'CTOR. DETRA'CTION. DETRA'CTIVE. DETRA'CTORY. DETRA'CTRESS. } Fr. Détracter; It. Detrahere, detrarre; Sp. Detratar, detractar; Lat. Detrahere (ctum), aliquid de famâ alterius trahere, (Minshew.) To draw or take away—from the fame of another. (Lit.)—To draw or take away from; to traduce, to withdraw; and (met.) with a subaudition of the fame or reputation of another.

Detraction,—slander, calumny.

Bacon, in his judicial Charge upon the Commission for the Verge, is (in an old edition) made to use the word detraction, (lit.) viz. "The detraction of the eggs of wild fowl." The quarto edition of his works, (iii. 559,) reads "Destruction."

Wolsey wrote detray. See quotation from Burnet.

Lest peraunture stryuyngis, enueyes, sturdinessis, dissencioums, and detractiouns, priuy spechis of discord, bolnyngis bi pride, debatis ben among thou.

Wiclif. Galathies, c. 12.

Priuy backbiteris, detractoris, hateful to God, debatouris, proude and highe ouer measure.—Id. Romaynes, c. 1.

Forsoth Salomon sayth, That flaterie is werse than detraction: for sometime detraction maketh an hautein man to be the more humble, for he dredeth detraction, but certes flaterie maketh a man to enhaunce his herte and his countenance.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

This sinne of backbiting or detracting hath certain spices, as thus: som men preiseth his neighbour by a wicked intente, for he maketh alway a wicked knotte at the laste ende: alway he maketh a nut at the last ende, that is digne of more blame, than is worthe all the preising.—Id. Ib.

Touchend as of enuious brood
I wote not one of all good.
But netheles suche as thei bee,
Yet there is one, and that is hee
Which cleped is detraction.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

Ye be put at liberty so to qualify, so to add, detray, immix, change, chuse or mend as ye shall think good.

Burnet. Records, b. ii. No. 22. Dispatch of the Cardinals.

And thus it appeareth that the souldiars wages, and the transportation may be defrayed for farre lesse summes of money, then the detractours of this enterprise haue giuen out.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 178.

We that calumnious critic may eschew,
That blasteth all things with his poison'd breath,
Detracting what laboriously we do,
Only with that which he but idly saith.

Drayton. Moses his Birth and Miracles, b. ii.

For Scipio African on the other side, if we shall rather credit the best authors that write, then a number of other detracters and malicious writers, we may say he was a bountiful and temperate captain, and not onely lively and valient in fight, but also courteous and mercifull after victory.—North. Plutarch, p. 910.

Here no detractor wounds who merits best,
Nor shameless brow cheers on impiety.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. v.

And at the rear of these in secret guise
Crept thievery and detraction, near akin,
No twins more like, they seem'd almost the same;
One stole the goods, the other the good name:
The latter lives in scorn, the former dies in shame.

P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 7.

From whence we may not improperly derive this enquirie, (admitting the being of evil not at all detractive from God) whether the properties of God are not detrimental to the nature of the wicked.

Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 3. s. 2.

For this is not onely derogatory unto the wisdom of God, who hath proposed the world unto our knowledge, and thereby the notion of himselfe; but also detractory unto the intellect, and sense of man, expressedly disposed for that inquisition.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 5.

It infinitely concerns us to hold stedfastly that faith which Christ thus deliver'd, and the Apostles preach'd, and the Scriptures contain, (as, God be thank'd, That and no other is the faith which our church holds forth) and by no means to add to it, or detract from it.—Sharp. Works, vol. v. Dis 1.

But, oh! what transports did the heart invade,
When first he saw the lovely royal maid!
Fame, that so high did her perfections raise,
Seem'd now detraction, and no longer praise!

Duke. Upon the Marriage of Captain W. Beloe.

Some base detractor has my honour stain'd
And in your easy heart a credit gain'd;
Abus'd, and told you Titus was unjust.

Otway. Titus & Berenice, Act ii. sc. 1.

Wonder not, Lindamor, that in mentioning the joys of heaven, I use the expression I find less detractory from a theme, as much above our praises, as the heaven they are enjoyed in is above our heads.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 283.

If any shall detract from a lady's character unless she be absent, the said detractress shall be forthwith ordered to the lowest place of the room.—Addison.

I know it has been the fashion to detract both from the moral and literary character of Cicero: and indeed neither his life nor his writings are without the characteristics of humanity.—Anox, Let. 8. Personal Nobility.

Knows he, that mankind praise against their will,
And mix as much detraction as they can.

Young. Complaint, Night 8.

DETRE'NCH. "Fr. Trencher,—to cut or carve, slice, hack or hue," (Cotgrave.)

For if your bodie were detrenched, or youre bodie maymed with some sodaine stroke, what profite were it for you to weepe vpon your wound, and when the harme is done, to lament still the sore.—Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorike, p 71.

DE'TRIMENT. DETRIME'NTAL. DE'TRIMENTED. DETRI'TION. } Fr. Détriment; It. and Sp. Detrimento; Lat. Detrimentum, (usu tritum, Vossius,) from Deterere, Detritum quòd ea quæ trita sunt, minoris pretii sunt. (Minshew.) Because things which are worn are of less value, (are deteriorate, qv.)

An impairing, lessening or loss, or diminution of value; damage, injury, mischief.

Mr. Steevens, in Note 2 on 2 Part Hen. VI. Act v. sc. 3, has introduced the word Detrition. The brush of time, he says, is the gradual detrition of time.

But the euill chaunce of the Frenche nacyon was to hye purpose a barre and a lette, because they were predestynate to suffre yet more plagues and detrymentes of thenglishe people then before they had tasted.—Hall. Hen. V. an. 4.

For yf it should be withdrawen in time of syckenesse, nature shulde susteyne treble detrement.

Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. ii.

First, I say, all private property must give way to the public; and therefore a trespass to private men may be punished by indictment, because it is an offence of the public weal; and though every man hath a property in his goods, yet he must not use them in detriment of the commonwealth.—State Trials. Hampden, an. 1637.

One [sermon] preached before the judges on this text, "And let judgement run down like waters, and righteousnesse as a mighty stream;" at what time the draining of the fens was designed, suspected detrimental to the university.

Fuller. Worthies. London.

As for the proprietaries of such (or rather of the ground surrounding such,) medical waters, as I would not have them detrimented in the least degree by the conflux of people unto them; so it is injurious in my judgement for them to set them to sale, and make gain of God's free gift therein.

Id. Ib. vol. i. c 2.

Well therefore did St. Paul in respect to the excellency of the knowledge of Jesus Christ his Lord esteem all such things (all worldly privileges and benefits) as loss, and as dung: as things detrimental and despicable.

Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 22.

A present personal detriment is so heavy, where it falls, and so instant in its operation, that the cold commendation of a public advantage never was, and never will be a match for the quick sensibility of a private loss.

Burke. On Economical Reform.

DETRU'DE, v. } Lat. Detrudere, to thrust
DETRU'SION. } down; de, and trudere, to thrust.

To thrust or push down.

And theim to cast and detrude sodaynly into continual captiuitie and bondage.—Holl. Rich. III. an 3.

But such as are detruded down to hell,
Either for shame, they still themselves retire;
Or ty'd in chains, they in close prison dwell,
And cannot come, although they much desire.

Davies. Immortality of the Soul, s. 32.

And if it be true, that philosophy would inform us of, it turns a man a witch, and leaves him not, till it leads him into the very condition of Devils, to be detruded heaven for his meerly pride and malice.—Feltham, pt. ii. Res. 56.

At that very time did this Hildebrand (otherwise Gregory) by the instigation of the Devill (as himselfe confessed at his death,) (witnesse Cardinall Benno and Sigebert) trouble the Church; belike with the violent obtrusion of this doctrine of Devils (prohibition of marriage) and insolent detrusion of Imperiall authority

Bp. Hall. The Honour of the Married Clergy.

That way of speaking would agree yet worse with the notions of those philosophers who allow of transmigration, and are of opinion that the souls of men may, for their miscarriages, be detruded into the bodies of beasts, as fit habitations, with organs suited to the satisfaction of their brutal inclinations.—Locke. Of the Hum. Understanding, b. ii. c. 27.

He may feed him well, clothe him well, work him moderately; but my lords, nothing that the master can do for his slave, short of manumission, can reinstate him in the condition of man, from which man ought not to be detruded.

Bp. Horsley. Speech on the Slave Trade.

DETRU'NK, v. } Lat. Truncus; that which DETRU'NCATE. } is left of the tree, when
DETRUNCA'TION. } the boughs or branches are lopped off, (Vossius.)

Cockeram, Detruncate,—to cut or lop boughs. Detruncation,—a lopping or cutting.

Yet to my selfe I seme not madde
nor from my witte a iote.
No more semed Agaue to her selfe
When she of dolefull chylde,
The head detruncte, dyd beare about;
she thought her selfe full mylde.

Drant. Horace, b. ii. Sat. 3.

This can never prove either any interpolations in the former, or detruncations in the latter.

Biblioth. Bibl. (Oct. 1720,) p. 68.

The examples, thus mutilated, are no longer to be considered as conveying the sentiments or doctrine of their authors; the word for the sake of which they are inserted, with all its appendant clauses, has been carefully preserved; but it may sometimes happen, by hasty detruncation, that the general tendency of the sentence may be changed the divine may desert his tenets, or the philosopher his system.

Johnson. Pref. to his Dictionary.

DETUME'SCENCE. Lat. Detumere, to cease to swell; de, and tumere, to swell.

Where it is observable also, that the wider the circulating wave grows, still hath it the more subsidence and detumescence, together with an abatement of celerity; till at last all becomes plain and smooth again.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 581.

DETU'RBATE, v. Lat. De, and turba; Gr. Τυρβη, a tumult. See DISTURB.

And where is now (Maister Cope) this your reiecting, expeling, remouing, expulsing, exempting, deturbating, and thrusting out of Anatholius, Sanct Dorothe, and other holie saints out of catalogues, fastes, and calendars.

Foxe. Martyrs, p. 535. A Def. of the Lord Cobham.

DETU'RN, v. "Fr. Destourner,—to turn, divert, distract, avert, withdraw, dissuade," &c. (Cotgrave.) See DETOUR.

While the sober aspect and severity of bare precepts deturn many from lending a pleased ear to the wholesome doctrine: and, what men swallow with delight, is converted into nourishment.—Digby. Of Man's Soul, c. 3.

DETU'RPATE, v. } Lat. De, and turpis; Fr.
DETURPA'TION. } Déturper.

To defile, to pollute, to contaminate.

[The Church of England] being ashamed of the errors, superstitions, heresies, and impieties, which had deturpated the face of the Church: looked in the glass of Scripture and pure antiquity and wash'd away those stains with which time, and inadvertency and tyranny had besmear'd her,

Bp. Taylor. A Dissuasive from Popery, pt. i. c. 1.

And the remaining part have passed through the limbecks and strainers of hereticks, and monks, and ignorants, and interested persons, and have passed through the corrections and deturpations and mistakes of transcribers.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 3.

DEVA'ST, v. } Lat. Devastare, (de, and DEVA'STATE. } vastare, to waste, to lay waste.)
DEVASTA'TION. } Of Vastare Vossius gives no satisfactory account; it is probably of Northern origin;—A. S. Westen, desertum, (a waste, qv.) a desert. Ger. Wusten, verwuesten; Dut. Woesten, ver-woesten, to lay waste. Fr. Gaster; It. Guastare; Sp. Gastar.

To lay waste, to ravage, to demolish, to destroy, to plunder.

—— Can they
Look on the strength of Cundrestine defac'd!
The glory of Heydon-hall devasted? that
Of Edington cast down.

Ford. Perkin Warbeck, Act iv. sc. 1.

And after seventeene yeares civill wars, to the devastation of the realme, King Stephen and Henry the soune of Maude came to a treaty at Wallingford, where by the aduise of the lords they made this accord, that Stephen if he would, should peaceably hold the kingdome during his life

Prynne. Treachery, &c. pt. i. p. 94.

He with the rest of his Almains, in their journey had devoured and consumed it, with over-doing every kind of service, by raising great displeasure, devasting and spoiling the emperor's country of Leige, and his subjects there.

Strype. Memorials. Edw. VI. an. 1552.

His fierce anger kindled a fearful fire amongst us, which hath laid the honour of our nation, one of the greatest and richest cities in the world, in the dust: and that by so sudden and irresistible, so dismal and amazing a devastation, as in all the circumstances of it is scarce to be parallel'd in any history.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 9.

The thirty years' war that devasted Germany, did not begin till the eighteenth year of the seventeenth century, but the seeds of it were sowing some time before.

Bolingbroke. On the Study of History.

The countries devastated, the cities laid in ruins, and none of the colleges of the learned to be found.

Id. Ess. Human Reason.

If the passion of the ministers lie towards peace, our political writers breathe nothing but war and devastation, and represent the pacific conduct of the government as mean and pusillanimous.—Hume. Of the Liberty of the Press.

DEVE'LOPE, v. } Perhaps from Devolvere,
DEVE'LOPEMENT. } deorsum volvere, to roll back; and thus, unfold, open, any thing enveloped or rolled in a volume. Evolvere, is suggested in Menage. Involope, is from involvere, to roll in; a word which Skinner had seen only in the Dictionary.

"Fr. Desveloper, développer,—
To unwrap, unfold, undo, open, shew forth, display, spread abroad," (Cotgrave.)

Then take him to develop if you can,
And hew the block off and get out the man.

Pope. The Dunciad, b. iv.

To develope the latent excellencies, and draw out the interior principles of our art, requires more skill and practice in writing, than is likely to be possessed by a man perpetually occupied in the use of the pencil and pallet.

Sir J. Reynolds, Dis. 15.

But I must here, once for all inform you, that all this will be more exactly delineated and explained in a map, now in the hands of the engraver, which, with many other pieces and developements of this work will be added to the end of the twentieth volume.—Sterne. Trist. Shandy, vol. i. c. 13.

DEVE'ST, v. } Lat. Devestire; de, and ves-
DEVE'STURE. } tire, to clothe. (See DIVEST.)
"Fr. Desvestir, dévestir,—to uncloath, despoyle, deprive; disseise, dispossess of," (Cotgrave.)
To strip, to denude, to free or deliver from.

The proud man cannot chuse but reverence the meek, the debauch'd man the temperate, the greatest self seeker him that most devests himself of all his self-interests.

Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 146.

They know not how to devest it [auricular confession] from its evil appendages, which are put to it by the customs of the world.—Bp. Taylor. Diss. from Popery, pt. i. b. i. § 11.

And though she [Mary] were by Powlet her keeper devested of all the badges of dignity and royalty, and made no more account of then the poorest woman of the meanest condition; yet she endured it with great patience of mind.

Camden. Elizab. an. 1586.

(The very disadvantage we have more then pure spirits [have] in the devesture of self-respects) may be converted into a conducement to the value of our purity.

Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 14. s. 3.

There shall they stand bare and devested of all their phantastry,—their splendid pomp, their numerous retinue, their guards, their parasites.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 38.

DEVE'X, n. Lat. Devehere, devexum, to carry down; de, and vehere, to carry. Fr. Dévexité, Cotgrave interprets, Eng. "Devexity,—a hollowness, bowing, bending, hanging double or downwards." Devexity occurs in Davies's Wit's Pilgrimage.

—— Vpon the westerne lands
(Following the world's deuexe) he meant to tread,
To compasse both the poles, and drinke Nile's head,
But Death did mete his course. May. Lucan, b. x.

DE'VIATE, v. }
DEVIA'TION. }
DE'VIOUS. }
DE'VIOUSLY. }
DE'VIOUSNESS. }
DE'VIANT. }

Lat. De, and via, from or out of the way. Fr. Desvier,—to mislead or put out of the way.

To go out of the way, to err, to go astray, to wander.

Dame (said I) I dare well saie
Of this auaunt me well I may,
That from your schole so deuiaunt
I am, that neuer the more auaunt
Right nought am I through your doctrine

Chaucer. The Rom. of the Rose.

I now could wish (but that etiam is too late) that God with his outward goodness towards me had so commixed his inward grace that I had chused the medium path, neither inclining to the right hand, nor deviating to the left

State Trials. The Earl of Strafford, an. 1640.

He would therefore heartily wish both for prince and people, if either of them should be guilty of any irregular deviations from their own channels, that they who are injured would content themselves with gentle applications, and moderate remedies, lest the last error be worse than the first.

Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. Pref. p. 7.

—— Then easterly
He turns his course, paths deuious marching over,
Where regions vast Candaula does discouer.

May Lucan, b. vi.

Whose heart is so estranged from reason, so devious from the truth through perverse error, that he may not understand it to be lesse evill to goe to plow, or to digge, to sow, or do other country workes on the solemnities of the saints, then not to honour, but to prophane their solemne festivals with such horrible obscenities!

Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act vi. sc. 12.

But where nature any way deviateth from this method, either by denying motion to the eyes, or the head, it is a very wonderful provision she hath made in the case.

Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 2.

Like my fellow Miscellanarians, I shall take occasion to vary often from my proposed subject, and make what deviations and excursions I shall think fit, as I proceed in my random essays.—Shaftesbury. Miscellaneous Reflections, c. 1.

For while o'er devious paths I wildly trod,
Studious to wander from the beaten road,
I lost my dear Creusa, nor can tell
From that sad moment, if by fate she fell.

Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. ii.

The captain's solicitude to arrive at Otaheite time enough to observe the transit of Venus, put it out of his power to deviate from his direct track, in search of unknown lands that might lie to the south-east of that island.

Cook. Voyage, vol. v. Introd.

They [rules] bring into view the chief beauties that ought to be studied, and the principal faults that ought to be avoided; and thereby tend to enlighten taste, and to lead genius from unnatural deviations, into its proper channel.

Blair, vol. i. Introd.

These are the materials on which Genius is to work, and without this the strongest intellect may be fruitlessly or deviously employed.—Sir Joshua Reynolds, Dis. 1.

No words can fully expose the astonishing deviousness of such a digression as this.

Whitaker. Review of Gibbon's History, p. 252.

DE'VIL, n. }
DE'VILING, n. }
DE'VILISH. }
DE'VILISHLY. }
DE'VILISHNESS. }
DE'VILISM. }
DE'VILIZE. }
DE'VILRY. }

Devil, frequently by our old authors written Divell. Fr. Diable; Sp. Diablo; It. Diavolo; Lat. Diabolus; Gr. Διαβολος, a traducer, a calumniator. — Introduced into the northern as well as southern languages. Goth. Diabulus; A. S. Deofol; Dut. Diefle; Ger. Duyvel; Sw. Diefwul. The Gr. Διαβολος, from διαβαλλ-ειν, trajicere; and (met.) traducere, to traduce, to calumniate. And thus the Devil is appropriately and emphatically, the Father of lies. See the example from Wiclif.

He syweth purlyche God that gef ys own lyf here,
To sauy vs synneuol men fram the Deuil's poer.
R. Gloucester, p. 173.

And after sewed an helle brethe as hit seemed, and darknesse so that the monckes toke holy water, and drof away the maner deuelneesse.—Id. p. 415. Note.

May no deth this lord dere, ne no Deoveles queyntise.
Piers Ploughman, p. 355.

Ye ben of the fadir the Deuel, and ye wolen do the desiris of your fadir; he was a mansleer frō the begynning, and he stood not in the treuthe, for the treuthe is not in him. Whanne he spekith lesyng, he spekith of his owne. for he is a liere and fadir of it.—Wiclif. Jon, c. 8.

Ye are of youre father the Deuyll, and the lustes of your father ye wyl do. He was a murtherer from the beginnynge, and abode not in the trueth, because there is no trueth in him. When he speaketh a lye, thē speaketh he of his owne. For he is a lyar, and the father therof.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

Yet women woll her bodies sell,
Soch soules goeth to the Deuil of helle.
Chaucer. Rom of the Rose.

—— For if ye wist
How dangerous it were to stande in his lyght
Ye would not deale wyth him [Enuious rancour] though that ye might;
For by his deuillishe drift and graceles provision
An holle realme he is able to set at dyuision.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

For he that hath the Devill to his father must neede have devillish children.—Latimer. Sermons, p. 9.

So that if we sinne not deuilishly against the Holy Ghost, refusing the doctrine which we cannot improue that it should not be true: but after the frailtie of man, there is no cause to dispair.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 393.

And thys was to terryfy, captiue, and snare the wretched consciences of mē even to vtter desperatyon. And wher coulde haue bene sought oute a practyse of more dyuelyshnesse.—Bale. English Votaryes, pt. i.

We are sure that all those that go about to breake peace between realmes, and to bring them to warre are the children of the Deuill, what holy names soeuer they pretend to cloke their pestilent malice withall. which cloking vnder hypocrisie is double deuilishnes.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 970. Tonstal's Ser. against the Pope.

Now touching ye second point, where he calleth the Catholike church the Antichristian synagogue, and the vnwrytten verities starke lyes and deuises: he hath already shewed & declared partly which thinges they be yt himself meneth by that name.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1129.

—— Engender young deuilings.
Beaum. & Fletch. Knights of Malta, Act v. sc. 2.

This Garnet, together with Catesby and Tesmond, had speech and conference togother of these treasons, and concluded most traitorously and devilishly.
State Trials. Henry Garnet, an. 1606.

Unjust favours are no less injurious than derogations: he that should deify a saint, should wrong him as much, as he that should devilize him.—Bp. Hall. Remains, p. 13.

It is all one as if they had said; Baudry, heathenry, paganisme, scurrilitie and diuelry it selfe is equall with God's word; or that Sathan is equipollent with the Lord.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, Act viii. sc. 6.

I answer; that though the Devils believed, yet they could not be saved by the covenant of grace: because they performed not the other condition required in it altogether as necessary to be performed as this of believing, and that is, repentance.—Locke. Reasonableness of Christianity.

San. The rogue's malicious, and wou'd have me marry her in spight; besides he's off and on at so deevilish a rate, a man knows not where to have him.
Dryden. Love Triumphant, Act iv. sc. 1.

Her. I beg your pardon, ladies, I was deceiv'd in you devilishly; but why, that mighty pretence to honour?
Wycherly. The Country Wife.

His [Fowler's] works are these: "Dæmonium meridianum. Satan at noon, or Anti-christian blasphemies, antiscriptural deviliems, &c. evidenced in the light of truth, and punished by the hand of justice."—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

—— I think one sneezes.
Bell. One of the Devils, I warrant you, has got a cold with being so long out of the fire.
Alon. Bless his Devilship, as I may say.
Dryden. An Evening's Love.

They believe that the Devil whom they call Satan, is the cause of all sickness and adversity, and for this reason, when they are sick or in distress, they consecrate meat, money and other things to him as a propitiation.
Cook. Voyage, vol. ii. b. iii. c. 9.

It is observable, that Herodotus, in particular, scruples not, in many passages, to ascribe envy to the Gods; a sentiment, of all others, the most suitable to a mean and devilish nature.—Hume. Nat. Hist. of Religion.

Doubtless the very Devils themselves, notwithstanding all the devilishness of their temper, would wish for a holy heart, if by that means they could get out of hell.
J. Edwards. Freedom of Will, pt. iii. s. 5.

DEVI'RGINATE. } Low Lat. Devirginare,
DEVIRGINA'TION. } atum, (de, and virgo, virginis, a maid or virgin.)

To cause to be no longer a virgin; to deprive or rob of virginity.

By this grave learned father's verdict then it is most evident; that stage-playes devirginate unmarried persons, especially beautifull tender virgins, who resort unto them.
Prynne Histrio-Mastix, Act vi. sc 3.

He counterfeited the noise and cries of maidens, when they boe forced and suffer devirgination.
Holland. Suetonius, p. 192.

Fair Hero, left devirginate,
Weighs, and with fury waits her state.
Marlow. Hero & Leander, s. 3.

DEVI'SE, v. } Fr. Deviser, to invent. Skinner says Divisare, (sc.) visum, i. e. oculos circumferre; to throw or cast around the sight, i. e. the eyes. Junius refers devise, ex cogitare, comminisci, to the same origin as the verb advise, i. e. the A. S. Wise-ian,—to be or cause to be wise, to wisse; and in our older writers there is very little difference in the usage.
DEVI'SER, or DEVI'CE, n.
DEVI'SABLE.
DEVI'SER.
DEVI'SEFUL.
DEVI'SEFULLY.
DEVI'SING, n.
DEVI'SOUR.

To invent, to contrive, to plan, to scheme; to lay or form plans, schemes or intentions; to imagine.

Whan he sauh he ne myght passe on non wise,
In thre parties to fight his oste he did deuise.
R. Brunne, p. 187.

Saith R. "Thou salle haue at thin owen deuys
Thi life I salle the saue." Isaac he did vprise.—Id. p. 167.

In alle kynne craftes, that he couthe deuise.
Piers Ploughman, p. 120.

All these things well auised
As I haue you er this deuised.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

For certes at my deuise
There is no place in Paradise,
So good in for to dwell or be
As in that gardin thought me. Id. Ib.

This cowe to stele he [Mureurie] came disguised,
And had a pipe well deuised
Upon the notes of musike,
Whereof he might his eres like.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

As thou shalt here my deuise
Thou might thy selfe better auise. Id. Ib. b. iii.

And ouer that was saide them eke,
That whan men wolde vertue seke,
Men shulde it in the prestes fynde,
Their order is of so high a kynde
That thei be deuisers of the weie. Id. Ib. b. i.

Wo be vnto you that make vnryghteous lawes, and deuyse thinges whiche be to harde to kepe.—Bible, 1551. Isay, c. 10.

Whereby it appeareth wel that al their deuice of an vnknowen church, is but a very fantastical imagination.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 817.

And in lyke maner, Kyng Dāpeter dyde to hym vpon certayne cōposicyons that were ther ordeyned, of the whiche the Prince of Wales was a mean bytwene them, and chefe deuyseour thereof.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. I. c. 231.

But Godde hath not without our frute left such thinges vnknowen vnto vs, to quicken and exercise as Saint Austin saith, some mennes myndes in the study and deuising therevpon.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 497.

Pompey had shewed him all the stratagems and policies of war possible for a good captain to device.
North. Plutarch, p. 493.

He then deviside himselfe how to disguise:
For by his mighty science he could take
As many formes and shapes in seeming wise,
As euer Proteus to himselfe could make.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. I. c. 2.

Who sate on high that she might all men see,
And might of all men royally be seen,
Vpon a throne of gold full bright and sheen
Adorned all with gemmes of endless price,
As either might for wealth haue gotten boene,
Or could be fram'd by workman's rare deuice.
Id. Ib. b. v. c. 9.

Some clarke doe doubt in their deuiceful art
Whether this heauenly thing, whereof I treat,
To weeten mercy, be of iustice part,
Or drawne forth from her by diuine extreat.
Id. Ib. b. v. c. 10.

—— Vnder which was spred
A carpet, rich, and of deuicefull thred.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. i.

I had not taught thee then the alphabet
Of flowers, how they deuisefully being set
And bound up, might with speechless secresy
Deliver errands mutely and mutually.—Donne, Elegy 7.

Now this was much misliked of the people, that a law enacted, and that had been of such force, should by the self same maker and deviser of the same be again revoked and called in.—North. Plutarch, p. 148.

I thought, devis'd, and Pallas heard my prayer,
Revenge, and doubt, and caution work'd my breast;
But this of many counsels seem'd the best.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. ix.

It was not consistent with these designs nor with the arts used to promote them, to let the Scriptures be much known; therefore legends and strange stories of visions, with other devices, were thought more proper for keeping up their credit, and carrying on their ends.
Burnet. Hist. of the Reformation, an. 1536.

He [God] hath not prevented all exceptions or cavils devisable by curious and captious wits against it.
Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 2.

Nay, perhaps, if one should demand, why some of those operations should be used at all, the devisers of those unskilful processes would possibly as soon be able to finish their operations, as to give a satisfactory answer.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 134.

Of all the spectacles to mend the sight
Devis'd by art for viewing objects right,
Those are most usefull, which the prudent place
High on the handle of the human face.
Fawkes. A Pair of Spectacles.

It [Westminster Hall] is every where adorned with angels supporting the arms of Richard the Second, or those of Edward the Confessor; as is the stone moulding that runs round the hall, with the hart couchant under a tree, and other devices of Richard II.—Pennant. London, p. 116.

DEVI'SE, or } Fr. Diviser; Lat. Dividere,
DEVI'ZE. } isum, to part or divide; and DEVIZE'E. } thus applied to the partition of DEVI'ZOR. } property, which a testator ap-
DEVI'ZABLE. } points by his will or testament; and also to the testament itself, (Spelman.) The application of the word is quite technical.

DEVOCA'TION. Lat. Devocare, to call away; de, and vocare, to call.
A calling away, inviting away.

He that makes it his business to be freed and released from all its [sorcery's] blandishments and flattering devocations, and endeavours wholly to withdraw himself from the love of corporiety, and too near a sympathy with the frail flesh; he by it enkindles such a divine principle, as lifts him up above the fate of this inferiour world, and adorns his mind with such an awfull majesty as beats back all enchantments.—Hallywell. Melampr. p. 97.

DEVO'ID, adj. } See AVOID.
DEVO'ID, v. } Destitute or desolate; deprived of; vacant or free from.

Yet I him require as rightful iuge
To deuoid fro me the inward sorow
Least I liue not to the next morow.
Chaucer. The Lamentation of Marie Magdalene.

But knoweth well, that certainly
She was arraied richely,
Deuoid of pride certaine she was.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

How irreligious he hath bene
deuoyde of godly feare.
Drant. Horace. The Arte of Poetry, p. 38.

Why be not damned souls devoyd of sense,
If nothing can from wickednesse reclame,
Rather then fry in pain and vehemence
Of searching agony?—More. On the Soul, b. iii. c. 4. s. 29.

A third is Phantasm, whose actions roll
On meaner thoughts, and things devoid of soul,
Earth, fruits, and flowers, he represents in dreams,
And solid rocks unmov'd and running streams.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. x.

To be entirely devoid of relish for eloquence, poetry, or any of the fine arts, is justly construed to be an unpromising symptom of youth.—Blair. Lect. vol. i. Introd.

DEVOIR. From Lat. Debere, to be due. Junius says, it is used by Chaucer for endeavour. "Do thou thy dever at the beste weie."—Clerkes Tale, v. 8843.
"Fr. Debvoir, or Devoir,—duty, endeavour; a service, good office, obligation," (Cotgrave.)

To while that he was freech thei fond him fulle austere,
Thei felt of his prueuse, als knyght did his deuere.
R. Brunne, p. 71.

That doe not his deuere with dede no with rede.
Id. p. 185.

——— The sonne and the mone
Don her devor day and nygth.—Piers Ploughman, p. 290.

Let him with ful intencioun
His deuer done in ech degre,
That his frend ne shamed be.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

Tho were the gates shette, and cried was loude;
Do now your devoir yonge knightes proude.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2600.

Rafe. Madam, if any service or devoir
Of a poor errant knight may right your wronga
Command it, I am prest to give you succor,
For to that holy end I bear my armour.
Beaum. & Fletch. Knight of the Burning Pestle, Act ii. sc. 1.

You, unenslav'd to Nature's narrow laws,
Warm championess for freedom's sacred cause,
From all the dry devoirs of blood and line,
From ties maternal, moral and divine,
Discharg'd my grasping soul.—Savage. The Bastard.

And what if in order to compass such things, some little devoirs and assiduities are expected? is it not the general practice? And what every body submits to, can it be ignominious.—Hurd. On Retirement, Dial. 2.

DEVO'LVE, v. } Lat. Devolvere, lutum, to DEVO'LUTE. } roll down; de, and volvere, to DEVOLU'TION. } roll. And generally—
To drop down, to fall down, to descend.

And thus was the worlde 47 yeris before Crystis birthe devolued into the fourth monarchie called the Romane and last empyre.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c 11.

And therfore when the seculare Anticristen kingdoms now begun in the Cristen emprour kinge and princes be devolued into the Turkis imperie, thē shal that daye begin to springe, wherin the dead yet a sleape shal awake.
Id. Ib. c. 12.

Wherfore regarde well my soueraigne Lorde your just and true title to the realme of Fraunce, by Goddes lawe and mannes lawe to you lawfully devoluted, as very heire to Quene Isabell your greate graundmother.
Hall. Hen. V. an. 2.

And last of all by the meanes of the Machabees, the kingdom and gouernment was devoluted and brought into the priestes handes, who were the kinges and captaines ouer the people.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 320. Answer of the Prelates, &c.

For then might he as next heyre to his brother, haue lawfully and by iust title claymed the sceptre and diademe royall, which was his fathers, and after devoluted to his elder brother.—Grafton. Hen. VII. an. 9.

Which was augmented by the alteration of the state of the sayd Richard, and the devolution of the same, to Henry the Fourth.—Id. Hen. VIII. an. 34.

To whom by a moste iust and ryghte devolucion, and dyscent of inheritaunce of the crounes of Englande, Fraunce, and Irelande, the tytle also of Defendour of the Faith, dooeth moste nerely, most peculiarely, most specially, and moste directely beelong.—Udal. Preface unto the King's Maiestie.

When he [Cromwell] had finished his discourse, he deliver'd to them an instrument engrossed in parchment under his hand and seal, whereby, with the advice of his council of officers, he did devolve, and intrust the supreme authority of this Commonwealth into the hands of those persons therein mention'd.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. iii. p. 483.

DEVO'TE, v.
DEVO'TE, n.
DEVO'TE, adj.
DEVO'TARY.
DEVO'TEDNESS.
DEVOTE'E.
DEVO'TEMENT.
DEVO'TER.
DEVO'TING, n.
DEVO'TION.
DEVO'TIONAL.
DEVO'TIONALIST.
DEVO'TIONIST.
DEVO'TIOUSNESS.
DEVO'UT, adj.
DEVO'UT, n.
DEVO'UTFUL.
DEVO'UTLESSNESS.
DEVO'UTLY.
DEVO'UTNESS.

Fr. Dévot; It. Divoto; Sp. Devoto. Fr. Dévouer; Lat. Devovere, otum, (de, and vovere,) to vow or promise, (Vossius.) See Vow.

To pledge or promise, to dedicate or destine, to addict,—to yield, to consign, or give up to.

A devote or devout man is a man devote, consecrated, (sc.) to godliness: and, consequentially—

Godly, holy, pious, religious.

In chyrche he was deuout ynow, vor hym ne asolde non day abide,
That he ne hurde masse & matyns, & euesou, & eche tyde.
R. Gloucester, p. 369.

The Kyng Stenene agen thys dede, to holy chyrche drou,
And hys mast hurde vorst, myd deuocyon ynou.—Id. p. 456.

Fiue gere he gaf pardoun, of peyns to be free,
That for him with deuocious said Pater and Aue.
R. Brunne, p. 341.

And ich myself Cyvyle, and Symonye my felawe
Wolden ryden upon rectours, and ryche men deroutours.
Piers Ploughman, p. 33.

Prelates and precates prayen and by seche
Deoutliche day and nygt.—Id. Ib. p. 299.

Habite ne maketh neither monke ne frere,
Hut cleane life and deuocion
Maketh good men of religion.—Chaucer. R. of the Rose.

As custome was, the people ferre and nere
Before the noone, vnto the temple went
With sacrifice deuout in their manere.
Id. The Testament of Creseide.

All this I put in his seruage
As to my lord, and did homage
And ful deuoutly I praid him.—Id. The Dreame.

And thus this double hypocrisie,
With his deuote apparancie
A vyser set upon his face.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Yet, as she is, I humbly desire you to receiue her with your wonted and accustomed fauour at my handes, who alwaye wil remaine most ready and deuoted to do your honour any poore seruice that I may.
Hackluyt. Voyages, Ep. Ded.

Wherefore I trust now by God's grace, somethyng more temperately to speake, desiring euery good man of hys charitie to help mee wyth his deuote prayer.
Barnes. Workes, p. 318.

Pure deuocio and vndefiled before God the father, is this; to visite the fatherlesse and wyddowes in theyr aduersitye, and to kepe hym selfe vnspotted of the worlde.
Bible, 1551. James, c. 1.

I might diuide godlinesse into the hearing of God's worde, into praying deuoutly, and charitable dealing with all the world.—Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 112.

The last point of this armour be the darts of deuoutlessnesse, unmercifulnesse, and epicurisme; which fly abrode in every place; for few or none there be that serue God deuoutly.—Bp. of Chichester's Two Sermons, (1576,) sig. c. 6. b.

You see I have but two, a son and her;
And he is so devoted to his book,
As I must tell you true, I doubt his health.
Should he miscarry, all my hopes rely
Upon my girl.—Ford. 'Tis Pity She's a Whore, Act i. sc 3.

All his cares, actions, all his thoughts, are subordinate to her will and commandement: her most devote, obsequious, affectionate servant and vassall.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p 519.

Onely (good master) while we do admire
This vertue, and this morall discipline,
Let's be no Stoickes, nor no stockes I pray,
Or so devote to Aristotle's checkes
As Ouid be an out-cast quite abjur'd.
Shakespeare. Taming of the Shrew, Act i. sc. 1.

One professeth himself a devote, or peculiar servant to our Lord.—Sir E. Sandys. State of Religion.

And then afford a liberal allowance to so many several idolatrous priests and devotaries for their several worships.
Goodwin. Works, vol. iii. pt. i. p. 447.

The reason given by divines is, because thou hast devoted it to the Lord, the gift remains holy, and might not return to the world; for though thy person be not accepted, yet thy gift by thy devoting, is holy to the Lord, as were the censers, in the day of Corah.—Spelman. Works, Pref. p. 15.

On top whereof a sacred chappell was,
And eke a little hermitage thereby,
Wherein an aged holy man did lie:
That day and night said his devotion,
Ne other worldly business did apply.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

There is another devotional passage cited out of Euripides, which contains also a clear acknowledgment of one self-existent being, that comprehends and governs the whole world.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 264.

This point being once admitted, it is but to give a religious turn to this natural softness, and you have the complete image of a French devotionalist.
Coventry. Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 1.

I am not now urging you to that churlish and rigorous way of mortification, consisting only in a froward abstinence from the comforts and conveniences of this life, which some perhaps blind devotionists have too rigidly exercised themselves with.—Hopkins. Ser. Rom. viii. 13.

By which 'tis clear what notion they had of εὐλαβεια, to wit, that of devotiousness, piety.
Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 234.

'Tis done: his sacred hand he lifted up
And round about on his devoto's dealt
His bounteous blessing.—Beaumont. Psyche, c. 9. s. 139.

Many ages after that, in the time of our Saviour lived old Simeon, to the age of ninety years: A devout man and full both of hope, and expectation.
Bacon. Of Life and Death

For matters of religion, hee shewed himselfe a well deuouted Christian, and in each respect obedient and cheerefull in his prayers.—Stow. K. James, an. 1603.

Him Richard follows in the government,
Who much the glory of our arms increas'd,
And all his father's mighty treasure spent,
In that devoutful action of the east.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. i.

Whose twilights were more clear than our mid-day,
Who dream'd devoutlier than most use to pray.
Donne. Funeral Elegies.

With flashing flames his ardent eyes were fill'd,
And in his hand a naked sword he held:
He cheer'd the dogs to follow her who fled,
And vow'd revenge on her devoted head.
Dryden. Theodore & Honoria.

At riper years he [Edward Dyer] studied and laboured much in chymistry, was esteemed by some a Rosie-crucian, and a great devotee to Dr. Job Dee and Edward Kelly astrologers and chymists.—Wood. Athenæ Oxonienses.

The true care of our soule consists in the constant and daily exercise of piety and devotion, both in private, and in public if there be opportunity for it, especially at proper times and upon more solemn occasions.
Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 34.

The devotional as well as the active part of religion is (we know) founded in good nature; and one of the best signs and causes of good nature is, I am sure, to delight in such pious entertainments.—Atterbury, vol. iv. Ser. 9.

He informs us, that the baptized were taught to say it [the Lord's prayer] by heart. And it is plain in many places of his works, that it was repeated once at least in every assembly of the faithful, the devouter sort of which met at all the hours of prayer, thrice a day at least, and so often used the Lord's prayer in publick.
Comber. Companion to the Temple, c. v. s. 17.

But if so many examples out of all mankind will not suffice to make us praise him devoutly, and acknowledge him faithfully, let us lift up our eyes to the heavens, which are replenished with creatures more noble and glorious than we; yet all these make it their employment, and account it their delight to glorifie his name.—Id. Ib. vol. i. pt. i. s. 10.

There are some who have a sort of devoutness, and religion in their particular complexion; and if such are talkative (as many times they are) they will easily run into such discourses, as agree with their temper, and take pleasure in them for that reason.—Glanvill, Ser. 1.

Is it possible for a prince or state, by calling upon or devoting themselves to God, to engage him to take upon himself the absolute, immediate, and as it were personal direction of their particular affairs.
Middleton. Defence of the Letter to Dr. Waterland, &c.

All objects are therefore to be excluded, so far as attachments to them would be inconsistent with devotedness to our Maker.—Secker, vol. i. Ser. 6.

So that it was not merely the conjecture of theoretical divines, or the secret expectation of a few recluse devotees, but it was become the popular hope and passion, and like all popular opinions, undoubting, and impatient of contradiction.—Paley. Evidences, pt. i. c. 1.

Her devotement was the demand of Apollo, and the joint petition of all Greece.—Hurd. Notes on the Art of Poetry.

——— O how loud
It calls devotion! genuine growth of night!
Devotion! daughter of Astronomy!
An undevout astronomer is mad.
Young. The Complaint, Night 9.

When the devotional spirit falls in with a melancholy temper, it is apt to depress the mind entirely, to sink it in the weakest superstition, and to produce a total retirement and abstraction from the world, and all the duties of life.
Gregory. Comparative View, p. 238.

You must seize with eagerness, and employ with alacrity, the few moments, you have to spare from business, in cultivating devout sentiments and virtuous habits, and sowing, silently and imperceptibly, in your soul the seeds of eternal life.—Porteus, vol. ii. Ser. 16.

Thus we see the devoutness of his mind, in his frequent retirement to solitary prayer; in his habitual giving of thanks; in his reference of the beauties and operations of nature to the bounty of Providence; in his earnest addresses to his Father, more particularly that short but solemn one before the raising of Lazarus from the dead; and in the deep piety of his behaviour in the garden, on the last evening of his life.—Paley. Evidences, pt. ii. c. 2.

DEVO'UR, v. } Fr. Dévorer; Sp. Devorar;
DEVO'URER. } Lat. Devorare, (de, and vorare, to feed or eat—like a DEVO'URINGLY. } beast, (Vossius.) Gr. Βορα, food or fodder.)
DEVORA'TION. }

To eat; to eat—ravenously, greedily; gluttonously to consume, to ravage, to swallow; to glut, to gorge.

Holy churche and charitie, ge cheweth and deuoureth.
Piers Ploughman p. 31.

And he seide to me take the book and deuoure it, and it schal make thi wombe to be bittir, but in the mouth it schal be swete as hony.—Wiclif. Apocalips, c. 10.

Mannes sone cam etinge and drinkinge: and ye seyen lo a man deuourer and drinkinge wyn, a frend of pupplycans and of synful men. But wisdom is justified of her sones.
Id. Luke, c. 7.

Thou root of false louers, Duke Jason,
Thou sleest, deuourer, and confusion
Of gentill women.—Chaucer. Leg. of Hypsiphile & Medea.

So that the hors of thilke stode
Deuoureden the mannes bloode,
Till fortune at last came,
That Hercules hym ouercame.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

Thus it hath pleased God to fight for vs, and to defend the iustice of our cause against the ambicious and bloody pretences of the Spaniards, who seeking to deuoure all nations, are themselues deuoured.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 173.

They be great deuourers of flesh, which they cut in smal pieces, and eat by handfuls most greedily, and especially the horse flesh.—Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 329.

Tho, vnder colour of shepheardes, some while
There crept in wolues, full of fraud and guile,
That often deuoured their own sheepe,
And often the shepheards that did hem keepe.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calendar. May.

Then summe up all this lost, this mispent time together; we shall soone discerne, we must needs acknowledge, that there are no such heriuoes, such canker wormes, such theeuish deuourers of men's most sacred (yet undervalued) time, as stage-playes.
Prynne. Histrio Mastix, pt. i. Act vi. sc. 1.

I haue read that they [bear-wards] haue either voluntarilie, or for want of power to master their sauage beasts [the bears,] beene occasione of the death and deuoration of manie children in sundrie countries by which they haue passed, whose parents never knew what became of them
Holinshed. Description of England, c. 10.

Fierce o'er the pyre, by fanning breezes spread,
The hungry flame deuours the silent dead.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xii.

Instant, O Jove! Confound the suitor train,
For whom o'ertoil'd I grind the golden grain,
Far from this dome, the lewd deuourers cast,
And be this festival decreed their last.—Id. Ib. b. xx.

While Semele, on high Olympus plac'd,
To heavenly zephyrs bids her tresses flow
Once by devouring lightnings all defac'd.
West. The second Olympic Ode.

To Bacchus styl'd Devourer, on this isle,
Amid surrounding gloom, a temple hoar
By time remains, to Bacchus I devote
These splendid victims.—Glover. The Athenaid, b. vi.

DEVOW, v. } Lat. Devovere; see DEVOTE.
DEVO'VE, v. } To pledge or promise, dedicate or destine, or addict, yield, consign or give up to.

In Fletcher, Devow is to dis-avow, to disclaim.

There too the armies angelic devow'd
Their former rage, and all to mercy bow'd,
Their broken weapons at her feet they gladly strow'd.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Victory and Triumph.

Having made this praier, hee willed the sergeants or lictours to go to Manlius, and with all speed to tell him, that his colleague was deuowed for the armie.
Holland. Livius, p. 287.

Whosoever hurt either tribunes of the commons, ediles, judges or decemvirs, his head should be accursed and deuoued to Jupiter.—Id. Ib. p. 125.

'Twas his own son, whom God and mankind lov'd,
His own victorious son, that he devov'd,
On whose bright head the baleful curses light.
Cowley. The Davideis, b. iv.

DE'USE. Isidorus, in Gloss. Dunius, Dæmon. And Augustin, de Civitate Dei: Quosdam dæmonas, quos Dusios Galli nuncupant. And the Collectanea upon Isidorus, (annexed to Martinius,) suggests that Dusius may be a corruption of Drusus, (son of Tiberius;) referring to the Commentary of Lipsius upon Tacitus, whence (p. 163,) it appears (upon the authority of Dion Cassius, lib. 57,) that the sharpest swords, gladii acutissimi, were proverbially named Drusiani gladii; and Isidorus also suspects, that hence the word droes, used as we use Deuce, remains to the Dutch. De droes wal waait het hard. The deuce, how it does blow. Kilian thinks droes, which he interprets, Gigas, homo valens, &c. may be from this Drusus; because he was Domitor acerrimus. This Drusus was famous, or rather infamous, for his Germanic victories; and his name may have been perpetuated as a name of terror among that people: and from the corruption, Dusius, our word may have sprung. (And see Vossius, in v. Diaboli.)

He prays—O bless me! what shall I do now?
Hang me, if I know what he prays, or how!
And 'twas the prettiest prologue as he wrote it!
Well, the deuce take me, if I ha'n't forgot it.
Congreve. Prologue to the Old Bachelor.

DEUTERO'GAMY. } Gr. Δευτερ-ος, second,
DEU'TEROGAMIST. } and γαμ-ειν, to marry.
A second marriage.

You here see that unfortunate divine, who has so long, and it would ill become me to say, successfully, fought against the deuterogamy of the age.
Goldsmith. Vicar of Wakefield, c. 14.

I immediately recollected this good-natured man's red pimpled face; for he had published for me against the deuterogamists of the age, and from him I borrowed a few pieces, to be paid at my return.—Id. Ib. c. 18.

DEUTERO'SCOPY. Gr. Δευτερος, second, and σκοπ-ειν, to look.

A second sight, second inspection; or, as Brown explains it, second intention.

For not attaining the deuteroscopy, and second intention of the words, they are fain to omit their superconsequencies, coherencies, figures, or tropologies.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 3.

DEW, v. } Dut. Dauwen; Ger. Tauen;
DEW, n. } A.S. Deaw-ian, rorare. Alludit,
DE'WY. } says Skinner, Gr. Δευ-ειν, rigare,
DE'WINESS. } and in this the etymologists agree.
DEW-LAP. } See BEDEW.
DEW-LAPT. }

Dew-lap of a beast, because it hangeth down so much that it seemeth to lap the dew, (Minshew and Skinner.) The latter adds, perhaps deep lap; deop lappe. A. S. Deop, profundus, and lappe, ora, pars dependens.

To wet, to moisten, to damp.

Dew is much used in composition.

Marie Magdalene by mores levede and dewes.
Piers Ploughman, p. 286.

With bitter teares, dewed all her face
Full oft sithes, swouning in the place.
Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. ii.

And the erth wexeth proud withall
For swote dewes that on it fall.
Chaucer. The Rom. of the Rose.

The firste periferie of all
Engendreth mist, and ouermore
The dewes, and the frostes hore.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

But (kissing) sighes, and dewes him with her teares.
Cornelia, 1594. Act iii.

The sunne through nature's might, doth draw away the dew,
And spreads the flowers where he is wont, his princely face to shew.
Vncert. Auctors. The Nature which worketh all Things, &c.

And thus desired night in woe I waste:
And to expresse the harts excessiue paine,
Mine eies their deawie teares distill amaine.
Turbervile. The Louer writes of his vnquiet & restlesse state.

And wantonly roves
Abroad in the groves,
And in the air hovers.
Which when it him deweth
His feathers he meweth,
In sighs of true lovers. Drayton. To Cupid.

Their rootes ben dried up for lacke of dewe,
Yet dewed with the teares they han been euer among.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calendar. December.

But whereas we say, that the juice of the body ought to be roscide and fat, it is to be noted that we mean it not of a visible fat, but a dewinesse dispersed, or (if you will call it) radicall in the very substance of the body.
Bacon. Of Life and Death.

Upon him all at once courageously do set,
Him by the dew-laps some, some by the flank do get.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 22

My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kinde,
With eares that sweep away the morning dew,
Crook-kneed, and dew-lapt, like Thessalian buls.
Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dreame, Act iv. sc. 1.

Thou wast not wont to have the earth thy stool,
Nor the moist dewy grass thy pillow, nor
Thy chamber to be the wide horizon.
Sir John Oldcastle, Act v. sc. 3

—— In Gallick blood again
He dews his reeking sword, and strews the ground
With headless ranks. J. Philips. Blenheim

To whom wilt thou thy fire impart,
Thy lyre, thy voice, and tuneful art;
Whom raise sublime on thy ethereal wing,
And consecrate with dews of thy Castalian spring!
Congreve. Pindaric Ode.

Soon as Aurora, daughter of the dawn,
Sprinkled with roseate light the dewy lawn,
In haste the prince arose, prepared to part.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xvii

It was foretold of you, says he [Justin] to Trypho, that you should be as the sand of the sea-shore; and so indeed you are, if as numerous, as barren likewise, and as unfruitful of all that is good, ever ready to receive the refreshing dews and rain of heaven, and never willing and disposed to make any return.—Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

—— Swift he sought
Achaia's camp and Agamemnon there
Him lying in his tent he found, immers'd
In dewy sleep ambrosial. Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.

Their [buffaloes] horns are curved towards each other, but together bend directly backwards, and they have no dew-laps.—Cook. Voyages, vol. ii. b. iii. c. 9. p. 250.

DE'XTER, adj. } Lat. Dexter; Gr. Δεξιτερ-
DEXTE'RITY. } os, poetice pro δεξιος. Δεξια
DE'XTEROUS. } is properly spoken of the DE'XTEROUSLY. } (right) hand (sc.) ανο του
DE'XTEROUSNESS. } δεχεσθαι, to take, to catch
DE'XTRAL. } to hold; because more
DE'XTRALITY. } active than the left. And thus, Dexterous—

Active, ready, expert, skilful, clever, adroit.

Yet such was the inuincible resolution, and the wonderful dexterity of the English, that in one half houre or thereabout, the enemy was repulsed, and the towne wall possessed, by the noble Earle himself.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 163.

King Henry was a prince of singular prudence, of passing stout courage, of magnanimitee incoparable, of inuincible fortitude, of notable actiuitee, of dexteritee woonderfull.
Udal. Preface. To the Kinges Maieste

How comes it to pass that the victorious arms of England, quartered with the conquered coat of France, are not placed on the dexter side, but give the flower-de-luce the better hand.—Brewer. Lingua, Act iii. sc. 6.

I call him poor man because he is not living to answer for himself, but yet he was a worthy minister of justice (for I had much cause to know him) and he was of as much dexterity and integrity, as ever man that sat in his place.
State Trials. Mr. Wraysham, an. 1618.

Next his feet my praise commands,
Which me thinks we should call hands,
For so finely they are shap'd,
And for any use so apt,
Nothing can so dextrous be,
Nor fine handed near as he.—Cotton. On my Pretty Marian

For which purpose, they had then a fast friend there, the Marquis of Hamilton, who could most dextrously put such an affair into agitation, with the least noise, and prepare both King and Queen to hearken to it very willingly.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. p. 210.

Now in these there is no right hand: of this constitution are many women, and some men, who though they accustom themselves unto either hand, do dexterously make use of neither.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 5.

As for any tunicles or skins which should hinder the liver from enabling the dextral parts, we must not conceive it diffuseth its virtue by mere irradiation but by its veins and proper vessels, which common skins and teguments cannot impede.—Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 5.

And therefore were this indifferency permitted, or did not institution, but nature determine dextrality, there would be many more Scævolas than are delivered in story; nor needed we to draw examples of the life, from the sons of the right hand; as we read of seven thousand in the army of the Benjamites.—Id. Ib.

Th' observing augur took the prince aside,
Seiz'd by the hand, and thus prophetic cried,
Yon bird that dexter cuts the aerial road,
Rose ominous, nor flies without a God.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xv

In which his dextrous wit had oft been shown,
And in the wreck of kingdoms sav'd his own.
Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

We gather'd round and to his single eye,
The single eye that in his forehead glar'd
Like a full moon, or a broad burnish'd shield,
A forky staff we dexterously apply'd.
Addison. From the Third Æneid.

Like juggler's tricks, that have more or less appearance of being real according to the dexterousness and skill of him that plays them.—Sir W. Temple. Of Gardening.

Here strip, my children! here at once leap in!
Here prove who best can dash through thick and thin,
And who the most in love of dirt excel,
Or dark dexterity of groping well.—Pope. Dunciad, b. ii.

Upon discovering them, we usually sent out our boat with a man in the bow, who was a dextrous diver: and as the boat came within a few yards of the turtle the diver plunged into the water, taking care to rise close upon it.
Anson. Voyage round the World, b. ii. c. 8.

They smooth the plank very expeditiously and dexterously with their adzes, and can take off a thin coat from a whole plank without missing a stroke.
Cook. Voyage, vol. i. b. i. c. 8.

The dexterity of hand, indeed, even in common trades cannot be acquired without much practice and experience.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 10.

DIABE'TES, n.; diabetical disease; from the Gr. Διαβητης, from διαβαινειν, pertransire, to pass through.

Will they operate like the quack's medicine, which is equally good for a diabetes and a dropsy?
Hume. Ess. The Sceptic.

For water is very diuretic. Hence some have apprehended a diabetes from the continued use thereof, but it is so far from causing a diabetes, that it has been known to cure that disorder.—Bp. Berkeley. Thoughts on Tar Water.

DIABO'LICK, adj. } Lat. Diabolus, the devil. See DEVIL.
DIABO'LICAL.
DIABO'LICALLY.
DIABO'LICALNESS.
DIABO'LISM.
Devilish, pertaining to the devil.

Of these most hellish & diabolick frutes, holy S. Paule admonished the Romains, in the firste chaptre of his Epistle vnto them.—Bale. English Votaries, b. ii. p. 10.

If the diabolical imputation which the earl at his arraignment cast upon him, further moved him to impatiency than his wont was, or was fit, he desired them that heard it to pardon him, for the provocation made him to forget all bands of speech.—State Trials. Sir Christ. Blunt, an. 1600.

——— For, in the wilie snake
Whatever sleights, none would suspicious mark,
As from his wit and native suttletie
Proceeding, which in other beasts observ'd,
Doubt might beget of diabolic pow'r
Active within, beyond the sense of brute.
Milton. Par. Lost, b. ix.

Or, if our souls are but particles and decerptions of our parents, then I must have been guilty of all the sins that ever were committed by my progenitors ever since Adam; and by this time my soul would have been so deprav'd and debauch'd, that it would be now brutish, yea diabolical.
Glanvill. Pre-existence of Souls, c. 3.

For what man, who dares to stile himself a Christian, can be so diabolically absurd, so audaciously impious, so desperately prophane as to denie that to be abominable, pernicious, vndecent, and vnlawfull vnto Christians, which they haue renounced, and abominated in their baptism.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. I. Act ii. Chorus.

Which, if they [astrology, fortune telling, &c.] had any reality in them, would be literally diabolical; and having no reality in them yet they are truly diabolical, as being cheats, delusions, and impositions upon mankind.
Clarke, vol. ii. Ser. 122.

Here we see a fatal proof of the extreme barbarities to which the most diabolical sentiment of revenge will drive the natural tenderness even of a female mind.
Porteus, vol. ii. Lect. 14.

You must know that H-d-g-r, the manager of masquerades, is a devil disguised in human shape. I wonder he did not change his face as well as his body, but that retains its primitive diabolicalness.
Dr. Warton. Satire of Ranelagh House.

And this new donation of the ecstacies of the saints was a noble foundation for what he was now projecting, the farce of diabolisms and exorcisms.
Warburton. The Doctrine of Grace, b. ii. c. 3.

DIA'CHYLON. "Fr. Diaculon; a certain mollifying plaister, tearmed otherwise, Diachylon, because it is made of juices," (Cotgrave.) Gr. Δια, and χυλος, succus, juice, from χυειν, to pour.

I had, to examine some conjectures that occurred to me about it, caused glasses to be made with a hole at that end, which uses to be sealed up, and had nevertheless been able, as occasion required, to make use of such tubes, as if no such holes had been left in them by devising stopples for them, made of the common plaister called diachylon.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 7.

DIA'CONATE. From Lat. Diaconus, a deacon, (qv.)

And so all things in this nature, should be alike common to all and each; and there should be a common treasury for this one great diaconate church (as we may, in a parallel allusion, to that other name of presbyterial, call it) as there is a common regimen or government, for this great presbyterial church.—Goodwin. Works, vol. iv. pt. iv. p. 189.

DIACRI'TICAL. Gr. Διακριτικος, from Διακριν-ειν, to distinguish, to separate.

He must not be discouraged by the difficulty of reading the Indian letters, for the characters are in reality the same with those, which our books are printed in, and are only rendered difficult by the frequent omission of the diacritical points, and the wants of regularity in the position of the words.
Sir W. Jones. Preface to Persian Grammar.

DI'ADEM. } Fr. Diadème; It. and Sp. Diadema; Dut. and Ger. Diadem; Lat. Diadema; Gr. Διαδημα, from Διαδειν, to bind around (δια, and δειν, ligare, to bind.) Properly, says Minshew, it signifieth a wreathed hatband, with which the ancient kings contented themselves, as thinking the crowne only belongs to their gods.
DI'ADEMED. }

And David shal be diademyd, and daunten alle oure enemyes.
Piers Ploughman. p. 60.

And lo a greet reed dragoun that hadde seuene heedis and ten hornys, and in the heedis of hem seuen diademes.
Wiclif. Apocalips, c. 11.

And in suche wise his light to spreade,
Sit with his diademe on head,
The sonne shinende in his carte.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

Not long after he caused a great assemble to be appointed at the towre of London, where Kyng Richard appareled in vesture and robe royall, the diademe on his head, and the scepter in his hand; came personally before the congregacion and said these words in effecte.—Hall Hen. IV. Introd.

In the first place, Prince Bacchus brought up buying and selling; he it was also that devised the diademe that roiall ensigne and ornament, and the manner of triumph.
Holland. Plinie, b. vii. c. 56.

His favour leaves me nothing to require,
Prevents my wishes, and outruns desire;
What more can I expect while David lives?
All but his kingly diadem he gives:
"And that"—But here he paus'd; then, sighing, said—
"Is justly destin'd for a worthier head."
Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

——— Now I feel
Myself awake to misery and shame!
Ye sceptres, diadems, and rolling trains
Of flatt'ring pomp, farewell. Smollet. The Regicide.

DIÆ'RESIS. Fr. Diérèse; Lat. Diæresis; Gr. Διαιρεσις, from Διαιρειν,—to divide, to distinguish.

If any two vowels are to be read as two distinct syllables, the latter is marked with a diæresis, or two dots over it; waik, boy, and aweve, sleepless.
Sharpe. On the Greek Tongue, p. 16.

DIAGNO'STIC, n. Gr. Διαγνωστικον, from Διαγνωσκ-ειν, to discern, to distinguish; δια, and γνωσκ-ειν,—to know.

That by which any thing is known or distinguished from any thing else; the symptom that decides the nature of the disease.

Brown uses Dignotion, from the Lat. Dignoscere, in an equivalent signification.

The disease of our intellectuals is too great, not to be its own diagnostick: and they that feel it not, are not less sick, but stupidly so.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 7.

That [temperamental] dignotions, and conjecture of prevalent humours, may be collected from spots in our nails, we are not averse to concede.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 22.

For, since the motions of the Spirit (which they so confidently suppose themselves to have) cannot so much as in things good and lawful, by any certain diagnostick, be distinguished from the motions of a man's own heart, they very easily make a step farther, and even in things unlawful, conclude the motions of their own hearts to be the impulse of the Spirit.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 6.

What does he think of the commerce of the city of Glasgow, and of the manufactures of Paisley and all the adjacent country? has this any thing like the deadly aspect and facies hippocratica, which the false diagnostick of our state physician has given to our trade in general?
Burke. On the late State of the Nation.

DIA'GONAL. } Fr. Diagonal; Gr. Διαγωνιος, ut διαγωνιος γραμμη, linea, ab angulo ad angulum perducta, (Vitruv. ix. 1,)—a line drawn from corner to corner; from δια, and γωνια, a corner.
DIA'GONAL, adj.
DIA'GONALLY.

He plainly affirmeth, this geometrical theorem, that the diameter or diagonal of a square is incommensurable to the sides, to be an eternal truth.—Cudworth. Intell. Syst. p. 734.

But when the parallelogram is divided into two equal triangles by a diagonal line, the quantity of the three angles in each must of necessity be half the quantity of the four angles in the parallelogram.—Id. Morality, b. iv. c. 3.

The next leaf may be single: stitch it across with double silk diagonally, and cross those stitches with others, and the spaces will be of a lozenge-shape.—Walton. Angler, pt. i. c. 5.

For instance, the Sartorius or tailor's muscle, rising from the spine, running diagonally across the thigh, and taking hold of the inside of the main bone of the leg, a little below the knee, enables us, by its contraction, to throw one leg over the other.—Paley. Theology, c. 9.

DI'AGRAM. Gr. Διαγραμμα, from Διαγραφ-ειν, to describe, to delineate.

Any thing delineated; described by lines; a geometrical figure.

The mathematics, saith Aristotle, have nothing to do with the end or chief good that men look after, never any man brought good or bad, better or worse into a demonstration; there's no consultation or election there, only plain downright diagrams, necessary convictions of the understanding.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 649.

Diagrams drawn on paper are copies of the ideas in the mind, and not liable to the uncertainty that words carry in their signification.—Locke. Hum. Understanding, b. iv. c. 3.

Before her [mad Mathesis] lo! inscrib'd upon the ground,
Strange diagrams th' astonish'd sight confound,
Right lines and curves, with figures square and round.
Fawkes. The Temple of Dulness.

DI'AL. } Quasi diale, because it points out the hour of the day, (dies.)
DIA'LLING.
DIA'LIST.

M. Varro reporteth, that the first diall was set up in the common market-place, upon a columne neere the foresaid rostra, in the time of the first Punicke warre, by M. Valerius Messala the Consull, presently after the taking of Catana in Sicilie.—Holland. Plinie, b. vii. c. 60.

For loyalty is still the same,
Whether it win or loose the game;
True as the dial to the sun,
Although it be not shin'd upon.—Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2.

And this hypothesis may be tolerated in physics, as it is not necessary in the art of dialling or navigation to mention the true system or earth's motion.—Berkeley. Siris, 285.

He tells us, that the two friends, being each of them possessed of one of those needles, made a kind of dial-plate, inscribing it with the four and twenty letters in the same manner as the hours of the day are marked upon the ordinary dial-plate.—Spectator, No. 241.

Scientifick dialists, by the geometrick considerations of lines, have found out rules to mark out the irregular motion of the shadow in all latitudes, and on all planes.
Moxon. Mechanick Dialling.

DI'ALECT. } Fr. Dialecte; It. Dialetto; Sp. Dialecto; Lat. Dialectus; Gr. Διαλεκτ-ος, from δια λεγ-ειν, to discourse, (δια, and λεγ-ειν, to say.)
DIALE'CTICK, adj.
DIALE'CTICK, n.
DIALE'CTICAL.
DIALE'CTICALLY.
DIALECTI'CIAN.

Applied more generally, to any peculiar style or manner of expression, speech or language.

Dialectician,—one skilled in speaking; able to speak, to reason; skilled in logick.

Though to the Tuscans I the smoothness grant,
Our dialect no majesty doth want,
To set thy praises in as high a key,
As France, or Spain, or Germany, or they.
Drayton. England's Heroical Epistles.

——— Then all those
Who in the dark our fury did escape,
Returning, know our borrow'd arms and shape,
And different dialect.—Denham. Ess. on Virgil's Æneis.

For the dialectiques borrow, as it were, from all other sciences, the principles of sciences; again adore the prime notions of the mind; lastly rest satisfied with the immediat informations of sense rightly disposited.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, Pref.

And we all know the common dialect, in which the great masters of this art used to pray for the King, and which may justly pass for only a cleanlier and more refined kind of libelling him in the Lord: as that God will turn his heart, and open his eyes.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 3.

For I, and no doubt you, have long observed, that those dialectical subtleties, that the schoolmen too often employ about physiological mysteries, are wont much more to declare the wit of him that uses them, than increase the knowledge or remove the doubts of sober lovers of truth.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 468.

The words being in Acts, xxiv. 25, διαλεγομενου δε αυτου, and according to the natural force and import of them, signifying, that he discoursed, or reasoned dialectically.
South, vol. iv. Ser. 1.

How could these disputes or any other be determined among men, whose pleasure and whose pride it was to dispute perpetually, and who cultivated an art that was of use to no man in the discernment of truth, but might help the subtile dialectician to oppose even the man he could not refute!—Bolingbroke. Authority in Matters of Religion, s. 41.

A jargon of words that seemed to explain without explaining, and the rules of a dialectick, that seem'd to prove and that did prove indifferently either in favour of truth, or of errour, took up the whole attention of philosophers, and rendered it impossible for them to make any advances in learning and knowledge.—Id. Ess. Hum. Reason, s. 11.

For the Irish, the Welsh, and the Erse, are no other than different dialects of the same tongue, the ancient Celtic.
Blair, vol. i. Lect. 9.

At the same time another and far bolder sect of teachers arose, who presumed to interpret the sacred doctrines by logical terms and distinctions, and to reduce them to the rules of dialectic art.—Jortin. Remarks on Eccl. Hist.

But aware as I am, in common with the great poetical dialectician, [Dryden,] and, indeed, with every novice in the art of logic, that "fallacies often live in universals," I cannot accede to Mr. Burke's observation.
Parr. A Sequel to the Printed Paper.

DIA'LOGISE, v. DIALO'GICAL. DIA'LOGISM. DIA'LOGIST. DIALOGI'STICALLY. DI'ALOGUE, n. DI'ALOGUE, v. Fr. Dialogue; It. and Sp. Dialogo; Lat. Dialogus; Gr. Διαλογος, απο του διαλεγεσθαι, (δια, and λεγ-ειν, to say,) to discourse together; where two or more persons talk or converse together.

The usage of dialogism is well stated by Cotgrave: "Fr. Dialogisme—

A figure or discourse, wherein one arguing with himself as if he talked to another, both moves the question, and makes the answer."

Moreouer the proctour of purgatory [Sir T. More] sayth in his dialogue, quod I, and quod he, and quod your frende, how that the foressayd Duke of Gloucester was a noblemā and a great clarcke, and so wise that he coulde spye false myracles and disclose them, and judge them from the true.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 364.

Some will dispute, cavill and object, as Julian did of old, whom Cyrill confutes, as Simon Magus is fained to doe in that dialogue betwixt him and Peter: and Ammonius the philosopher, in that dialogicall disputation with Zacharias the Christian.—Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 358.

His foolish dialogism is a fighting with his own shadow.
Falke. Retentive, (1580,) p. 306.

Both which [the writings of Moses and of the prophets] with the rest of the written word, are by the judgment of common sense, if we will believe the dialogist's reasonings, voted to be so uncertain, that they can never be relyed on with any confidence against any adversary.
Hammond. Works, vol. ii. p. 232.

In his prophecy he [Malachi] proceeds most dialogistically.
Bp. Richardson. On the Old Testament, p. 449.

And dialogu'd for him what he would say.
Shakespeare. A Lover's Complaint.

Ver. How dost foole?
Ape. Dost dialogue with thy shadow?
Ver. I speake not to thee.—Id. Timon of Athens, p. 83.

At present it must be owned, the characters, or personages, employ'd by our new orthodox dialogists, carry with 'em little proportion or coherence.
Shaftesbury. Miscel. Refl. c. 2. Misc. 5.

So pass'd in pleasing dialogue away
The night; then down to short repose they lay.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xv.

Varro, one of the dialogists says to him: Sed de teipso quid est quod audio? Tully answers: Quænam de re? Varro replies; Relectam a te veterem jam, tractari autem Novam.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iii. s. 3.

DIA'METER. DIA'METRAL, adj. DIA'METRAL, n. DIA'METRALLY. DIAME'TRICAL. DIAME'TRICALLY. Fr. Diamétre; It. and Sp. Diametro; Lat. Diameter; Gr. Διαμετρος, from δια, and μετρον, a measure.

The straight line which passing through the centre of any figure measures or divides it into two equal parts. Things are said to be diametrically opposite, when they are as opposite as the extreme points of a diameter.

O stedfast diametre of duracion
That fewe feres any time might thou finde
For none to him was founden halfe so kinde.
Chaucer. A Balade of our Ladie.

And this new diameter is but the half of this verse divided in two, and no other than the cæsura or breathing place in the midst thereof, and therefore it had been as good to have put two lines in one, but only to make them seem diverse.
Daniel. Defence of Rhyme.

The incession or locall motion of animals is made with analogy unto this figure, by decussative diametrals, quincunciall lines and angles.—Brown. Cyrus Garden, c. 3.

——— There are gentlewomen, and male guests,
Of several humours, carriage, constitution,
Profession too; but so diametrall
One to another, and so much opposed.
B. Jonson. The Magnetick Lady, Act i. sc. 1.

Every lye is diametrally contrary to the God of truth; since it proceeds originally from the very Devill, who is a lyer, and the father of lies.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act iii. sc. 4.

They [Scylla and Charybdis] are nothing so horrid or dangerous as they make them to be, they are two white keen pointed rocks that lie under water diametrically oppos'd, and like two dragons defying one another.
Howell, b. i. s. 1. Let. 27.

Grant that the sun had happen'd to prefer
A seat ascant but one diameter;
Lost to the light by that unhappy place
This globe had lain a frozen, lonesome mass.
Blackmore. Creation, b. ii.

This is to make a diametrical opposition between the decrees of God, and the record of his will in the Gospel.
Bates. Fun. Ser. on Dr. Jacomb.

That this conception is of all others most dangerous to the soul and dishonourable to God, as being absolutely and diametrically opposite to the tenour of the Gospel, and that which evacuates the death and satisfaction of Christ; for it causes us, while we acknowledge a Christ, tacitly to deny the Saviour.—South, vol. vi. Ser. 12.

We chose to stop there, because it seems to be the very diametrical point of opposition, or a point very near to that, between the government of this Prince [King James] and the government of Queen Elizabeth, which we have so largely insisted upon.
Bolingbroke. On the History of England, Let. 21.

There is a country, said he, in the world called Pourli, no matter for its longitude or latitude, whose inhabitants have ways of thinking, in many things, particularly in morals, diametrically opposite to ours.—Hume. A Dialogue.

DI'AMOND, n. DI'AMONDED. DI'AMANT, or DI'AMENT. DI'AMANTINE. Fr. Diamant; It. and Sp. Diamante; Dut. Diamant; Ger. Demant; and in old Eng. Diamant; Lat. Adamas; Gr. Αδαμας, αδαμαντος; adamant, from a, priv. and δαμα-ειν, domare; to tame, to overpower; quod nullâ vi domabilis; to be overpowered by no force. See Vossius, and the example from Pliny; also ADAMANT.

Haue harte as hard as diamaunt
Stedfast, and nauht pliaunt.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

His propre stone is diamant
Whiche is to him moste acordant.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

But he that by good vse and experyence, hathe in his eye the ryghte marke and very trewe lustre of the dyamonde, reiecteth anone, and lysteth not to looke vpon the counterfayte, be it neuer so well handeled, neuer so craftely polyshed.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 73.

Wonderfull and inenarrable is the hardnesse of a diamant; besides it hath a nature to conquer the fury of fire, nay, you shall never make it hote; doe what you can: for this untamable vertue that it hath, the Greeks have given it the name Adamas.—Holland. Pliny, b. xxxvii. c. 4.

Prince Arthur gaue a box of diamond sure,
Emboss'd with gold and gorgeous ornament,
Wherein were clos'd few drops of liquor pure
Of wondrous worth, and vertue excellent,
That any wound could heale incontinent.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 9.

Break a stone in the middle, or lop a bough of a tree, and one shall behold the grain thereof (by some secret cause in nature) diamonded or streaked in the fashion of a lozenge.
Fuller. Profane State, p. 368.

Corv. I have a diament for him, too.
B. Jonson. The Fox, Act i. sc. 5.

——— The stately building
The world's great Maker curiously did found
On fields of pearle with diamantine towers
Stirling. Doomes-Day. The Twelfth Houre.

Phil. Deep shades are thus to heighten colours set;
So stars in night, and diamonds shine in jet.
Dryden. Secret Love, or the Maiden Queen, Act v.

This author, then, speaking of the first of those three diamond-mines, which he makes to be the only ones in the East Indies, having told us, that the stones are there found, some in the ground, and some in the rock, subjoins, that those that are drawn from the rock, or the neighbouring parts, have ordinarily a good water; but for those, which are drawn out of the ground, their water partakes of the colour or soil, wherein they are found. If the earth be clean and somewhat sandy, the diamonds will be of a good water; but if it be fat or black, or of another colour, they will have some tincture of it.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 528.

Nor let the pride of great ones scorn
This charmer of the plains;
That sun, who bids their diamonds blaze,
To paint our lily deigns.—Mallet. Edwin & Emma.

DI'APASE. DIAPA'SON. Minshew says, Diapason or concord of all. Fr., Sp. and Lat. Diapason, est concentus omnium in musicâ. Gr. Διαπασων, from δια, through, πασων, omnium. See the quotation from Bacon.

And twixt them both a quadrat was the base,
Proportion'd equally by seuen and nine;
Nine was the circle set in heaven's place,
All which compacted, made a goodly diapase.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 9.

Thou art the mistress to command
The touch of the most curious hand,
When every quaver doth embrace
His like, in a true diapase.
Drayton. The Muses' Elysium, Nymphal 3.

The diapason or eight in musick is the sweetest concord; insomuch, as it is in effect an vnison.
Bacon. Natural History, s. 103.

The first stanza [of Dryden's first Ode for Cecilia's day] is vigorous and elegant, though the word diapason is too technical, and the rhymes are too remote from one another.
Johnson. Life of Dryden.

DI'APASM. Gr. Διαπασμα, from Διαπασσ-ειν, inspergere. "Diapasms are aromatic herbs dried and reduced to powder; they were formerly made into little balls with sweet water, and strung together as here, or worn loose in the pocket. This is the 'pomander chain,' mentioned just below."—Gifford, Note on B. Jonson.

Per. I come, sir. There's an excellent diapasme in a chaine too, if you like it.
B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revells, Act v. sc. 4.

DI'APER, v. DI'APER, n. DI'APER, adj. "Fr. Diaprer; to diaper, flourish, diversifie with flourishing," (Cotgrave.) Skinner mentions the conjecture that this word owes its origin to the town of Ipre, in Flanders; but adds that there is no reason given for believing that Ipre was more famous for this manufacture than any other town. Dr. Anderson revives the conjecture, and Warton adopts it. The word they suppose was originally written D'Ipre. In confirmation, Warton quotes from Chaucer's Wife of Bath, v. 450.

Of cloth making she had such a haunt,
She passed them of Ipre, and of Gaunt, (i. e. Ghent.)

Skinner proposes Fr. Diaire, to variegate. Du Cange, the It. Diaspro, jasper. "Diapred, embroidered, diversified. Rich cloth embroidered with raised work we call d'Ipre, and from thence Diaper, and to do this, or any work like it, was called, to Diaper, whence the participle." See Warton's History of English Poetry, i. 176. N. y.

——— A stede bay, trapped in stele,
Covered with cloth of gold, diapred wele
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2160.

They of the towne demed surely that they had been merchaũts, come thyder to the fayre to haue bought cloth and dyaper, for they said they came fro Mounte Pellier to bye marchaũdyse.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol ii. c. 119

Not any damsell, which her vaunteth most
In skilfull knitting of soft silken twine;
Nor any weauer, which his worke doth boast
In diaper, in damaske, or in lyne.—Spenser. Muiopotmos.

Aut. Whate'er the wanton spring,
When she doth diaper the ground with beauties,
Toils for, comes home to autumn.
Ford. The Sun's Darling, Act iv. sc. 1.

That other glittering armie with milk-white diaper coates, must be died red in bloud, when they come to strokes, and to try it out with dint of sword.—Holland. Livie, p. 381.

I have as good diaper, made by some of my tenants nigh Armagh, as can come to a table, and all other cloth for houshold uses.
Locke. Mr. Molineux to Mr. Locke, Sept. 26, 1696.

DIAPHANE'ITY. } Gr. Δια, through, and DIA'PHANOUS. } φαν-ειν, to shine. "Fr. Diaphaner—
To clear, brighten, make transparent."

As for its diaphanity or perspicuity, it [Chrystall] enjoyeth that most eminently: and the reason thereof is its continuity; as having its earthly and salinous parts so exactly resolved, that its body is left imporous and not discreted by atomical terminations.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c 1.

Hence it is, that they who consider the preciousness and scarcitie of time, make it their study how to stay it, as it were, in passing, which is to be done after the manner that corporal reflections are made, by staying the light from passing through a diaphanous body, because transparent matters retain not the images set before them.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 4. s. 2.

And because the outward coat of the eye ought to be pellucid to transmit the light, which, if the eyes should always stand open, would be apt to grow dry, and shrink, and lose their diaphaneity, therefore are the eyelids so contrived as often to wink, that so they may as it were glaze and varnish them over with the moisture they contain, there being glandules on purpose to separate a humour for that use, and withall wipe off whatever dust or filth may stick to them.
Ray On the Creation, pt ii.

It seem'd not absurd to imagine, that upon the rushing of the air out of the receiver into the emptied cylinder, the air in the receiver being suddenly and vehemently expanded, the texture of it was as suddenly altered, and the parts made to shift places (perhaps some of them change postures,) as during their new and vehement motion, and their varied situation, to disturb the wonted continuity, and so the diaphaneity of the air.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 92.

The eyes of spiders, (in some four, in some six, and in some eight,) are placed all in the fore front of the head, which is round, and without any neck, all diaphanous and transparent, like a locket of diamonds
Derham. Physico Theology, b. iv. c 2. Note 9.

—— Oft the jasper's found
Green, but diaphanous.
Sir W. Jones. The third Discourse on the Hindus.

DIAPHORE'TICK, adj. } Gr. Διαφορητικος, from Διαφορ-ειν,
DIAPHORE'TICK, n. } to dissipate, to disperse.
DIAPHORE'TICAL. }

"Fr. Diaphorétique,—dissolving or evaporating humours," (Cotgrave.)

And whereas I intended it only for a diaphoretick to cast him into a breathing sweat, it hath had upon him all the effects of a vomit.—Marvell. Works, vol. ii. p. 247.

Take of vipers reduced to fine powder one ounce, diaphoretic antimony half an ounce.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 387.

It may work upon the mind as, physitians say, those kind of diaphoretical medicines do upon the body, the which although they do not produce any violent sweat, yet they cleanse by opening the pores, and keeping the body in a continued transpiration and breathing out of the malignity.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, Treat. 6. s. 3.

DI'APHRAGM. Gr. Διαφραγμα, from Δια-φρασσ-ειν, δια, φρασσ-ειν, sepire; It., Sp. and Lat. Diaphragma; "Fr. Diaphragme,—the midriffe; a long and round muscle, whereby the vital parts are separated from the natural, and the heart and lights from the stomach and nether bowels," (Cotgrave.)

He cut away the ribs, diaphragm and pericardium of a dog; also the top of the wind pipe, that he might tie it on to the nose of a pair of bellows; and by blowing into the lungs, he restored the dog to life.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 7. Note 1.

The liver is fastened in the body by two ligaments: the first, which is large and strong, comes from the diaphragm, and penetrates the substance of the liver.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 11.

DIARRHOE'A. Fr. Diarrhée; It. Diarrea; Sp. Diarrhea, Lat. Diarrhœa; Gr. Διαρροια, from διαρρειν, from δια, and ρε-ειν, fluere, to flow.

Diarrhœas, and though more seldom, even dysenterical ones, are happily and easily cured, as I have sometimes known by the bare use of so slight a remedy as milk, wherein whilst it is gently boiling, an equal quantity of fair water is little by little put, till at last there remains but as much liquor as the milk alone amounted to at first.
Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 113.

He [D. Hume] answered, Your hopes are groundless. An habitual diarrhœa of more than a year's standing would be a very bad disease at any age: at my age it is a mortal one.
Letter from A. Smith to W. Strachan.

DIARY. Fr. Diaire. Est libellus, in quo acta unuscujusque diei describuntur, (Minshew.) Lat. Diarium.
A record, or an account of daily occurrences.

Herewith I present your lordship with a compleat diary of your own late legation, which hath cost me some toil and labour.—Howell, b. i. s. 6. Let. 19.

The earl [Arundel] seems to have had in his service another painter, one Harrison, now only known to us by a chronologic diary, in which he records particulars relating to old Parr, whom Lord Arundel had a curiosity to see.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. ii c. 2

DIA'STOLE. So written in Fr., It., Sp., and Lat.; Gr Διαστολη, from διαστελλειν, to separate, to disjoin.
The dilatation of the heart.

Now as we have no voluntary imperium at all, upon the systole and diastole of the heart, so are we not conscious to ourselves of any energy of our own soul that causes them.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 161.

That the motion of all muscles consists in constriction, is not to be doubted also. By which means the systole is easily accounted. But, forasmuch, as the heart hath no antagonist muscle, the diastole hath puzzled the greatest wits.—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 7. Note 1.

DIA'TRIBE. } Lat. Diatribe; Gr. Διατριβη,
DIA'TRIBIST. } from διατριβειν, (δια, and τριβ-ειν, terere, terere tempus.) The word appears to have been applied to a prolonged or renewed discussion or examination of any thing.

But I that am not yet by all his diatribe so instructed, or improved, as to discern one real misadventure in those discourses, find it impossible for me to be edified by this his charity.—Hammond. Works, vol. ii. pt. iv. p. 136.

And the same I desire may introduce my address to this diatribist, and the tasks by him set before me, the subjects which he hath chosen to consider with me being such, as well deserve some care from each of us, that we neither deceive others, nor ourselves in them.—Id. Ib. p. 134.

DIB, v. } To dib or dibble is to dip, (qv.)
DI'BBLE. } Dibble, the dim. is—
A tool with which plants are dipped into the ground; and thus planted.

And this way of fishing we call daping, dabbing, or dibbing; wherein you are always to have your line flying before you—up or down the river, as the wind serves—and to angle as near as you can to the bank of the same side whereon you stand.—Walton. Angler, pt. ii. c. 5.

These, I think I told you before, we commonly dape, or dibble with.—Id. Ib. pt. ii. c. 7.

Yet for all this there comes another strange gardener that never knew the soil, never handled a dibble or spade to set the least pot-herb that grew there, much less had endur'd an hour's sweat or chillness, and yet challenges as his right the binding or unbinding of every flower, the clipping of every bush, the weeding and worming of every bed, both in that and every other garden thereabout.
Milton. Animad. upon Remonstrants' Defence.

DICA'CITY. Coined by the author quoted, to denote—
Fluency in writing.

Where the question is momentous, and the celebration of their fame foreign to it, what should induce any one, who is really desirous of information, to remit the freedom of inquiry after it for their dicacity.
Byrom. Enthusiasm, Introd.

DICE, v. } Fr. Dé. Vossius says, "Dadus et detius, tesseram notant, quæ
DICE, n. } Italis et Hispanis, dado, unde da-
DI'CER. } dus; Gallis de, vel det, unde detius."
DI'CING, n. } (De Vitiis, l. ii. c. 5.)

Junius says, perhaps from the Gr. Δικ-ειν, jacere, to throw or cast. Skinner prefers the Lat. Datum, i. e. delivered or thrown from the hand. And Menage, dado, corrupted from datus.

And Danyell the dees pleyere.—Piers Ploughman, p. 131.

Hit ben the Devilles dicares, to drawe men to synne.
Id. Ib. p. 130.

Lake eke how to the King Demetrius
The King of Parthes, as the book sayth us,
Sent him a pair of dis of gold in scorne,
For he had used hasard therebeforne.
Chaucer. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,557.

He yeueth his graces vndeserued,
And fro that man whiche hath him serued,
Full ofte he taketh away his fees,
As he that plaieth at the dies.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

There is such dicing-houses also, they say as had not beene wont to be, where young gentlemen dice away their thrift, and where dicing is, there are other follies also Latimer, Ser. 5. Before King Edward.

The Lacedemonians sent an ambassade to the citie of Corinthe, to haue with them alliance: but whan the ambassadours founde the princis and counsaylours playenge at dyse, they departed without exploytynge their message, sayenge, that they would not maculate the honour of theyr people with suche a reproche, to be saide, that they had made alliaunce with disers.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. i c. 26.

The sayd hoost of Flemynges assayld ye moût in a secret wyse as mē of warre myght, and drewe theym towarde the Frenshemen, which thenne were vnarmed, and in theyr disportes of dysynge and playinge at the chesse and other gamys.—Fabyan, an. 1377.

As for the rumour that run of his dice playing he bashed no whit thereat; and he [Augustus] played simply without art and openly for his disport, even when he was well stricken in years.—Holland. Suetonius, p. 70.

Or if he believe it unlawful to play at cards or dice; or that it is forbidden by God's word to let out money at interest: why, in all these cases he may follow his opinion, though it be a false one, without sin
Sharp, vol. ii. A Discourse of Conscience.

The lieutenant and Mr. Underhil, who brought him to the Tower, sent for Thomas Robins, alias Morgan, commonly called little Morgan, brother unto great Morgan, of Salisbury court, the great dicer.
Strype. Memorials. Edw. VI. an 1548.

My Lords, it would be a martyrdom to these retired sober women, to be compelled, with elbows bared to the shoulder, to sally forth to the pleasures of the midnight rout, to distribute the cards at loo, or, soaring to sublimer joys, to rattle the dice-box at the games of hazard.
Horsley. Speech, July 10. 1800.

DICHO'TOMY. } Gr. Διχοτομειν, to cut into DICHO'TOMIST. } parts, (διχα, and τεμν-ειν, to DICHO'TOMIZE. } cut.)

Our Saviour said to Pilate, "Sayest thou this thing of thyself, or did others tell thee?" And all things reported are reducible to this dichotomie 1. The fountain of invention. 2 the channell of relation.
Fuller. Worthies, vol. i. c. 23.

Now according to these two different notions of nature, the four forementioned forms of Atheism may be again dichotomized after this manner; into such as derive all things from a mere fortuitous and temerarious nature devoid of all order and methodicalness: and such as deduce the original of things from a certain orderly, regular, and artificial, though senseless nature in matter.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 139.

Certainly a trivial invention, and an infinite prejudice to sciences; for these dichotomists when they would wrest all things to the laws of their method, and whatsoever doth not aptly fall within those dichotomies they would either omitt or bow contrarie to their naturall inclination; they bring it so to passe, that the kernels and graines of sciences leape out, and they clasps and inclose onely the drie and empty huskes.—Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. vi. c. 2. s. 1.

The apostolical benediction dichotomizes all good things into grace and peace.—Bp. Hall. Ser. Happy, ii. 9.

DICTA'MNE. The herb dittany.
Pennyroyal.

And whilst I wander like the wounded deere,
That seekes for dictamne to recure his scarre,
And come to the whom I hold onely deere,
Thou dost (fierce faire) at my disaster scarre.
Stirling. Aurora, s 5.

DI'CTATE, v. } Fr. Dicter; Sp. Dictar;
DI'CTATE, n. } It. Dettare; Lat. Dictare,
DICTA'TION. } from Dicere, to say or speak.
DICTA'TOR. } Dictator, a dictando, quia
DI'CTATORY. } crebro diceret, *edicere*tque,
DICTATO'RIAL. } quæ utilia essent reipublicæ,
DICTATO'RIAN. } (Vossius.)
DICTA'TORSHIP. }
DI'CTATURE. } To say, speak, tell, pro-
DICTA'TRIX. } claim, declare, what shall be
DI'CTAMEN. } done; where, when, and how; what another shall write;—to speak or write with authority.

In the kalenders of Januarie, whan the senate deuided the offices, being pourueyed of a dictatour, and of two consules yerely, incontinente in the thirde place they prouided for foure most excellent barons to defend the saide foure frontiers.—Golden Boke, c. 1.

No, you will dictate wholesome grounds, and sow
Seeds in his mind, as pure as that is now:
Breathe in your thoughts, your soul, make him the true
Resemblance of your worth, speak and live you.
Cartwright. To Dr. Duppa.

I hope God hath given me ability to be master of my own passion, and endowed me with that reason, that will dictate unto me what is for my own good and benefit.
State Trials. Lieut.-Col. J. Lilburne, an. 1649.

For he [Sylla] proclamed himself Dictator, which office had not been for sixscore years before in use, and made the senate discharge him of all that was past, giving him free liberty afterwards to kill whom he would, and to confiscate their goods to destroy cities, and to build up new as he listed; to take away kingdoms, and to give them where he thought good.—North. Plutarch, p. 403.

In the third place also if you will believe that you have a dictatorian power over all times, and laws past, and present, and so may justify all that you act against them: yet why do you not act against them without such detestable cursings, odious railings, and unsavory derisions, as your mouth is perpetually defiled with.
State Trials. Lieut.-Col. J. Lilburne, an. 1649.

Your beauty 'twas at first did awe me,
And into bondage, woeful bondage draw me;
It was your cheek, your eye, your lip,
Which raised you first to the dictatorship.
Cotton. To the Countess of Chesterfield.

What heresies and prodigious opinions have been set on foot, and maintained to the death under the pretence of the dictates, and warrant of God's spirit!
Bp. Hall. Rem. p. 143

Rather, as I hope, for that our English, the language of men ever famous, and foremost in the atchievements of liberty, will not easily find servile letters enow to spell such a dictatory presumption English'd.
Milton. Speech on unlicensed Printing.

Nay the very same autors, who have usurpt a kind of dictature in sciences, and with such confidence past censure upon matters in doubt, have yet (the heat once over) in the lucide intervalles, from these peremptory fits of asseveration, changed their note
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, Pref. p 9.

That is to say, you are to trust to your own particular discourses, as to particular discourses, and no farther; but to the resolves of the church as to the dictamens of a higher understanding, by the light of which you are to judge and censure of the rest.
Ld. Falkland, in Hammond's Works, vol. ii. pt. i. p 600.

Though Phalaris's brazen bull were there,
And he would dictate what he'd have you swear,
Be not so profligate, but rather choose
To guard your honour, and your life to lose,
Rather than let your virtue be betray'd!
Virtue, the noblest cause for which you're made
Stepney. Imit. of Juvenal.

Then those who follow'd Reason's dictates right,
Liv'd up, and lifted high their natural light,
With Socrates may see their Maker's face,
While thousand rubric martyrs want a place
Dryden. Religio Laici.

Did they appeal to Saint Peter as to the supreme dictatour and judge of controversies? not so; but they sent to the apostle and eldere at Jerusalem, to enquire about the question.—Barrow. Of the Pope's Supremacy.

The Gentiles, though in their searches after wisdom and knowledge they had fallen into many errors, yet had discovered many excellent truths, and if a judicious collection had been made of the useful doctrines which some or other of them in various times and places had taught, a system of morality might have been drawn up, which would bear no small resemblance to the dictates of the Gospel
Jortin. On the Christian Religion, Dis. 2.

But scarcely any man is so steadily serious as not to complain, that the severity of dictatorial instruction has been too seldom relieved, and that he is driven by the sternness of the Rambler's philosophy to more cheerful and airy companions.—Rambler, No. 208.

A still stronger proof of his [Sylla] placing more confidence in his good fortune, than in his atchievements, was his laying down the dictatorship.—Langhorne. Plutarch.

Haply it may be said, that any charity is, at any time, the favourite of so capricious a dictatrix of human conduct.
Knox. The Magdalen Hospital recommended.

DI'CTION. Fr. Diction; Lat. Dictio, from Dicere, dictum. See DICTATE.
The style of language in writing or speaking.

We are not wont to require the diction of the New Testament, which have so much of the Old Testament Hebrew idiom in them, to be tryed by Attical heathen Greek writers: yet shall I not now need to refuse that tryal which is here offered.—Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 425.

Concise your diction; let your sense be clear,
Nor with a weight of words fatigue the ear.
Francis. Horace, b. i. Sat. 10.

Though he [Dryden] wrote hastily, and often incorrectly, and his style is not free from faults, yet there is a richness in his diction, a copiousness, ease, and variety in his expression, which have not been surpassed by any who have come after him.—Blair, vol. i. Lect. 18.

DI'CTIONARY. Lat. Dictionarium; Fr. Dictionnaire; It. Dizionario; Sp. Diccionario. In Dut. Woordenboek.
A book of words, containing (as distinguished from a mere vocabulary) their etymology, meaning, and usage.

O ridiculous birth! a mouse crept out of the mountain! Help grammarians! one of your number is in danger of perishing! The laws of God and of nature are safe; but Salmasius's Dictionary is undone.
Milton. A Defence of the People of England.

I am not to blame for quoting the philosophical dictionary of that author, because the design of dictionaries is to show the use of words.
Clarke and Leibnitz. Mr. Leibnitz's fourth Paper.

I am not here writing a dictionary, (which yet ought to be done, and of a very different kind indeed from any thing ever yet attempted any where,) but only laying a foundation for a new theory of language.
Tooke. Diversions of Purley, vol. i. c. 9.

DID. i.e. Doed, do'd, did. See Do.

DIDA'CTICK, adj. } Gr. Διδακτικος, that DIDA'CTICAL. } can or may teach or
DIDA'SCALIC. } learn; able to teach or learn; from Διδασκ-ειν, to teach.
Instructive, directive, (sc.) of manners or conduct.

I have already discoursed of the integrity of life, and what great necessity there is, and how deep obligations lie upon you, not only to be innocent and void of offence, but also to be holy; not only pure, but shining; not only to be blameless, but to be didactic in your lives; that, as by your sermons you preach in season, so by your lives you may preach out of season.—Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 10.

We shall not need here to describe out of their didactical writings, what kind of prayers, and what causes of confidence they teach towards the blessed Virgin Mary and All Saints.—Id. A Dissuasive from Popery, pt. i. s. 9.

For the apostle proves the necessity of God's revealing these things by his Spirit, v. 10, 11, 12, and then adds that their speaking was not after the didactick way of human wisdom, but of the Holy Spirit, comparing spiritual things with spiritual.—Stillingfleet, vol iii. Ser. 12.

In all which he displays the glorious state of that kingdom, not in the ordinary way of argumentation and formal reasoning which had no place in an epistle writ as this is, all as it were in a rapture, and in a stile far above the plain didactical way.—Locke. Paraphrase on Ephesians, Synopsis.

Under what species it may be comprehended, whether didascalic or heroic, I leave to the judgment of the critics
Prior. Solomon, Pref.

This useful Impression [on the mind] is commonly made in poetry by indirect methods; as by fable, by narration, by representation of characters; but didactick poetry openly professes its intention of conveying knowledge and instruction.—Blair, Lect. 40.

DI'DAPPER. Skinner says (q.d.) Dive-dapper. It is probably merely a reduplication of dip, (q.d.) dip-dipper. See DAB-CHICK.

Upon this promise did he raise his chin,
Like a di-dapper peering through a wave,
Who being look'd on, ducks as quickly in.
Shakespeare. Venus & Adonis.

Lus. The misery of man may fitly be compar'd to a didapper, who when she is under water, past our sight, and indeed can seem no more to us, rises again; shakes but herself, and is the same she was: so is it with transitory man, this day.—Beaum. & Fletch. Woman Hater, Act iv. sc. 3.

Thou must eat little or no goat's flesh, nor red deer; nor even foal's flesh, by any means: and carefully abstain,—that is, as much as thou canst, from peacocks, cranes, coots, didappers, and water hens.
Sterne. Tristram Shandy, vol. viii. c. 34.

DI'DRACHM. Gr. Διδραχμον, from δις, twice, and δραχμη. A double drachm, equal to two Roman denarii, or fifteen pence English. See DRACHM.

They went to Peter whom they sawe in maner next about hym, saying: Doeth youre maister (quoth they) pay the didramme or didrachma for trybute, as others doe
Udal. Matt. c. 17.

The Septuagint reads το ἡμισυ διδραχμον, the half of the didrachm, or half shekel, which is all one with a whole didrachm Attick.—Hammond. Annot. on St. Matthew, c. 17.

DIDU'CTION, n. } Lat. Diducere, ctum, (dis, and ducere,) to draw apart.
DIDU'CTIVELY. }
A drawing apart; withdrawing one part from another.
Diductively is used by Brown, as deductively. The 4to. edition of Boyle reads deduction.

He ought to shew us what kind of strings they are, which, though strongly fastened to the inside of the receiver and superficies of the bladder, must draw just as forcibly one as another, how long soever they be without the bladder, in comparison of those that within the bladder drew so as to hinder the diduction of its sides.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p 105.

Now, what is very strange, there is scarce a popular error passant in our dayes, which is not either directly expressed, or diductively contained in this work [Pliny, Natural History], which being in the hands of most men, hath proved a powerful occasion of their propagation.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 8

DIE. See DICE. Also that in which any thing is cast or moulded; the cast or mould itself; the stamp.

Thus through foistinge and coggings theire die, and other false playe, these new perillous teachers deceive many poore soule, and robbe them of the sure pure simplicitie of their faithe.—Jewel. A Replie to M. Hardinge, p. 171.

At the last, as men that being a marvellous height from the ground do headlong throw themselves down, closing up their eyes, and withdrawing their minds from the thought of danger: crying out these words onely unto them that were by in the Greek tongue, ανερριφθω κυβος. in English, let the die be cast (meaning hereby to put all in hazard and according to our proverb, to set all on six or seven) he [Julius Cæsar] pass'd over with his army.
North. Plutarch, p. 349.

Such variety of dies made use of by Wood in stamping his money, makes the discovery of counterfeits more difficult
Swift

Though the dies falling in such a manner be accidental to him that casts it, yet none will suppose that there is no cause why it falls as it does.
J. Edwards. On the Freedom of Will, pt. ii. s. 4

DIE, v. } Sometimes written Dye. "A. S.
DIE, n. } Deag-an, tingere, intingere, inficere,
DI'ER. } imbuere, colorare. To dy or colour," (Somner.)
To tinge, to stain, to steep or dip in any thing, that will tinge or stain; to colour; to give a hue, tinge or colouring to. In Chaucer it is applied to the scent.

The swote smell sprong so wide
That it died all the place about.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R

A webbe, a dyer, and a tapiser,
Were alle yclothed in o livere,
Of a solempne and grete fraternite.
Id. The Prologue, v. 364.

Graine that you die scarlet withall is worth the batman ready money, 200. shaughs, reconing the shaugh for 6 pener Russe.—Hacluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 361.

There is a wood called Logwood or Palo Campichio, it is cheape and yeildeth a glorious blew, but our workmen can not make it sure, this wood you must take with you, and see whether the silke diers or wooll diers in Turkey can do it.
Id. Ib. vol. ii. pt. i. p. 165.

And this was of such force, that for the space of five hundred years and more, Lycurgus chief law and ordinances remained in full perfection, as a deep wodded die, which went to the bottom, and pierced into the tender wool.
North. Plutarch, p. 65.

In like maner in Norffolke there was assembled an huge number of those vnrulie countrie people which vnder the guiding of a dier of cloth, commonlie called John Littester, that had dwelt in Norwich, attempted and did all such vngratious feats, as they had heard that other did in other parts of the realme.—Holinshed. Rich. II. an. 1381.

We also learned in the dye-houses, that cloth being dyed blue with woad, is afterwards by the yellow decoction of woud-wax or wood-wax, dyed into a green colour.
Boyle. Works, pt. iii. vol. i. p. 740.

DIE, v. See DEAD. Also written Dye, (qv.)

Tho Hengist ysey the Cristene men hym siwe so faste
And that he moste nede turne azeyn other deye att laste,
He bigan to ordeyne ye folk.—R. Gloucester, p. 139

Thei receyued him fulle faire, & were of him blythe.
With him alle, thei said, thei wild lyue and deie.
R. Brunne, p 45.

God sent to Saul, by Samuel the prophete
That Agar of Amalek, and al hus lyge puple
Shoide deye delfulliche, for dedes of here eldren.
Piers Ploughman, p 52

He wente to him & preiede him, that he schulde come doun, and heele his sonne, for he began to dye.
Wiclif. John, c 4.

For naked as a worme was she
And if the weather stormy were
For cold she should haue died there.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

And the Lorde God commaunded Adam saylnge· Of al trees of the garden se thou eate: but of ye tree of knowledge of good and bad se that thou eate not· for euê ye same day thou eatest of it thou shalt dye ye deth.
Bible, 1551. Genesis, c. 2.

So raisde they eke faire Ledaes warlike twines,
And interchanged life vnto them lent,
That when th' one dies, th' other then beginnes
To shew in heauen his brightnes orient.
Spenser. The Ruines of Time.

To my light scenes I once inscrib'd your name,
And impotently strove to borrow fame;
Soon will that die which adds thy name to mine,
Let me, then, live join'd to a work of thine.
R. Steele. To the Author of the Tragedy of Cato.

There taught us how to live; and (oh, too high
The price for knowledge) taught us how to die.
Tickell. On the Death of Addison.

If then there is a divine assistance promised and vouchsafed to every sincere Christian, in proportion to his trials and temptations, he has none but himself to blame, if he prefers a bad influence to a good one, and lets the adversary of his soul be harkened to more than him that created it, and died to redeem it.—Pearce, vol. ii. Ser. 18.

DIET, v.
DI'ET, n.
DIETER.
DIETE'TIC.
DIETE'TICAL.
DI'ETING, n.

Fr. Diète; It. and Sp. Dieta; Lat. Dieta; Gr. Διαιτα. (Of uncertain etymology. "A set rule and order of eating and drinking," (Minshew.) To diet, is used, (lit. and met.) as equivalent to—

To feed: more restrictedly, to feed upon medicated meats, or upon meats prepared to secure or restore health. Diet-breads, and Diet-drinks, were breads and drinks so prepared.

I pray you, cosin, wisely that ye ride;
Governeth you also of your diete
Attemprely —Chaucer. The Shipmannes Tale, v. 13,191.

And than I drynke a bitter swete
With drie lippe, and eien wete.
So thus I temper my diete.
Gower. Con. A. b vi.

But if he wil not, they do but diet hym a season, to winne him and make him tell more, and deliuer hym to the lay power.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 203.

If noo feuer remayne, than vse moderate fricasies, and lyttell eatyng, & that of meates hauynge good iuyce, increacynge by lyttell and lyttell to the naturall diete.
Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. iv. c. 5.

——— If you go less,
Or take a dyeting mercy to protection,
The honour of a father I disclaim in you.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Double Marriage, Act ii sc 1.

With these threats, Cleopatra for fear yielded straight, as she would have yielded unto strokes: and afterwards suffered herself to be cured and dieted as they listed.
North. Plutarch, p. 783.

I shall prescribe one receipt to all Christian tempers, which is to acquire the habit of piety and devotion; for this, in our spirituall life, is like a healthfull aire and a temperate diet in our naturall, the best preservative of a rectified faith, and the best disposition to recover from an unsound religion.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 3. s. 2.

Arui. He cut our rootes in characters,
And sawe'st our brothes, as Juno had bin sicke,
And he her dieter.—Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act iv. sc. 2.

The third, dietetticall and prophylacticall receipts of wholesome caution, which I meane (with a determinate præterition of the rest) to spend my hour upon; Save yourselves from this untoward generation.—Bp. Hall. Ser. Acts, ii. 37.

Yet can I set my Gallio's dieting,
A pestle of a lark, or plover's wing;
And warn him not to cast his wonton eyne
On grosser bacon.
Id. b. iv. Sat. 4.

We have dieted a healthy body into a consumption by plying it with physick instead of food.
Swift. On the Conduct of the Allies.

From the beginning of God's taking them unto his care and patronage, they were fed and maintain'd at the immediate cost and charges of heaven: they were dieted with miracles, with new inventions and acts of providence, the course of nature itself still veiling to their necessities.
South, vol. v. Ser. 9.

——— Twelve orient morns
Have seen him there extended, yet his flesh
Nor putrid taint invades, nor inbred worm,
That diets on the brave in battle fall'n.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiv.

Their failure as remedies may be reasonably attributed to the alterations, which the human frame is found to undergo in the revolution of ages by a general change of dietetic regimen.—Knox. Ess. No. 38.

DI'ET. See Diette, in Menage; Diæta, in Du Cange; Deut, in Wachter; Thiuda in Junius, (Gloss. Goth.) Menage thinks it an application of Diet (above) to a public assembly; because the Germans were anciently accustomed to treat of public affairs in the midst of their festivals. Duchat and Skinner think from Dies, a day; the Ger. Reichs tog, dies imperii translated into Dieta; the day (emphatically) fixed according to the former for pleas or other public business. In English legal proceedings, the parties (in certain cases) pray a Day (sc. for deciding their suit.) Skinner says,—because, perhaps, the whole time of session was judicially considered as one Day. Lye refers to the Goth. Thiuda, gens, in Junius, (Gloss. Goth.) where Thiuda, thied, or Diet, diæta, are assigned to the A.S. Theod-an, getheod-an, jungere se alicui, associare; Theod-ian, gethead-ian, jungere se alicui, associari;—to join or unite, to associate or meet together.

The King of Rome hath sent Guzman, one of the cheefe abowte him, to th' Emperor to exhort him to appoint a dyet in some place of Germanie, for the quietness of the same, which messenger, as yet, hath had no audience.
Lodge. Illustrations of British History, vol. i. p. 170.

Viz. the Pope, Emperour, King of Spain, Duke of Bavaria, &c. and of so great consequence joynthe, and severally to them all, and must of necessity require divers assemblies, commissions, perchance diettes, &c.
Cabbala. The Lord Brook to the Duke, Nov. 1623.

Each proselyte would vote his doctor best,
With absolute exclusion to the rest:
Thus would your Polish diet disagree,
And end, as it began, in anarchy.
Dryden. The Hind & the Panther.

DIFFAME. See DEFAME.

DIFFER, v.
DI'FFERENT.
DI'FFERENCE, n.
DI'FFERENCE, v.
DIFFERE'NTIAL.
DIFFERE'NTIALLY.
DI'FFERENTLY.
DI'FFERINGLY.

Fr. Différer; It. Differire; Sp. Diferenciar; Lat. Differre, to bear apart, (dis, and ferre.) Vossius says,—Differre is properly dissipare, dividere: to dissipate, to divide; and, (met.) as things dissimilar are said (di-stare) to stand apart; so are they said (differre) to differ.

To bear apart, to separate or divide; to be or cause to be separate or apart, or asunder in place; to dissever or distinguish; to be or cause to be separate, distinct, dissimilar or unlike in appearances; to have dissimilar or unlike properties or qualities; to have, keep or maintain, dissimilar or contradictory ideas, notions or opinions. And thus, to dissent, to disagree, to dispute, to controvert, to debate, to contend.

By this reason then, there commen many maner of knowynge, to diuerse and to diffryng substaunces.
Chaucer. Boecius, b i.

All folke than (qd she) good and eke badde, enforcen hem without difference of entencion to comen to good.—Id. Ib.

In makinge of comparison
There male no difference bee
Betwix a dronken man and mee.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

There is one maner glory of the sunne, and another glorie of the moone, & another glory of the starres, for one starre differeth frō another in glorie.—Bible, 1551. 1 Cor. c. 15.

But the Lorde shewyng what difference there was betwene the Jewishe righteousnesse, and the righteousnesse of the ghospel betwene a good Jewe, and a good Christian manne, sayde: If thou will be perfect, goe and sell all that thou hast, and geue the money to ye poor.—Udal. Matt. c. 19.

Magellane was not altogether deceived, in naming of them giants, for they generally differ from the common sort of men, both in stature, bignesse, and strength of body, as also in the hideousness of their voice: but yet they are nothing so monstrous, or giant-like as they were reported.
Sir Francis Drake Revived, p. 28.

——— How now, Sir Knight!
What meaneth this which heere I see before?
How fortuneth this foule vncomely plight
So different from that, which earst ye seem'd in sight?
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 7.

Nay, and in this, thou show'st to value more
One poet, then of other folke ten score.
O pietie! so to weigh the poor's estates'
O bountie! so to difference the rates
B. Jonson. An Epigram to King Charles.

And if it be true both in divinity and law, that consent alone though copulation never follow, makes a marriage, how can they dissolve it for want of that which made it not, and not dissolve it for that not continuing which made it, and should preserve it in love and reason, and difference it from a brute conjugality!—Milton. Tetrachordon.

So that in these three respects even the communicable attributes of God, are themselves incommunicable, and so they are his name, whereby he is known and differenced from all other beings whatsoever.
Hopkins. Practical Exposition of the Lord's Prayer.

Though now great difference be of mortals made,
"All shall meet equals, but must first be dead."
Stirling. Domes-Day. The Fifth Hour.

Especially the understanding, the supreme faculty of the soul, which chiefly differenceth us from brute beasts, and makes us capable of virtue and vice, of rewards and punishments, shall be busied and employed in contemplating the works of God, and observing the divine art and wisdom, manifested in the structure and composition of them.
Ray. On the Creation, pt i.

As the difference of tone makes a difference between every man's voice, of the same country, yea family: so a different dialect and pronunciation, differs persons of divers countries, yea persons of one and the same country, speaking the same language.—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. v. c. 9. Note l.

First as to that which belongs to the sight, you must conceive that which is called a white or a black colour not to be any thing, absolutely existing either without your eyes, or within your eyes; but black and white, and every other colour, is caused by different motions made upon the eye from objects differently modified.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 10.

When biting serpents are mentioned in the Scripture they are not differentially set down from such as mischief by stings.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 28.

Salt petre being but a kind of sal-terræ, generated in very differingly qualified parcels of earth, may probably receive divers qualities from the particular soil wherein it grows
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 327.

Intellectual differences shall shortly cease, and then moral differences shall take place; one moment shall equal the learned and the unlearned; the knowing and ignorant person shall at last stand upon equal ground, but the good and bad men shall be differenced for ever.—Bates. Fear of God, c. 9.

Now it is the most becoming the divine goodness not to deal so differently, that the soul should be everlasting happy, and the body lost in forgetfulness; the one glorified in heaven, the other remain in the dust.
Id. Dr. T. Manton's Fun Ser.

This may be easily done by considering that Christianity when it is thus differently spoken of, is represented to us in two very different views of it.—Pearce, vol. ii. Ser. 18.

Therefore weight is made by the differencial, not the absolute pressure of earth.
Search. Light of Nature, vol ii. pt. ii. c. 22.

DIFFICILE.
DI'FFICILENESS.
DIFFICI'LITATE, v.

It. and Fr. Difficile; Sp. Dificil; Lat. Difficilis, difficile; difficult; hard to be done. See DIFFICULT.

The said Alcibiades became so industrious that were it good or yuel that he enterprised, nothing almost escaped that he acheued nat, were the thing neuer so difficyle, (or as who sayth) impenitrable.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. i. c. 23.

Truly it was a woorthy sentence of suche a prince. What thing is it, be it neuer so difficile, begunne by a vertuous man, but there is hope to have a good end thereof?
Golden Boke, c. 45.

That, that should give motion to an unwelldy bulk, which itself hath neither bulk or motion; is of as difficil an apprehension, as any mystery in nature.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 3.

The lighter sort of malignitie, turneth but to a crossnesse, or frowardnesse, or aptnesse to oppose, or difficilnesse or the like, but the deeper sort to envie and meere mischief.
Bacon. Ess. Of Goodness.

The inordinateness of our love difficilitateth this duty [charity].—Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt.i. Treat 15. s 4.

Beside, 'tis known he could speak Greek
As naturally as pigs squeak;
That Latin was no more difficile,
Than to a blackbird 'tis to whistle.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1.

DIFFICULT, adj.
DI'FFICULTY.
DI'FFICULTNESS.

Lat. Difficilis, that can or may not be done, (sc.) easily, (dis, qv. and facilis, that can or may be done.) Fr. Difficulté; It. Difficoltà; Sp. Dificultad. Cotgrave explains the Fr. verb, Difficulter,—"To difficultate or difficilitate; to make difficult or uneasie; to make it a hard matter, to make bones of."

Difficult,—That can or may not be done, (sc.) easily, without labour, without skill, without learning, without trouble; and thus, troublesome, laborious, hard, uneasy.

Dame, (quod he,) God yeve you right good lif,
Ye have here touched, all so mote I the,
In scole matere a ful gret difficultee.
Chaucer. The Freres Prologue, v. 6854.

The world knoweth that the desires of princes have bene so feruent to obtain their purpose, that they haue aduentured and proued things to man's coniecture impossible, the which they haue made possible, and also things difficult haue made facile.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 212.

Kynge Henry not myndynge to lye still in Normandy, nor to leaue his interprice vnperformed, sent the Duke of Clarence to the sea coaste whiche with greate difficulty gatte the toune of Bayeux.—Hall. Hen. V. an. 6.

The difficultues of this present worke, considering mine owne want of experience, not only in matters of war, but also in diuers other things whereof this history entreateth, did dissuade & in manner discourage me frō enterprising the translatiō thereof.—Goldinge. Cæsar. Comm. Pref.

To doe great things, when generous minds devise,
Paine pleasure gives, things difficult entice.
Stirling. Jonathan.

Nor how by mastering difficulties so,
In times unusual, and by passage hard,
He bravely came to disappoint his foe,
And many times surpris'd him unprepar'd.
Daniel. A Funeral Poem.

Prayer is one of the greatest and hardest works that a man has to do in this world; and was ever any thing difficult or glorious atchieved by a sudden cast of a thought? a flying stricture of the imagination.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 3

If I should give myself scope to pursue each particular through all the difficulties that might attend it, it would fill a much larger discourse than the measure of the present exercise will allow.—Id. vol. ix. Ser. 8.

If we can practise the duty of forgiving an enemy, we shew that our hearts have made no mean proficiency in the love both of God and man. We shew our love of God by complying with one of the most difficult precepts of religion for his sake.—Gilpin, vol. ii. Ser. 41.

Let us see, then, whether by attending to the practice of mathematicians and natural philosophers, as contrasted with the practice of those who have treated of the human mind, we can make any discovery preparatory to the solution of this difficulty.—Beattie. On Truth, pt. ii. c. 1. s. 1.

DIFFI'DE, v. } Fr. Diffident; It. and Sp. Diffidente; Lat. Diffidens, pres. part. of Diffidere, (dis, and fidere, to trust.) See Confide.
DI'FFIDENT.
DI'FFIDENCE.
DI'FFIDENCY.
DI'FFIDENTLY.

To distrust or be distrustful, to disbelieve, to discredit, to doubt; to be uncertain, to have or place no trust or faith or credit.

But in diffidence and distrust they were like Nichodemus which sayd: how may a man be borne againe when he is olde? And peradventure ye farther of frō endeuour toward believing.—Sir T. More. Works, p. 1061.

For should not graue and learned Experience,
That looks with th' eyes of all the world beside,
And with all ages holds intelligence,
Go safer than deceit without a guide?
Which in the by-paths of her diffidence,
Crossing the ways of right still runs more wide.
Daniel. Musophilus.

Daughter of God and man, immortal Eve,
For such thou art, from sin and blame entire:
Not diffident of thee do I dissuade
Thy absence from my sight, but to avoid
Th' attempt itself, intended by our foe.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

On the morrow my Lord of Canterbury perused this declaration: and as he found it to be uncertainly and diffidently set down for some other circumstances, so he discovered there one thing much to be observed.
State Trials. The Countess of Essex, an. 1613

In the council-board he had the ability still to give himself the best council, but the unhappy modesty to diffide in it.
South, vol. v. Ser. 2.

The use that our Saviour makes of this lively description of Providence, is to teach us to rely at all times upon the care and protection of God, without unreasonable anxiety, diffidence, and distrust.—Clarke, vol. i. Ser. 34.

Pid. Because he thought it,—who is a man of that sense, nice discerning, and diffidency, that I should think it hard to deceive him.—Wycherly. The Plain Dealer, Act iv. sc. 1.

But I remember, too, that you disapproved of the manner in which the civil war was conducted; and that, far from being satisfied either with the strength or nature of Pompey's forces, you were always extremely diffident of their success; in which I need not add, I entirely agreed with you.
Melmoth. Cicero, b. ix. Let. 4.

There were some essays made, faintly, diffidently, and occasionally at first, like those of men, who, emerging out of darkness, were dazzled as well as enlightened.
Bolingbroke. On Human Reason, Ess. 3. c. 13.

DI'FFLUENCY. Lat. Diffluere, to flow apart. See Conflow.

A flowing apart; fluidity.

But ice is water congealed by the frigidity of the air: whereby it requireth no new form, but rather a consistence or determination of its diffluency, and omitteth not its essence, but condition of fluidity.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 1.

DI'FFORM. } Fr. Difforme is Deformed, (qv.)
DIFFO'RMITY. } Eng. Difform is applied to dissimilarity or unlikeness in form: opposed to uniform. See Deform.

The unequal refractions of difform rays proceed not from any contingent irregularities; such as are veins, an uneven polish or fortuitous position of the pores of glass.—Newton.

They are all and each of them attributes of the whole, attributes of the one simple infinite being: just as the powers of hearing and seeing, are not inequalities or difformities in the soul of man; but each of them, powers of the whole soul.—Clarke. Answer to Sixth Letter.

DIFFU'SE, v. } It. Diffondere; Lat. Diffundere, diffusum, to pour apart or abroad, (dis, and fundere, to pour.) See Confound.
DIFFU'SE, adj.
DIFFU'SEDLY.
DIFFU'SEDNESS.
DIFFU'SELY.
DIFFU'SER.
DIFFU'SION.
DIFFU'SIVE.
DIFFU'SIVELY.
DIFFU'SIVENESS.

To pour apart or abroad; to spread abroad, to spread or disperse widely; to extend; to expand.
G. Douglas uses Diffound.

Or that the charme and venum, which they drunk,
Their bloud with secret filth infected hath,
Being diffused through the senseless trunk,
That through the great contagion direfull deadly stunk.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 2.

Let the statutes of God be turn'd over, be scann'd anew, and considered not altogether by the narrow intellectuals of quotationists and common places, but (as was the antient right of councils) by men of what liberal profession soever, of eminent spirit and breeding, join'd with a diffuse and various knowledge of divine and human things.
Milton. To the Parliament of England.

But I omit further prosecution of this matter, since these places have been more diffusely urged in a late discourse to this purpose.—Glanvill. Pre-existence of Souls, c. 11.

And the consolations we have, are called the comforts of the Holy Ghost. Acts, xi. 38. As being the author and diffuser of them into our hearts, &c.
Goodwin. Works, vol. v. pt. i. p. 19.

And therefore the determination of councils pertains to all, and is handled by all, not in diffusion but in representation.—Bp. Taylor. Episcopacy Asserted.

The divine benignity is much more diffusive than the light, the air, the most communicable element in the world, and filleth every thing according to its measure and capacity of reception.—Hale. Cont. vol. i. Of Humility.

And then, what is so much larger than the particulars diffusively taken is sure very unlikely to be the summ of them.—Hammond. Works, vol. ii. pt. iv. p. 71.

He [Horeman] was one of the most generall schollars of his age, as may appear by the diffusiveness of his learning, and books written in all faculties.
Fuller. Worthies. Wiltshire.

His virtues diffused throughout the whole world (because we know not what his proper name is) we invoke under different names.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 276.

One of my designs I had in making this experiment, being to examine a conjecture I had made about the great diffuseness of the noctilucal matter.
Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 482.

Pleas'd that her magic fame diffusely flies,
Thus with a horrid smile the hag replies.
Rowe. Lucan, b. vi.

Thus to the noon of her high glory run,
From her bright orb, diffusive like the sun,
She did her healing influence display.
Stepney. To the Memory of Queen Mary.

Rectified spirit of human blood abounds with very subtle particles, which in point of taste, odour, diffusiveness and penetrancy, do much resemble those of strong spirits of urine, of hartshorn, and of sal-armoniac.
Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 637.

But when the star, day's harbinger, arose,
Soon after whom, in saffron vest attir'd,
The morn her beams diffuses o'er the sea,
The pyre, then wasted, ceas'd to flame.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiii.

Mr. Warburton's text, as well as all others, read,
"she would infect to the north-star;"
and it is the diffusedness, or extent of her infection which is here described.—Edwards. The Canons of Criticism, c. 22.

A sentiment, which, expressed diffusely, will barely be admitted to be just, expressed concisely, will be admired as spirited.—Blair, Lect. 18.

If I were to choose, I should clearly give the preference to the style resembling winter snow, that is, to the full and diffusive; in short, to that pomp of eloquence, which seems all heavenly and divine.—Melmoth. Pliny, b. i. Let. 20.

Grand reservoirs of public happiness,
Through secret streams diffusively they bless.
Young. Love of Fame, Sat. 6.

Of a beautiful and magnificent diffusiveness, Cicero is, beyond doubt, the most illustrious instance that can be given.—Blair, Lect. 18.

DIG, v. } A. S. Dician; A. Saxonibus est Fossam fodere: (Lye.) i.e. to dig a ditch. Somner,—to make a trench, ditch, dike or moat. See Dike, and Ditch.
DI'GGER.
DI'GGING, v.

To dig, as now used, is to raise, turn or throw up, or turn over the earth, (sc.) with a spade or other tool.

Dykers and delvers diggeden up the balkes.
Piers Ploughman, p. 134.

And he answered vil. lambes shalte thou take of my hande, that it maye be a wytnesse vnto me, yᵗ I haue dygged this well.—Bible, 1551. Genesis, c. 21.

And trees far under earth, (by daily digging found)
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 28.

Metalls elsewhere are digged, as out of the bowells of the earth, so out of the bowells of the land: I mean so far from any conveyance by water, that the expence of the portage swallows much of the profits thereof.
Fuller. Worthies. Wales, generally

But the rarest invention is the supplying the miners with fresh aire, which is performed by two men's blowing wind by a paire of bellows on the outside of the adit, into a pipe of lead, daily lengthened as the mine is made longer, whereby the candle in the mine is daily kept burning, and the diggers recruited constantly with a sufficiency of breath. This invention was the master-piece of Sir Francis Bacon.
Id. Ib.

A rav'nous vulture in his open side,
Her crooked beak and cruel talons try'd:
Still for the growing liver digg'd his breast;
The growing liver still supply'd the feast.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. vi.

On that principle, the wedge-like snout of a swine, with its tough cartilage at the end, and little sunk eyes, and the whole make of the head, so well adapted to its offices of digging and rooting, would be extremely beautiful.
Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful.

DI'GAMY. } Gr. Διγαμια, a second marriage; from Δι-γαμ-ειν, to marry twice or a second time. Fr. Digame.
DI'GAMIST.

Digamy and Bigamy were formerly used indiscriminately. See Bigamy.

And for the ordinary digamy, the marrying a second after the decease of the former, that that should be so reproachfull and blameable in any, as to render one incapable of holy orders (which they are capable of, which have been guilty of some faults) this is not imaginable neither.
Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 597.

Then for the other interpretation, that here the digamist, or he that hath had two wives successively one after another, should be made incapable of holy orders, or be under some reproach for so doing, &c.—Id. Ib.

Therefore it must probably signifie her that is departed by divorce, and then that which followeth of the digamist will also concur with it, to interpret his sense to this purpose.
Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 693.

DIGA'MMA. Gr. Δις γαμμα, a figurâ; the Double Gamma, so named from its form, F. One Gamma set upon another.

While tow'ring o'er your alphabet, like Saul,
Stands our digamma, and o'ertops them all.
Pope. The Dunciad, b. iv.

From the same root [ol] we have a word for the wild goat of the mountains, from its climbing upwards: also for the leaf of a tree, from its superiour situation: whence, from the f or digamma prefixed, we have the Latin folium.
Horne. On the Use of the Hebrew Language.

DIGA'STRICK. Gr. Δις, and γαστηρ, the belly. "Fr. Digastrique, having two bellies," (Cotgrave.) Printed erroneously in Paley.

A certain muscle, called the diagastric, rises on the side of the face, considerably above the insertion of the lower jaw, and comes down, being converted in its progress into a round tendon.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 9.

DIGE'ST, v. / DI'GEST, n. / DIGE'STER. / DIGE'STIBLE. / DIGESTIBI'LITY. / DIGE'STION. / DIGE'STIVE, adj. / DIGE'STIVE, n. / DIGE'STING, n. / DIGE'STEDLY. } Lat. Digerere, divisum vel diversum gerere, from Lat. Dis, (qv.) and gerere, which Vossius interprets, manum administrare, (q.d. to handle,) formed from Gr. Χερ-ος, genitive, from Χειρ, the hand. It. Digerire; Sp. Digerir; "Fr. Digérir,—to disgest, concoct; brook, bear, digest, abide, away with; also, to sort, order, dispose," (Cotgrave.)

To digest, — or as frequently written disgest, food,—to bear or convey food—concocted into different parts of the body.

To digest ideas or thoughts, — to arrange or distribute them in order for consideration; to dispose them methodically; to consider them well; to meditate upon, to contemplate; to sink or settle them in the mind.

Hence the application of the noun is plain to any work digested into good order: as by Tertullian to the Gospel of St. Luke; and the civilians to the Pandectæ of Justinian.

The Digests,—Fr. Digestes; It. Digesti; Sp. Digestos; Lat. Digesta, from digerere, to set or order,—a volume of the civil law, so called, because the legal precepts therein are so excellently ordered, disposed, and digested, (Minshew.)

Than thus proceeded Saturne & the Mone
Whan they the mater ripely did degest.
Chaucer. The Testament of Cresside.

Of his diete mesurable was he,
For it was of no superfluitee,
But of gret nourishing, and digestible,
His study was but litel on the Bible.—Id. Prologue, v. 414.

The norice of digestion, the slepe
Can on hem winke, and bad hem taken kepe
That mochel drinke and labour wol have rest.
Id. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,640.

A day or two ye shul han digestives
Of wormes, or ye take your laxatives.
Id. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 14,942.

If all the world were thyne, thou couldest not make thyselfe one inche leger, nor that thy stomacke shall disgeste the meate that thou puttest into it.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 234.

Your singing is but roaring to stretch out your mawes to make the meate sinke to the bottome of the stomacke, that he may haue perfect digestion, and be ready to deuoure a freshe against the next refection.—Id. Ib. 243.

More ouer, there be dyuers maners of exercyses, whereof some, onely prepareth and helpeth dygestyon, some augmenteth also strength and hardyneese of body.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. i. c. 16.

To thintent, that nature, which is made by custom, but not rebuked, & the power digestiue thereby debilitate.
Id. Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 3.

He should receyue such meates, drynkes, and medicines, which doth attenuate or make thynne, cutte, and digest gross humours without vehement heate, whereof it is written in the table of digestiues.—Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 1.

Hunger's my cook, my labour brings me meat,
Which best digests when it is saue'd with sweat.
Brome. To his Friend Mr. J. B.

While the stream of sorrow runs full, I know how vain it is to oppose counsell. Passions must have leisure to digest. Before you have digested griefe, advice comes too early; too late, when you have digested it.—Bp. Hall, Ep. 9. Dec. 2.

His next counsel was, That with other practicall doctrines they should not forget to preach and presse charity; and this not in a slight perfunctory manner, but studiedly and digestedly to give the people the true nature of it, the full latitude of it, the absolute and indispensable necessity of having it.—Mede. Works, p. 69. App. to the Author's Life.

March 12, 1682. I went this afternoone with several of y^e^ Royal Society to a supper, which was all dress'd, both fish and flesh, in Mo^r^. Papin's digestors, by which the hardest bones of beefe itselfe & mutton, were made as soft as cheese without water or other liquor.—Evelyn. Memoirs.

The Romans, when they had subdued many nations, to make their government digestible, were wont to take away that grievance, as much as they thought necessary, by giving sometimes to whole nations, and sometimes to principal men of every nation they conquered, not only the privileges, but also the name of Romans
Hobbs. Of Commonwealth, c. 19.

Falling purposely with Palma, with intention to haue taken our pleasure of that place, for the full digesting of many things in order, and the better furnishing our store with such severall good things as that afforded very abundantly.—Sir Francis Drake. West Indian Voyage, p. 9.

For some constitutions, and some men's customs, and some men's educations, and necessities, and weaknesses are such, that their appetite is to be invited, and their digestion helped, but all this while we are within the bounds of nature and need.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 16.

Digestive cheese, and fruit there sure will be.
B. Jonson, Epig. 101.

Notwithstanding these gluts of favours wrought onely the disgestion of falshood in him, who could taste nothing vnlesse it was sauced with treason.
Speed. Ethelred, b. vii. c. 14. s. 20.

When they [meat, wine, or strong beer] are mixed in the stomach, the digestibility, and easy dissolution of it [the meat] is obstructed.—Cheyne. On Regimen, Dis 2.

Thy style's the same, whatever be thy theme,
As some digestions turn all meat to phlegm.
Dorset. To Howard.

Inur'd to suffer ere he came to reign,
No rash procedure will his actions stain:
To business ripen'd by digestive thought,
His future rule is into method brought.
Dryden. Astræa Redux.

He who will believe all that he finds related by the writers of the fourth and fifth centuries should be provided with a double portion of credulity, and have the stomach of an ostrich to digest fables.—Jortin. Remarks on Eccles. History.

Though the History of Herodotus be of greater compass than that of Thucydides, and comprehend a much greater variety of dissimilar parts, he has been more fortunate in joining them together, and digesting them into order.
Blair, vol. iii. Lect. 35.

They who enjoyed it must have had coarse palates, and a stomach like the ostrich, by whom lead or dirt, it may be imagined, is no less digestible than iron.
Knox. Winter Evenings, Ev. 70.

—— In every brake
Wormwood and centaury their bitter juice,
To aid digestion's sickly powers, reline.
Dodsley. Agriculture, c. 3.

DIGHT, v. / DI'GHTING. } A. S. Dihtan, parare, procurare, instituere, instruere,—
To prepare, to procure, to provide, to appoint, to furnish, item, disponere, componere, exarare,—to dispose, to set in order, to compose, (Somner.) Skinner and Lye think, from to deck.

Ge gonge men, quoth Merlyn, eutheth now goure mygte,
Hou ge mow thus stones best to the schip dygte.
R. Gloucester, p. 148.

Henry dight him on haste to the toun of Hastyng
R. Brunne, p. 96.

Whan his lotte was to walke a night,
His instruments would be dight
For to blow and maketh soune.—Chaucer. R. of the R.

For men also that were dede
Thei hadden goodes as I rede,
And tho by name Manes highten,
To whom full great honour thei dighten.—Gower C. A. b v.

He hathe put hys swearde to the dightyng, [Mod. Ver. to be furbished] that good hold may be taken of it. This swearde is sharpned and dyght [furbished], that it may be geuen into the hande of the manslayer
Bible, 1551. Ezechiel, c. 21.

Madg. We shall be hang'd anon, awey good wenches, and have a care you dight things handsomly. I will look over you.—Beaum. & Fletch. The Coxcomb, Act iv. sc. 1.

That pretty Cupid, little God of love,
Whose imped wings with speckled plumes are dight,
Who woundeth men below, and Gods above
Roving at random with his feather'd flight.
Drayton, Ecl. 8.

While as he sought with all his might and main
In thy defence fair Hellen for to fight,
In Aphidnes upon the pleasant plain
Bold Theseus to cruel death him dight.
North. Plutarch, p. 13.

Just so the proud insulting lass,
Arrayed and dighted Hudibras.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3.

But (trust me, gentles!) never yet
Was dight a masquing half so neat,
Or half so rich before. Parnell. A Fairy Tale.

Sometimes, all clad in armour bright,
He shakes a warlike lance;
And now, in courtly garments dight,
He leads the sprightly dance. Mickle, Ballad 1.

DI'GIT, v. / DI'GIT, n. / DI'GITATED. } Fr. Digitte, the character which expresseth a figure in arithmetick, (Cotgrave.) Lat. Digitus; perhaps Gr. Δεικ-ειν, monstrare, to show or point out quasi δεικτης, ostensor, from its being used to point out. Feltham used the verb, to digit, to point out with the finger, in allusion to:—At pulchrum est digito monstrari et dicier: Hic est, (Persius, Sat. I. v. 28.)

The Romans, (says Dr. Adam,) as other nations, derived the names of measures chiefly from the parts of the human body. Digitus, a digit or finger's breadth. Each foot (pes) was divided into sixteen digiti, each supposed equal to four barley-corns. The numbers or figures also are called digits, from the practice of counting upon the fingers, (computandi per digitos.)

Digit is principally used by astronomers. The diameter of the respective heavenly bodies is divided into twelve digits; and by the number of these which are obscured, the extent of an eclipse is computed.

It will leave some doubt behind, in what subjection hitherto were the lives of our forefathers presently after the Flood, and more especially before it, who attaining unto 8 or 900 years, had not their climacters computable by digits or as we do account them.—Brown. Vulg. Err. b. iv. c. 12.

Animals multifidous, [are] such as are digitated or have several divisions in their feet.—Id. Ib. b. vi. c. 6.

Let me haue but so much wisdom as may orderly manage myself, and my means; and I shall never care to be digited, with A THAT IS HE.—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 28.

DIGLA'DIATE, v. / DIGLADIA'TION. } Lat. Digladiare, to fight with swords, (gladius.) Cockeram says, "Digladiation, — fight, strife, debate."

For what else are writings of many men, but mutual pasquils and satyrs against each others lives, wherein digladiating like Æschines and Demosthenes, they reciprocally lay open each others filthiness to the view and scorn of the world.—Hales. Remains. Ser. Rom. xiv. 1.

The passions being engaged in the quarrel, the judgments of both sides are lost, or blinded, or silenced with the dust and noise of passionate digladiations.
Hale. Cont. vol. i. A Discourse of Religion, c. 2.

But I list not here to interrupt my reader upon this chapter which has already suffered so many sore digladiations and contests.—Evelyn. Navigation & Commerce, §61.

DI'GNIFY, v. / DIGNIFICA'TION. / DI'GNIFYING, n. / DIGNA'TION. / DI'GNITY. / DI'GNITARY. } Fr. Dignité; It. Dignità; Sp. Dignidad; Lat. Dignitas. Dignus is by some etymologists supposed to be from the Gr. Δεικνυ-ειν, ostendere, demonstrare, to show, to point out,—for different reasons, (Perottus;) because those who appear worthy, (digni,) are usually pointed out to others by the finger (digito demonstrantur.) Vossius, however, is inclined to believe that dignus, or as the ancients wrote it, docnus, comes from Gr. Δικη, id est jus; ut dignus, cui tribui aliquid æquum est.

To dignify, (formed of dignus and fieri,) is, literally,—to be or cause to be worthy: but by common application it is—

To bestow or confer that of which any one is worthy; and thus, to distinguish by honours or emoluments; to advance, to prefer, to promote to honours or emoluments or authority; to exalt to honour, to rank, to grandeur; to elevate.

Dignation,—estimation, (sc.) of worth or worthiness.

Dygne, in Chaucer, Mr. Tyrwhitt says, is,—worthy, proud, disdainful.

Change worth of bischopriches, and the dygne sege [worthy seat] ywys
Worth ybrogt to Canterbury, that at London now ys.
R. Gloucester, p. 132.

Tho com Merlyne's word to sothe atte ende
That the dygne se to Kaunterbury of London asolde wende.
Id. p. 231

Vor hys robe and hys dygnite was al wel byset.—Id. p. 312.

An other Sir William, Bishop of Ely
Thise suld kepe the lond, & the dignites,
Justises tille tham he bond, to kepe the lawes & fees.
R. Brunne, p. 146.

And he is hoed of the bodi of the chirche, whiche is the begynnyng and the first bigetun of deede men, that he holde the firste dignyte in alle thingis.—Wiclif Colocensis, c. 1

He was to sinful men not dispitous,
Ne of his speche dangerous ne digne,
But in his teching discrete and benigne.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 519.

Yet sang the larke, and Palemon right tho
With holy herte, and with an high corage
He rose, to wenden on his pilgrimage
Unto the blisful Citherea benigne,
I mene Venus, honourable, and digne.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2218.

And certaine the same thing may I most dignely iudgen.
Id. Boecius, b. ii.

Age to compare vnto thine excellence
I nil presume him so to dignifie.—Id. Remedie of Loue.

And I that am put way from good men, and dispoiled of dignities, and defouled of my name by geasyng, haue suffred turmentes for my good deeds.—Id. Boecius, b. i.

For yt cause hath God placed you in your office, that therefore ye might the more see his speciall dignation and loue towards you.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 1497. M. Bradford to M. Hopkins.

O king, God the hyest gaue vnto Nabuchodonosor thy father, the dygnitie of a king, with worshippe and honour: so that all people kynreddes and tunges stode in awe and feare of hym, by reason of the hie estate, that he had lent hi.—Bible, 1551. Daniel, c. 5.

All which things, as they are great honours to the person, rightly called to such vicinity and endearments with God, so they depend wholly upon divine dignation of the grace and vocation of the person.
Bp. Taylor. Ser. The Office Ministerial.

They who gaze only upon the glorious robes of tyrants, may well be dazled with their splendour; we must therefore take off our eyes from their palaces, and look upon them in the sanctuarie; where, understanding their latter ends, we shall find they were set up, thus to be deluded, rather then dignified.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 4. s. 2.

All dignification retains still the same title of the merit of some virtue, and those that attend the least to virtue, will not referre their temporall successes to lesse then the adeption of them by some virtue.—Id. Ib. pt. i. Treat. 5. s. 2.

And towarde the dignifying of this office, God's purpose seems so express, that he has not only furnished subjects for our personating his office of beneficence, but submitted himself to be represented by the same subjects.
Id. Ib. pt. ii. Treat. 4. s. 1.

The first of these great dignities [Lord High Chancellor of England, and Chancellor of the University of Oxford] King Charles the Second had conferred on him whilst he was yet in banishment with him.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. Pref. p. 1.

Not to mention the patronage of those many prelates and dignitaries of the church, men of piety and learning, with whom he lived in a close intimacy and friendship.
Life of Walton.

He [the pious man] is dignified by the most illustrious titles, a son of God, a friend and favourite to the Sovereign King of the world, an heir of heaven, a denizen of the Jerusalem above, titles far surpassing all those which worldly state doth assume.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 2.

For this commandment we have from him, that he who loveth God love his brother also. The first commandment excells in the dignity of the object; but the second hath the advantage in the reality of its effects.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 18.

Then Pallas over all his features shed
Superior beauty, dignified his form
With added amplitude, and pour'd his curls
Like hyacinthine garlands from his brows
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxiii.

Name to me yon Achaian chief for bulk
Conspicuous, and for port. Taller indeed
I may perceive than he, but with these eyes
Saw never yet such dignity and grace —Id. Ib. Iliad, b. iii.

In one of the apartments of the palace is a performance that does great honour to the ingenious spouse of a modern dignitary, a copy in needle work of a Madonna and Child, after a most capital performance of the Spanish Murillo.
Pennant. London, p 33.

DIGNO'TION. See DIAGNOSTICK.

DIGRE'SS, v. } Fr. Faire une Digression; It. Digredire; Sp. Digredir;
DIGRE'SSION. } Lat. Digredi, digressum, to go
DIGRE'SSIONAL. } apart or away from, (com-
DIGRE'SSIVE. } pounded of dis, (qv.) and gradiri, which Vossius thinks may be Hebrew, and Scheidius from obs. Gr. Γερ-ειν; Lat. Gerere.) See CONGRESS.

To go apart or away from; to wander or go astray; to deviate, to depart or separate from; to turn aside, to diverge.

But how this toune came to distruction
Ne falleth not to purpose me to tell
For it were a long digression.—Chaucer. Troilus, b. i.

But now must I make a digression
To tell shortly as in sentement
Of thilke knight that Tideus hath sent Into Thebes. Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. ii.

If they be of mine annoynted and beare my marke, digresse them, I would say disgraduate them, and (after the example of noble Antiochus ii. Mach. vii.) pare the crownes and fingers of them, and tormēt them craftly, and for very paine make them deny the truth.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 134.

Or when I shall giue euidence, or rather declame against an hainous murtherer, I may digresse from the offence done, and enter in praise of the dead man, declaring his vertues in most ample wise.—Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 184.

But to retourne againe to Babilon, from whence the digressiō hath ben made.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 303.

We seek only to be free of involuntary impositions. But to return to the argument of restraint, from whence I am a little digressed.
State Trials. Great Case of Impositions, an. 1606.

Moreover she beginneth to digresse in latitude, and to diminish her motion from the morne rising.
Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 17.

And here I might a just digression make,
Whilst of some four particular knightes I spake,
To whom I owe my thankes; but 'twere not best,
By prayaing two or three, t' accuse the rest.
Corbet. To the Lord Mordaunt.

But let that pass at present, lest
We should forget where we digrest,
As learned authors use, to whom
We leave it, and to th' purpose come.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. i.

The digressions I cannot excuse otherwise, then by the confidence that no man will read them, who has not at least as much leisure as I had when I writ them: and whosoever dislikes or grows weary of them, may throw them away.
Sir W. Temple. On the Gout.

But of all the bugbears by which the infantes barbati, boys both young and old, have been hitherto frighted from digressing into new tracts of learning, none has been more mischievously efficacious than an opinion that every kind of knowledge requires a peculiar genius or mental constitution, framed for the reception of some ideas, and the exclusion of others.—Rambler, No. 25.

Unfortunate in the choice of his subject, he seems fearful of supplying its defects by digressional embellishments.
Headley. On Daniel's Poems.

The poet's intention certainly was not to censure the false refinements of their stage-music; but in a short digressive history (such as the didactic form will sometimes require) to describe the rise and progress of the true.
Hurd. Notes on the Art of Poetry.

DI'GUE. Fr. "A ditch, bound or bank; a jetty, dam or mount, raised up for a defence against the incursions or inundations of water," (Cotgrave.) See DIG.

The people ran into so great despair that in Zeland they absolutely gave over the working at their digues, suffering the sea to gain every tide upon the country; and resolving (as they said) rather to be devoured by that element, than by the Spanish soldiers.
Sir W. Temple. On the United Provinces.

The learned hydrographer, Fournier, speaks of those dams and digues (as he calls them in his language) which are sometimes made in the sea to secure shipping.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 421.

DIJU'DICATE, v. } Lat. Dijudicare, (dis,
DIJUDICA'TION. } and judicare,) judicare,
DIJU'DICANT. } quod jus dicatur.

To deem or doom, to sentence, to give sentence or opinion, to decide, to determine.

The church of Rome, when she commends unto us the authority of the church in dijudicating of Scriptures, seems only to speak of herself —Hales. Remains, p 260.

So then the senses, phancy, and what we call reason it self, being thus influenced by the bodies temperament, and little better than indications of it; it cannot be otherwise, but that this love of ourselves should strongly incline us in our most abstracted dijudications.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 13.

And if great philosophers doubt of many things, which popular dijudicants hold as certain as their creeds, I suppose ignorance itself will not say, it is because they are more ignorant.—Id. Ib. c. 23.

These things, I say, I could here subjoin in confirmation of what I have been saying, to show that the disposition of the organ is of great importance in the dijudications we make of colours —Boyle. Works, vol i. p. 674.

He [Glanville] did not blame the use of Aristotle in the Universities among the junior students, but did altogether disapprove the streightness and sloath of elder dijudicants, from whom a more generous temper might be expected.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

DIKE, v. } A. S. Dic-ian, fossam fodere, i. e.
DIKE, s. } to dig a ditch. To make a trench,
DI'KERS. } ditch, dyke or moat, (Somner.) See DIG, and DITCH.

To dike, is now, to dig. A dike, that which is digged or dug. In some counties, that which is dug out, (sc.) the mound or bank formed by digging out is called the dike or ditch; but generally, the cavity left. See DIGUE, and the quotation below from Cowley.

Now dos Edward dike Berwik brode & long.
R. Brunne, p. 272.

Now is Edward left Berwik for to dike,
The Scottis er risen eft, Inglond to bisuike —Id. p 273.

Do reise vp thin engyns, & wyn of tham thise dikes.
Id. p. 173.

—— Alle Crystyne people
To delve and dike a deep dicke al aboute unite.
Piers Ploughman, p. 385.

Thei shulden deluen, and dykes, and dongen the erthe.
Id. Crede.

Dykers and delvers. diggeden up the balkes.
Id. Vision, p. 134.

He wold thresh, and therto dike, and delve.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 538.

It were better dike and delue,
And stande vpon the right feith,
Than knowe all that the Bible seith,
And erre, as some clerkes doo.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

Whan they were redy they wente to their churches, and toke the crosses and baners, and made thre batayls, and in euery batayle ten thousande fyghting men, and came to a narowe passage well diked here to ye place where their enemyes shulde lande.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 212.

The third day of our journey, they brought us to a town of their owne, seated near a faire river on the side of a hill, environed with a dike of eight foot broad and a thicke mud wall of ten foot high, sufficient to stop a sudden surprizer.
Sir Francis Drake Revived, p. 51.

It is God that breaks up the floodgates of so general a deluge, and all the art then and industry of mankind is not sufficient to raise up dikes and ramparts against us.
Cowley. On the Government of Oliver Cromwell.

Just as if from one water house there should be pipes conveying the water to every house in a town, and to every room in each house; or from one fountain in a garden there should be little channels or dikes cut to every bed, and every plant growing therein, as we have seen more than once done beyond the seas.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

DILA'CERATE. } Lat. Lacerare; Gr. Λακ-
DILACERA'TION. } ειν, cum crepitu rumpi. Fr. Dilacérer—

To rend or tear in pieces.

For at the steringe of errours and faultes of ye clergye, discorde may be inflammed and kindled, many ruynes, many dilacerocions & diuisions with other inconueniences may followe (say thei) which will bring forth greter hurtis and breed worser thinges.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 11.

Struggling to come forth, [the infant] dilacerates and breaks those parts which restrained him before.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 6

What vast sacks and bags are necessary to contain such a collection of water, which seems to issue from the lymphæducts either dilacerated or obstructed, and exonerating themselves into the foldings, or between the duplicatures of the membranes.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

Now although in hot countryes, and very numerous conceptions, in the viper or other animals, there may sometimes ensue a dilaceration of the parts, yet this is a rare and contingent effect, and not a natural and constant way of exclusion.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 16.

All the riddles of Sphinx have two conditions annexed: viz. dilaceration to those who do not solve them; and empire to those that do.
Shew. Bacon's Mythology of the Ancients.

DILA'NIATE, v. Bullokar and Cockeram both have—"Dilaniation, a tearing in pieces." Lat. Dilaniare; dis, and laniare, to tear.

For there be many perverse men which do dilaniate the flock of Christ: yea, and of them which seem to be pillars, or bearers up of the church; which do rather diminish the faith, than any thing augment it.
Strype. Memorials. Hen. VIII. an. 1535.

DILA'PIDATE, v. } Fr. Dilapider; Sp. Di-
DILAPIDA'TION. } lapidar; It. Dilapidare;
DILA'PIDATOR. } Lat. Dilapidare, (dis, and lapis,) Gr. Λαας, a stone; propriè (says Vossius) lapides dissipare, et disperdere; to scatter or disperse stones.

Cotgrave,—To pull down stone buildings. And, generally—

To pull down, to destroy, to ruin.

It is as finely situated as any rectory can be, for it is about the mid-way 'twixt Oxford and London; it lies upon the Thames, and the glebe-land house is very large and fair and not dilapidated.—Howell, b. i. s. 5. Let. 15.

There was another fear upon you, lest, having been so liberal to the prince in ecclesiastical matters, the church should sue you for dilapidations of its power.

Marvell. Works, vol. ii. p. 460.

From the time of his [J. Underhill] death to the consecration of Dr. Jo Bridges his successor, an. 1603, the patrimony of the bishopric of Oxon was much dilapidated, and made a prey (for the most part) to Robert Earle of Essex.

Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

Now also the business of dilapidations came on between our bishop and the archbishop of York, his predecessor.

Strype. Life of Bp. Aylmer, c. 4.

The house called Mathern, belonging thereunto, being alienated, whether by Dunstan, the late bishop, a monstrous dilapidator of that see, or by some other means.

Id. Life of Parker.

Many of us here have felt, in some part of our lives, the inconvenience of succeeding to dilapidated houses, with small resources in our private fortunes, and restrained by the circumstances of a predecessor's family from the attempt to enforce our legal claims.—Bp. Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 35.

It is not a predilection to mean, sordid, home-bred cares, that will avert the consequences of a false estimation of our interest, or prevent the shameful dilapidation, into which a great empire must fall, by mean reparations upon mighty ruins.—Burke. On the Nabob of Arcot's Debts.

DILA'TE, v. DILA'TE, adj. DILA'TABLE. DILATABI'LITY. DILATA'TION. DILA'TER. } Fr. Dilater; Sp. Dilatar; It. Dilatare; Lat. Dilatare, latum facere, to make wide or broad. Lat. Latus; Gr. Πλατυς. To widen, to broaden, to expand, to enlarge, to open widely, to extend, to expatiate.

What needeth greater dilatation?

Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4652.

For now in dylating and declaring of his conclusion, he addeth one thinge as the fynall opening of al in the ende, that vtterly marreth all hys matter

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 648.

Thus these words (he hath spent al his goodes in riot) are dilated and set forth at large, by rehearsing seuerally euery thing one after another.

Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 210.

Thy labours show thy will to dignifie
The first dilaters of thy famous nation,
And whilest thy lines their glories signifie
They likewise do increase thy reputation.

Thomas Shelton. To Richard Verstegan.

For neither honey nor water, nor any other liquid thing whatsoever, in so small a quantity, can be dilated and drawn so far as oile, but for the most part they are spent and gone by occasion of their slecity.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 607.

Tib. Returne the lords this voyce, we are their creature,
And it is fit, a good and honest prince,
Whom they, out of their bounty, have instructed
With so dilate and absolute a power,
Should owe the office of it, to their service
And good of all, and every citizen.

B. Jonson. Sejanus, Act I.

Joy causeth a cheerfulness and vigour in the eyes; singing; leaping; dancing; and sometimes teares. All these are the effects of dilatation, and comming forth of the spirits into the outward parts; which maketh them more lively and stirring.—Bacon. Naturall History, § 715.

But I have no great doubt but that they both concur in that action, and that the Ligamentum ciliare doth at the same time the pupil opens or shuts, dilate or compress the crystalline, and bring it nigher unto, or carry it further off the retina.—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 2. Note.

The Deity having such an infinite extension, but all created spirits, a finite and limited one; which also is in them supposed to be contractible and dilatable.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 833.

Here, by the by, we take notice of the wonderful dilatability or extensiveness of the throats and gullets of serpents. I myself have taken two entire adult mice out of the stomach of an adder, whose neck was not bigger than my little finger.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

It hath been observed by others, particularly by our honourable founder, [Boyle] that as we are forced to use various apertures to our optic glasses, so nature hath made a far more compleat provision in the eyes of animals, to shut out too much, and to admit sufficient light by the dilatation and contraction of the pupil.—Derham. Physico-Theo. b. iv. c. 2.

It is not so much their custom to dilate and embellish each particular image with a variety of adjuncts, as to heap together a number of parallel and analogous comparisons, all of which are expressed in a style of the utmost brevity and simplicity.—Lowth, vol. i. Lect. 12. By Gregory

By his energy he produces gravitation, cohesion, heat, explosion, fluidity, contraction, and dilatation of the circulating vessels in plants and animals, and all other operations discernible throughout the visible world.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. ii. c. 22.

DILA'TION. DI'LATORY. DI'LATORILY. DI'LATORINESS. } Fr. Dilatoire; It. and Sp. Dilatorio; Lat. Dilatorius; from differre, dilatum, to bear apart; to put aside, to put off, (sc.) to a future time; and thus, to delay, (qv.)—

Dilation,—delay, procrastination.

Dilatory,—delaying, procrastinating; slow to perform; loitering, tardy.

The Capytaine perceiuynge hys [the Lord Say] dilatorie ple, by force toke hym from the officers, and brought him to the standard in Cheape, and there before his confession ended, caused his head to be cut of.—Hall. Hen. VI. an. 28.

Certainly, had Zaccheus staid still in the tree, thou hadst balked his house, as unworthy of thee. What construction canst thou make of our wilful dilations, but as a stubborn contempt!—Bp. Hall. Contemplations. Zaccheus.

And set her in a calm and easy way,
Plain and directly leading to redress;
Barring these counter-courses of delay,
These wasting, dilatory processes.

Daniel. To Sir Thomas Egerton.

Fid. Gerrard not come? nor Dorothy return'd?
What averse star ruled my nativity?
The time to night has been as dilatory
As languishing consumptions.

Beaum. & Fletch. Four Plays in One.

Upon their artificious and dilatory answers he immediately draws his forces together, and with an army, under the command of Spinola, marches towards Juliers

Sir W. Temple. On the United Provinces.

Others said, that for dilatoriness, chargeableness, and a faculty of bleeding the people in the purse-vein, even to their utter perishing and undoing, that court [High Court of Chancery] might compare with, if not surpass, any court in the world.—Parliamentary History. Commonwealth, an. 1653.

The King of Spain, indeed, delayed to comply with our proposals, and our armament was made necessary by unsatisfactory answers and dilatory debates.

Johnson. Falkland's Islands.

Sometime in March I finished the Lives of the Poets, which I wrote in my usual way, dilatorily and hastily, unwilling to work, and working with vigour and haste.

Id. Prayers & Meditations.

DILECTION. Lat. Diligere, dilectum, (from legere, to choose;) to choose, to prefer, to love.

So there are diverse Abrahams in this life, as I may terme them, who carry this sort of Lazarus in their bosome, being both rich, humble, and faithfull, contriving all their temporary joy out of the perception and dilection of the true blessing, intended in the creature.

Mountagu. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 7. s. 2.

I beseech Almightie God to set his hand to, and touch it over; so that they who look upon it, may find his hand in it, that has translated us from life to death, by the dilection of our brother.—Id. Ib. pt. ii. Treat. 2. s. 3.

DILE'MMA. Lat. Dilemma; Gr. Δι-λημμα, δις, twice, and λημμα, something taken or assumed; from Δι-λαμβαν-ω, pret. per. passive of λαμβαν-ω, to take. In a Dilemma, two propositions are taken or assumed; as in South. Either (1) the thing we sorrow for is to be remedied, or (2) it is not; and from each the same inference is made.

A dilemma is, consequentially,—a puzzling or perplexing or distressing situation: each alternative abounding with difficulty or danger.

Hope, whose weak being ruin'd is
Alike, if it succeed, and if it miss.
Whom ill and good doth equally confound,
And both the horns of fate's dilemma wound.

Crashaw. Steps to the Temple. On Hope.

Whereas there be, that pretend divine inspiration to be a supernatural entering of the Holy Ghost into man, and not an acquisition of God's graces, by doctrine and study; I think they are in a very dangerous dilemma.

Hobbs. Of the Kingdom of Darkness, c. 45.

Usually the sting of sorrow is this, that it neither removes nor alters the thing we sorrow for: and so is but a kind of reproach to our reason, which will be sure to accost us with this dilemma: either the thing we sorrow for is to be remedied, or it is not. If it is, why then do we spend the time in mourning, which should be spent in an active applying of remedies? but if it is not, then is our sorrow vain and superfluous, as tending to no real effect.—South, vol. i. Ser. 1.

Philosophers, that give themselves airs of superior wisdom and sufficiency, have a hard task when they encounter persons of inquisitive dispositions, who push them from every corner to which they retreat, and who are sure at last to bring them to some dangerous dilemma.

Hume. On Hum. Underst. s. 4.

DI'LIGENT, adj. DI'LIGENCE. DI'LIGENTLY. } Fr. Diligence; It. Diligenza; Sp. Diligencia; Lat. Diligens, pres. part. of Diligere, (de, and legere,) to choose, to prefer; to be choice of, careful of. Opposed to negligence, (ne, and legere.)

Careful of or about; careful or anxious to perform or execute; sedulous, assiduous, steady, constant, persevering, industrious, (sc.) in performing or executing.

For ghesilf witen diligentli, that the dai of the Lord schal come as a theef in the nyght.—Wiclif. Thess. c. 4.

His parishenes deoutly wolde he teche.
Benigne he was, and wonder diligent.

Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 485.

And they to his commandement obey,
And eche of hem doth al his diligence
To do unto the feste al reverence.

Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8071.

And whan that this is done, aspie diligently whan this same first starre passeth any thing to the south westwarde.

Id. Of the Astrolabie.

Seyst thou not, that they whiche be diligente in theyr busynes, stande before kinges, and not amonge the sympie people?—Bible, 1551. Prouerbes, c. 22.

Kepe thyne herte with al diligence, for there vpon hangeth life.—Id. Ib. c. 4.

Surely long experience doth proffet much, but moste and almost onelie to him (if we meane honest affaires) that is diligentlie before instructed with preceptes of well doinge.

Ascham. The Schole Master, b. i.

Who kept by diligent devotion
God's image in such reparation
Within her heart, that what decay was grown,
Was her first parents' fault, and not her own.

Donne. Funeral Elegies.

But it pleased God, that he [Lord Capel] got at last to the other side, where his friends expected him, and carried him to a chamber in the temple; where he remained two or three nights secure from any discovery, notwithstanding the diligence that could not but be used to recover a man they designed to use no better.

Clarendon. Civil War, vol. iii. p. 269.

Never did ambition or avarice, the most active passions, cause men to be more diligent than they were to communicate the knowledge of our Saviour to all nations. Now what greater assurance can we possibly receive that they were sincere in their report?

Bates. Harmony of the Divine Attributes

I have followed him [Virgil] every where I know not with what success, but I am sure with diligence enough: my images are many of them copied from him, and the rest are imitations of him.—Dryden. Letter to Sir R. Howard.

'Tis part therefore of this duty incumbent on us, to take notice of diligently, and carefully to consider the divine benefits; not to let them pass undiscerned, and unregarded by us, as persons either wofully blind, or stupidly drowsy, or totally unconcerned.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 8.

Diligence and accuracy are the only merits which an historical writer may ascribe to himself: if any merit, indeed, can be assumed from the performance of an indispensable duty.—Gibbon. Roman Empire, vol. i. Advertisement.

DI'LLING, s. Mr. Grose says, To Dill,—to soothe, blunt or silence pain or sound. Dilling,—a darling or favourite child, (South and North.)

A Dilling,—a darling or best beloved child, (Ray.) South and East country words. Junius says, perhaps from the ancient Teut. Dillen, garrire, inepte fabulari. Minshew thinks from the Lat. Diligo, because such child is loved (diligitur) more than others.

The youngest and the last, and lesser than the other
Saint Hellen's name doth bear, the dilling of her mother.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 2.

DILU'CID, adj. DILU'CIDATE, v. DILU'CIDATING, s. DILUCIDA'TION. DILUCI'DITY. DILU'CIDLY. } Lat. Dilucidare, from Dilucere, to shine, (compounded of de, and lucere, to shine.)

" Fr. Dilucider,—to clear, dilucidate; explain, manifest, make plain to be understood. Dilucide,—clear, bright, plain, manifest, evident, easie to be discerned," (Cotgrave.) It. Dilucidare.

[Obscurity of lawes springs] from an ambiguous, or not so perspicuous and dilucide description of lawes.
Bacon. On Learning, by G Wats, b. viii. Aph. 3.

They [Plays] dilucidate and well explain many darke obscure histories, imprinting them in men's mindes in such indelible characters, that they can hardly bee obliterated: therefore they are useful and commendable.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. ii. Act iv. sc. 1.

An observation which is largely deduced and exemplified in the dissertations, and of which there is no small use for the dilucidating of obscurities in ancient story, and the clearing of this controversie betwixt us and the Presbyterians.
Hammond. Works, vol. ii. pt. iii. p. 6.

And together with plainnesse, and dilucidity, belief was so turned and altered, changing together with other things, that before time, whatsoever was not ordinary nor common, but extravagant, or obscurely and covertly spoken, the vulgar sort drawing it into an opinion of some holinesse hidden underneath, was astonied thereat, and held it venerable.
Holland, Plutarch, p. 977.

Nothing could be said more dilucidly and fully to this whole matter.—Hammond. Works, vol. ii. pt. iv. p. 192.

Since I write not to an infidel, but to a Christian virtuoso, it may be allowable, as well as useful, sometimes, to bring in a passage or two of Scripture to dilucidate or confirm something, whereof natural reason gives us some, and yet but a more imperfect notice, and by the association, to enlarge our notions, and strengthen what we say, and make it more operative.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 768.

If such dilucidations be necessary to make us value writings that treat of familiar and secular affairs, and were written in an European language, and in times and countries much nearer to ours; how much do you think we must lose of the elegancy of the Book of Job, the Psalms of David, the Song of Solomon, and other sacred composures.
Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 260.

For he has taken in, sir, the whole subject, examined every part of it dialectically, then brought it into full day; dilucidating it with all the light which either the collision of his own natural parts could strike, or the profoundest knowledge of the sciences had empowered him to cast upon it.—Sterne. Tristram Shandy, vol. iii. c. 37.

DILU'TE, v.
DILU'TE, adj.
DILU'TENESS.
DILU'TER.
DILU'TION.
DILU'ENT, adj.
DILU'ENT, n.
DILU'VY.
DILU'VIAN.

Lat. Diluere, -utum, to wet or wash, (dis, and luere, Gr. Λουειν.)

To dilute,—to water, to infuse water, to thin by the infusion or mixture of liquid, of water; to thin, to weaken.

In the dyluuy or generall floude he saued the marryed howshold of Noe, ye foren virgines perysshing therein.
Bale. Apology, fol. 101.

Whereas, besides that it is dilute enough at best, this gloss doth make the matter of these latter clauses to be in all but one and the same thing with the foregoing.
Goodwin. Works, vol. iii. pt. i. p. 462.

Though this is a certain truth, it is but a dilute and waterish exposition of this place.
Hopkins, Ser. 14. The New Birth.

I found that by placing a blue glass at a convenient distance betwixt the prism and the iris, that part of the iris that was before yellow, might be made to appear green, though not of a grass green, but of one more dilute and yellowish.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 737.

What that dilutenesse is, which Vossius saith is more proper to F than Q, I understand not.
Wilkins. Real Character, pt. iii. c. 12.

The complicated glands, in various ranks,
Dispos'd along the neighbouring channel's banks,
By constant weeping mix their watery store
With the chyle's current, and dilute it more.
Blackmore. Creation, b. vi.

There is no real diluent but water: every fluid is diluent as it contains water in it.—Arbuthnot, c. 5. On Aliments.

Water is the only diluter and the best dissolvent of most of the ingredients of our aliment.—Id. Ib. c. 6.

Opposite to dilution is coagulation, or thickening, which is performed by dissipating the most liquid parts by heat, or by insinuating some substances, which make the parts of the fluid cohere more strongly.—Id. Ib. c. 5.

It [the gastrick juice] is not a simple diluent but a real solvent.—Paley. Natural Philosophy, c. 10.

For her [Temperance] the artist shuns the fuming feast,
The midnight roar, the Bacchanalian guest,
And seeks those softer opiates of the soul,
The social circle, the diluted bowl.
Mason. The Art of Painting, v. 672.

All arid soils, with sand, or chalky flint,
Or shells diluvian mingled; and the turf,
That mantles over rocks of brittle stone,
Be thy regard. Dyer. The Fleece, b. i.

DIM, v.
DIM, adj.
DI'MMING, n.
DI'MMY.
DI'MLY.
DI'MNESS.
DI'MMISH.

"A. S. Dimnian, adumnian, obscurare. It was formerly in English written Dimn," (Tooke, ii. 309.) Somner writes the "A. S. Adimmian, obscurare, to dull, to darken, to make dimme;" and it is so written in Lye, and in the usages of the word quoted by him. In Shakespeare,—Dimn, bedymn. See DUMN, and BEDIMN.

To dull, to obscure, to darken, to deaden. Though formerly of general application to any of the senses, is now restricted to the sense of sight; as dumb, to the power of speech.

And wenne he drow to the dore, thanne dymmed hus eyen.
Piers Ploughman, p. 108.

——— A voys aloud seyde
The lord of myght and of man that made all thynges
Duke of this dymme place, anon undo the gates
That Crist mowe comen in, the kynges sone of heavene—
And with that breth helle brake. Id. Ib. p. 358.

When Phœbus the sonne beginneth to spreade his clernesse with rosen chariottes, than the starre dymmed paleth her white cheres by the flambs of the sonne that ouercometh the sterre light.—Chaucer, Boecius, b. ii.

And with that soun he herd a murmuring
Ful low and dim, that sayde thus, Victorie,
For which he yaf to Mars honour and glorie.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2135.

Wherin anone my hertes ele
I cast, and sawe my colour fade,
Myn eien dim, and all vnglade,
My chekes thinne, and all my face
With elde I might see deface.—Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

He herde a voice, which cried dymme,
And he his ere to the brymme
Hath leide, and herde it was a man,
Which seide: O helpe here, Adrian,
And I will yeuen halfe my good.—Id. Ib. b. v.

If your doctryne bee darkened with errours, yf ye light of your lyfe be dimmed with worldly desires and lustes, what thing shall driue awaye the darkenes of the multytude!
Udal. Matthew, c. 5.

The eyes of the seing shal not be dymme, and the eares of them that heare, shal take dilygent hede.
Bible, 1551. Isay, c. 32.

Yon dimmy clouds which well employ your staining.
Sidney Arcadia, b. iv.

I hate to speake, my voice is spent with crying;
I hate to heare, lowd plaints haue dul'd mine eares;
I hate to tast, for food withholds my dying:
I hate to see, mine eyes are dim'd with teares.
Spenser. Daphnaida.

Euen so my selfe bewayles poor Gloster's case
With sad unhelpeful teares, and with dimm'd eyes.
Shakespeare. 2 Part Hen. VI. Act iii. sc. 1.

The sunne of all the world is dimme and darke
The earth now lacks her wonted light,
And all we dwell in deadly night.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calendar. November.

Sister, haue comfort, all of vs haue cause
To waile the dimming of our shining starre.
Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act ii. sc. 2.

Your cheeks of late are (like bad printed books)
So dimly charactered, I scarce can spell
One line of love in them.
Dekkar. The Honest Whore, pt. ii. Act i.

The sunne sett pale, his beames dispers'd:
The middle of his orbe but dimmely shin'd:
And dazled not the weake beholder's eyes.
May. Lucan, b. v.

And therefore in the view of state t' have show'd
A counterfeit of state, had been to light
A candle to the sun, and so bestow'd
Our paine to bring our dimmess into light.
Daniel. Dedication of the Queen's Arcadia.

There, as he sat, enthron'd above the skies,
Full on the Libyan realms he fix'd his eyes.
When lo! the mournful queen of love appears:
Her starry eyes were dimm'd with streaming tears.
Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. i.

[They] Fortune's fault upon the poor can throw:
Point at the tatter'd coat, and ragged shoe;
Lay nature's feelings to their charge; and jeer
The dim weak eye-sight, when the mind is clear.
Dryden. Persius, Sat. i.

Those parts of the fish that were scarce visible before or shone but dimly, receiving presently their former splendour.
Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 164.

'Tis true, but let it not be known.
My eyes are somewhat dimmish grown.
Swift. Stella's Birthday, 1721, 5.

For Oberon, or Druids falsely sing,
Wore his prime vister in a magic ring,
A subtle spright, that opening plots foretold,
By sudden dimness on the beamy gold.
Tickell. Kensington Gardens.

Now set the sun, and twilight dimm'd the ways,
When, drawing down his bark into the deep,
He gave her all her furniture.
Cowper. Homer Odyssey, b. ii.

As when thick mists involve the mountain's head,
Fear'd by the shepherd swain, but to the thief
Happier than midnight, and the eve extends
To a stone-a-throw its indistinct survey,
With such thick dimness of excited dust
In their impetuous march they fill'd the air.
Id. Ib. Iliad, b. iv.

DI'MBLE. Benson has Dim-hof, or dim-hol, antrum; and Somner says of Dim-hof, that it is, "A cave, a hole, a denne, a vault, a grot; a secret or dark house, place, or corner; a hiding-place." Dimble may be corrupted from dimhol; thus dimhol, dimmel, dimble.

And satyrs, that in shades and gloomy dimbles dwell,
Run whooting to the hills to clap their ruder hands
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 2

And in a dimble near (even as a place divine,
For contemplation fit) in ivy-cieled bower,
As nature hath therein ordain'd some sylvan power
Id. Ib s. 26

Alk. Within a gloomie dimble shee doth dwell,
Downe in a pitt, ore grown with brakes and briars.
B. Jonson. Sad Shepherd, Act ii. sc. 8.

DIME'NSION, v.
DIME'NSION, n.
DIME'NSIONLESS.
DIME'NSITY.
DIME'NSIVE.

Fr. Dimension; It. Dimensione; Sp. Dimension, Lat. Dimensio, from Dimetiri, dimensus, (de, and metiri,) to measure.

To examine or ascertain the magnitude or size of any thing; its bulk, its extent, the space it occupies or fills; its capacity.

Or whether hys bodye be there in hys naturelle substaunce, without any dimensions at al, or whether he be there in all hys distinctions of the members of his holye bodye.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1111.

Moreouer, in heauen the existence of his bodie is dimensive, and complete with the full proportion and quantitie of the same bodie wherewith he ascended.
Foe. Martyrs, p. 210. Doctrine of the Waldenses.

——— Wherefore base!
When my dimensions are as well compact,
My minde as generous, and my shape as true
As honest madam's issue.—Shakes. Lear, Act i. sc. 2.

Yet I suppose him vertuous, know him noble,
And in dimension, and the shape of nature,
A gracious person: but yet I cannot loue him.
Id. Twelfe Night, Act i. sc. 5.

——— But far within,
And in thir own dimensions like themselves,
The great seraphic Lords and cherubim
In close recess and secret conclave sat,
A thousand demy gods on golden seats
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. .

——— To heav'n their prayers
Flew up, nor miss'd the way, by envious windes
Blown vagabond or prostrate, in they pass'd
Dimensionless through heav'nly doors.—Id. Ib. b. xi

——— If statuaries could
By the foot of Hercules set down punctually
His whole dimensions, and the countenance be
The index of the mind, this may instruct me,
With the aids of that I've read touching this subject,
What she is inward
Massinger. The Emperor of the East, Act ii. sc. 1.

If of the smallest stars in sky
We know not the dimensity;
If those bright sparks which them compose,
The highest mortal wits do pose,
How then, poor shallow man, canst thou
The Maker of these glories know
Howell, b. iv. Let. 44.

All bodies are confin'd within some place,
But she all place within herself confines.
All bodies have their measure and their space;
But who can draw the soul's dimensive lines?
Davies. Immortality of the Soul, s. 4.

A mantle purple-ting'd, and radiant vest,
Dimension'd equal to his size, express'd
Affection grateful to my honour'd guest
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xi. ...

Yet, enter'd in the brick-built town [Babylon] he try'd,
The tomb, and found the strait dimensions wide.
Death only this mysterious truth unfolds,
The mighty soul, how small a body holds.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 10.

What havock hast thou made, foul monster, sin!
Greatest and worst of ills.—The fruitful parent
Of woes in all dimensions. Blair. Grave.

When he sees that, as the earth is but a point compared to the orb of Saturn, so the orb of Saturn itself grows dimentionless when compared to that vast extent of space, which the stellar-solar systems possess and occupy; this lord of the creation shrinks suddenly from his height, and mingles with the lowest crowds of unheeded and undistinguished beings.
Warburton. Works, vol. ix. Ser 2.

DIME'TER. Versus Dimeter, duo metra, seu duas mensuras habens; having two meters or measures.

Observe, that the second of these lines is the same measure with the iambic dimeter of the ancients, whereof you will find examples in the Latin prosody, as, Æternitatis jamus.
Beattie. Moral Science, pt. iv. c. 1. s. 5.

DIMI'DIATE. Lat. Dimidium. A medium est dimidium, (Vossius.) Quasi per medium divisus; i. e. as if separated or divided through the middle.

The artificer brings it [a block] home, puts it up properly upon the dimidiate platform of your staircase, and sets it exactly by the equation table: now it is an organism.
Search. Light of Nature, pt. ii. c. 23.

DIMI'NISH, v.
DIMI'NISHING, n.
DIMI'NISHINGLY.
DIMI'NISHMENT.
DI'MINUTE.
DIMINU'TION.
DIMI'NUTIVE, adj.
DIMI'NUTIVE, n.
DIMI'NUTIVELY.
DIMI'NUTIVENESS.

Fr. Diminuer; Sp. Diminuir; Lat. Diminuere. "Verbum fuit antiquum, mio, unde miro, miruo; Lat. Minuo, minor, minutus," (Scheidius.)

To be or cause to be, or to become, less, (in number or magnitude;) to lessen; to lessen the power, to weaken, to impair; to take away a part or portion; to decrease, to contract. See MINISH.

And put it all in your discretion
To intreat or make diminucion,
Of my language. Chaucer. Troilus, b iii.

By whiche multiplicacion
Is made, and diminucion
Of sommes by thexperience
Of this arte, [Algorisme] and of this science.
Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

I came not to dyminishe & abate the lawe, or to abolishe it with new preceptes: but I came rather to fulfil the law, and make it perfecte.—Udal. Matthew, c. 5.

The seconde plage of the seconde Angell, is the seconde iudgement of God against the regiment of Rome, and this is imbeselynge and diminyshe of their power and dominion, many landes and people fallynge from them.
Id. Revelation, c. 16.

Specially I would have you to consider what a wicked opinion this is, to fantasy that giving to the poore is a diminishing of our goods.
Latimer. The Sixth Ser. on the Lord's Prayer.

These things being once felt in the common welth, as they must needs be, euerye man seeth by and by what foloweth, a great diminishment of the strength of the realme.
Sir J. Cheke. The Hurt of Sedition.

Moreouer it is a wondre to beholde there, the subtilty that this Anselme veeth to bring his deuelishe purpose to passe, for diminishment of the Christen princes authoryty & augmenting of Antichristes veurpacion.
Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii.

He may peraduenture saye that hee neuer wrote that sermon himselfe, but that some of hys audience whyche of deuocio wrote as muche as they bare awaye vpon the hearyng, dydde wryte it dyminute, and mangled for lacke of good remẽbraũce.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 861.

O thou that with surpassing glory crown'd,
Look'st from thy sole dominion like a God
Of this new world; at whose sight all the starrs
Hide thir diminisht heads; to thee I call.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

Weak'neth our power by oft diminishinge.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. i.

Some at home, less affectionate to studies of this nature, for reasons best known to themselves were induced to speak somewhat diminishingly, and below the worth, of his Clavis and Commentary upon the Apocalyps.
Mede. Works. Life, p. 12.

Nor could any one that look'd upon our author, his parts or pains with an evil eye, speak so meanly and diminishingly of him as he would of himself.—Id. Ib. p. 38.

By tincture or reflection they augment
Their small peculiar, though from human sight
So far remote, with diminution seen.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. viii.

——— For the poore wren
(The most diminutive of birds) will fight,
Her young ones in her nest, against the owle.
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act iv. sc. 2.

——— Then doth she point it
With tender accents, and severely joint it
By short diminutive.—Crashaw. Musick's Duel.

The common affection of nounes is diminution. A diminutive is a noune, noting the diminution of his primitive.
B. Jonson. The English Grammar, c. 11.

The freeness of the giver, his not exacting security, nor expressing conditions of return, doth not diminish but rather increase the debt.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 9.

I am very far from calling them dull, or speaking diminishingly of them.—Locke. Second Reply.

In these places more clearly and immediately, in many other places obliquely and according to fair consequence: in many more probably our Saviour is called God, God absolutely without any interpretative restriction or diminution.
Barrow, vol. ii. Ser 21.

The light of man's understanding, is but a short, diminutive, contracted light, and looks not beyond the present.
South, vol. i. Ser. 6.

Ah how the poor world is pester'd with such
Water-flies: such diminutives of nature.
Dryden. Troil. & Cress. Act iv. sc. 2.

At all our concerts he was a constant, but an invisible performer; for while he stood on tiptoes thrumming his base-viol, the diminutiveness of his figure was totally eclipsed by the expansion of his instrument.—Student, vol. ii. p. 225.

In ardent Contemplation's rapid car,
From earth, as from my barrier, I set out.
How swift I mount! diminish'd earth recedes.
Young. Complaint, Night 9.

Kings who have weak understandings are apt to imagine that the rules and laws made for the exercise and security of the former [the people] are so many diminutions of their dignity, and restraints on their power.
Bolingbroke. The Idea of a Patriot King.

The seed, selected wisely, plump, and smooth
And glossy, he commits to pots of size
Diminutive, well fill'd with well prepar'd
And fruitful soil, that has been treasur'd long,
And drank no moisture from the dripping clouds.
Cowper. Task, b iii.

Magnify the former [Oliver], they are still diminutively conceived. If a glass could expand Cooper's pictures to the size of Vandyck's, they would appear to have been painted for that proportion.—Walpole. Anec. of Painting, vol. iii. c. 1.

DIMI'T.
DIMI'SSION.
DIMI'SSORY.

Lat. Dimittere, dimissum, to send away, (dis, and mittere.) To send away; to give leave or order to depart, to dismiss, (qv.)

He greets Gehazi with the same word, wherewith he lately was dimitted by his master. Is it peace?
Bp. Hall. Cont. Elisha with Naaman.

After that—they had their lessons out of the law, which were divided into 54 sedarim, or parascoth, i. e. sections, as also the lessons of the prophets distributed into as many haptaroh or aperturæ, or, as some render it, dimissions, so divided that there may be one for every sabbath in an intercalary year.—Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 192.

For default of other stuffe they pawne their glibs, the nails of their fingers and toes, their dimissories, which they leese or redeeme at the courtesie of the winner.
Holinshed. Description of Ireland, c. 8.

Add to this, that without the bishop's dimissory letters presbyters might not go to another dioces.
Bp. Taylor. Episcopacy Asserted, s. 39.

Behold the Redeemer is come, the great ransom is laid down, sufficient to purchase the freedom of whole worlds; innocence appearing in human nature hath unlocked the prison of sin, in which we were closely detained, hath broken the shackles of universal guilt, which sorely pinched mankind: he is come, who is anointed to preach (αιχμαλωτοις αφεσιν) dimission to the captives.—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 33.

He granted letters dimissory to Henry Rowse, B. A. to be promoted to the order of deacon and priest in any church or chapel, or other convenient place, by John, Bishop of Glocester.—Strype. Life of Abp. Grindal, an. 1581

DI'MITY. Gr. Μιτος, a thread; and διμιτος, (Junius observes,) wrought of a double thread; or (perhaps)—
A cloth manufactured at Damietta.

Bright. Go, put on
One of thy temple suits, and accompany us
Or else thy dimity breeches will be mortal.
Mayne. The City Match, Act i. sc. 4.

DI'MPLE, v.
DI'MPLE, n.
DI'MPLING, n.
DI'MPLY.

A dimple in the face or chin; perhaps the diminutive of dint, (q.d.) dintle, dintel: see DINT, (Skinner.)

To make small dints or depressions; to sink in holes or cavities.

Death is discern'd triumphantly in arms
On the rough seas his slaughtery to keep,
And his cold self in breath of mortals warms,
Upon the dimpled bosom of the deep.
Drayton. Moses his Birth & Miracles.

Then did she lift her hand unto his chin,
And prais'd the pretty dimpling of his skin.
F. Beaumont. The Hermaphrodite.

The Trojan, from the main beheld a wood,
Which thick with shades, and a brown horror stood:
Betwixt the trees the Tyber took his course,
With whirlpools dimpl'd.—Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. viii.

Part of this was a little bending inward at the basis, that it may sometimes stand by itself and sometimes receive a small body into the dimple at its oasis.
Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 173.

——— The wanderers of heaven,
Each to his home, retire, save those that love
To take their pastime in the troubled air,
Or skimming flutter round the dimply pool.
Thomson. Winter.

Dull grave! thou spoil'st the dance of youthful blood,
Strik'st out the dimple from the cheek of mirth,
And every smirking feature from the face.—Blair. Grave.

His praise, ye dimpled streams, to earth reveal,
As pleas'd ye murmur through the flow'ry vale!
Boyse. Glory.

As the smooth surface of the dimply flood
The silver slipper'd virgin lightly trod;
From her loose hair the dropping dew she press'd,
And thus mine ear in accents mild address'd.
Warton. The Triumph of Isis.

DIN, v.
DIN, n.

A.S. Dyn-an, "strepere, sonare, tonare, resonare, to make a noise," (Somner.) Dut. and Ger. Donen; Sw. Dona.

To make a noise; a stunning, deafening, continued noise.

Ayther axed of other, of this grete wonder
Of the deoue and doerknesse.—Piers Ploughman, p. 346.

This blisse is a maner of sowne delicious, in a quaint voice touched, and ne dinne of notes.
Chaucer. The Testament of Love, b. ii.

Jesus droue al these folkes out a doores, which fylled the house ful of noyse and dinne with their vayne weping & wayling.—Udal. Mark, c. 5.

Fab. Be softer, prethee,
'Tis private musick.
Juc. What a din it makes!
I had rather hear a Jew's trump than these lutes,
They cry like school-boys.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Captain, Act ii. sc. 2.

Stunn'd at the din, the swain with list'ning ears
From some steep rock the sounding ruin hears.
Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. ii.

Since which time she had continually interrupted my repose, with dinning in my ears the folly of refusing honours, and of adhering to a party, and to principles, by which I am certain of procuring no advantage to myself and my family.
Fielding. Journey from this World, &c. c. 23.

——— On his breast loud rang the shield
Of the impetuous chief. The sudden din
Had struck a terrour to the boldest heart.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. iv.

DINE, v.
DINE, n.
DI'NING, n.
DI'NNER.
DI'NNERLESS.

Fr. Diner; It. Desinare. Perhaps, as suggested in Menage, and adopted by Minshew, from the Lat. Desin-ere, i. cessare, a cessatione ab operâ; to cease, the time of ceasing from labour. Minshew, inconsistently enough, derives dinner from δειπνον.

To dine with Duke Humphrey is variously explained. See the two quotations from Fuller, and the one from Hall.

Ac the king nolde a vot, bote he dined other ete.
R. Gloucester, p. 558.

He migte tho at his diner abbe hileued al so wel,
As me seith, whan ich am ded, make me a caudel
Id. p. 561.

On Saynt Margarete day Sir Ingram & Sir Eymere
Com on tham ther thei lay alle dight to the dyner.
R. Brunne, p. 334.

Thei wosshen and wypeden, and wenten to the dyner.
Piers Ploughman, p. 348

—— Let vs dine, I thee beseech,
And after noone than mayst thou come again.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. i.

They ben so poore, and ful of pine
They might not ones yeue me a dine.—Id. Rom. of the R.

—— Homely soth to saine
She came to diner in her plaine entent
But God & Pandare wist al what this ment.
Id. Troilus, b. ii.

For let thē beginne at sixe, and it will be twelue or they can ende. In which time they be so wearied that by the tyme they have dined, they have lust to nothing saue to sleepe.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 221.

This proverb [to dine with Duke Humphrey] hath altered the original meaning thereof, for first it signified alienâ cœnâ quadrâ, to eat by the bounty, or feed by the favour of another man; for Humphrey Duke of Gloucester (commonly called the good Duke) was so hospital, that every man of fashion, otherwise unprovided, was welcome to dine with him.—Fuller. Worthies. London.

'Tis Ruffio: trow'st thou where he din'd to-day?
In sooth I saw him sit with Duke Humfray.
Many good welcomes, and much gratis cheere,
Keeps he for everie straggling cavaliere.
An open house, haunted with greate resort:
Long service mixt with musicall disport.
Many faire yonker with a feather'd crest,
Chooses much rather be his shot-free guest,
To fare so freely with so little cost,
Than stake his twelve-pence to a meaner host.
Hall, b. iii. Sat. 7.

No roofs of gold, o'er riotous tables shining,
Whole days and suns devour'd with endless dining.
Cresshaw. A Religious House.

But after the death of good Duke Humphrey (when many of his former alms-men were at a losse for a meal's meat,) this proverb did alter its copy; to dine with Duke Humphrey importing to be dinnerless.—Fuller. Worthies. London.

Whilst sickening flowers drink up the silver dew,
And beaux for some assembly dress anew;
The city saints to prayers and play-house haste;
The rich to dinner, and the poor to rest.
Garth. Dispensary, c. 2.

He [Vandyck] was indefatigable, and keeping a great table, often detained the persons who sat to him, to dinner, for an opportunity of studying their countenances, and of retouching their pictures again in the afternoon.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. ii. p. 165.

DINE'TICAL. Gr. Διν-ειν, to whirl around.

Besides the revolution it maketh with its orbs, it hath also a dinetical motion, and rowls upon its own poles.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 5.

A spherical figure is most commodious for dinetical motion or revolution upon its own axis.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

DING, v. } Also written Dang; in A. S.
DING, adj. } Dencgan, is tundere, to knock, to ding, (Somner.) Ray says, Ding in Essex is, to sling; in the North, to beat. Mr. Grose adds, in Norfolk, to throw in general. Tooke interprets the A. S. Dyngan, dejicere, to cast down;—and asserts, That dung or dong, means dejectum, (cast down,) and in that meaning only is applied to stercus. Lye, Somner, and Benson, explain Dyngan, merely stercorare.

G. Douglas renders, Impulit portas, "Dangd up the gates."

The ding-dong of bells, (Fr. Dindan,) seems formed from the sound.

—— Ne Paul with his fauchon
That wolde defende me bevene dore. dynge ich nevere so late.—Piers Ploughman, p. 272.

And Dowel shall ding him down, and destroi his might.
Id. Ib.

What then, standest thou in noble plite, little hede or reckening to take, if thou let fortune passe ding, or else yt she flie whē her list, now by thy liue.
Chaucer. The Testament of Loue, b. ii.

But he with bucklar bent before his breast makes at his foe,
And sharpe sword drawne in hand for more assurance forth doth goe,
Whom there charret wheeles downe dinges, and axle swift in flight
Throwes to the ground.—Phaer. Virgili. Æneidos, b. 12.

I would the not a nip farthinge
nor yet a niggarde haue,
Wilte thou therefore, a drunkard be a ding thrift, and a knaue. Drant. Horace, Sat. 1.

He [Hesperus] ran before, as harbinger of light,
And with his flaring beams mock'd ugly night,
Till she, o'ercome with anguish, shame, and rage,
Dang'd down to hell her loathsome carriage.
Hero & Leander, s. 2.

'Tis sack makes us sing,
Hey down a down ding,
Musa paulo majora canamus.
F. Beaumont. In the Praise of Sack.

And then they cry Philaster, brave Philaster,
Let Philaster be deeper in request, my ding dongs,
My pairs of dear indentures.
Beaum. & Fletch. Philaster, Act. v. sc. 1.

The ding-thrift heir his shift-got summe misspent,
Comes drooping like a penlesse penitent,
And beats his faint fist on Tocullio's doore,
It lost the last, and now must call for more.
Bp. Hall, b. v. Sat. 5.

Here Homenas burst into a flood of tears, which falling down helter skelter, ding-dong without any kind of intermission for six minutes and almost twenty-five seconds, had a marvellous effect upon his discourse.
Sterne. The Fragment, c. 2.

DI'NGLE. Generally considered to be a diminutive of the A. S. Den or din, a vale or dale. But if Tooke be correct in his explanation of dyng-an, viz. dejicere, to cast down, that word presents a more satisfactory etymology; (q.d.) locus dejectus, depressus. It may likewise be the parent of den or din itself.

In dingles deep, and mountains hoar,
Oft with the bearded spear
They combated the tusky boar,
And slew the angry bear.
Drayton. The Muses' Elysium, Nymph. 2.

Com. I know each lane, and every alley green,
Dingle or bushy dell of this wild wood,
And every bosky bourne from side to side,
My daily walks and ancient neighbourhood.
Milton. Comus.

DI'NGY. } A. S. Dunniath steorran, obscu-
DI'NGINESS. } rantur stellæ. The A. S. Dunnian, obscurare, is probably the parent of dun, (a dun colour,) and also of dingy.

Dingy and dinginess are common in speech, but not in writing.

On duniges mere,
On the dingy see.—Ellis, l. 27. Ode on Athelstan's Victory.

DINT, v. } Tooke says, the past part. of dyn-
DINT, n. } an, strepere, to din; as if first applied to the noise of blows, to the blow itself, and then to the mark or impression made. (See DENT, and DUN.) As commonly applied, to dint, is—

To make a hollow mark or impression, either by a blow or pressure.

By dint of argument,—by pressure, by strength, by force of argument.

Tho stronge dynte, that heo smyten, grisliche yt was to se.
R. Gloucester, p. 122.

To grounde hil smyte & harde myd stalwarde honde,
That wonder was, hou other mygte othere's dunt at stonde.
Id. p. 308.

The Cristen turned for drede withouten dynt of launce.
R. Brunne, p. 125.

For no dint shal hym dere. Piers Ploughman, p. 340.

And so the lustes last an houre and more;
But tho that crowned were in laurer grene
Wan the prise—their dints were so sore,
That there was none ayenst hē might sustene.
Chaucer. Flower & Leafe.

The blinded boy, that bends the bow
To make with dint of double wounde
The stoutest state to stoupe, and know
The cruel craft that I haue founde.
Uncertaine Auctors. Louer wounded by Cupid.

The idle stroke, enforcing furious way,
Missing the mark of his missaymed sight,
Did fall to ground, and with his heauy sway
So deepely dinted in the driuen clay,
That three yards deepe a furrow vp did throw.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 8.

No wound, which warlike hand of enemy
Inflicts with dint of sword, so sore doth light,
As doth the poysonous sting which infamy
Infixeth in the name of noble wight.—Id. Ib. b. vi. c. 6.

Loud rumour has proclaim'd a nymph divine,
Whose matchless form, to counterbalance mine,
By dint of beauty shall extort your grace.
Lansdowne. Beauty & Law.

In the second case the man who should assert, that Abraham or any other of the patriarchs, was alone able to make these discoveries by dint of reason, and philosophical reflection, would not deserve a serious answer.
Bolingbroke, Ess. 3. On Monotheism.

Push'd at his foe the mighty mass he flung;
Thund'ring it fell; the Theban helmet rung:
Deep with the brain the dinted steel it mix'd,
And lifeless, on the ground the warrior fix'd.
Wilkie. The Epigoniad, b. viii.

DI'OCESE. } Fr. Diocèse; It. Diocesi,
DIO'CESAN, adj. } diocese; Sp. Diocesis; Lat.
DIO'CESAN, n. } Diœcesis; Gr. Διοικησις, from διοικ-ειν, to dwell apart, (δις, and οικ-ειν, to dwell.)

A part or portion of an inhabited country; a district or division of it. More especially applied to the division of an archbishop's province under the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of each bishop.

In danger hadde he at his owne gise
The yonge girles of the diocise
And knew hir conseil, and was of hir rede.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 666.

Where dwelled he & your frende? Euery where and no where, quod I, for he walked about as an apostle of the Deuill from shire to shire, & towne to towne, thorowe the realme & had in euery diocyse a dyuerse name.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 231.

Thei shulde spare the possessions and goodis of their subjects and diocesans that ye peple might haue to set forth their chyldren to scole and to learne them honeste and vtyle occupacions.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 11.

At this day they haue no authority, either by diocesan or provincial synods, to set any fees but in their convocation by assent and confirmation of his majesty, under the great seal.—Spelman. De Sepulturâ, p. 189.

O Lord, Almighty God, we beseech thee to grant to thy servant Edmond our Bishop, that by preaching and doing those things which be Godly, he may both instruct the minds of the diocesans with the true faith and example of good works, and finally receive of the most merciful pastor the reward of eternal life.—Strype. Life of Grindal, an. 1559.

The great dangers to which you have been so lately exposed, and which you have so providentially escaped, are of too important a nature, for me, who stand to you in the same relation of diocesan, to pass over in total silence.
Porteus. Letter to the Inhabitants of Manchester.

DIO'PTRICK, adj. } Gr. Δι-οπτρικος, from DIO'PTRICAL. } δι-οπτεσθαι, to look
DIO'PTRICKS. } through.

The demonstration whereof the great wit, Renatus des Cartes, hath excellently set down in his book of Dioptricks, by the example of a ball strucken by a racket against the earth, or any resisting body.—Digby. On Bodies, c. 13.

If man were out of the world, who were then left to view the face of heaven . . . . . to view the asperities of the moon through a dioptrick glass, and venture at the proportion of her hills by their shadows.
More. Antidote against Atheism, b. ii. c. 12.

Our grinders of dioptrical glasses have hitherto believed, that they must make use of Venice glass, which is very dear, and oftentimes very scarce to be come by.
Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 451.

DI'ORISM. } Gr. Διορισμα, from διορίζ-
DIORI'STICALLY. } ειν, to distinguish, to define, (δια, and ὁριζειν, to bound, to limit.)

A distinction, a definition.

To eat things sacrificed to idols, is one mode of idolatry; but by a prophetical diorism, it signifies idolatry in general.
More. Exposition of Seven Churches, p. 72.

Ye are not so pure and clean as ye ought to be, and free from the lusts of the flesh; which vice is here noted by Nicholaitism dioristically, as idolatry is general before by eating things sacrificed to idols.—Id. Ib.

DIP, v. } A. S. Dippan, mergere, immer-
DIP, n. } gere, to dip, to dive. Dut. Dip-
DI'PPER. } pen, doppen; Sw. Dopa.
DI'PPING, n. } To sink, to immerge, to put under water or other liquid, to depress; to sink below the surface, to enter or go superficially or slightly into any thing. Consequentially, to wet, to damp.

And he criede and seide, Fadir Abraham, haue mersy on me, and sende Lazarus that he dippe the ende of his finger in water, to kele my tunge: for I am tormented in this flawme.—Wiclif. Luk, c. 16.

And he cryed and sayd, Father Abraham, have mercye on me, and sende Lazarus that he may dyppe the typpe of his finger in water, and cole my tonge; for I am tormented in this flame.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

For not to haue been dipt in Lethe lake
Could saue the sonne of Thetis from to die;
But that blind bard did him immortal make,
With verses dipt in dew of Castalie.
Spenser. The Ruines of Time.

In which number I must be fore'd to reckon that doctor, who, in a late equivocating treatise, plausibly set afloat against the dippers, diving the while himself with a more deep practical malignance against the present state and church government, mentions with ignominy the Tractate of Divorce.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

So must old sins be cured by a long pacience, a daily prayer, and the sharpest contention of the spirit. That which is dyed with many dippings, is in grain, and can very hardly be washed out.—Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 5. s. 4.

I haue not yet been so happy to procure a tolerable good dipping-needle, or other proper one to my mind, to bring the thing to sufficient test of experience.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. v. c. 1. Note 21.

There was a damn'd design, crys one, no doubt;
For warrants are already issued out:
I met Brutidius in a mortal fright:
He's dipt for certain, and plays least in sight.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 10.

Nor tell me in a dying Father's tone,
Be careful still of the main chance, my son;
Put out the principal, in trusty hands:
Live on the use; and never dip thy lands.
Id. Persius Sat. 6.

So wat'ry fowl, that seek their fishy food,
With wing expanded o'er the foaming flood,
Now sailing smooth the level surface sweep,
Now dip their pinions in the briny deep.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. v.

And then they seek for expiations of those visions nocturnal; charms, sulfurations, dippings in the sea, sittings all day on the ground.—Bentley. Remark, § 50.

——— With his precious charge
Embark'd, Sicinus gently steers along;
The dip of oars in unison awake
Without alarming Silence.—Glover. Athenaid, b. viii.

DI'PHTHONG. Fr. Diphthongue; It. Dittongo; Sp. Diphthongo; Gr. Διφθογγος, (δις, and φθογγ-εσθαι, to utter a sound.) B. Jonson explains the word; see the quotation from him.

Dipthongs are the complexions, or couplings of vowells, when the two letters send forth a joynt sound, so as in one syllable both sounds be heard.
B. Jonson. English Grammar, c. 5.

And those few that did pretend to some insight into it, read it after a strange corrupt manner, pronouncing the vowels and dipthongs, and several of the consonants, very much amiss: confounding the sound of the vowels and dipthongs so, that there was little or no difference between them.—Strype. Life of Sir John Cheke, c. 1. s. 2.

Mr. Sheridan has shown, in his Lectures, that we abound more in vowel and diphthong sounds, than most languages; and those too, so divided into long and short, as to afford a proper diversity in the quantity of our syllables.
Blair, vol. i. Lect. 9.

DIPLOMA. DIPLO'MACY. DIPLO'MATED. DIPLOMA'TICK. DIPLO'MATIST. Lat. Diploma; Gr. Διπλωμα, from διπλου-σθαι, duplicari, to fold together. Est igitur diploma, duplicato compositum aut complexum,—any thing folded double. Applied to—

Certain papers or writings (originally so folded) conferring certain honours or privileges, or appointing to certain offices or duties, as those of ambassador.

Diplomated is not uncommon in Wood.

These five persons who were incorporated, were not then present in the Uniuersity, but were diplomated, or had sent to each of them a writing, under the University seal, to attest that they had the consent of the Commissary and Regents, that they were embodied and incorporated.
Wood. Fasti Oxon. Oldenburgh.

Two days since I received also an answer from Mr. Hevelius, to the packet I sent him from the society (wherein was contained the diploma of his election amongst the rest.) The answer is full of gratitude to his electors, and runs over with expressions of respect to their merit and design.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 154.

Now, these gentlemen do me the honour to think, that I have interest enough in you, to prevail upon you to write to Dean Swift, to persuade the University of Dublin to send a diploma to me, constituting this poor man [S. Johnson] Master of Arts in their University.
Lord Gower, in Murphy's Life of Dr. Johnson.

The diplomacy, who were a sort of strangers, were quite awe-struck with "the pomp, pride, and circumstance" of this majestick senate.—Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 4.

But with great deference to the new diplomatick taste, we old people must retain some square-toed predilection for the fashions of our youth.—Id. Ib.

Cambon, incapable of political calculation, boasting his ignorance in the diplomatick, denounced incessantly as counter-revolutionists those intelligent persons who were desirous, at least, of having things discussed.
Burke. Address of M. Brissot, Ap.

If by jura pentium we understand rights not derived from the principles of the law of nature, but founded on the usages of ancient nations,—on the conventions, (seldom voluntary on both sides) of modern States,—on the decisions of civilians,—or on the still more exceptionable altercations of diplomatists, we shall run a great risk of having no law of nations at all.—Anecdotes of Bp. Watson, vol. ii. p. 382.

DI'PSAS. Gr. Διψας, (q.d.) siticulosa, from διψ-ειν, to thirst. Lat. Dipsas; It. Dipsa; Fr. Dipsade,—"a snake whose biting brings with it a mortal drinesse," (Cotgrave.)

The dart and dipsas, to the ark com'n in,
Enfold each other as they were a twin.
Drayton. Noah's Flood.

Cerastes horn'd, Hydrus and Elops dreare
And Dipsas. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

Aulus, a noble youth of Tyrrhene blood,
Who bore the standard, on a dipsas trod;
Backward the wrathful serpent bent her head,
And fell with rage, th' unheeded wrong repaid.
Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. ix.

DI'PTYCHS. Lat. Diptycha; Gr. Διπτυχος, from δις, and πτυχη, plica, a fold.

See the quotation from Bp. Lloyd.

And unlike a calender that I have seen, wherein the holy martyrs and confessors of Jesus Christ, who not only had place sometimes in these diptiches, but whose names are written in heaven, are erased out, and traitors, murderers, rebels, and heretics set in their room.
State Trials. Against Ign. & Insuff. Ministers, an. 1656.

Besides this, which was peculiar to the martyrs, they had a lower degree of remembrance, for bishops and confessors, and all other eminent persons departed this life, whom they not only praised in orations at their funerals, but writ their names in their diptychs, or two-leaved records, which contained in one page all the names of the living, in the other the dead that were of note in the church.
Bp. Lloyd. At the Funeral of the Rev. J. Wilkins, D.D.

This is notorious in their tables, their new-fashion'd diptychs: where men of honourable name and great worth are called damnati authores, and their very name commanded to be put out, and some periphrasis set down for them.
Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. ii. b. i. § 6.

DIRE, adj. DI'REFUL. DI'REFULNESS. DI'RENESS. Lat. Dirus, dear, from A. S. Dirian, nocere, to dear or dere, to hurt. (See DEAR; and also Tooke.) Vossius,—from the Gr. Δειρος, ρ changed into ρ. Festus,—Dei ira.

Direful is dereful, full of dere, i. e. of hurt, mischief, injury. Dire is not, like dere, used as a substantive: though Fletcher uses the plural dires, as equivalent to the Lat. Diræ, furies, avengers.

Hurtful, distressing, causing great evil, mischief; and therefore dreadful, terrible, mournful, lamentable.

Hart cannot thinke, what outrage and what eryes,
With fowle enfouldred smoake and flashing fire,
The hell-bred beast threw forth vnto the skyes,
That all was couered with darknesse dire.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

Arm, arm yourselves, sad Dires of my power,
And make our judge for pardon to us kneel.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph over Death.

This Herod thus would Bethlem's infants kill,
The Christians soone these direfull newes receaue,
The trumpe of death sounds in their hearing shrill,
Their weapon, faith; their fortresse, was the graue.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. ii. c. 13.

——— I have supt full with horrors;
Direness, familiar to my slaughterous thoughts,
Cannot once start me.—Shakes. Macbeth, Act v. sc. 5.

Arise, O father of the Trojan state!
The nations call, thy joyful people wait
To seal the truce, and end the dire debate.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. iii.

If we come now to the doctors of the church that flourished after the Pelagian heresy arose, (as a comet portending direful effects to the Christian world) it is confessed that they all maintained the same hypothesis, [immortality]
Bp. Bull, vol. ii. Dis. 5.

——— Presumptuous, sacrilegious man!
Careless what dire enormities he wrought,
Who bent his bow against the pow'rs of heav'n!
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

Let none of us then suppose he hath no account to give. A single talent, wrapped up in a napkin, brought its possessor, you may remember, into a direful case.
Gilpin, vol. i. Ser. 11.

The direfulness of this pestilence is more emphatically set forth in these few words, than in forty such odes as Sprat's on the Plague at Athens.—Dr. Warton. Essay on Pope.

DIRE'CT, v. DIRE'CT, adj. DIRE'CTION. DIRE'CTIVE. DIRE'CTITUDE. DIRE'CTLY. DIRE'CTNESS. DIRE'CTOR. DIRE'CTORY. DIRECTO'RIAL. DIRE'CTORSHIP. DIRE'CTRESS. DIRE'CTRIX. Fr. Diriger; It. Dirigere; Sp. Dirigir; Lat. Dirigere, directum; (dis, and reg-ere, to rule or order.)

To rule or order; to proceed in, to put into, the ruled, ordered or right way; the straight way, the right line; to guide, to regulate, to manage, to conduct.

To do any thing directly, is to do it straightway, straight forward, without turning to any thing else, immediately

O moral Gower, this boke I direct
To the. Chaucer. Troilus, b. i.

And faire Uenus the beaute of the night
Upraise, and set vnto the west ful right,
Her golden face in oppositioun
Of God Phebus direct descending down.
Id. The Testament of Cresside.

In whose calme streames I sailde so farre,
No raging storme had in respect,
Untill I raisde a goodly starre,
Wherto my course I did direct.
Vncertaine Auctors. The Loss of Libertie by Loue.

We fled away, our face the blood forsoke,
But they with gate direct to Lacon ran.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

I haue before made mention howe Moscouie was in our time discouered by Richard Chancelor in his voyage toward Cathay, by the direction and information of M. Sebastian Cabota, who long before had this secret in his minde.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 242.

Now of this maior or first proposition thus vnderstand, doth the cõclusion folowe directly.—Frith. Workes, p. 147.

To prove that Sir Christopher was a chief director of things done in the house, that Sunday morning the 8th of Feb. it was shewed, that Mr. Killegrew of the Privy-chamber coming that morning to Essex-house, Sir Christopher meets him in the court.—State Trials. Sir Christ. Blunt, an. 1600.

And said; Faire Sir, I hope good hap hath brought
You to enquire the secrets of my griefe,
Or that your wisdome will direct my thought,
Or that your prowesse can me yeeld relief.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 7.

Direct or indirectly then
To answer, all is one:
From those inquisitors escape
But verie few or none.
Warner. Albion's England, b. ix. c. 31.

If even your own children pretend to dispossess their minds of all malignity, and to have the dominion of all passions, shall not they be your judges, and condemn such, as with the succour of grace conjoyned to reason, do not undertake the subjection of this passion to the precept and example of our divine director?
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 15. s. 3.

Cease then, vain words; well may you show affection,
But not her worth: the mind her sweet perfection
Admires; how should it then give the lame tongue direction?—P. Fletcher. Piscatory Eclogues, Ecl. 7.

Which friends, sir, as it were, durst not (looke you, sir) shew themselues (as we terme it) his friends, whilest he's in directitude.
Directitude? What's that!
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act iv. sc. 5.

I acknowledge myself but a bare Englishman, subject to the laws thereof, as well in the penal, as in the directive part of them.—State Trials. Lieut.-Col. Lilburne, an. 1649.

He affirming, That mind together with nature was the cause of this universe; and that heaven and earth, plants and animals were framed by them both; that is, by mind as the principal and directive cause, but by nature as a subservient or executive instrument.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 153.

At the side of this house next unto the castle was seated the chaire of state, having directly over it, and extending very largely every way, a very faire and rich canopy.
Sir Francis Drake. The World Encompassed, p. 90.

Chor. He will directly to the lords, I fear,
And with malicious counsel stir them up
Some way or other yet further to afflict thee.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

And to prevent all dangers and all disorder, there should always be two of the scholars with them, to be as witnesses and directors of their actions.—Cowley. Ess. The School.

Thus the Book of the Common Prayer might be taken away, and totally suppressed, and that, instead thereof, a Directory might be used.

Clarendon. Civil War, vol. ii. p. 580.

——— Like a traveller on some strange coast,
Having his first path, his directress, lost,
With devious steps, now in, now out doth wind,
Flies what he seeks, and meets what he declin'd,
Lost in the errour of ambiguous ways.

Sherburn. Translations. Salmacis.

It is as unconceivable how it [mechanism] should be the directrix of such intricate motions, as that a blind man should manage a game at chess.

Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 3.

He slew his mother at the Gods' command,
They bid him strike, and did direct his hand
To punish falshood, and appease the Ghost
Of his poor father treacherously lost.

Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 8.

'Tis the mean genius, the slovenly performer, who knowing nothing of true workmanship, endeavours by the best outward gloss and dazzling shew, to turn the eye from a direct and steady survey of his piece.

Shaftesbury. Advice to an Author, pt. ii. s. 2.

In the third place, to observe, of what consequence it is in matters of religion, that men fail not in this first and grand foundation; in the root, the spring, the universal guide and directer of their actions, take heed, that the light which is in thee, be not darkness.—Clarke, vol. iii. Ser. 5.

The direction of all their progressive motions, both of the primary and secondary planets, uniformly from the west to east, (when by the motion of comets it appears, there was no necessity but that they might as easily have moved in all imaginable transverse directions) is an evident proof that these things are solely the effects of wisdom and choice.

Id. On the Attributes, Prop. 9.

For if we first examine the precepts directive of our practice in relation to God, what can be more just, or comely, or pleasant, or beneficial to us, than are those duties of piety, which our religion doth enjoin.—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 16.

When thus Actæon calling to the rest:
"My friends," says he, "our sport is at the best.
The sun is high advanc'd, and downward sheds
His burning beams directly on our heads."

Addison. Ovid. Metam. b. iii.

I have written to my Lord Arlington at large, upon the confidence of this safe conveyance by the yacht, which will give your lordship your share of trouble, but, withal, a full prospect of the dispositions here, and consequently the present as well as future estate of our alliance, if it be pursued with the same directness it has been contracted

Sir W. Temple. Letter to the Lord Keeper.

O teach me to believe thee thus conceal'd,
And search no further than thyself reveal'd;
But her alone for my director take,
Whom thou hast promis'd never to forsake.

Dryden. The Hind & the Panther.

Behold how closely the church hath followed the Apostles' directory; for here in this form we have (as the analysis doth manifest) first prayers, that is petitions for good; then supplications, or deprecations of evil; in which are comprehended intercessions (and so not named here) that is, desiring some good or some deliverance from evil for others; and lastly, giving of thanks for mercies already received.

Comber. Companion to the Temple, pt. iii. s. 7.

Thus self-interest if rightly directed, flows through the nearer charities of relations, friends and dependents, till it rises, and dilates itself into general benevolence.

Felsenborne, Let. 30.

I have not, however, neglected the softer graces of my admired Tully, wherever I could, with propriety, step out of my direct road to enjoy a more flowery path; for it was warmth not austerity, at which I aimed.

Melmoth. Pliny, b. i. Let. 2.

Between the foot of these ridges and the sea, is a border of low land surrounding the whole island, except a few places where the ridges rise directly from the sea.

Cook. Voyages, vol. i. b. i. c. 17.

When this object was to be weighed against the directorial conquests, merely as an object of a value at market, the principle of barter became perfectly ridiculous.

Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 3.

In 1773, he [Commodore Johnston] was a candidate for the directorship, in which he did not succeed.

Mickle. To Commodore Johnston.

But what coercive power is there in philosophy? It may see and determine right: but who, or what shall compell the supreme directress of life to observe its own determinations.

Hurd. Works, vol. vii. Ser. 47.

DIRE'MPT, v. Lat. Dirimere, -emtum,—
To separate, to decide.

So making a transaction, and ingrossing it in writing, he writ the iudiciall examination for a prouiso: that if either part refused to stand to his arbitrement, the definitiue strife might be dirempted by sentence.

Holinshed. Conquest of Ireland, c. 33.

The displeasure of the canon law against such marriages (of brothers and sisters' children) is so high flown that no less can take it off than an utter diremption of them.

Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Dec. 1. c. 5.

DIRE'PTION, } Lat. Diripere, (dis, and DIREPTI'TIOUSLY. } rapere,) to seize, to snatch away, to plunder; to despoil.

The whole country by these continuall direptions, was vtterly depriued of the staffe of foode, hauing nothing left to prolong their life, but that only what they got in hunting.

Speed. The Saxons, b. vii. c. 1. s. 2.

For distance of place, dangers of wavs, and perils by the sea, his holiness cannot have due examination of such suggestions; but his grants do pass him, si sta sit: and so the grants surreptitiously and direptitiously obtained.

Strype. Memorials, an. 1532.

DIRGE, or } So called from the beginning of DI'RIGE. } the Psalm Dirige nos Domine, which is accustomed to be sung at funerals, (Skinner.) But what Psalm can Skinner, and his monitor, Dr. T. H. mean? Jamieson and Fosbrooke are both wrong in that to which they refer, viz. the ninth verse of the fifth. Other etymologists ascribe it to a Popish hymn: Dirige gressus meos. Casaubon objects to this etymology, and gives as an especial reason, that he can find no name given—his sacris ab hoc dirige—in any other language. Our old authors, however, write the word dirige; and no other plausible origin has been assigned.

Ye vertuous women, tender of nature
Ful of pite and of compassion,
Resort I pray you vnto my sepulture
To sing my dirige with great deuocion

Chaucer. Lamentation of Marie Magdaleine.

Whie will ye not be at his dirige, as ye haue been at rich mens? sith God praiseth him more than he dooth other men.

Jack Upland. Imputed to Chaucer.

Yea, and many enloyne penãce to geue a certayne for to haue so many Masses sayde, and desire to prouide a chappellayne themselues. Soule masses, dirges, monethmyndes, yeare-myndes, Alsoul day and trentals

Tyndall. Workes, p. 136.

Scrape clene the letany out of euery booke, with our lady mattens and the dyrige to.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1120.

And ouer yᵗ he ordeyned ther, to be cõtynued for euer, one day in yᵉ weke, a solempne dirige to be songe, and vpon yᵉ morowe a masse.—Fabyan, an. 1422.

Haue thei not thrust in ayen all popysche rytes, tradicions, sacramenta, masses, matens, diriges, for their dead?

Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 9.

At Halomas to watch in the church, to say a dirige and commemorations, and to ring for all soules, to pay tithes truely, to give to the high aulter.

Fox. Martyrs, p. 33. Four Quest. to the Papists, Q. 4.

While those things were doing, a rumor was in all mens mouthes, that the Archbishop, to curry fauor with the Queene, had promised to say a dirige masse after the olde custome, for the funeral of King Edward her brother.

Id. p. 1698. The Story and Life of D. Cranmer.

Mel. The raven croak'd, and hollow shrieks of owls,
Sung dirges at her funeral; I laugh'd
The whilst, for 'twas not boot to weep.

Ford. The Lover's Melancholy, Act ii. sc. 2.

In the time of popery, they carried the dead body into the church, where the priests said dirges; and twenty dirges at four pence a piece, come to a noble.—Selden. Table Talk.

With them the superfluous numbers of idle wakes, guilds, fraternities, church-ales, helpe-ales, and soule-ales, called also dirge-ales, with the heathenish rioting at bride-ales, are well diminished and laid aside.

Holinshed. Description of England, b. ii. c. 1.

The soft complaining flute
In dying notes discovers
The woes of hopeless lovers,
Whose dirge is whisper'd by the warbling lute.

Dryden. Song 3, for St. Cecilia's Day.

The vast number of priests made them contemptible: for there were mass-priests, dirige-priests, chantry-priests, sacrificing-priests, as the author of the Defence of Priests' Marriage reckons them up.—Strype. Memorials, an. 1546.

Yet hear! 'tis Heav'n's most high decree!
The solemn rites prepare!
Let Sion's daughters raise the dirge,
Replete with wild despair.—Lowth. Gregory, Lec. 22.

DIRK, v. } To Dirk is to derck, to dark or DIRK, adj. } darken, (qv.) See Dirk in Jamieson.

Thy waste bigneese but cumbers the ground!
And dirkes the beautie of my blossoms round.

Spenser. Shepheard's Calendar. Februarie.

For day, that was, is wightly past,
And now at earst the dirke night doth hast.—Id. Ib. Sept.

DIRK, (a dagger.) The verb to dirk, or durk, is found in Scotch writers. Dr. Jamieson thinks that as the Islandic daur signifies a sword, durk may radically be a Gothic verb. The Dutch have dorck, pugio, a short sword.

The said Donald running up stairs with a drawn dirk and bended pistol in either hand, making search through the whole house and beds, to have murdered the said Sir James.

State Trials. Marquis of Argyle, an. 1661.

In vain thy hungry mountaineers
Come forth in all thy warlike geers,
The shield, the pistol, dirk, and dagger,
In which they daily wont to swagger.

Tickel. An Imitation of the Prophecy of Nereus.

DIRT, v. }
DIRT, n. }
DI'RTY, v. }
DI'RTY, adj. } Sommer says, from the A. S. Tord, which according to Tooke is the past part. of Tiran, to feed upon. Tord, that which has been fed upon. (See the example from the Bible.) In A. S. Ge-drit-an, is, cacare; Dut. Driten. And see To Dryte in Dr. Jamieson's Supplement.
DI'RTILY.
DI'RTINESS.

To dirt or to dirty, (the latter now the more common verb,) generally is—

To bemire, to defile, to bedaub, to pollute; to cover, smear, or stain with mire, filth, mud.

Nethelesse I gesse all thingis to be peyrement for the cleer science of Iesus Crist my Lord, for whom I made all thingis peyrement and I deme as dryt, that I wynne Crist.

Wiclif. Philipensis, c. 3.

And Ahud put forthe his left hand, & toke the dagger froms his right thighe, and thurst it into his bely so that the hafte wente in after the blade. And the hafte stopped in the fat, for he drue not ye dagger out of his belye. And the dyrte came out.—Bible, 1551. Judges, c. 3.

Hetherto hath M. More reasoned reasonably; but now he beginneth to decline from the dignitie of diuinitie into the dirtie dregges of vayne sophistrye.—Frith. Works, p. 136.

Riding in his long gowne downe to the horse heels like a Pharisie, or rather like a slouen, dirted vp to the horse bellie.

Fox. Martyrs, p. 1581. Hubberdin against M. Latimer.

And being downe, is trode in the durt
Of cattell, and brouzed, and sorely hurt.

Spenser. Shepheard's Calendar. Februarie.

Or were it such gold as that, wherewithall
Almighty chymics from each mineral
Having by subtle fire a soul out-pull'd,
Are dirtily and desperately gull'd:
I would not spit to quench the fire they're in.

Donne, Elegie 12.

Hee changed the name of the great citie of France, and called it Paris, which before that time was called Lutecia, because of the mudde and dirtinesse of the place wherein it standeth.—Stow. The Romans, an. 386.

He [Sir Thomas More] rather soyled his fingers, then dirtied his hands in the matter of the Holy Maid of Kent, and well wiped it off again.—Fuller. Worthies. London.

And all his armour sprinkled was with bloud,
And soil'd with durtie gore that no man can
Discerne the hew thereof.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 6.

Shakespeare, 'tis true, this tale of Troy first told,
But, as with Ennius Virgil did of old,
You found it dirt, but you have made it gold.

Duke. To Dryden on his Troil. & Cress.

If gentlemen would regard the virtues of their ancestours, (that gallant courage, that solid wisdom, that noble courtesie, which advanced their families and severed them from the vulgar,) this degenerate wantonness and dirtiness of speech would return to the dunghill, or rather (which God grant) would be quite banished from the world.

Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 13.

Should Sir John Falstaff complain of having dirtied his silk stockings, or Anne of Boleyn call for her coach; would an audience endure it, when all the world knows that Queen Elizabeth was the first that had her coach or wore silk stockings!—King. Art of Cookery, Let. 6. To Mr. ———

All the air about us is it not (not onely not noisome to our smell, but) very comfortable: and refreshing: and doth not even the dirty earth yield a wholesome and medicinal scent!—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 6.

I could not help reflecting, when I read this inscription, how contemptible and ridiculous are those honours, which are thus sometimes thrown away upon dirt and infamy, which such a rascal, in short, had the assurance both to accept and to refuse, and then set himself forth to posterity, as an example of singular moderation!

Melmoth. Pliny, b. vii. Let. 29.

What is 't to us, if taxes rise or fall,
Thanks to our fortune, we pay none at all.
Let muck-worms who in dirty acres deal,
Lament those hardships which we cannot feel.

Churchill. Night.

His [a collier's] high wages arise altogether from the hardship, disagreeableness, and dirtiness of his work.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 10.

DIS, in Composition. From Dis, says Scaliger, is formed di, and thence de. Dis, from the Gr. Δις, bis, quod enim bis fit, separatim fit, (De Causs. lib. 8. c. 145.) Gr. Δις, from Δι-ειν, to divide, to separate. Dis, di, and de, may be considered as the same prefix, meaning separation, partition. They vary somewhat in their usage; de is more commonly applied to express separation, by motion from, as of a part from the whole; and then, motion downwards from. Di, separation by motion of diverse parts, diverse ways: and dis, the same. Applied to words denoting wholeness or rest, they would reverse or negative the signification of those words; and afterwards convey that force to words of a different description. More than this; being frequently prefixed to words, themselves meaning separation or partition, and thus augmenting the force of those words, they have been improperly—with this augmenting force—prefixed to other words, not having such meaning of separation or partition. For the etymology of the word, to which dis is prefixed, reference must be made to that word.

DIS-A'BLE, v. } DISA'BLE, adj. } DISA'BLEMENT. } DISABI'LITY. } To deprive of ability, strength, power, force; to strip or deprive of those qualities, which en-able or empower; (and in our old writers) which give value or estimation; and thus, to undervalue, to underrate, to disqualify, to dis-esteem.

Refellere, in Livy, is rendered in Hackluyt to disable or confute.

It is submitted vnto your correction;
Consider that my couning is disable
To write to you.—Chaucer. Certain Balades. Lennoy.

Right well therefore and iudicially sayth Titus Liuius. Neither meane I to auouch (quoth he) ne to disable or confute those thinges which before the building and foundation of the citie haue beene reported, being more adorned and fraught with poeticall fables than with incorrupt and sacred monuments of truth.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 221.

Ne doth she giue them other thing to eate
But bread and water, or like feeble thing,
Them to disable from reuenge aduenturing.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 4.

Ros. Farewell, Mounsieur Trauellor: looke you lispe, and weare strange suites; disable all the benefits of your owne countrie, bee out of loue with your natiuitie, and almost chide Gode for making you that countenance you are.

Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act iv. sc. 1.

Ar. It may be
You think my tongue may prove your enemy;
And though restrained sometimes, out of a bravery,
May take a license to disable ye.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Island Princess, Act iv. sc. 1.

That these more curious times they might divorce
From the opinion they are link'd unto
Of our disable and unactive force,
To show true knowledge can both speak and do.

Daniel. Musophilus.

But in the end, in respect of the severance, and that the plea was in disablement of him that was severed, the writ was awarded good.

State Trials. The Case of the Postnati, an. 1608.

No more doth charity command; nor can her rule compel, to retain in nearest union of wedloc, one whose other grossest faults or disabilities to perform what was covenanted, are the just causes of as much grievance and dissension in a family, as the private act of adultery.—Milton. Colasterion.

You see I have disabled myself, like an elected Speaker of the House, yet like him I have undertaken the charge, and find the burthen sufficiently recompensed by the honour.

Dryden. To the Rt. Hon. the Earl of Abingdon, &c.

But still this is only an interruption of the acts, rather than any disablement of the faculty.—South, vol. v. Ser. 4.

He that freely brings upon himself a disability of embracing the means of grace, is liable to that reprehension and punishment which is due to a voluntary rejection of them.—South, vol. viii. Ser. 13.

When Virtue shunn'd the shock, and Pride,
Disabled, lay by Virtue's side,
Too weak, my ruffled soul to cheer,
Which could not hope, yet would not fear.

Churchill. The Ghost, b v.

For they will be free from that terrene concretion and remains of the carnal part bringing on the inconveniencies, disabilities, pains and mental disorders spoken of in the last section.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. ii. c. 21.

DIS-ABU'SE, v. } DISABU'SE, n. } Fr. Désabuser,—to free from abuse; from deception, guile, imposition; to undeceive.

God forgive the inventors and contrivers of that foul calumny. But by his Almighty Providence, who from heaven reveals secrets, it was not long before that partie was disabused.—Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. Pref. p. 21.

But if by simplicity you meant to express a general defect in those that profess and practice the excellent art of angling, I hope in time to disabuse you and make the contrary appear evidently.—Walton. Angler, pt. i. c. 1.

For although on her head there seems to be crownes of gold, and her haire like the haire of woman, yet her teeth appear as the teeth of lions, and her sting like that of scorpions, so that the deterrings and disabuses appeare together with the dilectations.

Mountagne. Deroute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 10. s. 4.

Let every faithful Minister, therefore, of the Church of England, in a conscientious observance of the laws laid upon him by the said church, make it his business to undeceive and disabuse the people committed to his charge.

South, vol. v. Ser. 1.

Dr. Horne justly supposed that the admirers of Hume were more likely to be disabused of their error by the fear of derision, than by any force of argumentation.

Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 62.

DIS-ACCO'MMODATE, v. } DISACCOMMODA'TION. } Fr. Désaccommoder,—to disaccommodate, (Cotgrave.) See DISCOMMODATE.

To strip or deprive of measure, of moderation, of proportion, of fitness, suitableness, convenience, advantage; to inconvenience.

They were such as were great and notable devastations, sometimes in one part of the earth, sometimes in another; either by certain rotations, or at least in some places more than in other, according to the accommodation or disaccommodation of them to such calamities.

Hale. Orig. of Mankind, p. 217.

I hope this will not disaccommodate you.

Warburton. to Hurd, Let. 192.

DIS-ACCO'RD, v. } DISACCO'RDANCE. } To strip, deprive or divest, of accord, of union, of harmony, conformity or agreement; to disagree, to dissent, to differ.

Trewly presence and predestinacion in nothing disacorden, wherefore as I was learned how Goddes before weting and free choice of will now stondon togither, me thinketh the same reason me leadeth, that desteny and free will accorden, so that neither of hem both to other in nothing contrarieth.

Chaucer. The Testament of Loue, b. iii.

Wherefore I passe ouer, leuynge all the other matyer, whiche also is there rehercid, of the warre attwene Vter and Oura, sone of Hengiste; for so moche as it is disacordaunt vnto other wryters.—Fabyan, vol. i. c. 100.

For, she was daughter to a noble lord,
Which dwelt thereby who sought her to affie
To a great peere: but she did disaccord,
Ne could her liking to his loue apply.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 3.

DIS-ACKNO'WLEDGE, v. } DISACKNO'WLEDGING, n. } To refuse to acknowledge; to refuse to own; to disown.

And so, besides that first sort of schism which was an offence against subordination, i. e. a breaking off from the communion of; and obedience to their lawfull superiors, there may be also another species, referring to government, a disacknowledging or rejecting the due government.

Hammond. Works, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 135.

DIS-ACQUA'INT, v. "Fr. Désacconnoître,—to disacquaint—

To break or dissolve the acquaintance of; also, to renounce or forego all acquaintance with," (Cotgrave.)

If that thy sydes, or reues becume with twitchinge stitche attainted,
Seeke how to chace that griefe awaye
to make it dis-aquaynted.

Drant. Horace. Epistle to Numidius.

Ye must now disacquainte and estraunge yourselfes from the soure old wine of Moses lawe, and drynke in the newe muste of more soüder doctrine.—Udal. Luke, c. 16.

DIS-ADO'RN. To strip or deprive of ornament; of decoration, of embellishment.

But when she saw grey haire begin to spread,
Deform his beard, and disadorn his head,
The Goddess cold, &c.—Congreve. Homer. Hymn to Venus.

DIS-ADVA'NCE. To come or cause to come, from the van or front, to move backward to retire or retreat, or cause to retire or retreat.

Within the paleis gardin by a well
Gan he and I well half a daie to dwell,
Right for to speaken of an ordinaunce
How we the Grekes mighten disauance.

Chaucer. Troilus b. ii.

Yet one of many was so strongly bent
By Priamond, that with vnlucky glaunce,
Through Cambel's shoulder it vnwarely went,
That forced him his shield to disadvaunce.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 3

For when they saw their Lord's bright cognizance
Shine in his face, soon did they disadvance
And some unto him kneel, and some about him dance.

G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph on Earth.

DIS-ADVA'NTAGE, v. } DISADVA'NTAGE, n. } DISADVANTA'GEOUS. } DISADVANTA'GEOUSLY. } DISADVANTA'GEOUSNESS. } To strip or deprive or divest of an advantage, of any thing that may forward or promote the interest or service; of favour, benefit or profit; to injure, to cause a loss or mischief. See above, DISADVANCE.

Pity of right ought to be reasonable
And to no wight do no disauantage.

Chaucer. The belle Dame sans Mercie.

It was not longe after or bothe kynges with great hoostys drewe into the country, and at the ryuer of Stampis met, where atwene thé was foughten a stronge batayll, but by the polycie of Theodobert, Lothayre was put to a disauantage.

Fabyan, vol. i. pt v. c. 124.

Shall I pursue my right by the lawe? If thou wilte folowe my counsell, ye shalt euen on the way as thou goest with thy aduersarie, agree with him, and spedely make an ende of the mattier, whether it be to thy behoofe or disauauntage.

Udal Matthew, c. 5.

Besides it plainly proveth the properneese of their parts and tallneese of their industry, who thereby, and by God's blessing thereon, reached so high preferment, though disadvantaged by standing on so low ground of their extraction.

Fuller. General Worthies of England.

But as it fell out, the overture proved disadvantageous to the King, and gave the other party new cause of triumph, that they had plainly threaten'd him out of what he pretended to have firmly resolved to do, which disadvantage was improved by the other proposition, that attended it, concerning the militia.—Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. p 502.

When we come to touch it, the coy delusive plant (sensitive plant) immediately shrinks in its displayed leaves, and contracts itself into a form and dimensions, disadvantageously differing from the former; which it again recovers by degrees, when touched no more.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p.260.

This disadvantageousness of figure he [Pope] converted, as Lord Bacon expresses it, into a perpetual spur to rescue and deliver himself from scorn, and to watch the weakness of others, that he might have something to repay them.

Tyers. Hist. Rhapsody on Pope, pt. v.

This leads me to suspect, that some idle tale or other has been reported to the disadvantage of my sentiments respecting Appius: but be assured, whatever you have heard of that nature is utterly false.—Melmoth. Cicero, b. v. Let. 15.

Whatever disadvantageous sentiments we may entertain of mankind, they are always found to be prodigal both of blood and treasure in the maintenance of public justice.

Hume. Ess. Principles of Government

DIS-ADVE'NTURE, n. } DISAVE'NTURE. } DISADVE'NTUROUS. } To adventure, is to try, risk or hazard, what may be about to come: Disadventure is used as misadventure, i. e.—

Misfortune; an unlucky, and unfortunate trial, risk or hazard.

This infortune, or this disauenture
Alone as I was borne I wol complaine.

Chaucer. Troilus, b. iii.

Thou, wretched man, of death hast greatest need,
If in true balance thou wilt weigh thy state:
For neuer knight that dared warlike deed
More luckleese disadventures did amate.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i.

And who most trustes in arme of fleshly might,
And boasts, in beauties chaine not to be bound,
Doth soonest fall in disaventrous fight,
And yields his captiue neck to victors mo.t despight.

Id. ib. b. i.

DIS-ADVI'SE, v. To advise not, or advise or counsel from doing any thing.

I may little doubt of its being counterfeit, by reason of its appearing to me as heavy as a mineral stone of that bulk; though the possessor being loth to expose it to an uncommon trial, I could not so cogently evince, that I had a clear reason to disadvise the purchase of it.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 464.

DIS-AFFE'CT, v. DISAFFE'CTED. DISAFFE'CTEDNESS. DISAFFE'CTION. DISAFFE'CTIONATE. To be or cause to be without affection, without attachment, friendly regard, love, good will, liking. To dislike, to discontent, to dissatisfy, to discompose.

But in as much as he is accused of infidelity and impiety to Almighty God, and to be disaffected to the King, therefore this defendant humbly craveth leave to declare his opinion in the thing itself.—State Trials. Henry Sherfield, an. 1632.

And if our disaffected palates resent nought but bitterness from our choicest viands, we truly taste the unpleasing quality; though falsly conceive it in that, which is no more then the occasion of its production.

Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 10.

If a man sins often in several instances it is a habit, properly so called; for although the instances be single, yet the disobedience and disaffection are united and habitual.

Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 4. s. 3.

That's to destroy, and not to prove:
As if a man should be dissected,
To find what part is disaffected.—Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1.

Yet the king had commonly some in these houses that were otherwise minded, and discovered the treachery and disaffectedness of the rest.—Strype. Memorials, an. 1534.

He did it [instilled knowledge] with that ease and gentleness, as raised a love, not a hatred, (a thing that often happens to schoolmasters) an esteem, not a disaffection towards his teacher.—Id. Life of Sir J. Cheke, c. 8. s. 3.

They, according to that climate, were found damnably corrupt, and disaffectionate to the Turkish affairs

Blount. Voyage into the Levant, 1650, p. 99.

Whatever the indifferent or the disaffected to the church may allege in opposition, I venture to affirm that the unequal size of parishes, and the charge of local population, render the erection of new places of worship, on the establishment, in various parts of the kingdom, a grand desideratum in the present state of our ecclesiastical polity.

Knox. Works, vol. vi. Ser. 27.

Cordelia at length arrives; an opiate is administered to the king, to calm the agonies and agitations of his mind; and a most interesting interview ensues between this daughter, that was so unjustly suspected of disaffection, and the rash and mistaken father.—The Adventurer, No. 122.

DIS-AFFI'RM, v. DISAFFI'RMANCE. To affirm, (met.) is—to speak firmly, resolutely; to declare or assert confidently:

To disaffirm, is—to undo or annul any thing so affirmed, to contradict, to deny it.

This notable miracle which was sette foorth by them, is better knowen with all that dwell in Hierusalem, then wee shal bee hable to disaffyrme or disproue.—Udal. Acles, c. 4.

If it had been a disaffirmance by law they must have gone down in solido; but now you see they have been tempered and qualified as the king saw convenient.

State Trials. The great Case of Impositions, an. 1606.

DIS-AFFO'RD, v. To refuse to afford or yield; to deny, to withhold.

Which forc'd from her these words: "My Lord,
Let not my being a Lancastrian bred,
Without mine own election, disafford
Me right, or make my cause disfigured."

Daniel. Civil War, b. viii.

DIS-AFFO'REST, v. DISAFFO'RESTING, n. To strip of the privileges of forest lands; to render common.

But in Henry the Third's time, the Charta de Foresta (together with Magna Charta) were establish'd, so that there was much land disafforested, which hath been called Pourlieus ever since, whereof there were appointed Rangers, &c.

Howell, b. iv. Let. 16.

How happy's he, which hath due place assign'd
To his beasts; and disaforested his mind!

Donne. To Sir E. Herbert.

The Charter of the Foresta had for its object the disafforesting several of those tracts: the prevention of future afforestings: the mitigation and ascertainment of the punishments for the breaches of the Forest Law.

Burke. Abridgement of English History, an. 1215.

DIS-AGRE'E, v. DISAGRE'ABLE. DISAGRE'ABLENESS. DISAGRE'ABLY. DISAGRE'ANCE. DISAGRE'ER. DISAGRE'EMENT. Fr. Désagréer,—Not to agree, or accord, or suit, concur, or please or become friendly; to differ, to be unsuitable, displeasing, offensive; to be dissimilar or unlike; to be contrary.

It [Loue] is Caribdes perilous,
Disagreeable and gracious;
It is discordaunce that can acord,
And accordaunce to discord;
It is conning without science,
Wisedome without sapience.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

Yᵗ people looke as well vnto the lluyng as vnto the preachyng, and are hurte at once if the liuing disagree, and fall frō the fayth, and beleue not the worde.

Tyndall. Workes, p. 133.

Preache you trulye the doctrine whiche you haue receyued, & teach nothing that is disagreeable therevnto.

Udal. Mark, c. 4.

There is no disagreeance wher is fayth in Jesus Christe, and consente of mynde together in one accorde.

Id. Actes, c. 8.

The Frenche Kynge at the request of the Lordes of Guyen, which were not able to defende themselfes, took this matter in hand, and caused the Lorde Delabreth, to certifie his disagrement to the Erl of Huntyngdon, Lieutenaunt for the Kynge of England, in the Duchie of Aquitayne.

Hall. Hen. VI. an. 11.

And for the divers disagreeing cords
Of inter-jangling ignorance, that fill
The dainty ears, and leave no room for words,
The worthier minds neglect, or pardon will.

Daniel. Musophilus.

Towards this they made all the haste they could, exercising the king's patience every day with some disagreeable message to him, upon their privileges, and requiring vindication, and reparation, and discovery of the persons who had promoted that prosecution.—Clarendon Civil War, vol. i. p. 389.

Many who have figured Solitude, having set out the most noted properties thereof, have sought to sweeten all they could the disagreeableness, leaving no roughness or inequality upon the countenance of their character of Solitude.

Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. c. 1. Treat. 16.

Sir, is not that a strange answer, in you, that know there is fire to awe disagreers in all matters of faith?

Hammond. Works, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 605.

[2d Act of the Mind is] putting together such single objects, in order to our comparing of the agreement or disagreement betwixt them, by which we make propositions, which is called judging.—Wilkins. Nat. Religion, b. i. c. 4.

Why both the bands in worship disagree,
And some adore the flower and some the tree.

Dryden. The Flower and the Leaf.

It rarely happens, that we are competent judges of the good and bad fortune of other people. That which is disagreeable to one is many times agreeable to another, or disagreeable in a less degree.

Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 5.

That from these different relations of different things, there necessarily arises an agreement or disagreement of some things to others, or a fitness or unfitness of the applications of different things or different relations, one to another; is likewise as certain, as that there is any difference in the nature of things, or that different things do exist.

Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 14.

United thus, we will hereafter use
Mutual concession, and the Gods, induc'd
By our accord, shall disagree no more.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. iv.

The five following are the principal circumstances, which, so far as I have been able to observe, make up for a small pecuniary gain in some employments, and counterbalance a great one in others. First the agreeableness or disagreeableness of the employments themselves.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 10.

Bourdaloue is, indeed, a great reasoner, and inculcates his doctrines with much zeal, piety, and earnestness; but his style is verbose, he is disagreeably full of quotations from the Fathers, and he wants imagination.—Blair, Lect. 29.

DIS-AGUI'SE, v. To strip of aguise or guise.

What hath she then with me to disaguise?

Stirling. Aurora. An Echo.

DIS-ALLI'EGE, v. To strip, free from, divest of the tie or bond, (of duty or good faith.)

And what greater dividing then by a pernicious and hostile peace, to disalliege a whole feudary kingdom from the ancient dominion of England.—Milton. On the Articles of Peace.

DIS-ALLO'W, v. DISALLO'WABLE. DISALLO'WANCE. DISALLO'WING, n. To refuse to allow; to refuse to grant, permit, or concede, or yield.

Of holy church we ben children all
And euery child is hold for to bow
Unto the mother, how that euer it fall
Or els he must reason disalow.

Chaucer. A Balade to King Henrie IV.

This vice of inobedience
(Againe the rule of conscience)
All that is humble he disaloweth,
That he towarde his God ne boweth.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Cicero defēding Murē against Cato, which had laid vnto his charge, that he had vsed dansing in Asia, where he was gouernour for a season, which deed was so disalowable, that he durst not defend it for wel done, but stifly denied.

Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 13.

I have considered of the form of submission, that your worship brought unto me, and find nothing in it, but that in a good conscience I can yield unto; for it requireth not of me any denial or disallowance of the cause of discipline debated in the book, for which I am in question.

State Trials. John Udal, an. 1590.

For the propositions of letting in part of the king's army, or offering violence to the members of this house, I [Waller] ever disallowed, and utterly rejected them.

Id. Waller & Others, 1643.

Furthermore, Demetrius had many wives that he had married, and all at one time: the which was not disallowable or not forbidden by the Kings of Macedon, but had been used from Philip and Alexander's time.

North. Plutarch, p. 786.

The scurrilous jest could sooner obtain his tears in penance for it, then the approbation of a smile: and all approaches to this sin he look'd upon not only with an utter disallowance in his will, but a kind of natural abhorrence and antipathy in his lower outward faculties.

Hammond. Works. Life, by Fell, vol. i. p. 15.

Heere you see that Theodoret counteth it but a fable, that Cyrill should make any such sale, and those that say he sold it, declare that it was not for any disalowing of the vesture, but for necessitie of the poore in time of famine.

Whitgift. Defence, p. 267.

Some of the fathers again displeased him; for they were too severe and rigorous for men of his genius; they disallow'd self defence, second marriages, and usury.

Bentley. Of Freethinking, § 11.

Beza, the chief minister of Geneva, otherwise a great favourer of this sort of men, liked not of their behaviour, and signified his disallowance of it in an epistle to our bishop.—Strype. Life of Abp. Grindal, an. 1567.

The least appearance of command, or even the allowance, of such practices in Scripture they pretend not; and yet against those who disallow them they thunder out anathemas.—Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 31.

DIS-ALLY', v. The Fr. Désalier, is—to unbind; but dis, in disally, as in disadventure, is used (by Milton) with the force of mis, (q.d.) Misally,—to ally, or bind wrongly, improperly.

——— The Timnian bride
Had not so soon preferr'd
Thy Paranymph, worthless to thee compar'd,
Successour in thy bed,
Nor both so loosly disally'd
Their nuptials.

Milton. Samson Agonistes.

DIS-ANA'LOGAL. See ANALOGY.

Not analogous, i. e. having no similitude or proportion.

We have no other measure to frame in ourselves a conception of knowledge, but only the idea, or image of that knowledge, which we have in ourselves, which is utterly unsuitable and disanalogal to that knowledge, which is in God or the manner, or nature of it.

Hale. Cont. vol. ii. The Works of God.

DIS-ANGE'LICAL. Unlike, unsuiting angels or the messengers of God.

You are not then of the opinion of that learned casuist, returned I, who accounts for the shame attending those pleasures of the sixth sense, as he is pleased to call them, from their disangelical nature.

Coventry. Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 2.

DIS-A'NCHOR, v. It. Disancorare; Sp. Desancorar; "Fr. Désancre, to weigh anchor, and begone," (Cotgrave.)

To unfix, draw or haul up the anchor.

Thei disancred and sailed along the coastes of Sussex, and a small nomber of them landed in Sussex.

Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 37.

And when the tide came they disanered, and sayled to Normandy, and came to Depe, and there departed, and deuyded their booty and pyllages.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. I. c. 37.

Then by this admonishment, he and his Troians leauing the new reared citie, disanker from Thrace in quest of behighted Italie.—Warner. Albion's England, Add. to b. ii.

Hauing now the wind and tide with him, he disanchored from thence, and drew along the coast vnder the Downes.
Holinshed. Historie of England, b. iii. c. 11.

DIS-A'NIMATE, v. } Fr. Désanimer,—
DISA'NIMATING, n. } To deprive of breath,
DISANIMA'TION. } spirit, or life, lit. and met.; to dispirit, to discourage, to dishearten.

The presence of a king engenders love
Amongst his subjects, and his loyal friends,
As it disanimates his enemies.
Shakespeare. 1 Part Hen. I. Act iii. sc. 1.

That soul and life that is now fled and gone, from a lifeless carcase, is only a loss to the particular body or compages of matter, which by means thereof is now disanimated, but it is no loss to the whole, it being but transposed in the universe, and lodged somewhere else.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 38.

——— We all know how to fight,
And (feare disanimating none) all doe our knowledge right.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xiii.

To the disanimating and discouraging of the rest of the princes of Germany, and other kings and princes in amity and league with his majesty.
State Trials. The Duke of Buckingham, an. 1626.

True it is, that a glow-worm will afford a faint light, almost a dave's space when many will conceive it dead; but this is a mistake in the compute of death and term of disanimation.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 27.

Let not then tasks above the forces of our nature, disanimate those that may expect assistances from his Almightiness, who in the same leaves, where he commands us to perform more than we are able, promises to do in us what he commands; since difficulties are not essential properties of obstacles, but only disproportions to the powers they are to resist.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 21.

I imagined, that though it would not shine in the dark by the contact of the air, to which it had been too long accustomed, yet when once that dispirited or disanimated superficies, (if I may so call it,) that had lain exposed to the air was removed, the more internal part of the matter might not be destitute of a shining power —Id. Ib. vol. iv. p. 472.

DIS-ANNE'X, v. To unbind, unfasten, disunite, disjoin, dissever.

That when the provinces were lost and disannexed, and that the king was but king de jure over them and not de facto, yet nevertheless the privilege of naturalization continued.—State Trials. The Case of the Postnati, an. 1608.

DIS-ANNU'L, v. } Used as equivalent to DISANNU'LLER, n. } annul, (dis, aug.)
DISANNU'LLING, n. } To bring to nothing; to take away the being or existence; to deprive of power or efficacy.

This I say, that the law which began afterward beyond iiii. c. & xxx. yeares doth not disanull the testamente, that was confyrmed afore of God vnto Christ ward, to make the promese of none effect.—Bible, 1551. Galathians, c. 3.

And if there be any faute in these four lordes or any rebellion in the vycount, then we disanul all this sayde treatie, and wyll that it stande as voyde.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, c. 181.

No bishop made by the Pope, or by any authority derived from the Pope, within the king's dominions, hath any power or authority to impugn, disannul, or controul any act done by any bishop made by his majesty's authority as aforesaid.
State Trials. Case of Præmunire in Ireland, an. 1607.

Jaq. Another to her everlasting fame, erected
Two ale-houses of ease: the quarter-sessions
Running against her roundly; in which business
Two of the disannullers lost their night-caps.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Woman's Prize, Act ii. sc. 5.

And if any rash or unweighed words have fallen from me, yet these cannot be extended to the disannulling of parliaments, or their priuileges in any kind, which I defended in print long since, before I could foresee any of this danger threatening me.—State Trials. Abp. Laud, an. 1640.

By strong temptations [he] has been faint-hearted and denied the truth: like one that disannuls in the height of a fever, the will be made in his composed mind.
Bates. The Danger of Prosperity.

DIS-ANOI'NT, v. To deprive of the effects of being anointed.

They have juggl'd and palter'd with the world, bandied and born arms against their king, divested him, disanointed him, nay, cursed him all over in their pulpits, and their pamphlets.—Milton. Tenure of Kings and Magistrates.

DIS-APPA'REL, v. Fr. "Désappareiller,—to ruffle, disorder, make unready, put out of tune or trim."

Drink disapparels the soul, and is the betrayer of the mind.
Junius. Sin Stigmatized, (1635,) p. 81.

DIS-APPE'AR, v. } To go out of sight or
DISAPPE'ARANCE. } view; without or beyond
DISAPPE'ARING, n. } the reach of perception, observation, notice.

After this discourse he disappeared; and the poor man, if he had been at all waking, slept very well till morning, when he believed all this to be a dream, and considered it no otherwise.—Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. p. 42.

Thus then he disappear'd, was rarifyed;
For 'tis improper speech to say he dy'd:
He was exhal'd; his great Creator drew
His spirit, as the sun the morning dew.
Dryden. On the Death of a very young Gentleman.

Another gentleman lays before me several enormities that are already sprouting, and which he believes will discover themselves in their full growth immediately after my disappearance.—Spectator, No. 553.

When the Seasons cease to smile,
(Wing'd for Memphis or the Nile,)
Charming bird, you disappear
Till the kind succeeding year.
Cunningham. To the Swallow.

A few days after Christ's disappearance out of the world, we find an assembly of disciples at Jerusalem, to the number of "about one hundred and twenty:" which hundred and twenty were, probably, a little association of believers, met together, not only as believers in Christ, but as personally acquainted with the Apostles, and with one another.
Paley. Evidences, pt. ii. c. 9.

DIS-APPLI'ED, i. e. Mis-applied.

This once believ'd, 'twere logick dis-applied
To prove a consequence, by none denied.
Cowper. Tirocinium.

DIS-APPOI'NT, v. } Sp. Desapuntar; "Fr.
DISAPPO'INTMENT. } Désappointer,—to disappoint or frustrate; also, to remove or put from an office or estate; to deprive or bereave of authority," (Cotgrave.)

Written dispoint, as in Chaucer, and in Bible, 1551.

Not to do as appointed; to remove or displace from an appointment, from an appointed place or station.

Not to do as fixed, settled or agreed upon, at the precise point of time or place agreed upon, expected, hoped for.

A man armed at all points, well equipped, was said to be well appointed; and dis-appointed, in Shakespeare, appears to be the reverse, i. e. ill-appointed, ill-prepared, unprepared, (mis-appointed.)

I bought ointments ful precious and roiall
Wherewith I hoped his corps to anointed
But he thus gone, my mind is dispointed.
Chaucer. Lamentation of Marie Magdaleine.

Be not dispoynted of ye good daye, and let not the porciõ of the good daye ouerpasse thee.
Bible, 1551. Jesus Syrach, c. 14.

Shall the vnbeliefe of suche (think you) cause that the faythful promise of God shall not take effecte, so that he being therewith displeased, will (as men are comenly wont to do) breake his promise, and dispoint all men of that, which he hath equally and indifferently promised to euerie man.—Udal. Romaines, c. 3.

Cut off even in the blossome of my sinne,
Unhouzzled, disappointed, unanel'd.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 5.

Where having found his entertainment worse
By far than he expected in that place;
Much disappointed, draws from thence his force,
And towards better trust marcheth apace.
Daniel. Civil War, b. vi.

Such disappointment of expectation, doth much abate the courage of men in fight, especially of the assailants.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. iv. c. 5. s. 11.

After all his endeavours to the contrary, he finds himself naturally to dread a superior being that can defeat all his designs, and disappoint all his hopes, and make him miserable beyond all his fears.—Tillotson, Ser. 1.

This would not be consistent with our independent condition, there being nothing in this world so much under the power of human endeavours, but that the providence of God may interpose for the disappointment of it.
Wilkins. Of Natural Religion, b. ii. c. 2.

Yet hearken—I will disappoint her wiles
And will preserve thee. Take this precious drug:
This holding, enter thou the Goddess' house
Boldly, for it shall save thy life from harm.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. x.

DIS-APPROBA'TION. See infra, DISAPPROVE.

DIS-APPRO'PRIATE, v. } In Law, a be-
DISAPPRO'PRIATE, adj. } nefice is said to be appropriated when it is perpetually annexed to some spiritual corporation, either sole or aggregate, being the patron of the living; and disappropriate, when stript or divested from such appropriation. See APPROPRIATE.

It was the law, that for a man's good and quiet, reduced things to propriety, which were at first in common; how much more law-like were it to assist nature in disappropriating that evil, which by continuing proper becomes destructive!—Milton. Tetrachordon.

Also, if the corporation which has the appropriation is dissolved, the parsonage becomes disappropriate at common law; because the perpetuity of person is gone, which is necessary to support the appropriation.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 2.

At the dissolution of monasteries by Statutes 27 Henry VIII. c. 28, and 31 Henry VIII. c. 13, the appropriations of the several parsonages, which belonged to those respective religious houses, (amounting to more than one-third of all the parishes in England,) would have been by the rules of the common law disappropriated, had not a clause in those statutes intervened, to give them to the king in as ample a manner as the abbots, &c. formerly held the same, at the time of their dissolution.—Id. Ib.

DIS-APPRO'VE, v. } To think or judge un-
DISAPPRO'VAL. } favourably; to dislike.
DISAPPROBA'TION. }

For other things mild heav'n a time ordains,
And disapproves that care, though wise in show,
That with superfluous burden loads the day,
And, when God sends a cheerful hour refrains.
Milton, Son. 21.

But there being not a word let fall from them in disapproval of that opinion, though sometimes occasions were administered, (as by the question of the disciples, and some other occurrences,) 'tis a good presumption of the soundnesse of it —Glanvill. Pre existence of Souls, c. 4.

Now the chief gentlemen of all countries travelled to him, to tender their service; which implied a disapprobation at least, if not a contempt of the two houses' carriage towards him.—Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. p. 543.

This is not meant to disapprove
Your judgment in your choice of love,
Which is so wise, the greatest part
Of mankind study 't as an art.—Butler. Lady's Answer.

This leads us, 3. To observe the perfect consistency which there is between a well-grounded disapprobation of that scene of things, which we this day lament, and a settled and hearty approbation of that great transaction in our own days, upon which the present establishment of our constitution is founded.—Hoadly. Martyrdom of K. Charles I.

——— I disapprove alike
The host, whose assiduity extreme
Distresses, and whose negligence offends;
The middle course is best; alike we err,
Him thrusting forth, whose wish is to remain,
And hind'ring the impatient to depart.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xv.

DI'SARD. See DIZZARD.

DIS-ARM, v. } Fr. Désarmer,—
DISA'RMER. } To strip off, deprive or di-
DISA'RMING, n. } vest of, the arms,—of that DISA'RMY. } which may protect, strengthen or defend; of that which may offend injure or destroy.

Hope after nothing, ne drede thou not: and so shalt thou disarmen the ire of thilke unmighty tyraunt.
Chaucer. Boecius, b. i.

These justes fynished, euery man withdrew, the kynge was disarmed, & at time cõuenient he and the quene heard euẽ song.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 2.

After whiche courses the herauldes cried the disarmy and the trompettes sounded to lodgyng.—Id. Ib. an. 12.

So, as I then disarmed did remaine,
A wicked ambush which lay hidden long,
In the close couert of her guilefull eyen,
Thence breaking forth, did thicke aboute me throng.
Spenser, Son. 12.

As S. Hierom notes it as a great error in Helvidius, that he took railing for eloquence, so it is not imaginable how so much learning and abilities, as this disarmer is believed to have, should admit so great a mixture of rudeness and acurility.—Hammond. Works, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 62.

Since my last to your lordship by Mr. Endimion Porter, there hath not happened any matter of great moment, or alteration here, saving the resolution (which his majestie hath taken by the advice of his councel) for the disarming of all the popish lords.

Cabbala. The Earl of Carlile to the Duke, Nov. 1625.

Elsewhere he saw where Troilus defy'd
Achilles, and unequal combat try'd,
Then where the boy disarm'd, with loosen'd reins,
Was by his horses hurry'd o'er the plains.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. i.

With his huge falchion, Hector, drawing nigh
To Ajax, of its brazen point disarm'd
His ashen beam; for close behind the neck
He lopp'd it. Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xvi.

DIS-ARRA'NGE, v. } "Fr. Désarranger,— DISARRA'NGEMENT. } To unrank, disorder, disarray," (Cotgrave.) See DERANGE.

To put out of order, to put or place in a disorderly, a confused manner; to destroy the order or method.

For oft the glebe, and all its waving load,
Will journey, forc'd off by the mining rain;
And with its faithless burden, disarrange
Thy neighbour's vale.—Grainger. The Sugar Cane, b. i.

We could hardly alter one word, or disarrange one member, without spoiling it. Few sentences are to be found more finished or more happy.—Blair, vol. ii. Lect. 20.

In his opinion, the very worst part of the example act is, in the late assumption of citizenship, by the army, and the whole of the arrangement, or rather disarrangement of their military.—Burke. On the Army Estimates.

DIS-ARRA'Y, v. } "Fr. Désarroyer, — to DISARRAY, n. } disorder, disarray, confound, mar the order or fashion of; also, to discomfit, overthrow or put to rout an army," &c. (Cotgrave.)

To uncover, uncloak, undress; to put out of order, to throw into confusion, to rout.

For he ne made hire of the hed of Adam, for she shuld not claime to gret lordshippe; for ther as the woman hath the maistrie, she maketh to moche disarray.

Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

The whiles, his guilefull groome was fled away:
But vain it was to thinke from him to flie,
Who overtaking him did disarray,
And all his face deform'd with infamy.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 3.

——— Thou that day
Thy father's dreadful thunder didst not spare,
Nor stop thy flaming chariot wheels, that shook
Heav'n's everlasting frame, while o'er the necks
Thou drov'st of warring Angels disorderd.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

And him behind, a wicked hag did stalke
In ragged robes, and filthy disarray,
Her other leg was lame, that she no'te walke,
But on a staffe her feeble steps did stay.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 4.

Whereat the ranged horse, break out, deny
Obedience to the riders, scorn their pow'r;
Disrank the troops, set all in disarray,
To make th' assailant owner of the day.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. viii.

As the hardest stone is properest for a basis; so there is not a better pedestal to raise a trophy of our vertues upon, then an outward enemy, if we can but keep ourselves from inward enemies, our vices, our weaknesses, and our own disaraymants.—Feltham, pt. ii. Res. 53.

——— She by Cretheus then espous'd
A fair increase, Æson and Pherus, bore;
And great Amythaon, who with fiery steeds
Oft disarray'd the foes in battle rang'd.

Fenton. Homer. Odyssey, b. xi.

Soon as the prospect open'd to his view,
His wounded eyes the scene of sorrow knew;
Dire disarray! the tumult of the fight,
The wall in ruins, and the Greeks in flight.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xiv.

In the morning she rose disarrayed, and her eyes betrayed a night without slumber; when the yellow-robed God, who gazed on her with transport, thus meditated on her charms in his heavenly mind.—Sir W. Jones. Songs of Jayadeva.

DIS-ASSE'NT, n. } Used by some old writers,
DISASSE'NTER. } (q.d.) Dissent, (qv.)

But whether he departed without the Frenche kynge's consent or disassent, he, deceaued in his expectacion, and in maner in despayre, returned agayn to the Lady Margaret his first foolish foundacion.—Holl. Hen. VII. an. 7.

In these, and such like particulars, the king hath no swaying negative voice at all, but the houses may proceed and give judgment, (not only without the king's personall presence or assent) as the highest court of justice, but even against his personal negative vote or dissasent, in case he be present, as infinite examples of present and former times experimentally manifest beyond all contradiction.

Prynne. Treachery & Disloyalty, &c. pt. ii. p. 65.

Thirdly, the alledging the noting of the names of the disassenters could not at the first be conceived to imply an officious prying into the gesture of the prince, but rather a loyal fear of incurring the king's displeasure.

State Trials. Lord Balmerino, an. 1634.

DIS-ASSIDU'ITY. Cessation from assiduity or constant and continual attention.

But he came in, and went out; and, through disassiduity, drew the curtain between himself, and the light of her [Queen Elizabeth] favour; and then death overwhelmed the remnant, and utterly deprived him of recovery.

Naunton. Frag. Reg. in Fuller. Worthies. Worcester-shire.

My Lord of Rochester, partly by some relapse into his late infirmity, and partly (as it is interpreted) through the grief of his mind, is also this second time not gone with the king. some argue upon it, that disassiduity in a favorite, is a degree of declination.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 412.

DIS-ASSO'CIATE. Fr. "Désassocier,—
To disassociate, break company, dissolve society, separate or part friends," (Cotgrave.)

As if our mind had not other hours enough to do her business, without disassociating herself from the body in that little space which she needeth for her necessity.

Florio's Translation of Montaigne's Essays, (1613.) p. 630.

DIS-A'STER, v. }
DISA'STER, n. }
DISA'STERLY, ad. }
DISA'STROUS. }
DISA'STROUSLY. } Fr. Désastre; It. Disastro; Sp. Desastre. Skinner and Junius agree in substance: Dis-astrum, i. e. sidus,—misfortune, calamity, a malo veluti sidere, as if from an ill star. To disaster is applied, generally—

To cause or produce any ill luck, misadventure, misfortune, calamity or distress; any misery or wretchedness.

Place me where Fortune doth her darlings crown,
A wonder or a spark in Envy's eye,
Or you, outrageous Fates, upon me frown,
Till pity wailing disaster'd me.

Drummond, pt. i. Son. 61.

To be call'd into a huge sphere, and not to be seene to moue in't, are the holes where the eyes should bee which pittifully disaster the cheekes.

Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act ii. sc. 7.

The dire disaster of that captiv'd king,
So surely seiz'd on by the adverse part,
(To his few friends sad matter menacing)
Struck with pale terrour every willing heart.

Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. iv.

Nor let the envy of envenom'd tongues,
Which still is grounded on poor ladies' wrongs,
Thy noble breast disasterly possess
By any doubt to make my love the less.

Id. Lady Geraldine to Surrey.

Which prediction of the holy archbishop was seconded by prodigies, and by the disasterous calamities which fell on him and on his house, and the whole confirmed for truth.

Baker. Edw. I. an. 975.

For, no sooner came to his eares the newes of Probus his election, but he found that heady and precipitate attempts were pleasing in their beginnings, but full of difficulties in their proceedings and most disastrous in their successe.

Speed. The Romans, b. vi. c. 41.

Whilst things were thus disastrously decreed,
Seditious libels every day were spread,
(By such as lik'd not of the violent deed)
That he by force should be delivered.

Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. v.

And thus the snows arise; and foul, and fierce,
All winter drives along the darken'd air;
In his own loose-revolving fields, the swain
Disaster'd stands. Thomson. Winter.

He stopp'd, and weeping said, O friend! ev'n here
The monuments of Trojan woes appear!
Our known disasters fill even foreign lands:
See there, where old unhappy Priam stands.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. i.

Her maids not mind the loom, nor household care,
Nor wage in needlework a Scythian war.
But cull in canisters disast'rous flow'rs,
And plants from haunted heaths, and fairy bow'rs.

Garth. Ovid. Metam. b. xiv.

Resolv'd to leave the squire for bail
And mainprize for him to the gaol,
To answer, with his vessell, all
That might disasterously befall.—Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1.

This was a real disaster to us, as by retarding us half a day, it broke the chain of our stages and laid us under the disagreeable necessity of stopping each ensuing night at a very bad inn, the good ones being placed at our dining distances.—Swinburne. Spain, Let. 27.

And here, my argument leads me to shew, that in the pursuit of spiritual acquirements, all things are as promising and easy, as they are discouraging and difficult in the disastrous projects of worldly ambition.

Warburton. Works, vol. x. Ser. 23.

DIS-AVA'UNCE. See DISADVANCE.

DIS-AVO'UCH. To disavow, (qv.)

And thereupon they flatly disavouch
To yield him more obedience and support.

Daniel. Of Civil Wars, b. iv.

DIS-AVO'W, v. }
DISAVO'WAL. }
DISAVO'WANCE. }
DISAVO'WMENT. } To annul a vow, to renounce or abjure, refuse to abide by, that which has been vow-ed, avow-ed, avouched or promised; and then, generally, to disacknowledge, to disallow, to disown, to disclaim.

——— The coronede pope
Maye disavowe that thei dude —Piers Ploughman, p. 54.

But being aged now and weary too
Of warres delight, and world's contentious toyle
The name of knighthood he did disavow.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. x.

Who shall doubt, Donne, whēr I a poet bee,
When I dare send my epigrammes to thee?
That so alone canst judge, so alone do'st make:
And, in thy censures, evenly, do'st take
As free simplicitie, to dis-avow,
As thou hast best authoritie, t' allow.

B. Jonson, Epig. 96.

For as touching the Tridentine History, his holiness (says the Cardinal) will not press you to any disavowment thereof.

Wotton. A Letter to the Regius Professor, &c.

Ambitious Turnus in the press appears,
And, aggravating crimes, augments their fears:
Proclaims his private injuries aloud,
A solemn promise made, and disavow'd.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. vii.

No, the very corner-stone of the English Reformation was laid in an utter denial and disavowance of this point, [the Pope's supremacy] for which our kings have lain under the papal curse, and the kingdoms been expos'd to the ambition and rage of foreigners.—South, vol. vi. Ser. 1.

On the contrary, from his reprinting so often, in essays that bore his [Hume's] name, most of the principles and reasonings contained in it [Tr. of Human Nature], and never, so far as I had heard, disowning any part of it, I could not but think that he set a very high value upon it.

Beattie. On Truth, Pref.

The assembly in accepting, proclaiming, and publishing this forged alliance, has been guilty of a plain aggression, which would justify our court in demanding a direct disavowal if our policy should not lead us to wink at it.

Burke. Thoughts on French Affairs.

DIS-BAND. } "Fr. Disbander,— DISBA'NDING, n. } To loosen, unbind, unbend; also, to cease, to disband, scatter, disperse," (Cotgrave.)

What savage bull disbanded from his stall,
Of wrath a signe more inhumane could make?

Sterling. Aurora, s. 4.

The immediate disbanding of all armies and garrisons, saving the old Cinque Ports — and so those three grand plagues of the people will cease, viz. free quarters, taxations, and excise.—State Trials. Col. J. Lilburne, an. 1649.

Kings, who disband such needless aids as these,
Are safe—as long as e'er their subjects please.

Dryden. Prologue to the Loyal Brother.

The policy of such barbarous victors has ever been to lay low every thing which had lifted its head above the level, or which could serve to combine or rally, in their distresses, the disbanded people, under the standard of old opinion.

Burke. On the French Revolution.

DIS-BARK, v. "Fr. Desbarquer,—
To disembark, put aland, set ashore," (Cotgrave.)

When he [Scipio] was arrived at Alexandria, and disbarked, as he came first to land, he went hooded, as it were, with his robe cast over his head.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 388.

Whilst these things thus passed in Italie, Cn. Scipio who was sent into Spaine with a fleete and armie for sea and land; having set sail from the mouth of Rhodanus, and compassed the mountaines Pyrenei, arrived at a place called Emporiæ: where he disbarked and landed his forces.

Id. Livius, p. 427.

The ship we moor on these obscure abodes;
Disbark the sheep, an off'ring to the Gods:
And, hell-ward bending o'er the beach desery
The dolesome passage to th' infernal sky.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xi

DIS-BARK, v. To strip off the bark. To bark is sometimes so used.

Lieutenant Geo. Drummond confirmed what others had told me, of the great noise, like the discharge of muskets, that they hear in the wooden houses, whose walls are made of fir-trees (unsquared, and only disbarked) upon very intense frosts.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 730.

DIS-BECO'ME, v. Used by Massinger as mis-become, (qv.)

—— Yet be careful
That your compassion of my age, nor his,
Move you to any thing that may disbecome
The place on which you sit.
Massinger. The Fatal Dowry, Act v. sc. 2.

DIS-BELI'EVE, v. } Belief, and believe or DISBELI'EVER, } be-life, and be-live, (for DISBELI'EF. } so variously are they written,) compounded of be, or bi, or by, and live; is that by which men do or should live; a rule of life, a rule to guide their moral and religious conduct in life. To disbelieve, is—

To disacknowledge, disallow, disown, disclaim any thing to be a rule of life; and generally, to discredit, to deny to be, to deny to be right or true; to refuse to credit.

There have been doubtless in all ages such as have disbelieved the existence of any thing, but what was sensible.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 18.

May I not boldly reply to all the incredulous and disbelievers of the facility of this medium exhibited; say not in thy heart, who shall thus ascend into heaven? for the word is nigh thee in thy mouth, and in thy heart.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 8. s. 2.

Those who will pretend such kind of grounds for their disbelief of any thing, will never be able to persuade others that the true cause why they do not give their assent, is because they have no reason for it, but because they have no mind to it.—Bp. Wilkins. Of Nat. Religion, b. i. c. 3.

We know, it often falls out that when a man has once got the character of a lyar, even truth itself is suspected, if not absolutely disbelieved, when it comes from the mouth of such an one.—South, vol. iii. Ser. 11.

They may without irrationality use arguments to confirm in their doctrine men already acquiescing in the principles of it, and persuaded of their integrity, sufficiency, and authority, that it would be improper to urge against a refractory disbeliever, that is convinced of none of these.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 274.

It is not more evident in the New Testament that Christ died for sinners, than that Christians should not kill one another for the misbelief of any article of revealed religion; much less for the disbelief of such articles as are invented by men, and imposed as doctrines of Christ.
Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 19.

Is any credit due to the father of lies? Can there be a better reason for disbelieving any thing, than his affirming it to be true.
Farmer. Demoniacs of the New Test. c. 2. s. 1. Note.

The pretended Christian, who leads a bad life, is much more an infidel—a downright disbeliever—than he who, though in words he deny the Gospel, leads a moral life.
Gilpin, vol. iii. Ser. 1.

As to the additional circumstance of their believing, mentioned in the translation, it is clearly implied in the original; a dread of God's justice being inconsistent with a disbelief of his existence.
Farmer. Demoniacs of the New Test. c. 1. s. 10.

DIS-BENCH, v. To remove from a bench or seat.

Coriol. Your honor's pardon:
I had rather have my wounds to heale againe,
Then beare say how I got them.
Brutus. Sir, I hope my words dis-bench'd you not?
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act ii. sc. 2.

DIS-BEND, v. In the solitary instance below, it appears to mean, misbend, bend amiss.

As liberty a courage doth impart,
So bondage doth disbend, else breake the heart.
Stirling. Julius Cæsar, Chorus 3.

DIS-BIND, v. To free from bands or bondage.

Nay, how dare we disbind or loose ourselves from the tye of that way of agnizing and honouring God, which the Christian church from her first beginninge durst not doe!
Mede. On Texts of Scripture, b. i. Dis. 2.

DIS-BLAME, v. To free from blame.

Wherfore I nil haue neither thanke ne blame
Of al this worke, but pray you mekely
Disblameth me if any word be lame.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. ii.

DIS-BO'DY, v. To free from body. See DIS-EMBODY.

Wherefore they conceive, that the disbodyed soules shall return from their unactive and silent recesse, and be joined again to bodies of purified and duly prepared ayre
Glanvill. Pre-existence of Souls, c. 14.

DIS-BORD, v. Opposed to—to board or to go on board; as debark is to embark.

And in the arm'd ship, with a wel-wreath'd cord
They streightly bound me, and did all disbord
To shore to supper, in contentious rout.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xiv.

DIS-BO'WEL, v. To deprive of, to empty out the bowels; the entrails; the interior contents; to eviscerate.

Surrey writes de-; and see DIS-EMBOWEL.

Faire Dido held in her right hand a cup,
Which twixt the hornes of a white cow she shed
In presence of the Gods, passing before
The aulters fatte, which she renewed oft
With giftes that day, and beasts debowled
Gazing for counsell on the entraies warme.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneid, b. iv.

He that hath seene a great onke dry and dead,
Yet clad with reliques of some trophies old,
Lifting to heauen her aged hoarie head,
Whose foote on ground hath left but feeble hold;
But halfe disbowel'd lies aboue the ground.
Spenser. The Ruines of Rome, s. 28.

Others say the poyson was giuen him in a dish of pears. But the physician that disbowelled his body found no sign of poyson in it, and therefore not likely to be true.
Baker. K. John, an. 1216.

Riches the hardy soldiers shall despise,
Nor the disbowel'd earth explore,
In search of the forbidden ore.
Addison. Horace, b. iii. Ode 3.

Otherwise the physicians of princes and great men, after having considered all the inward parts of their disbowelled patients could not so often doubt and dispute, as they do, whether or no poison were accessary to their death.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 184.

DIS-BRANCH, v. To lop off, to strip, deprive or divest of the branches; i. e. that which bends, turns, reaches, extends, (sc.) from the trunk; from the main stem, (met.)

Also, where the nature of the ground will bear it, the husbandman shall not doe amisse to disbraunch and lop his tree-groves, to prune his vineyards.
Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 26.

So as eft soones all that dukedome, one of the goodliest gemmes in the English diademe, and disbranched from France since the year eight hundred eighty fiue, was againe rent away.—Speed. K. John, b. ix. c. 8. s. 28.

That nature, which contemns its origin
Cannot be bordered certain in itself;
She that herself will sliver and disbranch
From her material sap, perforce must wither,
And come to deadly use.—Shakespeare. Lear, Act iv. sc. 2.

DIS-BU'RDEN, or } To free from a burthen,
DISBU'RTHEN, v. } that is, a weight or load, borne; to unload, to exonerate, to discharge.

After this, the kynge hauyng peace as well with foreyne princes, for the terme of iii. yeres, as disburdened and purified of all domesticall sedition, beganne to be diseased with a certayne infirmitie and wekenes of body.
Hall. Henry VII. an. 21.

One of the ten went home to his house the same time, who upon a fraudulent and cautelous returne made unto his enemies campe, as is aforesaid, supposed he had acquit himselfe and disburdened his conscience of his oath.
Holland. Livie, p. 471.

As it is, I am at an end of my designed method, and am glad that it hath been contrived into so small a compass, being now at leisure to retire to my meditations, which will, I hope, be more calm, being thus disburthened.
Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 152.

No sooner does the foul tongue give us the alarm, but strait all the powers of the mind are awakened, the concerns of reputation begin to rise, thoughts of defiance to take up arms, and the whole soul boils within itself, grows big with the injury, and would fain discharge and disburden itself in a full revenge.—South, vol. viii. Ser. 7.

When this speculatist finds himself prompted to another performance, let him consider whether he is about to disburthen his mind, or employ his fingers; and if I might venture to offer him a subject, I should wish that he would solve this question, Why he that has nothing to write should desire to be a writer?—Johnson. Review of a Free Enquiry.

DIS-BU'RGEON. See another example in v. DEFOIL.

To strip off, to divest of, the bourgeons, i.e. buds or young shoots.

When the vine beginneth to put out leaves and looke green fall to disburgeoning.—Holland. Plinie, b. xvii. c. 22.

DIS-BURSE, v. } See also DEBURSE.
DISBU'RSING, n. } To take out of the burse
DISBU'RSEMENT. } or purse; to pay away; to expend, to defray expenses, costs or charges.

Therefore after his long iourney ended and dooen, the master returned home againe, & required an accoumpt of his seruauntes, of that he had deliuered thē, and what they had disbursed and layed out of the same.—Udal. Matt. c. 25.

Wherefore he demanded to haue the disbursing of the mony himselfe, because it wold be very perniticus & hurtful, to put the doing therof into many mens hāds.
Goldynge. Iustine, fol. 35.

The ransom itselfe, which amounted to a good round summe, made them to pause: because they were unwilling both to emptie the publike treasurie; (havinge alreadie disbursed great summes, in buying up bond-slaves and arming them for the warres,) and also that Anniball (who as the voyce went, was at a very great under [Anjusce rei egentem] for money) should be inriched thereby.
Holland Livie, p. 471.

Hereupon Nicias adviseth to depart towards the Selinuntines, and to force them, or persuade them to an agreement with the Egestans; as likewise to see what disbursements the Egestans could make.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. v. c. 1. s. 1.

But if the bargain tie you to pecuniary disbursements, be sure distressed Christians be (at least) sharers in them.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 24.

I am at present engaged in examining the finances of the Prussians, their disbursements and credits, and the farther I proceed in this affair, the more I am convinced of the necessity of my enquiry.
Melmoth. Pliny, b. x. Let. 16. [28.]

DIS-CALCEATION. Lat. Discalceatus, without shoes; from dis, and calceare, to put on shoes.

Cockeram has "Discalceate,—to put off one's shoes."

For I suppose there is an allusion in particular to that right of discalceation used by the Jews and other nations of the Orient at their coming into sacred places; namely, that whereof the Lord spake to Moses, Exod. iii. 5, and again to Joshua, Jos. v. 15. Exue calceamenta tua de pedibus tuis; locus enim in quo stas terra sancta est. put thy shoes from off thy feet; for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground.—Mede. Works, b. ii. Of Churches, § 3.

The custom of discalceation or putting off their shoes at meals, is conceived to confirm the same.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 6.

DIS-CAMP, v. See to DECAMP.

Cotgrave renders the Fr. Descamper; "to discamp, to raise or remove a camp; to depart from the camp."

To remove, or cause to remove or go from, the camp.

No enemie put he ever to flight, but he discamped him and draue him out of the field, (quin castris exuerat.)
Holland. Suetonius, p. 242.

DIS-CA'NDY, v. Discandying, in the first quotation from Shakespeare, is Theobald's reading; adopted by the other commentators.

To reduce from a candied state; to dissolve.

Till by degrees the memory of my wombe,
Together with my braue Egyptians all,
By the discandering of this pelleted storm,
Lye graueless, till the flies and gnats of Nyle
Haue buried them for prey.
Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act iii. sc. 11.

—— The hearts
That spanneled me at heeles, to whom I gaue
Their wishes, do dis-candie, melt their sweets
On blossoming Cæsar. Id. Ib. Act iv. sc. 10.

DIS-CARD, v. } Sp. Descartar; Fr. Escar-
DISCA'RDING, n. } ter; It. Scartare. Chartas abjicere, to throw away cards. To throw cards out of the hand, (as usual at various games.) In the Dumb Knight, written Decard. Generally—

To throw or cast or send away, to dismiss; to turn away.

Queen. What's your game now?
Phy. Four kings, as I imagine.
Queen. Nay, I have two, yet one doth me little good.
Phy. Indeed, mine are two queens, and one. I'll throw away —Can you decard, madam?
Queen. Hardly, but I must do hurt.
Machin. The Dumb Knight, Act iv.

But with her shield so well her selfe she warded
From the dread danger of his weapon keene,
That all that while her life she safely guarded:
But he that helpe from her against her will discarded.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 8.

He that was thus rejected, they say he was discarded: for the basin wherein the little balls were carried, was called Caddos.—North. Plutarch, p. 39.

They, if they could prevail for the discarding of tythes, would by the same argument (clamour and slander) presently and importunately press for deposition of the ministry —Spelman. On Tythes, p. 157.

These will no taxes give, and those no pence;
Critics would starve the poet, whigs the prince.
The critic all our troops of friends discards;
Just as the whig would fain pull down the guards.
Dryden. Prol. To the Loyal Brother.

Yes, welcome to a man in pow'r;
And so I was for half an hour.
But he grew weary of his guest,
And soon discarded me his breast.
Cotton. Content, Vision 4.

DIS-CA'RNATE, adj. Stripped, deprived or divested of flesh.

'Tis better to own a judgment though with but a curta supellex of coherent notions, than a memory, like a sepulchre, furnished with a load of broken and discarnate bones.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 15.

DIS-CASE, v. To case is used by Shakespeare, as dis or un-case, (see CASE,) to strip off the case; (sc.) that which takes, receives, holds or contains; to divest, strip off the covering.

—— Ariell,
Fetch me the hat, and rapier in my cell,
I will discase me, and myselfe present
As I was sometime Milaine.
Shakespeare. Tempest, Act v. sc. 1.

Therefore dis case thee instantly (thou must thinke there's a necessitie in't) and change garments with this gentleman.
Id. Winter's Tale, Act iv. sc. 3.

DIS-CEPTA'TION. Sp. Disceptacion; Fr. Disceptation; Lat. Disceptatio, from Disceptare; dis, and captare, from capere, to take. Quasi in diversas partes captare, (Gesner.) As the Fr.—
"Disputation, contention, arguing, debating, reasoning about a matter," (Cotgrave.)

And vpon occasion rysing in cõmunicacion, had agayne repeted with some of them verye freshe learned men, good part of our former dysceptacion and reasonyng, had betweno vs before his departynge.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 203.

For knowledge drawn freshly, and, as it were in our view, out of particulars, knowes the way best to particulars againe; and it hath much greater life for practice, when the discourse of disceptation attends upon the example, then when the example attends upon the disceptation; for here not only order but substance is respected.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. viii. c. 2.

If they say, the proposition is axiomatical, or evidently credible of itself without any proof, 'tis a precarious and groundless assertion: such as ought not to be admitted in any science, or any disceptation.—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 12.

The good way they took was by Crumwell and Cranmer's direction; who foresaw that in these conferences between men of such differing judgments there would happen nothing but verbose janglings and endless deceptations, and little would be concluded.—Strype. Mem. Hen. VIII. an. 1540.

DI-SCE'PTER, v. To strip, to deprive, divest of his sceptre.

A hundred kings, whose temples were impall'd
In golden diadems, set here and there
With diamonds, and gemmed every where,
And of their golden virges none disceptred were.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph on Earth.

DISCE'RN, v. } Fr. Discerner; It. Discernere; Sp. Discernir; Lat. Discernere; (dis, and cernere.) Kuster agrees with Vossius that Lat. Cern-ere, Gr. Κριν-ειν, properly signifies to separate, to disjoin; he considers it then to have been applied to denote:—to see any thing clearly and distinctly; to discern (separate) one thing from another by sight; and then, further, to have been applied to the mind; i. e. to distinguish accurately the perceptions, the conceptions of the mind. Cernere, he observes, plus est quam videre. And see DECERN, and DISCREET.

DISCE'RNER.
DISCE'RNIBLE.
DISCE'RNIBLY.
DISCE'RNING, n.
DISCE'RNINGLY.
DISCE'RNMENT.

To see or perceive clearly and distinctly; to distinguish or make or mark the difference; to distinguish or discriminate accurately; to look or observe keenly, shrewdly; to judge.

In heauen and hell, in earth and salt see
Is felt thy might, if that I well discerne.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. iii.

He brake the barres, and through the timber pearst
So large a hole whereby they might discerne,
The house, the court, the secret chambers eke
Of Priamus, and auncient kings of Troy,
And armed foes in thentrie of the gate.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneid, b. ii.

For though our eyes can nought but colours see,
Yet colours give them not their pow'r of sight,
So, though these fruits of sense her objects be,
Yet she discerns them by her proper light
Davies. The Immortality of the Soul, s. 1.

The firepikes divided halfe to the one, and half to the other company, served no lesse for fright to the enemy than light of our men, who by this meanes might discerne every place very well, as if it were neare day.
Sir Francis Drake Revived, p. 11.

And this redressed he with small travaile and little adoe for that himself deeding quarrels and controversies (especially when the greatnesse either of causes or persons so required) was a constant and irremoveable discerner of right and wrong.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 104.

12 For the word of God is quick and powerfull, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piereing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joynts and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart.—Bible, Hebrews, c. 4.

When able and prudent men come to act their own parts, they are then for the most part not of the clearest sight, and do commonly commit such errors, as are both discernable and avoidable, even by men of mean abilities.
Cabbala. Sir R. Phillips to Buckingham, Anj 1621.

'Tis superfluous to pursue this any further, which so discernably falls under the inconveniences that have been showed to belong to assurance.
Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 482.

Do's Lear walke thus? speak thus? Where are his eies?
Either his notion weakens, his discernings
Are lethargied. Shakespeare. K. Lear, Act i. sc. 4.

I confess it is not practicable, to frame rules for the discernment between due praises and flatteries, in all occurrences in the world's commerces.
Montague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 10. s. 4.

Whereas indeed the rarities of nature are in these recesses, and its most excellent operations cryptick to common discernment.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 18.

When will your towers the height of Carthage know?
Or when your eyes discern such crowds below.
Dryden. Ovid. Ep. Dido to Æneas.

But besides these dangers which are more visible and apparent, these is another which is less discernible, because it hath the face of piety; and that is faction in religion: By which I mean an unpeaceable and uncharitable zeal about things wherein religion either doth not at all, or but very little consist.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 34.

From whence it being clear, that the spirit of God not showing itself to the soul immediately by itself and its own substance, as light doth to the eye, but by the mediation of its operations and effects upon the soul, it follows, that it is not discernable by itself, as light is, but by its operations.
South, vol. v. Ser. 7

The eye could perceive that the ascent upon the immersion in the dissolved nitre was discernibly quicker than the descent.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 597.

Poets, to give a loose to a warm fancy, are generally too apt not only to expatiate in their similes, but introduce them too frequently. These two errors Ovid has most discerningly avoided.—Preface to Garth's Ovid.

The Jews could judge well enough about other things, and argue reasonably about the tokens of the sky and the weather, and make proper observations in the course of the natural world; but had no discernment at all in matters of religion.—Clarke, vol. i. Ser. 28.

Experience tells us that our unassisted sight, though sufficiently acute for the ordinary purposes of life, is not acute enough to discern the minute texture of visible objects.
Beattie. On Truth, pt. ii. c. 1. s. 2.

If the ambiguity be discernible, the argument can have no force; if there be no suspicion of ambiguity, the dispute may be continued from generation to generation, without working any change in the sentiments of either party.
Id. Ib. pt. ii. c. 2. s. 3.

Syrena is for ever in extremes,
And with a vengeance she commands or blames.
Conscious of her discernment, which is good,
She strains too much to make it understood.
Young. Love of Fame, Sat. 6.

DISCE'RP.
DISCE'RPIBLE.
DISCERPIBI'LITY.
DISCE'RPTION.

Lat. Discerpere; dis, and carpere, to pluck. To pluck asunder; to pull or pluck or tear in pieces; to sever, to dissever.

Isis is a Greek word, which signifies knowledge: and Typhon is the enemy to this Goddess; who being puffed up by ignorance and errour, doth distract and discerp the holy doctrine (of the simple Deity) which Isis collects together again, and makes up into one, and thus delivers it to those, who are initiated into her sacred mysteries, in order to Deification.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 355.

According to what is here presented, what is most dense, and least porous, will be most coherent, and least discerptible.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 5.

In which words, Plutarch intimates, that the Egyptian fable, of Osiris being mangled and cut in pieces by Typhon, did allegorically signifie the discerption and distraction of the simple Deity, by reason of the weakness and ignorance of vulgar minds (not able to comprehend it altogether at once) into several names and partial notions, which yet true knowledge and understanding, that is, Isis, makes up whole again and unites into one.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 355

Nor can we have any idea of matter, which does not imply a natural discerptibility and susceptivity of various shapes and modifications.—Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 5.

Hereupon the author seeks another subterfuge, by departing from the received sense of words; maintaining that space has no parts, because its parts are not separable and cannot be removed from any other by discerption
Clarke & Leibnitz. Leibnitz's Fifth Paper.

In this consequence of its substantiality, that it was part of God, discerped from him, and would be resolved again into him, they all, we say, agreed.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iii. s. 4.

But when the ancients are said to hold the pre- and post-existence of the soul, and therefore to attribute a proper eternity to it, we must not suppose that they understood it to be eternal in its distinct and peculiar existence, but that it was discerped from the substance of God in time, and would, in time, be rejoined, and resolved into it again.
Id. Ib.

DIS-CE'SSION. Lat. Disced-ere, discessum, to go away from.
Going away from, departing, retiring.

There might seem to be some kinde of mannerly order in this guilty departure, not all at once; least they should seeme violently chased away by this charge of Christ; now their slinking away (one by one) may seem to carry a shew of deliberate and voluntary discession.
Bp. Hall. Cont. The Woman taken in Adulterie.

DIS-CHARGE, v. } Fr. Descharger. Dis, and charge, (qv.) from the semi-barbarous Carciare, (from carrus) pro onerare, ac proprie carrum onerare, to load a car; and discharge, Low Lat. Discargare, e carro ponere, to put out, throw out, of a car; carrum exonerare, to unload a car, (Vossius, de Vit. Ser. lib. iv. c. 3. 6.) Generally,—
DISCHA'RGE, n.
DISCHA'RGER.
DISCHA'RGING, n.

To unload; to take out, remove, displace, a load, weight or burthen, a cargo; to disburden; to free or release or dismiss from any thing burthensome, oppressive, troublesome or inconvenient; any thing obligatory, any obligation or duty; to perform, (sc.) a duty or office; to free, release or dismiss, generally.

Hit were charite to deschargen hem, for holy churches sake.
Piers Ploughman, p. 298.

Than haue I priuileges large
That may of much thing discharge.—Chaucer. R. of the R.

But for thei wolde him selfe discharge
Of pouertee, and become grete.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

There might you heare the cannons rore,
Eche pece discharged a louer's loke,
Which had the power to rent, and tore
In any place whersa they toke.
Uncertaine Auctors. Thassault of Cupide.

After the seruaunt aforesaide hath so discharged his cuppes to the fower quarters of the world, he returneth into the house.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 96.

And that absolucion was blasen and blowen, preached and taught, throughout all the world, & all dores and postes must bee decked with papers and bulles for your discharge
Barnes. Workes, p. 198.

Consideringe that deth is the discharger of al griefes and myseries, and to them that dye well, the fyrst entrie in to lyfe everlastynge —Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, c. 12.

And deeming better, if he could discharge,
The day with safety, and some peace conclude
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

Now gan he in his grieued minde deuise
How from the dungeon he might her enlarge;
Some while he thought by faire and humble wise
To Proteus selfe to sue for her discharge.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 12.

The councll of state taking notice of the tumultuous and barbarous actings at the new exchange in the Strand, in the county of Middlesex, upon the 21 and 22 of November last past, the same time being accompanied with the drawing of swords, discharging of pistols, and such other high misdemeanors, &c
State Trials. Case of Don Pantaleon Sa, an. 1654.

Love, as it is the greatest treasure of our soules, so is it the only security stands bound to God for all our debts, all the other faculties of man seeme to be receivers only, and this tho discharger of all their accounts.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 4 s. 2.

To whom Saturnia thus; thy tears are late;
Haste snatch him, if he can be snatch'd from fate
New tumults kindle, violate the truce,
Who knows what changeful fortune may produce?
'Tis not a crime t'attempt what I decree,
Or if it were, discharge the crime on me.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. xii.

As there are strange ferments in the blood which in many bodies occasion an extraordinary discharge: so in reason too, there are heterogeneous particles, which must be thrown off by fermentation.
Shaftesbury. A Letter concerning Enthusiasm, s. 2.

Spenser, in one of his Pastorals, represents the God of Love as flying like a bird, from bough to bough. A shepherd, who hears a rustling among the bushes, supposes it to be some game, and accordingly discharges his bow.
Fitzosborne, Let. 57.

DIS-CHURCH. To free from, divest or deprive of a church.

This can be no ground to dischurch that differing company of Christians, neither are they other from themselves upon this diversity of opinion.—Bp. Hall. Remains, p. 402.

DISCI'DE. } Lat. Discind-ere, (dis, and DISCI'ND. } scindere, to cut.)
DISCI'SSION. } To cut or tear to pieces.
Discition, in Prynne, is so written for Decision.

But head and tongue and heart be quite discided.
More. On the Soul, pt. i. p. 23.

Her lying tongue was in two parts divided,
And both the parts did speake and both contended;
And as her tongue so was her hart discided,
That never thought one thing, but doubly still was guided.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. i.

They are those golden links that do enchain
Whole nations, though discinded by the main.
Howell. Letters. To the knowing Reader.

So gentle Venus to Mercurius dares
Descend, and finds an easy intromission,
Casts ope that azure curtain by a swift discission.
More. On the Soul, pt. ii. p. 92.

Men in ordinary differences, referre the censure and determination of their own causes to indifferent arbitrators who are no wayes engaged in their suits, declining their owne particular discitions to avoid all partiality.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. ii. Act iv. s. 2.

DISCI'PLE, s. } Fr. Disciple; It. Discepolo; Sp. Discipulo, Fr. Discipliner; It. Disciplinare; Sp. Disciplinar; Lat. Discipulus; disciplina, from discere. Vossius thinks from the Gr. Διδασκ-ομαι. Lennep considers the Lat. Dic-ere, to be no other than the Gr. Δικ-ειν, signifying pellere, vel impellere, expellere, ejicere, ore verbâ: to cast out, throw out, (sc.) words from the mouth. Of similar origin, it may be observed, is the English word, to shout, i. e. shoot, (sc.) words from the mouth. The Lat. Disc-ere, he supposes to have originated from Δικσ-ειν (by metath. δισκ-ειν,) the first future of δικ-ειν, to cast or throw. Whence also δισκος, discus. Upon this etymology, Scheidius interprets disc-ere, (lit.) to mean, expellere sæpius, DISCI'PLE, v.
DISCI'PLESS.
DISCI'PLESHIP.
DI'SCIPLINE, s.
DI'SCIPLINE, v.
DI'SCIPLINABLE.
DI'SCIPLINABLENESS.
DI'SCIPLINANT.
DI'SCIPLINARY.
DISCIPLINA'RIAN, adj.
DISCIPLINA'RIAN, s.
DI'SCIPLINER.
DI'SCIPLINING, s.

identidem dicere; to throw out the same thing frequently; i. e. to say the same thing, (sc.) till it is teached, or taken; and thus to teach, i. e. to take knowledge, to learn. And a—

Disciple,—one who teaches or learns, one who receives learning or knowledge; and—

Discipline,—to teach, to treat as a disciple, to train up to learning or knowledge; to train up in the means of learning; in good order, method, regularity, diligence; in good conduct; in all good habits;—to order, to regulate, exercise, direct, correct, chastise.

The decuples, that he hyder sende Cristendom to brynge,
Bvleuede in a wildernesse, after her prechynge,
That me cleputh now Glastynbury, that desert was tho.
R. Gloucester, p. 232.

In this thing alle men schulen knowe that ye ben myn discipls, if ye han loue togidere.—Wiclif. John, c. 13.

By this shal al men know that ye are my disciples, yf ye shall haue loue one to another.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

If ony virtu, if ony preisyng of discipline, thenke ghe these thingis.—Wiclif. Philipenses, c. 4.

In this time aprone the sentence of my disciple Euripidis, that said, that he that had no childré is weleful by infortune.
Chaucer. Boecius, b. iii.

Then shalt thou understonde, that bodily paine stont in discipline, or teching, by word, or by writing, or by ensample.
Id. The Persones Tale.

As it fareth by children in schoole, that for learning arne beaten when their lesson they forveten, commonly after a good disciplining with a yerde, they kepe right well doctrine of their schole.—Id. The Testament of Loue.

And grete well Chaucer, when ye mete
As my disciple and my poete.—Gower. Con. A. b. viii

This sterne kyng, this cruell lorde
Toke euery date one of the nyne,
And put hym in to the discipline
Of Minotaire to be deuoured.—Id. Ib. b. v.

Joanna ye wife of Chusa, (who was Herode's steward,) of a ladie of ye court became a discip'esse vnto Christ.
Vdal. Luke, c. 8

Xenophon beinge bothe a philosopher and an excellent capitayne, so inuented and ordered his worke, named Pædia Ciri whiche maye be interpreted the Chyldehode or disciplyne of Cyrus.—Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. i. c. 11.

By which, fraile youth is oft to folly led.
Through false allurement of that pleasing baite,
That better were in vertues discipled,
Then with vaine poems weeds to haue their fancies fed.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. i.

I have already made it evident that that commission for preaching to, or discipling all nations (as for the baptizing them, and the particularity of the form to be used in baptism, &c.) was not the institution of baptism, nor any intimation on either side, whether infants should be baptized or not
Hammond. Works, vol. ii. pt. iv. p. 112.

Nor after resurrection shall he stay
Longer on earth then certain times to appear
To his disciples, men who in his life
Still follow'd him; to them shall leave in charge
To teach all nations what of him they learn'd,
And his salvation.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xii.

She was afterwards recommended to a discipleesse of the said lady, named Athen, and made gouerneese of a monastery of the ladies.—Speed. Egbert, b. vii. c. 31. s. 20.

Thither the great magician Merlin came,
As was his vse, oft times to visit mee.
For he had charge my discipline to frame
And tutor's nouriture to ouersee.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 9.

And therefore the Gospel is nothing else but an universal publication of repentance and pardon of sins in the name of Christ, that is procured for all them that are his disciples; and to this we are baptized, that is, adopted into the religion, into that discipleship under which God requires holiness, but not perfect measures; sincerity without hypocrisie, but not impeccability or perfect innocence.
Bp. Taylor. On Repentance, c. 2. s. 2.

And indeed, if there were no other end but those that follow, this seeming sharp providence of Almighty God would be highly justified. Namely, first, to keep men humble and disciplinable.—Hale. Cont. vol. i. Of Afflictions.

We find in animals, especially some of them, as foxes, dogs, apes, horses, elephants, not only perception, phantasie, and memory, (common to most if not all animals,) but something of sagacity, providence, disciplinableness, &c.
Id. Origination of Mankind, p. 16.

What eagerness in the prosecution of disciplinarian uncertainties, when the love of God and our neighbour, those evangelical unquestionables, want that fervent ardour?
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatising, c. 23.

He knows well the Pharisee's constitution is too austere to be caught with an ordinary bait, and therefore puts off his title of Beelzebub prince of flies, at seeing that they are not now for his game; but trowls and baits him with a nobler prey, and comes in the person of a Cato, or Aristarchus, a severe disciplinarian, a grave censor, or as his most botanical name imports, διαβολος, an accuser, and then the Pharisee bites presently.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 615.

These are the studies wherein our noble and our gentle youth ought to bestow their time in a disciplinary way from twelve to twenty one; unless they rely more upon their ancestors dead, than upon themselves living.—Milton. Education.

For had an angel been his discipliner, unless it were for dwelling too much upon Ciceronianisms, and had chastized the reading not the vanity, it had been plainly partial: first to correct him, &c.
Milton. On the Liberty of unlicenc'd Printing.

We have here [John, xv. 15.] an account of Christ's friendship to his disciples; that is, we have the best of things represented in the greatest of examples.
South, vol. ii. Ser. 2.

And the Highlanders flocking to him [the Marquis of Montrose] from all quarters, though ill armed and worse disciplin'd, made him undervalue any enemy who, he thought, was yet to encounter him.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. iii. p. 353.

Yet these, receiving grafts of other kind
Or thence transplanted, change their savage mind
Their wildness loose, and quitting nature's part,
Obey the rules and discipline of art.
Dryden. Virgil, Georg. 2.

It further awakened the archbishop, and the rest of the queen's ecclesiastical commissioners, when it was told them, that many in the University of Cambridge were carried away with the disciplinarian principles.
Strype. Life of Abp. Whitgift, an. 1590.

It seems to have been the disciplinarians that were chiefly his adversaries, who gave him much trouble
Id. Life of Abp. Parker, an. 1574.

His thoughts can never appear very correct; unless they have been used to sound correction by themselves, and been well formed and disciplin'd before they are brought into the field.—Shaftesbury. Advice to an Author, pt. i. s. 2.

O thou from whom the British lays
Bloom in these unpoetic days,
Whose early genius glow'd to follow
The arts thro' nature's ancient ways,
Twofold disciple of Apollo!
Cooper. The Call of Aristippus, Epis. 4.

He [the young man in the Gospel] was willing enough to be his disciple, and to be saved by him: if the terms of his discipleship and salvation should appear such as he could comply with.—Hoadly, vol. iii. Ser. 2.

Having natural good humour lurking in the heart, he could not long hold out against the power of hilarity, but after a few months began to relax the muscles of disciplinarian moroseness.—Rambler, No. 141.

"Sir," says the rigid disciplinarian, "you break the statutes, call upon me to-morrow morning, and I will punish you severely, as your offence deserves."
Knox. Liberal Education, s. 43.

DIS-CLAIM, v. } To claim (as the Fr.) is DISCLAMA'TION. } to make a claim to, or lay in DISCLA'IMER. } a claim for; to challenge,
DISCLA'IMING, s. } demand, pretend a title unto, (Cotgrave.) To disclaim—

To deny such title, so challenged or demanded; and, generally,—

To disown, to renounce.

He was now become very deaf, yet often pretended not to have heard what he did not then contradict, and thought fit afterwards to disclaim.—Clarendon. Civil War, vol. ii. p. 481

Whence then, O whence was this so vehement and peremptory disclamation of so gracious a master? What such danger had attended thy profession of his attendance.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Christ before Caiaphas.

Can there almost be a more direct disclaiming in the right? To compare great things with lesse, if the lord by matter of record claime any thing of his villaine, it is a disclaimer of the villenage.
State Trials. The great Case of Impositions, an. 1607.

Instant, you sailors, to this task attend;
Swift to the palace, all ye peers, ascend;
Let none to strangers honours due disclaim:
Be there Demodocus, the bard of fame.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. viii.

One moment he disclaims the authority of Jesus and resents his undertaking to eject him: what have I to do with thee, thou son of the most high God? The very next instant, he acknowledges his power over him, and intreats him not to exert it: I beseech thee, I adjure thee by God, that thou torment me not.
Farmer. On the Demoniacs of the New Testament, c. 2.

To tell you the truth, my dear sir, I think the honour of our nation to be somewhat concerned in the disclaimer of the proceedings of this society of the Old Jewry and the London Tavern.—Burke. On the French Revolution.

DIS-CLOKE, v. To strip off or divest of a cloak; of any covering or concealment; to uncover, to discover, to disclose.

So, sir, now goe in, discloke yourselfe and come forth Taylor, bestow thy absence upon us; and be not prodigall of this secret, but to a deare customer.
B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revells, Act ii. sc. 5.

——— Who bites his absent friend,
Or not defends him blam'd, but holds along
With men's loose laughter, and each prater's tongue;
That feins what was not, and discloaks a soul,
Beware him, noble Roman, he is foul.
Feltham, pt. i. Res. 50.

DIS-CLOSE, v. }
DISCLO'SER, n. }
DISCLO'SER. }
DISCLO'SURE. } Lat. Discludere, disclusum, to separate things, close or in contact with each other.

To uncover or discover, to reveal, to open; to make known, to tell that which has been kept concealed.

Aduertise in your mind, whether he be mete
That vnto him your heart may be disclosed.
Chaucer. A Balade. Discrecion.

For tho' she thought to begyn
Suche thyng, as semeth impossible,
And made hir selfen inuisible,
As she that with the aire inclosed
And might of no man be disclosed.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

To you my fader, that ben here
Myn hole thrifte for to here,
I dare myn herte well disclose
Touchende vsurie. Id. Ib. b. v

Whereas by the voyage of our subiects in this last yeere attempted by nauigation, towards the discouerie and disclosure of vnknown places, realmes, Islandes, and dominions by the seas not frequented, it hath pleased the Almighty God to cause, &c.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 271.

Vas. Then here I call our good genii for witnesses, whatsoever your designs are, or against whomsoever, I will not only be a special actor therein, but never disclose it till it be affected.—Ford. 'Tis Pity She's a Whore, Act ii. sc. 3.

——— There's something in his soule!
O'er which his melancholy sits on brood,
And I do doubt the hatch and the disclose
Will be some danger.—Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iii. sc. 1.

Many other observables, that ocular philosopher, and singular discloser of truth, Dr. Harvey, hath discovered.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 28.

The Lord Robert Bruce had entered into a conspiracy with Cumyn, whose disclosure thereof (as Scots do write) brought into apparent danger the Lord Bruce's life, who was then attendant in the court of England.
Speed. Edw. I. b. ix. c. 10. s. 49.

Not half so loud the bellowing deeps resound,
When stormy winds disclose the dark profound.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xiv.

An unseasonable disclosure of flashes of wit may sometimes do a man no other service, than to direct his adversaries, how they may do him a mischief.
Boyle. Occasional Reflections, s. 3.

Thus it was then, and thus it hath been ever since. Truth has had concealed and timorous friends, who keeping their sentiments to themselves, or disclosing them only to a few, complied with established errors and superstitions, which they disliked and despised.
Jortin. On the Christian Religion, Dis. 1.

This successive disclosure of proof would leave us assured, that there must have been at least some reality in a story which not one, but many, had taken in hand to commit to writing.—Paley. Evidences, pt. i. c. 8.

DIS-CLOUD. To free or clear from, to disperse clouds, to uncover.

I count it a deed royal, in the kingly David, who began to warm his joyes again, when the infant's bloud was cold: as if the breath which the child lost, had disclouded his indarkned heart.—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 22.

DIS-CLOUT. To free from, take out of a clout; (sc.) the clout or napkin in which his crowns were wrapped.

Though must he buy his vainer hope with price,
Disclout his crownes, and thank him for advice.
Bp. Hall, b. ii. Sat. 3.

DIS-COAST. Fr. Discoste. (See COAST and ACCOAST.) To accoast, Skinner says, is—latus lateri adjungere, to join side to side, from the Lat. Costa, (of unknown origin;) discoast is—latus lateri disjungere, to disjoin side from side.

To go away or far from, from the coast or side of; to depart, to separate from.

But now, estranged from all miserie,
As far as Heaven and Earth discoasted lie,
Swelter in quiet waves of immortality.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph over Death.

The Spanish naule for sixe dayes space hauing endured many sharpe fights and fierce assaults, coasting and discoasting from England to the coast of Fraunce, and from thence to England, and thence to Fraunce agayne.
Stow. Q. Elizabeth, an. 1588.

He becometh thence no guide or pastour to any Christian; there doth in such case rest no obligation to hear or obey him; but rather to decline him, to discoast from him, to reject and disclaim him.
Barrow. Of the Pope's Supremacy.

Fit it also was, that he who was to be appointed our judge, substitute of the supreme Judge invisible, should be, as God (of perfect wisedom, and so able to discern all matters of fact, to distinguish all points of right; of perfect rectitude, so as never willingly to discoast from truth and equity) so also man.
Id. vol. ii. Ser. 23.

DIS-CO'LOUR, v. }
DISCOLORA'TION. } Lat. Decolorare. To be, or cause to be without, to deprive of, colour; (see the first quotation from B. Jonson;) to change colour; to deprive of or change, the hue or appearance; to stain: also, to stain or tinge with various colours. (See the second quotation from B. Jonson.)

Yet, quod our hoste, let me talken to the;
Why art thou so discoloured of thy face?
Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,132.

And let the ground whereas her foote shall tread,
For fear the stones her tender foot should wrong,
Be strewed with fragrant flowers all along,
And diapred like the discoloured mead.
Spenser. Epithalamion.

Since Scottish blood discolour'd Floden field
Drayton. The Earl of Surrey to Lady Geraldine.

Amo. And you have still in your hat the former colours.
Mer. You lie, sir, I have none. I have pull'd them out, I meant to play dis-coloured.
B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revells, Act v. sc. 2.

Now Juno, and the Ayre shall know
The truth of what is done below,
From our discoloured bow,—Iris, what news?
Id. Masques. Chloridia.

As Rhodanus, running through the French lake, preserveth his stream by itself (discernable by the discolouration thereof) with the fishes peculiar thereunto; the same is here observed betwixt the River Dee, and the water of the lake.—Fuller. Worthies. Merionethshire.

In youth alone, unhappy mortals live;
But ah! the mighty bliss is fugitive;
Discolour'd sickness, anxious labours come,
And age and death's inexorable doom.
Dryden. Virgil, Georg. 4.

And besides these, what prodigious shoals do we find of minute animals, even sometimes discolouring the waters.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. v. c. 11.

I took out the liquor, and adding more gums, distilled it over again to such a height, as it would all burn away, which hath so resisted all manner of putrefaction and discolouration, as it is gone for London for his Majesty's view, and after, for the whole country that will.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 166.

The waters of strife, to make use of the beautiful allusion of Scripture, rush in with impetuous violence, and ruffle and discolour that stream, which, in its natural and undisturbed current, devolves its waters all smooth and limpid.
Knox, Ess. 17.

DIS-CO'MFIT, v. }
DISCO'MFIT, n. }
DISCO'MFITING, n. }
DISCO'MFITURE. } Fr. Disconfire; It. Sconfiggere; to dissipate or disperse, to break up, rout an army, (q.d.) Lat. Dis-configere, disrumpere, and dissolvere, to unfix, to loosen or dissolve.

To disperse, to rout, to put to rout or flight; to defeat, to disconcert.

Iuor & Ini were disconfite that day,
The Iris & the Wals with tham fled away.
R. Brunne, p. 2.

Sith by his darte, most cruell full of hate
The death hath take my Ladie and maistresse
And left me sole, thus discomfite and mate
Sore languishing, and in way of distresse
Chaucer. La Belle Dame sans Mercie.

The pilloure dide hir besinesse and cure,
After the bataille and discomfiture.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1010.

For as the hornes perceu the eire,
He saith withouten resistence,
So wist he well of his science
That Benedad is discomfite. Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

So that the Frēchmen, Normayns, and other were discomfited, slayne, and drowned
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 1

Christian loue, peace, vnitee, and concorde shal vniuersally in a moments returne again to the great glory of God, to the quieting of the world, to the benefit of al Christen common weales, and to the confusion & discomfrighting as wel of the Turkes as also of al other the enemies of God, and good people.—Udal. Preface unto the Kinges Maiestie

And as affermeth myn auctour, the fyght was so cruell and sharpe, yt there was slayne to y^e nomber of xl. m. men. After discomfyture Brenne was constrayned to flye & with fewe in nomber recouеryd the lande of Gallia.
Fabyan, vol. i. pt. ii. c. 29

But his sonne Malgo shall full mightily
Auenge his father's losse, with speare and shield,
And his proud foes discomfit in victorious field.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 3

Lucius Minucius their consul, with his whole army had been discomfited, had not L. Quintius Cincinnatus chosen Dictator, and taken from the plough to the highest honour in Rome, with success answerable to his expedition, dispersed his enemies, and freed his company in the space of sixteen days.—Raleigh. History of the World, b. iv. c. 7. s. 1.

——— Vncurable discomfite
Reigns in the hearts of all our present party.
Shakespeare. 2 Part Hen. VI. Act v. sc 2.

Dagon must stop, and shall e're long receive
Such a discomfit, as shall quite despoil him
Of all these boasted trophies won on me,
And with confusion blank his worshippers.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

And hee made generall the Mercean Edilhald, Cuthred's ancient foe; wherein by his valient prowesse, with the flight and discomfiture of the enemie, hee made a worthie amends for guerdon of his life, and was ever after held in great fauour and honour.—Spede. West Saxons, b. vii. c. 7. an. 740

They had before been miserably harassed by the inroads of the Philistines, discomfited in several battles, and at last the Ark of God itself taken by their enemies, and their leaders destroyed.—Stillingfleet, vol. ii. Ser. 4.

He is said there to have sent his angels, on some extraordinary occasions to fight for his people; and the discomfiture and slaughter of great hosts is expressly attributed to their unseen assistance.—Atterbury, vol. ii. Ser. 4.

Cebriones, mean time, the charioteer
Of Hector, from his seat the Trojan ranks
Observing sore discomfited, began.—Cowper. Hom. Il. b. xv.

DIS-CO'MFORT, v. }
DISCO'MFORT, n. }
DISCO'MFORTABLE. }
DISCO'MFORTABLENESS. }
DISCO'MFORTLESS. } It. Disconfortare; Sp. Desconfortar; Fr. Déconforter. To comfort, is to strengthen, confirm, help, encourage, cheer, solace. And to discomfort, is—

To deprive or strip of that which cheers or solaces or inspirits; to deject, to sadden, dishearten, dispirit. Discomfortless, (q.d.) comfortless, is used by Sir T. More.

——— That falle mad him ofright [i. e. affrighted]
He [William] stode alle dismaid. than said tulle hym a knyght,
Discomfort no thing the, so faire happe neuer thou fond.
Stoupe & thou may se, thi helm has wonne londe.
R. Brunne, p. 70.

She bad he should be nothing dismaid
Nor in heart sorifull nor afraied,
Discomfort him in no manner thing,
For I (qd she) am daughter to the King.
Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. ii.

Senek saith; the wise man shal not take to gret discomfort for the deth of his children, but certis he shulde suffren it in patience, as well as he abideth the deth of his owen propre persone.—Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus.

Whan the Duches of Anlowe, beynge at Angers, harde of the dethe of her lorde and husbande, ye may well beleue she was sore discomforted.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 448.

But as God prouided for vs, we ranne into a creeke full of ose, and so saued ourselues with our barke, & lived in great discomfort for a time.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol i. p. 334.

But thys continual discomfortable fashyon of hirs, she so much myselyked, that she would somtyme saye: Eye, what eyleth this gyrle.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1183.

To lie there languishing under the arrest of death, and a death, where the manner could be no comfort to the discomfortableness of the matter.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

But by thys I see wel, that wo may they be, whych in trybulacion lacke that mynde, and that desyre, not to be comforted bi God, but are either of slothe or impacience discomfortlesse, or of foly seeke for their cheife ease and comfort any where els.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1145.

On the other side the mother is more griev'd, and discomforted at the calamity of a sonne, both because the affection of a mother is more soft and tender; as also perchance, being conscious of hir too much indulgence, she hath tainted and corrupted his tender years.

Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. viii. c. 2.

The only true and genuine use is this,
To buy the things, which nature cannot miss
Without discomfort; oil and vital bread,
And wine, by which the life of life is fed,
And all those few things else by which we live:
All that remains, is giv n for thee to give.

Cowley. Ess. Of Avarice.

I am sorry that your cast of Bucknames cannot be served at this election; for to choose one of them (and that must have been in a low place) had been discomfortable, they will lie best at ease together.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 451.

Rich. Discomfortable cousin, knowest thou not,
That when the searching eye of heauen is hid
Behind the globe that lights the lower world,
Then theeues and robbers raunge abroad vnseene,
In murthers and in outrage bloody here.

Shakespeare. Rich. II. Act III sc. 2.

If divine and human comforts fail, there remains nothing but desperate sorrow. St. Austine, to repel this temptation, introduceth God answering the afflicted and discomforted: "Is this thy faith? Did I promise temporal prosperity to you? Were you made a Christian for this, that you might flourish in this world?"

Bates. The great Duty of Resignation.

For avoiding the consequent danger and vengeance, (for unloading our consciences of the burthen and discomfort thereof, [of having transgressed our duty] with humble confession in our mouths, and serious contrition in our hearts, we should apply ourselves to the God of mercy, deprecating his wrath, and imploring pardon from him.

Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 6.

DIS COMME'ND, v. } To commend is to give
DISCOMME'NDABLE. } into the hands of ano-
DISCOMMENDA'TION. } ther, to the care; and thus, to intrust, to declare trustworthy.

To discommend, is—

To declare not trustworthy; to disapprove, to hold in disrepute; to censure as blameworthy, to blame.

Where he discommendeth my prayer & sayth that I am an vnmeete master to teach men to pray.

Frith. Workes, p. 136.

For the gyse now adayes,
Of some tangelynge layes
Is to discommende,
That they can nat amende,
Thoughe they wolde spende
All the wittes they haue.—Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

It is slow of digestion, and noyeth the stomake, but to them which vse moche exercise it is not discommendable.

Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. ii.

To labour to commend a peece of worke
Which no man goes about to discommend,
Would raise a jealous doubt, that there did lurke
Some secret doubt whereto the prayse did tend.

Ignoto. Verses to the Author of the Faerie Queene.

You have been often at me, that I should impart to you in writing what I have observ'd commendable and discommendable in the Roman Church, because I had eaten my bread often in those countries where that religion is profess'd and practis'd in the greatest height.

Howell, b. iv. Let. 36

Which [effeminate, amorous, wanton musicke] as it is discommendable in feasts and merry-meetings, so much more in churches.

Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. ii. Act v. sc. 10.

If then hauing matched men of latter ages with those of the former in regard of age, strength and wit, they should not likewise proue matchable in regard of vertue, it were a blemish rather then an ornament, a discommendation then a prayse.—Hakewill. Apologie, p. 289.

Perhaps, his sentiments are most proper and just, his expkrations clear, and his reasonings strong, and all the parts of his discourse are well connected and set in a proper light: but we know most of those things before, and therefore they strike us not, and we are in danger of discommending them.—Watts. The Judgment of Books, pt. i. c. 5.

DIS-CO'MMODATE, v. } "Fr. Discommoder,— DICOMMO'DIOUS. }
DISCOMMO'DIOUSNESS. }
DISCOMMO'DITY. } To discommodate, incommodate, hurt, hinder, bring damage, breed inconveniences unto." (Cotgrave.) And see ACCOMMODATE, DISACCOMMODATE, and COMMODIOUS.

The execution of this deuise was first letted by a tempest, whereby afterwards it was furthered, and brought to good effect: fortune euer vsing to turn her discommodities into successe towardes him.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 246.

For euen as the life is full of commodities and discomodities, euen so is an historye which is the ymage and representacion of the life.—Goldyng. Justine, Pref.

These wars did drain and discommodate the king of Spain, by reason of his distance (every soldier that he sent either from Spain or Italy costing him near upon 100 crowns before he could be tender'd in Flanders).—Howell, b. i. s. 2. Let. 15.

That no Electors, Princes, Aliants, States of either party, in what manner soever, or under whatsoever pretence, neither by themselves nor any other, shall with arms pertaining to either party, offend or cut off the treaty of peace, or discommodate, pillage, &c.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 533.

Wherefore they should consider how discommodious (for the dispatch of their affairs) and how vnapt (for the defence of themselues) it should be, to hang all the hope of their succor vpon the favour of the wind.

Holinshed. Scotland. James. V. an. 1523.

In the fifth edict, all strangers are forbidden to carry out of the city above the value of five crowns of gold, a statute very discommodious, profitable to merchants, and therefore fear'd that the first motion came from the bank.

Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 657.

So it was plain, the fight could not be but sharp and dangerous, for the discommodiousness of the place, where was neither ground for any to fly, nor yet any space for any long chase, it was of so small a compass.

North. Plutarch, p. 24.

What discommodity it is to a prince to lack armour.

Strype. Memorials. Edw. IV. an. 1518.

DIS-CO'MMON, v. } To strip, deprive or
DISCOMMU'NE. } divest of the right of DISCO'MMONING, n. } common; of a common right or usage. Also to—

Discommune, or to deprive of communion, expel from communion.

——— I see thy pitched stakes do stand
On thy incroached piece of common land,
Whiles thou discommonest thy neighbour's kyne,
And warn'st that none feed on thy field save thine.

Bp. Hall, b. v. Sat. 3.

The seventh was the power of discommoning. But this also hath ever been in power, and in usage in that university, as is commonly known to all Oxford men: and no longer since than King James his time, Bishop King, then Vice-chancellor, discommoned three or four townsmen together.—State Trials. Abp. Laud, an. 1610.

And peradventure, even at this very hour, you proceed against some of ours by suspending, discommuning, by expelling them from their churches, &c.

Hales. Letters from the Synod of Dort.

DIS-CO'MPANY, v. To deprive of company; to be or cause to be without company.

This is, if shee be alone now and discompanied.

B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revells.

DIS-COMPLE'XION, v. To take away or spoil the general appearance or hue; to discolour.

Dem. And I yet living? can
A sorrow enter but upon thy garment,
Or discomplexion thy attire, whilst I
Enjoy a life for thee?

Beaum. & Fletch. Coronation, Act iv. sc. 1.

——— Then his band
May be disorder'd, and transform'd from lace
To cut work, his rich cloaths be discomplexioned
With blood, beside the infashionable slashes.

Id. Ib. Act i. sc. 1.

DIS-COMPO'SE, v. } To put out of place
DISCOMPO'SEDNESS. } or order; to disorder,
DISCOMPOSI'TION. } disarrange, unsettle,
DISCOMPO'SURE. } disquiet, disturb.

For it is a strange thing, that though hee were a darke prince, and infinitely suspicious, and his times full of secret conspiracies and troubles; yet in twentie foure yeares' raigne, hee neuer put downe, or discomposed counsellor, or neare seruant, saue onely Stanley, the Lord Chamberlaine.

Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 242.

Every opposition of our espous'd opinions furrows the sea within us, and discomposeth the mind's serenity.

Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 23.

Believe it, sickness is not the fittest time either to learn virtue or to make our peace with God; it is a time of distemper and discomposedness; those must be learned and practised before sickness comes, or it will be too late, or very difficult to do it after.—Hale. Cont. vol. ii. Afflictions.

O perplexed discomposition, O ridling distemper, O miserable condition of man!—Donne. Devot. p. 8.

His countenance was cheerful, and all the time of his being on the scaffold, there appeared in him no fear, disorder, change of countenance or discomposure.

State Trials. Earl of Holland, an. 1649.

What he says of the Sibyl's prophesies, may be properly applied to every word of his. "They must be read in order as they lie; the least breath discomposes them, and somewhat of their divinity is lost."—Dryden. Ded. to Æneis.

But when the imperial owner did espy,
That thus they turn'd his grace to villainy,
Not suffering wrath to discompose his mind,
He strove a temper for the extremes to find,
So to be just, as he might still be kind.

Id. Hind & Panther.

I allow myself to imagine how exquisite a symmetry (though as yet undiscerned by me) omniscience doth, and after-ages (probably) will discover in the Scripture's method, in spite of those seeming discomposures that now puzzle me.

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 275.

Whatever effect this great loss may have upon me, I am sure you ought not to be discomposed at yours: and you should only look upon it as a dish the less at your table, or an inconsiderable diminution of what you might otherwise have expected from my liberality.

Melmoth. Cicero, b. viii. Let. 2.

Sallust says of Catiline, that his eyes had a disagreeable glare, that his complexion was pale, his walk sometimes quick and sometimes slow, and that his general appearance betokened a discomposure of mind, approaching to insanity.

Beattie. Moral Science, pt. i. c. 2. s. 7.

DIS-COMPT. See DISCOUNT.

DIS-CONCE'RT, v. } To concert is, to join
DISCONCE'RTION. } or unite for the same purpose. To disconcert—

To undo or defeat a concert, or concerted plan; to discompose, to confuse, to abash.

Disconcertion has the authority of Mr. Curran.

I knew they would be strongly tempted (to break the business) by the Spaniard's want or neglect of preparations, and by our disconcert for their defence.

Sir W. Temple. To Arlington, May, 1668.

He eluded by it [his answer to the question, What say'st thou?] at once, the two opposite snares they had laid for him; he disconcerted all their hopes and expectations; and carried at the same time by the weight of this remonstrance, and the power which he gave to it, troubles, confusion, and dismay into their affrighted consciences.

Hurd. Works, vol. vi. Ser. 22.

Tried he was every way (and that in so public a life perpetually) by wicked men, by the wicked one, by friends as well as by enemies; but far from being overcome, never once disconcerted, never once embarrassed, but calmly superior to every artifice, to every temptation, to every difficulty.—Porteus, vol. ii. Ser. 14.

If I could entertain a hope of finding refuge for the disconcertion of my mind in the perfect composure of yours.

State Trials. Hamilton Rowan, an. 1794.

DIS-CONFO'RMABLE. } Conform, is to be
DISCONFO'RMITY. } or cause to be of the same form, as another; to be uniform; to comply with, yield or assent to, (sc.) a set form of words. (See DEFORMITY.) Disconformity, is—

The not being of the same form; dissimilarity, unlikeness; the not complying with, yielding or assenting to; non-compliance, dissent.

And if they can finde as yet no motion tending that way, to be studious to read, and conferre with learned men, and to vse all meanes as may further their resolutiõ, assuring themselues, that as long as they are disconformable in religion from vs, they cannot be but halfe my subjects, bee able to doe but halfe seruice, and I to want the best halfe of them, which is their soule.—Stow. K. James, an. 1603.

Nor doth he put away adulterously who complains of causes rooted in immutable nature, utter unfitness, utter disconformity, not reconcileable, because not to be amended without a miracle.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

Dissent from his [Saint Peter] opinion or disconformity to his practice, or disobedience to his orders are not mentioned as ground of reproof, as aggravation of any errour, any misdemeanour, any disorder.

Barrow. Of the Pope's Supremacy.

We are often foiled, he [Christ] always overcame; but his disconformity to us in this respect, is far from weakening the strength of our present argument.—Blair, vol. ii. Ser. 5.

DIS-CONGRU'ITY, consequentially, is—

Inconvenience, inconsistency, unsuitableness, unfitness, disagreement, disparity. See CONGRUE.

The reason then of that so great a distaste which God hath of best works of meer carnall and naturall men, is, that great disproportion betwixt God and man; that much discongruity betwixt him and us.

Mountagu. Appeale to Cæsar, pt. ii. c. 6.

Suppose that eternity might be communicated to any created being, as for the purpose, to the more pure mental natures, yet do I not disparage the omnipotence of God when I say it is not communicable to a successive Being that is in fluxu; not for want of power in God, but for want of capacity in the nature of the thing to sustain such a duration upon the intrinsical discongruity of the one to the other.—Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 118.

DIS-CONNE'CT, v. DISCONNE'CTION. } To separate or sever things knitted or enfolded together; and generally, to separate, to dissever, to disjoin or disunite, to put asunder.

Thus the commonwealth itself would in a few generations crumble away, be disconnected into the dust and powder of individuality, and at length dispersed to all the winds of heaven.—Burke. On the French Revolution.

The Episcopal Church of England, before the Reformation, connected with the See of Rome, since then, disconnected and protesting against some of her doctrines, and against the whole of her authority, as binding in our national church.—Id. Let. to Sir Hercules Langrishe, M.P.

But, if the disease be thus distrust and disconnection; it is easy to know who are sound, and who are tainted; who are fit to restore us to health, who to continue, and to spread the contagion.—Id. On a late State of the Nation.

DIS-CONSE'NT, v. Not to think or feel as others do; to think or feel differently from others; to differ, to disagree. See DISSENT, and DISASSENT.

And I feel that it is impossible to beleue truly except a mā repent, and that it is impossible to trust in yt mercy yt is in Christ or to feel it, but yt a man must immediatly loue God & his commaundementes, and therefore disagree & disconsent vnto the fleshe, and be at hate therewith and fight against it.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 307.

Euen so are our consciences bound and in daunger to the law vnder old Adam, the flesh, as long as he liueth in vs, for the law declareth that our hertes are bonde & that we cannot disconsent from him.—Tdal. Prol to the Romaynes.

If therefore the tradition of the church were now grown so ridiculous, and disconsenting from the doctrine of the Apostles, even in those points which were of least moment to men's particular ends, how well may we be assur'd it was much more degenerated in point of episcopacy, and precedency, things which could afford such plausible pretences, such commodious traverses for ambition, and avarice to lurk behind.—Milton. Of Prelatical Episcopacy.

DIS-CONSOLATE, adj. DISCO'NSOLATELY. DISCO'NSOLATENESS. DISCONSOLA'TION. } Fr. Desconsole; Sp. Desconsolado; It. Sconsolato. Lat. Consolari, to console;—or soothe by converse the minds or feelings of the solitary. See CONSOLE.

Destitute of consolation, of comfort; comfortless, hopeless, disheartened, forsaken, abandoned, deserted, refusing consolation or comfort.

And this Sphinx, awaped and amate
Stood all dismaied, and disconsolate
With chere doun cast, heauy as any leade:
And Edippus anon, smote of the head
Of this fend. Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. i.

The king himself left alone disconsolate was taken and apprehended, as a man borne predestinate of troble, misery, and calamitie.—Hall. Hen. VI. an. 38.

So I alone, now left disconsolate,
Mourne to myselfe the absence of my loue
And wandring here and there all desolate,
Seeke with my plaints to match that mournfull doue.
Spenser, Son. 89.

But Psyche here observ'd a serious maid,
Who kept the keys of that transparent gate,
Upon the ground disconsolately laid,
Like one who felt and wail'd the wrath of fate.
Beaumont. Psyche, c. 19. s. 79.

In his presence there is life and blessedness; in his absence, nothing but dolour, disconsolateness, despair.
Bp. Hall. Remaines, p. 98.

(But David comforted himselfe in his Lord his God;) oh happy and sure refuge of a faithfull soule! The earth yeelded him nothing but matter of disconsolation and heavinesse; he lifts his eyes above the hils, whence commeth his saluation.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Ziklag spoiled and revenged.

Then lear-ey'd jealousy, unworthy shame,
Pale-fac'd disconsolation, and frigidity,
With indevotion's dead and stiff aridity.
Beaumont. Psyche, c. 24. s. 35.

There at a solemn tide, the beauties slain
By tender passion, act their fates again,
Through gloomy light that just betrays the grove,
In orgies, all disconsolately rove.—Parnell. Elysium.

Here we heard on every side the wailings and complaints of several of the inhabitants, who had cast themselves disconsolately at the feet of trees.—Spectator, No. 101.

Is a man poor and low in the world? Piety doth improve and sweeten even that state: it keepeth his spirits up above dejection, desperation, and disconsolateness.
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 2.

Ah then, ye Gods! there doubtless are below
The soul and semblance, although empty forms,
For all night long, mourning, disconsolate,
The soul of my Patroclus, hapless friend,
Hath hover'd o'er me.—Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiii.

When a poor disconsolated drooping creature is terrified from all enjoyment,—prays without ceasing, till his imagination is heated,—fasts, and mortifies, and mopes, till his body is in as bad a plight as his mind,—it is no wonder that the mechanical disturbances and conflicts of an empty belly, interrupted by an empty head, should be mistook for workings of a different kind from what they are!
Sterne, vol. iii. Ser. 25.

Here as I sat upon one of the benches, and felt the pleasing sympathy which nature in bloom inspires, a disconsolated figure, who sate on the other end of the seat, seem'd no way to enjoy the serenity of the season.
Goldsmith. Citizen of the World, Let. 51.

DIS-CONTE'NT, v. DISCONTE'NT, adj. DISCONTE'NT, s. DISCONTENTA'TION. DISCONTE'NTED. DISCONTE'NTEDLY. DISCONTE'NTEDNESS. DISCONTE'NTING, n. DISCONTE'NTMENT. } Sp. Discontento; It. Discontento, scontento; Lat. Contentus, qui continet, quod animo satisfaciat; and thus, satisfied.

To dissatisfy; to wish or cause to wish for something more or different; for a change; to be ill at ease, to be uneasy; not pleased with things as they are; to displease.

For surely there was no creature whiche with that warr was either discontented or displeased, for it semed to al men no lesse profitable then honorable, nor no lesse honorable than convenient.—Hall. Hen. V. an. 5.

Then might my soule beneath,
Hane triumpht yet and saide,
That though I died discontent
I liude and dide a mayde
Gascoigne. The Complaynt of Phylomene.

Nay, rather than my ease discontentation
Should breed to her, let me for age dejected be,
From any joy which might her grief occasion.
Sidney. Arcadia, b. ii.

At one time he answered, well; and told me of great hopes conceived: at some other time he answered me very discontentedly in these things, saying; it made no matter, it would cause my lord to take other courses.
State Trials. Sir C. Blunt, an. 1600.

Southampton. Good Sir Fardinando, satisfy the court what was intended among all our conferences, and talk of our enemies, and discontentments, and consultations, and what was our best course for our defence against them.
Id. Earls of Essex and Southampton, an. 1600.

Full little knowest thou that hast not tride,
What hell it is, in suing long to bide:
To loose good dayes that might be better spent;
To waste long nights in pensiue discontent.
Spenser. Mother Hubberd's Tale.

Those that were there thought it not fit
To discontent so ancient a wit:
And therefore Apollo call'd him [Ben] back again,
And made him mine host of his own New Inn.
Suckling. A Sessions of the Poets.

For e'en with goodness men grow discontent,
Where states are ripe to fall, and virtue spent.
Daniel. Civil War, b. v.

I take God to be my iudge, I have beene to you a true and humble wife, euer conformable to your will and pleasure, that neuer contraryed or gainsayed any thing therof, and being alwayes contented with all things wherein you had anie delight or dallance, whether little or much, without grudge or countenance of discontentation or displeasure.
Stow. Hen. VIII. an. 1527.

Why are decrees so sweetly fixt,
Reprou'd with discontented face?
Beaumont. Funeral Hymn out of Prudentius.

How have we seen great men's eyes surfeited at that ful table whereof their palate could not taste, and they have risen discontentedly glutted with the sight of that which their stomach was uncapable to receive.
Bp. Hall. Of Contentation, § 11.

As glad of such an opportunity
To work upon, for those high purposes
He had conceiv'd in discontentedness.
Daniel. Civil War, b. viii.

Al. Religion blames impatient discontenting.
P. Fletcher. Eliza. An Elegy.

Serj. Philips. You presented your friend with it when he was discontented. If it had been before the queen's death, it had been a less matter; but you gave him it presently when he came from the king, which was the time of his discontentment.—State Trials. Sir Walter Raleigh, an. 1603.

Their [orators] powerful voice can flying troops arrest,
Confirm the weak, and melt th' obdurate breast,
Chase from the sad their melancholy air,
Soothe discontent, and solace anxious care.
Blackmore. Creation, b. vii

No musick cheers him, and no feasts can please,
He sets like discontented Damocles,
When by the sportive tyrant wisely shown
The dangerous pleasures of a flatter'd throne.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 13

There is in the same gallery a beautiful bust of Alexander the Great, casting up his face to heaven, with a noble air of grief and discontentedness in his looks.
Addison. Travels in Italy. Florence.

[A bill against pluralities and non-residency] will breed great discontentment in the younger sort of students; and make them fly to other seminaries, where they may hope for more encouragement.
Strype. Life of Abp. Whitgift, an. 1584.

The natural discontent of inferiority will seldom fail to operate in some degree of malice against him who professes to superintend the conduct of others, especially if he seats himself uncalled in the chair of judicature, and exercises authority by his own commission.—Idler, No 18.

Turbulent, discontented men of quality, in proportion as they are puffed up with personal pride and arrogance, generally despise their own order.—Burke. French Revolution.

DIS-CONTI'NUE, v. DISCONTI'NUANCE. DISCONTINUA'TION. DISCONTI'NUER. DISCONTI'NUING, n. DISCONTINU'ITY. DISCONTI'NUOUS. } Fr. Discontinuer; Continue, from Lat. Continere, to contain or hold together.

To cease from keeping or holding together; to make a break or stop from keeping or holding together; to cease or leave off; to stay or stop, to break or interrupt, the permanence, the perseverance, the conjunction or connexion;—"to surcease, intermit, forbear, put off for a time," (Cotgrave.)

Howbeit the discreete and worthy citizens Sir Edward Osborne and M. Richard Staper seriously considering what benefite might grow to the common wealth by renewing of the foresayd discontinued trade, determined to vse some effectual meanes for the reestablishing and augmenting thereof.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 137.

Then during the time of any such discontinuance and withdrawing, as is aforesaid, it shall be lawful to al the subiects of this realme to trade to the Narue onely in English bottoms, any thing in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.—Id. ib. vol. i. p. 272.

Emanuel Chrysolaras staid still at Venice, and there taught the Greek tongue, discontinued before in these parts the space of seven hundred years.—Daniel. Defence of Rhyme

True the law booke say, the king can do no wrong; which proves, that it is possible for a governor in his inclination to incline to do wrong, and therefore the law hath taken a care that he should do none: for he cannot make a disseisin nor discontinuance.—State Trials, an. 1637. John Hampden.

And now if the reader will not think his patience too much imposed upon I could furnish him with another like instance, and that out of Mr. Mede's own college, one who was contemporary with Mr. Mede, (but a long and earlier discontinuer) and one, I think, not unknown to him; I am sure, a great admirer of him.
Mede. Appendix to the Author's Life.

Their teachers were now encouraged to set up their conventicles again which had been discontinued, or held very secretly, for four or five years.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1686.

Let us consider whether our approaches to him are always sweet and refreshing; and we are uneasy, and impatient under any long discontinuance of our conversation with him.
Atterbury, vol. ii. Ser. 6

Upon any discontinuation of parts, made either by bubbles, or by shaking the glass, the whole mercury falls.—Newton

But there were so many discontinuings, and so many new undertakings, that after an immense charge the court grew weary of it.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1662.

Even in this case, the opposition may be so close, and the two matters so near of kin, that both may pass for one stone, and be polished both together, without any blemishing discontinuity of surface at these parts, where one would expect commissures.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 349.

Till with a roar at last, the mighty mound,
Towers, engines, all, came thundering to the ground
Wide-spread the discontinuous ruins lie,
And vast confusion fills the gazer's eye.
Rowe. Lucan, b. iii.

As you cannot now discontinue these obliging offices, without forfeiting your character of constancy, I doubt not of your persevering in the same friendly services for your own sake, which you at first engaged in for ours.
Melmoth. Cicero, b. ii. Let. 19.

The principle of association will not explain the discontinuance of the affection, when the young animal is grown up. Association, operating in its usual way, would rather produce a contrary effect.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 18.

DIS-CONVE'NIENT, adj. } From the Lat.
DISCONVE'NIENCE. } Convenire; to come together, to concur; and, consequentially, to agree.

"Fr. Disconvenir,—to disagree, to be at odds with; to be unfit for or unlike unto; to dissent from," (Cotgrave.)

Disagreeing, unsuiting, unfitting.

Continual drinking is most convenient to the distemper of an hydropick body, though most disconvenient to its present welfare.—Bp. Reynolds. On the Passion, c. 40.

All mortall good laboureth of imperfection, and conveniences and disconveniences are usually connext.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. ii. c. 7.

DI'SCORD, v.
DI'SCORD, n.
DISCO'RDABLE.
DISCO'RDANT.
DISCO'RDANCE.
DISCO'RDANCY.
DISCO'RDANTLY.
DISCO'RDFUL.
DISCO'RDING, n.
DISCO'RDOUS.

Fr. Discorder; It. Discordare; Sp. Discordar; Lat. Discors. Opposed to Lat. Concors, (con, and cor, the heart,) being of the same heart or mind. See CONCORD.

To be or cause to be of a different heart or mind; to have a different will or inclination, wish, or desire; to be at variance; to disagree; not to harmonize; to be incongruous; to be inconsistent, dissimilar, unlike.

Vor July Cesar yt nom vorst myd strengthe & myd outrage,
Thoru discord & contek, that bytuene vr elderne vas ther
R. Gloucester, p. 196.

And tho he vond, that bytuene hem nas non dyscordyng
He radde the Kyng Cadwallad, to thenche nanmore
Of Engelond. Id. p. 255.

For that shrewes discorden of hemselfe, and by her vices, the which vices, all to renden her consciences.
Chaucer. Boecius, b. iv.

Discordant euer fro armony,
And dutoned from melody—
In soites made he discordaunce.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

What discordable cause hath to rent, and vnioined the byndyng or the aliaunce of thynges, that is to sain, the conjunccions of God, and of man?—Id. Boecius, b. v.

And eke seest thou not that the maners of diuers folke and her lawes ben discordant amonges hemselfe, so that thilke thing that som men judge worthy of praising, other folke judgen that, that is worthie of tourment.—Id. Ib. b. ii.

For howeso men haue diuers sentences & discordings, algates men accorden al in louing the end of good.—Id. Ib.

For fals semblant hath euer mo
Of his counsaile in companie
The derke vntrewe hypocrisie,
Whose worde discordeth to his thought.—Gower. C. A b. ii.

Myn herte is wonderly begonne
With counsaile, wherof witte is one,
Whiche hath reason in companie,
Againe the whiche stant partie
Wille, whiche hath Hope of his accorde,
And thus thei bringen vp discorde.—Id. Ib. b. iii.

But it is greatly discordant
Unto the scholes of Athens.—Id. Ib. b. vii.

How muche lesse can ye be hable to serue God and mammon both at once, being maisters so ferre discording the one from ye other, that there is not so much as any one poinct wherein thei agree.—Udal. Luke, c. 16.

Thyse two nacions discorde in maners, but nat in clothing and in fayth, and in couetyse of the shedynge of manns blode, they be one.—Fabyan, vol. i. c. 75.

The foresayd souereigne prince and king of England, and the sayd right reuerend lord and master generall are mutually by their letters and messengers to giue certificate and intimation one vnto another, concerning the matter and cause of such dissension and discord.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 152.

In this sayinge appereth some discordaunce with other writers, and also with the former sayinge of the said Ranulfe in the xxii. chapiter of his iii. boke of Polycronycon.
Fabyan, vol. i. pt. vi. c. 213.

And whether he be or no, it is no matter, so longe as he is so discordaunte to hymself.—Bale. Apology, fol. 75.

Yet before their departure from London, he communed with the bishops apart, to see if he might persuade them to giue him some portion of monie towards his charges: but they had tuned their strings all after one note, discording all from his tenor, so that not a penie could be got of them.
Holinshed. Hen. III. an. 1252.

Firebrand of hell, first tin'd in Phlegeton
By thousand furies, and frō thence out-thrown
Into this world, to work confusion,
And set it all on fire (by force vnknown)
Is wicked Discord; whose small sparks, once blowne,
None but a God or god-like man can slake.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 2.

For if you loosely loue, without respect,
It is not loue, but a discordant warre,
Whose vnlike parts amongst themselues do iarre.
Spenser. Hymne in Honour of Beautie.

I know also they distinguish the action from the sin of the action, saying that God Almighty does indeed cause the action, whatsoever action it be, but not the sinfulness and irregularity of it, that is the discordance between the action and the law.—Hobbs. Of Liberty and Necessity

And each not farre behind him had his Make,
To weet, two ladies of most goodly hew,
That twixt themselues did gentle purpose make,
Vnmindfull both of that discordfull crew,
The which with speedy pace did after them pursew.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 2.

Then crept in pride, and peevish covetise,
And men grew greedie, discordous and nice.
Bp. Hall, b. iii. Sat. 1

How worthy are they to smart, that marre the harmony of our peace, by the discordous jars of their new & paradoxall conceits!—Id. The Peace-Maker, § 21.

But thy return shall fix our kinder fate,
For thee our councils, thee our armies wait,
Discording princes shall with thee combine,
And centre all their interests in thine
Stepney. Epistle to Charles Montague, Esq.

He that brought peace, all discord could atone,
His name is music of itself alone.
Dryden. To his Majestie on his Coronation.

If they be discordantly tuned, though each of them struck apart would yield a pleasing sound, yet being struck together they make but a harsh and troublesom noise
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 741.

While genuine revelation and sound philosophy are in perfect good agreement with each other, and with the actual constitution of the universe, the errors of the religious on the one side, and the learned on the other, run in contrary directions; and the discordance of these errors is mistaken for a discord of the truths on which they are severally grafted.—Bp. Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 39.

So spake the son of Saturn, kindling war
Inevitable, and the Gods set forth,
With minds discordant to the bloody field.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xx.

In such discordancy of sentiments it is better to look to the nature of things than to the humours of men.
Burke. Speech at Bristol previous to the Election.

DIS-CORRESPONDENT. Not answering one to another; unsuitable, unfit.

It would be discorrespondent in respect of God.
Montague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 7. s. 3.

DIS-COST, v. Used by Barrow in opposition to Accoast.

To part, or keep apart or removed, or distant.

The neglecting it [public worship] is a scandalous contempt of our neighbours, from whose laudable fashion we discost.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 7.

Now if we can give credit to our sense against the suffrage or scruple of our reason in things not so discosted from our capacity of knowledge, shall we not much more yield our belief unto God's express word in things so infinitely distant from it.—Id. Ser. on Trinity Sunday, 1663.

DIS-COVER, v.
DISCO'VERABLE.
DISCO'VERER.
DISCO'VERMENT.
DISCO'VERY.

Fr. Descouvrir; It. Discoprire; Sp. Descubrir; (dis, and cover,) to put, place or lay, over, on or against. To discover, is—To remove any thing so put or placed; any thing overlaid, any thing that hides, cloaks, conceals, shelters, or protects; to find by such removal; to detect, to disclose, to expose to view, to reveal; to bring to light; to find out, to invent.

For through me neuer discouered was
Yet thing, that ought be secre.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

An idel man is like to a place that hath no walles, theras deviles may enter on every side, or shoot at him at discoverte by temptation on every side.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

But by reason of their foolishness in striking vp their drums before they come neere them, the Cossaks discouering the boats, cut their gables, and put out to sea.
Hackluyt. Voynges, vol. i. p. 397.

Thus frier (as Saluaterra reporteth) was the greatest discouerer by sea, that hath bene in our age.
Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 20.

The voiage intended for the discouerie of Cathay and diuers other regions, dominions, islands, and places vnknown, set forth by the right worshipful master Sebastian Cabota, esquire and gouernour of the mysterie and company of the marchants aduentures of the citie of London.
Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 232

And daily how through hardy enterprise,
Many great regions are discouered,
Which to late age were neuer mentioned.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. s. 2

This, as an amber drop enwraps a bee,
Covering discovers your quick soul; that we
May in your through-shine front our hearts thought see.
Donne. Letter to the Countess of Bedford.

The next morning we resolved to seek out some fit place, in the sound of Dorrienne, where we might safely leave our ship at anchor, not discoverable by the enemy, who thereby might imagine us quite departed from the coast, and we the mean time better follow our purposes with our pinnaces.
Sir Francis Drake Revived, p. 24.

For heau'n's decree, firme, stable and intire,
Thy wish repugnes, and gainst thy will is bent,
Nor yet the time hath Titans gliding fire
Met forth, prefixt for this discouerment.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Bovlogne, b. xv. s. 39.

Arad, king of the Canaanites, surprized divers companies of Israelites, by lying in ambush near those ways, thro' which the discoverers and searchers of the land had formerly pass d.—Raleigh. History of the World, b. ii. c. 5. s. 3.

It cannot chuse but be a most grateful spectacle to these envious and malignant evil spirits, who, upon the discovery of such a fall of a good man, call their impure company together, and make pastime about such an object, as boys do about drunken men.
Hale. Cont. vol. ii. Motives to Watchfulness.

It is not impossible, but a man may practice a sin secretly, to his dying day, but it is ten thousand to one if the practice be constant, but that some time or other it will be discovered: and then the effect of sin discovered, must be shame and confusion to the sinner.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 1.

These, and the like, though they have a constant and regular connection, in the ordinary course of things; yet that connection being not discoverable in the ideas themselves, which appearing to have no necessary dependance one on another, we can attribute their connection to nothing else but the arbitrary determination of that all-wise agent, who has made them to be, and to operate as they do, in a way wholly above our weak understandings to conceive.
Locke. On Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 3. s. 28.

That famous experiment of Malpighi, who a long time enclosed a quantity of earth in a vessel, secured by a fine cloth from the small imperceptible seeds of plants that are blown about with the winds; and had this success of his curiosity, to be the first happy discoverer of this noble and important truth, that no species of plants can be produc'd out of the earth without a pre-existent seed.
Bentley. A Confutation of Atheism, Ser. 4.

It is idle to say, that a future state had been discovered already. It had been discovered as the Copernican system was—it was one guess among many, he alone discovers who proves; and no man can prove this point, but the teacher who testifies by miracles that his doctrine comes from God.
Paley. Moral Philosophy, b. v. c. 9.

The danger of navigating unknown parts of this ocean was now greatly encreased by our having a crazy ship, and being short of provisions and every other necessary; yet the distinction of a first discoverer made us chearfully encounter every danger, and submit to every inconvenience.
Cook. Voyages, vol. ii. b. iii. c. 5.

I was the more pleased with this suggestion, because I was entirely ignorant even of the Anglo-Saxon and Gothic characters: and the experiment presented to me a mean, either of disabusing myself from error, (which I greatly feared;) or of obtaining a confirmation sufficiently strong to encourage me to believe (what every man knowing any thing of human nature will always be very backward in believing of himself) that I had really made a discovery.
Tooke. Diversions of Purley, vol. i. c. 7.

DIS-COUNSEL. To counsel or advise not; to dissuade.

Howbeit, the Lorde Clysson who was one of the chiefest of the kynges counsayle, acorded nat to this vyage, but discounsayled the kyng and all the nobles of the realme, fro this iourney into Englande.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 201.

But him that Palmer from that vanitie,
With temperate advice discounselled,
That they it past, and shortly gan descry
The land, to which their course they leueled.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

DIS-CO'UNT, or DISCO'MPT, v. & n. DISCOU'NTER. } "Fr. Descompter,—to account (for the profits of land, &c. received,) to account back, to make a back reckoning," (Cotgrave.) See ACCOUNT, and COUNT.

Methinks the dignity and present delight of this noble love (though it were an unthrift anticipation in this our minority, and were to be discounted to us out of our future estate of loving) might tempt a soule to take up for her present joy and satisfaction, the suavity and blessednesse of this excellent love.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 14. c. 3.

You are to endeavour, that all provisions, or other necessaries, provided by your care, be so ordered, that account may be made what is taken, and that the said provisions may be discounted upon the pay of the said army.
Parliamentary History. Charles I. an. 1645.

They continued that wasteful method, of raising money upon remote funds, by which there lay a heavy discount on tallies; so that above the fourth part was, in some of them, to be discounted.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1692.

He had likewise played the stock-jobber in buying the debentures, tallies and tickets, due from the king to his soldiers and pentioners, at a great discompt, giving very little to the parties, and yet, in deceit of his majesty, had an entire allowance for them in the exchequer.
State Trials. The great Case of Impositions, an. 1606.

Whachum had neither cross nor pile,
His plunder was not worth the while;
All which the conqueror did discompt,
To pay for curing of his rump.—Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3.

In order to gorge the whole gang of usurers, pedlars, and itinerant Jew discounters at the corners of streets (have they not) starved the poor of their Christian flocks, and their own brother pastors?
Burke. Letter to a Member of the National Assembly.

DIS-CO'UNTENANCE, v. DISCO'UNTENANCE, n. DISCO'UNTENANCER. } Fr. Descontenancer; opposed to — to countenance, as applied consequentially—to encouragement, support, power, patronage. And thus, to discountenance, is—

To discourage, to dishearten; to abash, to put out of countenance; to refuse or deny support or patronage.

The whiles we silly maids, whom they despise,
And with reproachfull scorne discountenance,
From our own native heritage exil'd,
Walke through the world of euery one reuil'd.
Spenser. The Teares of the Muses.

As a severe deportment of the soul must keep lust from commanding, so it must check and discountenance it in asking.—Hale. Cont. vol. ii. Of Self-denial.

Wherefore not to conceal any thing that with the least shew of probability can be pretended from the sacred volume in discountenance of the doctrine of preexistence, I'll bring into view whatever I know to have the least face of a testimony to the contrary, in the divine Revelations.
Glanvill. Pre-existence of Soule, c. 4.

And it was not long, ere these rumours of nouelties had begotten others of scandale and murmur against the king, and his gouernement; taxing him for a great taxer of his people, and discountenancer of his nobilitie.
Bacon. Hen. VII.

Therefore be careful to discountenance in children any thing that looke like rage and furious anger, and to shew them the unreasonableness and deformity of it.
Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 51.

His declared esteem of such and such practices, joined with his particular actions suited to it, and his profest dislike of those sinful or dishonourable courses, he finds the rifest, backed with a steady and resolute discountenance of those, that do not decline them, will, in a short time, bring those, that are about him, to conform their actions and behaviour to what men are satisfied, he desires, or likes.
Boyle. Occasional Reflections, s. 5. Ref. 6

——— Criminating none
Before the people, as the practice is
Of mighty chiefs, who favour without cause
And without cause discountenance whom they please.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. iv.

DIS-CO'URAGE, v. DISCO'URAGE, n. DISCO'URAGEABLE. DISCO'URAGER. DISCO'URAGEMENT. DISCO'URAGING, n. } It. Discoraggiare; "Fr. Descourager— To discourage, unhearten, (i. e. dishearten,) fear, frighten, apall, put into doubt, drive out of heart, bring out of conceit with his own fortune or worth." (Cotgrave.)

Your moste high and moste princely maiestee abashed and cleane discouraged me so to do, both because the present (as concernynge the value) was farre to simple (as me thought) and because it was none other wise my acte, but as I toke some peyne to printe it more correctly than it was before.—Gower. Con. A. Ded.

Whan the younge man heard this communicacion, he wente awaye with a discouraged and heauye mynde, because he was a lorde of muche possessions.—Udal. Matt. c. 19.

Many be made vyle, abiect, and humble, and be brought in discourage of themselves, by the reason of pouertie, of basenes of byrthe, of lowenes of estate, or by aduersitie.
Id. Ib. c. 5.

Diuers great exactions, as summes of money, doles or shares of fish, and such other like things (haue beene buried) to the great discouragement and hinderance of the same marchants and fishermen, and to no little dammage of the whole common wealth.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 131.

Which also comming much too late thither, as Master George Drake had done, was wholly preuented and shutte out to his and his friends no small detriment and mischiefe, and to the discouraging of others hereafter in the sayd gaynefull and profitable trade.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 193.

What can discourage those whom Christ doth loue,
To whom euill good, griefe joy, death life doth proue?
Sterling. Doomes day, the second Houre.

O loue of unthankfull souls! not discouragenble by the most hatefull indignities; by the basest repulses, what burden canst thou shrink under, who canst bear the weight of ingratitude!—Bp. Hall. Cont. The Figge-tree cursed.

He added how unwilling he had been to utter the king's answer to the Catholicks at his return, in his owne worde, and with those incurable obstructions, which appeared by the manner, for fear lest over great discouragement might make them desperate, and drive them to seek other helps, as some did, which this action makes evident.
State Trials. Henry Garnet, an. 1606.

Men cannot chuse but think well of those persons, whom the dominion of their lusts will not suffer them to imitate, or whom the present interest and the necessity of their worldly affairs, compels them to discourage.
Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 2.

Cam. But to be in love with a waiting woman, with an eater of fragments, a simperer at the lower end of a table, with mighty gods, rough grained, and red with starching, those discouragers and abaters of elevated love.
Dryden. The Assignation, Act iii. sc. 1.

But the steddy course of a virtuous and religious life, uniform in all its parts and upon all occasions, resisting all the temptations of the world, overcoming all difficulties, and persevering to the end under all discouragements; this is a superstructure which cannot be built upon a less strong foundation than a firm belief of a future state, and an expectation of the righteous judgment of God.
Clarke, vol. ii. Ser. 8.

A slight perusal of the innumerable letters by which the wits of France have signalized their names, will prove that other nations need not be discouraged from the like attempts by the consciousness of inability.—Rambler, No. 152.

DIS-CO'URSE, v. DISCO'URSE, n. DISCO'URSING, n. DISCO'URSIVE. DISCO'URSELESS. } Fr. Discours; It. Discorso; Sp. Discurso; Fr. Discourir; It. Discorrere; Sp. Discurrir, from the Lat. Discurrere, (dis, and currere, to run,) to run apart, &c. (met.) from one thought, notion or idea to another, (Skinner.) Discourse proprié est sermo vagus atque hinc inde accersitus, (Junius.) See the quotations from Hobbs and Bolingbroke. See also DISCURSION, infra.

To pass from thought to thought, topic to topic, subjects or parts or divisions of a subject to others; from premises to conclusions; to talk or speak or write at large; to converse, to reason; to employ or exercise the powers of the mind in examining the portions of a subject; to treat of, to dilate or expand or extend, the views, the contemplations of the mind.

Spenser uses the noun Discourse, (lit.) running about.

The lyfe of William Tyndall, author of this treatise immediately following, is sufficiently & at large discoursed in the booke of Actes and Monuments.—Tyndall. Life by Fox.

Discoursing at my first arriuall with the king of Shiruan of sundry matters, and being entertained as hath been before declared, the sayd king named Obdolocan, demaunding whether that we of England had friendship with the Turke or not: I answered, that we neuer had friendship with them.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 346.

But when ye day shal come, & the discourse of thigs turned vp side down, they shall be torméted, & you shal reioyce like coquerours.—Udal. 1 Peter, c. 1.

Well, well, said Basilius, I have not chosen Dametas for his fighting, not for his discoursing, but for his plainness and honesty, and therein I know he will not deceive me.
Sidney. Arcadia, b. i.

Nor can herself discourse or judge of ought,
But what the sense collects, and home doth bring:
And yet the pow'rs of her discoursing thought,
From these collections is a diverse thing.
Davies. The Immortality of the Soul, s. 1.

——— We, through madness,
Frame strange conceits, in our discoursing brains,
And prate of things as we pretend they were.
Ford. The Lady's Trial, Act iii. sc. 3.

At last the captive after long discourse,
When all his strokes he saw avoided quite,
Resolved in one t' assemble all his force,
And make one end of him without ruth or remorse.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 3.

It adds to my calamity, that I have
Discourse and reason, and but too well know
I cannot live, nor end a wretched life,
But both ways I am impious.
Massinger. The Unnatural Combat, Act ii. sc. 1.

The succession of conceptions in the mind, series or consequences of one after another, may be casual and incoherent, as in dreams for the most part; and it may be orderly, as when the former thought introduceth the latter; and this is discourse of the mind.
Hobbs. Of Human Nature, c. 4.

Therefore (if I were wise) she warn'd me shunne
All such long-winded monsters, as my bane:
For if I could but scape that one discourser,
I might (no doubt) prove an old aged man.
B. Jonson. Poetaster, Act iii. sc. 1.

To attempt things whence rather harm may after result unto us then good, is the part of rash and discourseless brains.—Shelton. Don Quixote, vol. ii. c. 6.

All in himself, as in a glass he sees,
For from him, by him, through him, all things be;
His sight is not discoursive, by degrees;
But seeing th' whole, each single part doth see
Davies. Immortality of the Soul, s. 8.

Then thou (that art of Pan the sweetest swaine,
And farre transcending all his lowly traine)
In thy discoursive thought, dost range as farre,
Nor canst thou erre, led by thine owne fair starre.
Brown. The Shepheard's Pipe, Ecl. 7.

Those very elements, which we partake
Alive, when dead some other bodies make,
Translated grow, have sense, or can discourse;
But death on deathless substance has no force.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xv.

The word Discourse is derived from a Lat. verb, which signifies to run about; and by the motion of our legs and the agitation of our whole body, to traverse many different grounds, or the same ground many different ways. Now the application of this corporeal image to what passes in the mind or to the action of the mind, when we meditate on various subjects, or on many distinct parts of the same subject, and when we communicate these thoughts to one another, sometimes with greater, and sometimes with less agitation and rapidity, is obvious.
Bolingbroke, Ess. 1. On Human Knowledge.

The celebrated wits of the miscellanarian race, the essay writers, casual discoursers, reflection coiners, meditation founders, and others of the irregular kind of writers, may plead it as their peculiar advantage, "that they follow the variety of nature."—Shaftesbury. Miscel. Reflec. Misc. 3. c. 3.

Our discourser here has quoted nine verses out of it; in which, tho' one of the easiest places, I can shew him xiv. various lections.—Bentley. Of Freethinking, p. 65.

But setting this defence aside, your argument is almost as strong against the use of rhyme in poems as in plays; for the epick way is every where interlaced with dialogue or discoursive scenes.—Dryden. Essay of Dramatick Poesie.

My intention in this and some future discourses is, to set before you the divine authority of the Christian religion; and that I may do this the more effectually, and with the greater degree of evidence, I propose to lead your thoughts, as it were step by step towards the important conclusion.
Pearce, vol. i. Ser. 1.

DIS-CO'URTEOUS. DISCO'URTEOUSLY. DISCO'URTESY. DISCO'URTSHIP. } Fr. Discourtois. Courteous, having the manners of a court, of courtiers, or those who follow a court; (sc.) endeavouring to please or to gain or win favour. Discourteous, is—

Not having the manners of a courtier; careless, heedless of pleasing, of gaining or winning favour, uncomplaisant, uncivil, rude.

Speed uses to Discourt, (q.d.) dismiss from court.

Brethereu, you see here that lord; let vs giue him such as we haue, seeing he douth vs pleasure, and hath passed through so many discourteous people, to come to visit vs.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 433.

Wherefore promising them all, that they should receiue no discourteste, and that they were come into a place where they should be well vsed and very welcome, he took them into his protection vpon his faith.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 121.

And all the while that same discourteous knight
Stood on the further bank beholding him;
At whose calamity, for more despight
He laught, and mockt to see him like to swim.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 3.

What is Signior Veterano fall'n asleep, and at the recitation of such verses! A most inhuman disgrace, and not to be digested!
Pol. Has he wrong'd me so discourteously? I'll be reveng'd, by Phoebus.—Marmion. The Antiquary, Act iv. sc. 1.

Ana. Monsieur, we must not so much betray ourselves to discourtship, as to suffer you to be longer insulted.
B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revells, Act v. sc. 4.

For he commanded all his officers to offer sacrifice to the idol gods, pretending to discourt all such as refused.
Speed. The Romans, b. vi. c. 46. s. 6.

Which created him enemies enough in the court, and many of ability to do mischief, who knew well how to recompense discourtesies, which they always call'd injuries.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. p. 98.

They would not be uncivil or discourteous in thwarting the mind and pleasure of their company: as in the mean time they might be most rude toward God, in affronting his will and authority, as if any rule of civility could oblige a man to forfeit his salvation; as if it were not rather most cruel discourteste, and barbarous inhumanity to countenance or encourage any man in courses tending to his ruin.
Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 32.

He thought the leaving out the states was something discourteous on the French side: but said, however, he was very glad of the thing being done.
Sir W. Temple. Letter to Lord Arlington.

I neither thought so highly of the chancellor's talents, nor so meanly of my own on the subject of an ecclesiastical reform, as to judge that it became me to overlook his discourtesy in not answering my letter.
Anecdotes of Bp. Watson, vol. ii. p. 158.

DIS-CRA'DLE, v. To come, to rise (as an infant) from the cradle, the nursery; to come forth, to burst forth.

K. Hen. We know all, Clifford, fully, since this meteor,
This airy apparition first discradled
From Tourney into Portugal
Ford. Perkin Warbeck, Act i. sc. 3.

DIS-CRE'DIT, v.
DISCRE'DIT, n.
DISCRE'DITABLE.
DISCRE'DITING, n.
DISCRE'DITOUR.

Fr. Décroire, or descroire; It. Discrédere; Sp. Discredito,—
To disbelieve, to think not secure or assured; to distrust, to have no confidence in; to give or allow no credit unto, to deprive of credit, to disgrace.

In things earnestly desired, though never so likely, we are still suspicious: thinking it more credite to our common wisedome, to discredite most noble and profitable indeuours with distrust, then touch to our valours and safeties to lie wilfully idle.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 667.

Therefore it is not for my Lord of Norfolk to stand so much upon the discrediting the witnesses, and of his own credit, which himself hath so much deceyved.
State Trials. Duke of Norfolk, an. 1571.

Especially rewardes were by decree appointed for their accusers: otherwhiles also for hare witnesses. No informer and promoter was discredited, but his presentmēt taken.
Holland. Suetonius, p. 115.

I think good to deliver it [learning] from the discredits and disgraces which it hath received, all from ignorance, but ignorance severally disguised: appearing sometimes in the zeal and jealousy of divines, sometimes in the severity and arrogancy of politicians, and sometimes in the errors and imperfections of learned men themselves.
Bacon. Of the Advancement of Learning, b. i.

And, supposing every one should take this course, which the wise man reproaches in the licencious discreditors of future accounts.—Mountague. Dev. Ess. pt. ii. Treat. 3. s. 3.

It was feared therefore that hereby an occasion might be given to the enemies of our religion, the Papists, of discrediting our common English Bible and of the doctrines that were founded on it.
Strype. Life of Abp. Whitgift, an. 1604.

He [Tillemont] builds upon a sandy foundation, upon the testimony of forgers, fanatics, and of interested persons who write in their own behalf, and want to discredit their adversaries.—Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

Such a person as this, [Demosthenes] public speakers ought to set before them for imitation, rather than follow the track of those loose and frothy declaimers, who have brought discredit on eloquence.—Blair, vol. ii. Lect. 27.

But, to make all sure, and provide a proper subject for these passions, he contends strongly for God's having a human form no discreditable notion, at that time in the church.—Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iii. s. 4.

DIS-CREET, or
DISCRE'TE, v.
DISCRE'ET, or
DISCRE'TE, adj.
DISCRE'ETNESS.
DISCRE'TION.
DISCRE'TIONAL.
DISCRE'TIONALLY.
DISCRE'TIONARY.
DISCRE'TIVE.
DISCRE'TIVELY.

Fr. adj. Discret; It. and Sp. Discréto; Lat. Discernere, discretum, to separate, to disjoin. See DISCERN.
To discrete, (lit.) is—to separate, to disjoin; and the adj. (lit.) separate, disjoined, distinct. Met. (as now written) discreet, is—
Seeing or perceiving distinctly; distinguishing accurately; circumspect, heedful, provident or prudent; cautious in observing times and seasons; judicious.
Fr. "Discrétion,—(true) discerning; a difference made, or, a sensibleness of difference had, between things; hence, judgment, advisedness, knowledge; wit enough, to find out what's good, to eschew what is bad, and to make the best use of either," (Cotgrave.) See the quotation from Sir T. Elyot.

Preyers of perfyt man. and penaunce discret
Is the levest labour. that oure Lord pleseth.
Piers Ploughman, p. 79.

But now parfourme ghe in dede, that as the discrecioun of wille [animus voluntatis] is redi so be it also of parfourmyng of that that ghe han.—Wiclif. 2 Corynth. c. 8.

Now wol I pray mekely euery person discreet, that redeth or heareth this litel treatise to haue my rude ententing excused.—Chaucer. Of the Astrolabie.

A wif shuld also be measurable in loking, in bering, and in laughing, and discrete in all lure wordes and hire dedes.
Id. The Persones Tale.

Salomon saith, that wordes, that ben spoken discretly by ordinaunce, ben honicombes, for they yeven swetenesse to the soule, and holsomnesse to the body.
Id. The Tale of Melibeus.

And before the temple doore ful soberlie
Dame Peace sat, a curtaine in her honde
And hir beside, wonder discretely
Dame Pacience, sitting there I fonde.
Id. The Assemblie of Fowles.

It [Love] is cunning without science
Wisdome without sapience
Witte without discretion.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

But when thei herde wordes feigned,
The playne trouth it hath disdeigned
Of him that waren so discrete.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

And that al dale maie shewe at eie
Who that the worlde discretely sie.—Id. Ib.

It sitte well euery kynge to haue
Discretion, whan men him craue,
So that he maie his gyfte wite.—Id. Ib.

Geue a discrete man but an occasion, and he wyl be the wyser.—Bible, 1551. Proverbes, c. 10.

I shal chastice the discretely lest thou semeste to thyself to be innocēt.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 1.

Because thou hast asked this thing & hast not asked long lyfe, neither hast asked riches, nor the liues of thyne enemies, but hast asked the discretion to vnderstāde.
Bible, 1551. Kinges, c. 3.

Wherefore it [modestie] seemeth, to be moche lyke to that, whiche men cōmunely call discretion. Al be it discretio in Latin signifieth separation, wherin it is more lyke to election, but as it is communely vsed, it is not onely lyke to modestie, but it is the selfe modestie. For he that forbereth to speke, all thoughe he can doo it bothe wysely and eloquentely bycause neyther in the tyme nor in the herers, he findeth opportunitie, so that no fruyte maye succede of his speche, he therfore is vulgarely called a discrete personne.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. i. c. 25.

And the reason therefore is its continuity; as having its earthly and sulinous parts so exactly resolved that its body is left imporous and not discreted by atomical terminations.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 1.

But, woefull lady, let me you intrete
For to unfold the anguish of your hart:
Mishaps are maistred by advice discrete,
And counsell mitigates the greatest smart.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 7.

Many are in each region passing fair
As the noon skie: more like to Goddesses
Then mortal creatures, gracefull and discreet.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. ii.

—— Yet when I approach
Her loveliness, so absolute she seems
And in herself compleat, so well to know
Her own, that what she wills to do or say
Seems wisest, virtuousest, discretest, best.
Milton Paradise Lost, b. viii.

For not discreetly to compose our parts
Unto the frame of men (which we must be)
Is to put off ourselves, and make our arts
Rebels to nature and society.
Whereby we come to bury our deserts
In th' obscure grave of singularity.—Daniel. Musophilus.

Mirth, and free mindednesse, simplicitie,
Patience, discreetnesse, and benignitie,
Faithfulnesse, heart-struck tenerittie;
These be the lovely play-mates of pure veritie.
More. On the Soul, pt. ii. b. iii. c. 3. s. 58.

Instead of whom, finding there ready prest
Sir Arthegall, without discretion
He at him ran, with ready speare in rest.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 8.

The plural number being used discretively to note out, and design one of many.
Bp. Richardson. On the Old Testament, p. 237.

And did not that discreet Roman Verres, lighting into a wealthy province, plunder and carry off from thence enough to serve himself, his friends and his judges too? And why may not others, whose parts lie the same way, follow such lucky examples?—South, vol. iv. Ser. 4.

The second thing that naturally shews itself in paucity of words, is discretion, and particularly that prime and eminent part of it, that consists in a care of offending.
Id. vol. ii. Ser. 4.

The full meaning of which sublime expressions, [John, xx. 23.] is that not even the Apostles themselves, (much less that any of their fallible successors,) had a discretionary power of forgiving or retaining men's sins.
Clarke, vol. ii. pt. ii. Ser. 10.

The most enthusiastic sect would forsake their founder and teacher, if he should write long and grave epistles, full of matters of fact, which they all know to be false, appealing to miracles, which he had never wrought, and directing them to a discreet use of powers, which themselves never had.
Jortin. The Christian Religion, Dis. 2.

Their constant endeavour should be to exert all the powers of this kind, which the Holy Ghost had bestow'd on them rationally and discreetly, so as to inform and improve others.
Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 24.

My lords, the security is this, and nothing else,—that the judge is a public man, in a great conspicuous station, and that nothing that he does is done in a corner: my lords, this is the security you have for the discretion of a judge
Horsley. Speech. June, 1803.

My lords, what is the security for the proper conduct of any public man in the exercise of any discretional powers with which they may be invested? What is the security for a judge's just exercise of his discretional powers?—Id. Ib.

The charters granted to the several colonies limit their districts only from north to south, leaving their possessions from east to west unlimited and discretional
Johnson. The Political State of Great Britain.

If hour may be used discretionally as one or two syllables, power may surely be allowed the same latitude.
Nares. Elem. of Orthoepy, p. 80.

The absolute governments of Spain and Portugal, and France, on the contrary, take place in their colonies: and the discretionary powers, which such governments commonly delegate to all their inferior officers, are, on account of the great distance, naturally exercised there with more than ordinary violence.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv. c. 7.

Discretive propositions are such wherein various and seemingly opposite judgments are made, whose variety or distinction is noted by the particles, "but, though, yet," &c.; as travellers may change their climate, but not their temper: Job was patient, though his grief was great.
Watts. Logic, pt. ii. c. 2. s. 6.

DIS-CRE'PANT, adj.
DISCRE'PANCE.
DISCRE'PANCY.

Fr. Discrépance, discrépant; It. and Sp. Discrepánte; Lat. Discrepans, from discrepare, to differ in sound, (dis, and crepare, to make a noise.) Generally, as the Fr.—
"Different, disagreeing from, repugnant unto."

Are not all lawes discrepant from Godde's lawes euel, and to al Christen eares odious and noisome?
Hall. Hen. V. an. 2.

Though the words which they spake or wrote were strange & cōtrarye to right beleue, yet the effect of their mening was not much discrepāt from the true fayth of Christes church.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 202.

There hath been euer a discrepance of vesture of youth and age, men and womenne.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. i. c. 3.

So, where hee bringeth in the decree of Pope Calixtus in like manner against the matrimonie of priests, deacons, and subdeacons, he addeth thereto no discrepance of his name: and yet all the world knoweth, that this was Calixtus the Second and not the First, &c.

Fox. Martyrs, p. 1061. Priest's Marriage.

The Egyptians were doubtless the most singular of all the Pagans, and the most oddly discrepant from the rest in their manner of worship.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 460.

It would more safely be evinced from these two seeming discrepancies, that no man can be justified without degrees of both; and that to depend solely upon one is dangerous, for doubtlesse both are meant.—Feltham, pt. ii. Res. 47.

We admit, that it is good and convenient, that in the church there be a bishop of Rome, that may be above other bishops; who may gather them together, to see the examination of the doctrine, and the concord of such, as do teach discrepancies in the church.

Strype. Memorials. Hen. VIII. an. 1550.

I suppose you may have seen two pieces of Tachenius; there are in them many experiments that are pretty, discovering the decrepancy of salts (a thing I have made some inquiries into) and that gold is acid.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 93.

A great deal of the discrepancy observable in the Gospels, arises from omission; from a fact or a passage of Christ's life being noticed by one writer, which is unnoticed by another.—Paley. Evidences, pt. iii. c. 1.

DIS-CRI'MINATE, v. } Lat. Discriminare, atum, to separate, (dis, and crimen, from Gr. Κριν-ειν.) See Crime, and To Discern.
Discri'minate, adj.
Discri'minately.
Discrimina'tion.
Discri'minative.
Discri'minatively.

To separate, to disjoin, to distinguish; to mark or note or observe, differences, distinctions.

On the other side, there be a sort of men that place the greatest stress and discriminating point of Christian religion, in opposing and decrying all instituted ceremonies, though innocent, decent, and without any the least touch of superstition in them.—Hale. Cont. vol. i. Of Religion.

And therefore are by this forewarned that they keep themselves a peculiar people to God, in outward fashions, and consequently in inward purity of heart (in order to which the other was designed) discriminated from all the nations of the earth.—Hammond. Annotations on St. Matthew, c. 23.

Now the means of holding up this discrimination of parties, are certain select opinions, practices, or modes, which are like the badges or colours that give each party its denomination, distinction, and discrimination: and consequently these discriminative badges have as great a rate set upon them as each sect sets upon itself.

Hale. Cont. vol. i. Of Religion.

But if the name of God be prophaned by the disesteem and misusage of the things it is called vpon: then surely it is sanctified when the same are worthily and discriminatively used, that is, as becoming the relation they have to him.—Mede. Diatribe, Dis. 2.

We take upon us to purge his floor, to sever the chaff from the corn, and the tares from the wheat, to discriminate the goats from the sheep; which to perform, will be the work of God's infinite wisdom and justice at the great day.

Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 20.

It is a needless thing to ask whether they have a good conscience; for it is rather a question whether they have any conscience at all, whether they have not sinned themselves beyond all the apprehensions and discriminations of what is good, and what is evil.—Sharp, vol. iii. Ser. 16.

A Briton knows, or if he knows it not,
The Scripture plac'd within his reach, he ought,
That souls have no discriminating hue,
Alike important in their Maker's view.—Cowper. Charity.

His conception of an elegy he has in his preface very judiciously and discriminately explained.

Johnson. Life of Shenstone.

The sculptors of the last age, from not attending sufficiently to this discrimination of the different styles of painting, have been led into many errors.

Sir J. Reynolds, Dis. 10.

As there subsists no longer in the islands much of that peculiar and discriminative form of life, of which the idea had delighted our imagination, we were willing to listen to such accounts of past times as would be given us.

Johnson. Journey to the Western Islands.

DIS-CROWN. To strip or take off, to divest, to deprive of, a crown.

The one restored, for his late
Depriuing nothing mou'd,
The other (wonders tell I now)
Dis-crowned yeat beloued

Warner. Albion's England, b. iii. c. 16.

O the vniust feares of vaine men; he takes not away your earthly kingdomes who gives you heavenly; he discrownes not the body, who crownes the soule; his intention is not to make you lesse great, but more happy.

Bp. Hall. Cont. Christ before Pilate.

Through storm and darkness yawns the rending ground,
The gulph is thick with phantoms, but the chief
Seems royal still, though with her head discrown'd,
And pale, but lovely, with maternal grief
She clasps a babe, to whom her breast yields no relief.

Lord Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 4. s. 167.

DIS-CU'LPATE. } Sp. Disculpar; Lat. Culpa. Of uncertain origin.
Disculpa'tion. }

To clear from blame; to free from censure; or, more usually, to exculpate, (qv.)

Without our consent he cannot obtain a conquest over us, therefore his prevailing temptations do not disculpate sinners that yield to them.—Bates, vol. iv. Ser. 8.

This innoxious and ineffectual character that seems formed upon a plan of apology and disculpation, falls miserably short of the mark of public duty.

Burke. Of the present Discontents.

Presumptuous villain! cried Manfred, dost thou provoke my wrath? tell me: how hast thou escaped from above? thou hast corrupted thy guards, and their lives shall answer it. My poverty, said the peasant calmly, will disculpate them.—Castle of Otranto, p. 31.

DIS-CU'MBENCY. } Lat. Discumbere, to lie apart. Applied to—Discu'bitory. }

The reclining posture in which the Greeks and Romans took their meals;—lying along at their meals.

Among the institutionary rules of youth, he adviseth they might not be permitted to hear iambicks and tragedies before they were admitted into discumbency, or lying along with others at their meals.—Brown. Vulg. Errours, b. v. c. 5.

And so that custom by degrees changed their cubiculary beds into discubitory, and introduced a fashion to go from the baths into these.—Id. Ib. b. v. c. 6.

DIS-CU'MBER. It. Disgombrare, sgombrare. Comber, or cumber, (qv.) cumulo rerum impedire, to impede or hinder by a load of things.

To free from a load or burden; to unload, disburden, exonerate.

Go, sayd Jesu Crist, and have no more will to do sin; sothly, the vengeance of avoutrie is awarded to the peine of helle, but if so be that it be discombered by penitence.

Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

And now a single beam the chief bestrides;
There pois'd awhile above the bounding tides,
His limbs discumbers of the clinging vest,
And binds the sacred cincture round his breast.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. v.

DIS-CURE. Fr. Descourrir, to discover, (qv.)

But certes sir, if that ye
Would ought discure me your wt
I would, as wise God help me so
Amend it, if I can or may.—Chaucer. Dreame.

And if ye list, of all your auenture
The plaine treuth vnto me discure.

Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. ii.

Than I assured hym my fidelyte
His counseyle secrete neuer to discure,
Yf he could fynde in herte to truste me;
Els I prayed hym with all my busy cure
To kepe it hymselfe; for then he might be sure
That no man erthly could hym bewreye,
Whyles of his mynd it were lockte with the keye.

Skelton. The Bouge of Courte.

But if ought else that I mote not devise
I will (if please you it discure) assay
To ease you of that ill, so wisely as I may.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 9.

DISCU'RSION. } Sp. Discurrir; Lat. Discurrere, discursum, to run apart, &c. (met.) from one thought, notion or idea to another. See Discourse, and particularly the examples of Discoursive, i. e. discursive.
Discu'rsist.
Discu'rsive.
Discu'rsively.
Discu'rsiveness.
Discu'rsory.

A passing from thought to thought, topic to topic, from premises to conclusions; reasoning, arguing.

But because the word discourse is commonly taken for the coherence and consequence of words, I will, to avoid equivocation, call it discursion.—Hobbs. Human Nature, c. 3.

Am not I also such another? turning the discursion of his judgment from things abroad, to those that are within himself.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 109.

Grave Time, and Industry my parents are;
My name is Truth, who through the sounds of warre
(Which figure the wise mind's discursive fight)
In mists by nature wrapt, salute the light.

B. Jonson. Masques. Hymenæi.

We may know that we have a principle within, which we do, as it were, feel distinct from our bodies, whereby we think, and we know we think; whereby we do discursively and by way of ratiocination deduce one thing from another.

Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 22.

For here shall your Majestie find Moralitie, like a good hand-maid, waiting on Divinitie, like some great lady, every day in severall dresses; speculation, interchanged with experience; positive theologie with polemicall; textuall with discursorie; popular with scholasticall.

Bp. Hall. Works, vol. i. Ep. Ded.

The practice of benignity, of courtesie, of clemency do at first sight, without aid of any discursive reflection, obtain approbation and applause from men.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 28.

Rational and discursive methods are fit only to be made use of upon philosophers, men of deep reason and improved minds; the generality of mankind would be utterly insensible of their force.—Atterbury, vol. iii. Ser. 8.

The exercise of our minds in rational discursiveness about things in quest of truth—how greatly doth it better us!

Barrow, Ser. 3.

Great discursists were apt to intrigue affairs, dispute the Prince's resolution, and stir up the people.

L. Addison. West Barbary, (1671.) Pref.

DISCU'SS, v. } Fr. Discuter; It. Discutere; Sp. Discutir; Lat. Discutere, to shake apart, (dis, and quatere, to shake.)
Discu'ssing, n.
Discu'ssion.
Discu'ssive.
Discu'tient, adj.
Discu'tient, n.

To shake apart or away, to dissipate, to disperse, to sift; and thus, to seek or search into, examine or try; to investigate, to debate.

Among righte welle lettred men hauyng his conuersacion, he hathe busy discussyng of questions.

R. Gloucester, p. 488, note.

Thus when the night was discussed away, darknesse forlete mee, and to mine eyen repaired againe her first strength.

Chaucer. Boecius, b. i.

For sith it may not here discussed be
Who loueth her best, as said the Tercelet,
Than wol I done this fauour to her, that she
Shal haue right him, on whom her hert is set.

Id. The Assemblie of Fowles.

Behold the time cōmeth, saieth the Lord, ye I wyl rayse vp the rightuous braūche of Dauid whiche shal beare rule, and discusse matters with wisdom, and shall set vp equite and righteousnesse agayne in the earth.

Bible, 1551. Jeremy, c. 23.

Cast upon God thy will, that rights thy wrong:
Give him the charge, for he upright and just
Hath cure of thee, and eke, of thy cares all;
And he shall make thy truth to be discust.

Wyatt, Psalm 37.

I will nowe largely declare them, and shewe the vse of them in euery matter, that cometh in debate, and is needeful through reason to be discussed.

Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 101.

For, she was giuen all to fleshly lust,
And poured forth in sensuall delight,
That all regard of shame she had discust,
And meet respect of honour put to flight

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 1.

I onely speak of the determination: wherein it may be possible they nor can, nor shall erre, that may and have erred in the discussing.

Mountagu. Appeale to Cæsar, pt. ii. c. 2.

Pride and humility are two opposite habits or dispositions of the mind; and, therefore, the discussion and examination of the latter, will of itself give us a discovery of the former.

Hale. Cont. vol. i. Of Humility.

Yet still the doubting soul will be driving of itself from one sign to another, and never find satisfaction in any of them, unless the spirit of God comes in by its undeniable witness to silence all its objections, and to resolve all its doubts by a kind of peremptory and discussive voice, that it is so, otherwise there is no end of looking after signs, for they will still leave the soul full of perplexities.

Hopkins, Ser. 13.

The pickle Muria likewise, or that salt liquor that commeth from salt fish, called in Latin Salsugo, it is astringent, biting, discussive, and drying.—Holland. Pliny, b. xxxi. c. 9.

Supposing we should grant that a vigorous heat and a strong arm may by a violent friction discuss some tumor of a distempered body, yet what would all this signifie to the mighty cures which were wrought so easily and with a word speaking, and at such a great distance as were by Christ and his Apostles!—Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 9.

Various discussions tear our heated brain,
Opinions often turn; still doubts remain;
And who indulges thought, increases pain.

Prior. Solomon, b. i.

I then made the fomentation more discutient by the addition of salt and sulphur.—Wiseman. Surgery, b. i. c. 7.

Make your bandage more strict, and foment with discutients.—Id. Ib. b. vii. c. 1.

The softness of my hands was secured by medicated gloves, and my bosom rubbed with a pomade prepared by my mother, of virtue to discuss pimples, and clear discolourations.
Rambler, No. 130.

The author, conducted by the clue of his materials into the ancient histories of France and England, grew so interested in those obsolete quarrels, that he tacked to an antiquarian discussion a ridiculous invective against the English and their historians.
Walpole. Catalogue of Engravers. Ralph Aggas.

DIS-DAIN, v.
DISDA'IN, s.
DISDA'INFUL.
DISDA'INFULLY.
DISDA'INFULNESS.
DISDA'INING, s.
DISDA'INISHLY.
DISDA'INOUS.
DISDA'INOUSLY.

Fr. Desdaigner; It. Disdegnare, sdegnare; Sp. Desdenar; Lat. De-dignari, (de, and dignari, to think or esteem worthy.) See DEIGN.

To think or esteem unworthy, undeserving; to think, esteem or consider unworthy, unbecomingly; to scorn, to despise, to contemn, to spurn at; not to vouchsafe, not to condescend.

Vor thys luther Saxons abbyt gret dedeyn
Vorto holde me treuthe. R. Gloucester, p. 172.

And disciplis seynge hadden dedeyn and seiden, wherto is this loss? For it myghte be sold for myche and be goven to pore men.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 26.

What see she in me, what defaut or offence,
What haue I doe that she on me disdaine.
Chaucer. Certaine Balades.

Lordlings, (quod he) now harkeneth for the beste;
But take it not, I pray you, in disdain.
Id. The Prologue, v. 791.

His loking was not disdeinous
Ne proude, but meke and full pesible;
About his necke he bare a Bible.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

So goth the proude vice vnmilde,
That he disdeigneth all lawe,
He not what is to be felawe,
And serue maie he not for pride.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

But Phebus, which hath great disdain,
Of that his maiden was forlain,
Anone as he to Troie came,
Uengeance vpon this dede he nam
And sent a commune pestilence.—Id. Ib. b. v.

Who so gladly halseth the golden meane,
Void of daungers advis'dly hath his home,
Not with lothsome muck, as a den uncleane,
Nor palace like, wherat disdain may glome.
Surrey. Prayse of Meane and Constant Estate.

Yet I gesse vnder disdainfull brow
One beam of ruth is in her cloudy looke,
Which comfortes the mind, that erst for fear shooke.
Wyat. The Wauering Louer, &c.

Such as be in meane estate among them that be but meanly enuious, liue more surely, than such as ar set in high estate and priuitie beyng riche, to be passioned among enemies, that disdainfully wold put them vnder.
Golden Boke, c. 13.

The ardent desire of hir hert had shaken of al shame and bashfulnesse from her in thys behalfe, though she knew well inough with howe great stately disdeignfulnesse, and straunge countenance the Pharisiacall sort vsed to turne awai their faces from sinners, and not once to looke vpon them.—Udal. Luke, c. 7.

Nor set her coũtenãce to cruelty and frowning, nor ouer sad and sorrowfull, or disdainishly, nor diuersly, nor full of pleasance, or ouer chereful.
Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 12.

At these wordes all they that were present, began to murmure, and to caste a disdainous and greuous loke vpon Gisippus.—Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. ii. c. 12.

Remembre howe disdaynouslye and lothsomly they are pleased wyth gyftes that haue thys homelye adage in theyr mouthes, he geueth me a pygge of myne owne sowe.
Bale. Apology, Pref.

So proude she shined in her princely state,
Looking to heauen; for earth she did disdaine,
And sitting high; for lowly she did hate:
Lo, vnderneath her scornefull feete, was layne
A dreadfull dragon with an hideous traine.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 1.

By which he saw the vgly monster plaine,
Halfe like a serpent horribly displaide:
But th' other halfe did woman's shape retaine,
Most lothsome, filthy, foule, and full of vile disdaine.
Id. Ib.

And, which was worse than all this, she affected in all companies, wher she let herself out to any freedom, a very negligent and disdainful mention of the person of the king.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. ii. p. 641.

Th' undaunted fiend what this might be admir'd—
Admir'd, not fear'd; God and his Son except,
Created thing naught valued he nor shun'd;
And with disdainful look thus first began.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

But shall the blood of her that loves me then
Be sacrific'd to her disdainfulness
That scorns my love? And shall I hope to win
Mercy from her, by being merciless?
Daniel. The Passion of a Distressed Man. Pars altera.

Fair Virtue, where stayst thou in poor exile,
Leaving the court from whence thou tookst thy name?
While in thy place is stept disdaining Vice,
And Flattery, base son of Need and Shame.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 10.

There dwelt the scorn of vice, and pity too,
For those that did what she disdain'd to do,
So gentle and severe, that what was bad,
At once her hatred, and her pardon had.
Waller. Upon the Death of my Lady Rich.

These clamours with disdain the Scylla heard;
Much grudg'd the praise, but more the robb'd reward.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. v.

In vain he thus attempts her mind to move,
With tears and pray'rs, and late repenting love.
Disdainfully she look'd; then turning round,
But fix'd her eyes unmov'd upon the ground.
Id. Ib. b. vi.

There was never such beastliness of minds, such disdainfulness in hearts.—Strype. Mem. Queen Mary, an. 1554.

Urge we the noble Hector to demand
A single chief to cope with him. The Greeks,
Disdaining such defiance, will attend
The hero's summons, and a truce ensues.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. vii.

Let not ambition mock their useful toil,
Their homely joys, and destiny obscure;
Nor grandeur hear with a disdainful smile
The short and simple annals of the poor.
Gray. An Elegy written in a Country Churchyard.

Attentive only to exhibit his ideas clear and exact, resting wholly on his sense and distinctness, he appears to reject disdainfully all embellishment, which, on some occasions, may be thought to render his manner somewhat hard and dry.—Blair, vol. i. Lec. 10.

DIS-DE'IFY. Dis, and deify, (qv.) to deprive of, or deny his Deity or Godhead.

The Papists pourtray him as an old man: and by this means, disdeifie him, derogating also from his royalty, by their odious interposing of merit.—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 16.

These are not only guilty of disdeifying him, but they turne God into a prodigy, and confirm such as are yet no Christians more strongly in their idolatry.
Id. Letters, Let. 17.

DIS-EASE, v.
DISE'SE, s.
DISE'SEDLY.
DISE'SEDNESS.
DISE'SEFUL.
DISE'SEFULNESS.
DISE'SEMENT.

Fr. adj. Desaise.

To deprive of ease, to make or cause to be uneasy; to disquiet, to disturb, to trouble; to be or cause to be in pain, in sickness; to affect, infect with pain or sickness; to be unsound, unhealthy, morbid; afflicted with any distemper, malady, weakness or infirmity. See MIS-EASE.

None was more benyng than he to men, that were in disese or in tourment.—R. Gloucester, p. 483. Note 7.

Go & mak his pes, or he do the more stoure,
& thou to thi dese may haf the frute & floure.
R. Brunne, p. 166.

And Jhesus seide, who is that touchide me? and whanne alle men denyeden, Petre seide and thei that weren with him, Comaundour, the puple thrusten, and disesen [affligunt] thee, and thou seist who touchide me?—Wiclif. Luke, c. 8.

For which thing I deme hem that of hethene men ben converted to god to be not disesid [inquietari].
Id. Dedis, c. 15.

And disese [ærumnæ] of the world & disceit of richessis and othere charge of covetise entrith and stranglith the word, and it is maad without fruyt.—Id. Mark, c. 4.

In the world ghe schulen haue disese, [pressuram] but triste ghe I haue ouercome the world.—Id. John, c. 16.

And eke the sonne Titan gan he chide
And said, O foole, wel mai men thee dispise,
That hast all night the Dauning by thy side,
And suffrest her so sone vp fro thee rise
For to disease vs louers in this wise.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. iii.

And if it happe a man be in disease
She doeth her busineese, and her full paine
With al her might, him to comfort and please
If fro his disease she might him restrain.
Id. House of Fame, b. i.

Body In disease annoyeth ye vnderstanding In soule, a diseasely habitacion letteth the wits many things, and namely in sorrow.—Chaucer. Testament of Loue, b. iii.

But in myne herte I am diseased
With many a murmour, God it wote.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

I pray you hertely yt wol wochesaf to send me a lettr as hastely as se may yf wryhyn he non dysease to yow.
Fenn. Original Letters, Hen. VI. vol. iii. p. 24.

While he yet spake, there came frõ the ruler of the synagoge's house, certayne which said: Thy daughter is dead. why dyseasest thou the Master anye further.
Bible, 1551. Mark, c. 5.

And whan he was a good dystaunce from the hoste of Saule, he cryed with a loude voyce to Abner, whiche was thaune marshall of the armye of Saul, who answered and sayde, what arte thou that thus dyseasest the kynge, whiche is now at his reste.—Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. iii. c. 6.

But as before, the consideration of a prison had disgraced all ornaments, so now the same consideration made them attend all diseasefulness.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

As a tall ship tossed in troublous seas,
Whom raging winds, threat'ning to make the prey
Of the rough rocks, do diuersly disease,
Meete two contrary billowes by the way.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 2.

Shepheards they weren of the best,
and liued in lowly lees:
And eith their soules be now at rest,
why done we them disease.
Id. Shepheard's Calendar. July.

For, nusances and grievances I will for the present only single out one, that ye present the decays of highways and bridges, for where the majesty of a king's house drawe recourse and access, it is both disgraceful to the king, and diseaseful to the people, if the ways near abouts, be not fair and good.
Bacon. Charge upon the Commission of the Verge.

For it is not probable that men of great means and plentiful estate will endure the travel, diseasements, and adventures of going thither in person.
Id. Of Plantations in Ireland.

They should choose such places as were open to the most favourable aspects and influence of the heavens, where there was a well-tempered soil, clear air, pure springs of water, that diseased persons coming from unhealthy places might obtain recovery.—Bates. Dis. of the Christian Religion, c. 3.

Though all afflictions are evils in themselves, yet they are good for us, because they discover to us our disease and tend to our cure.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 9.

This is a restoration to some former state; not that state of indigency and diseasedness.—Burnet. Theory.

——— Then famine, want, and pain,
Sunk to the grave their fainting limbs: but us,
Diseaseful dainties, riot and excess,
And feverish luxury destroy.
Dr. Warton. The Enthusiast.

Fly, ye profane! If not, draw near with awe,
Receive the blessing, and adore the chance,
That threw in this Bethesda your disease:
If unrestor'd by this, despair your cure.
Young. The Complaint, Night 2.

DIS-EDGE, v. To deprive of its edge, keenness, sharpness; to blunt, to dull.

——— And I greeue my selfe,
To thinke, when thou shalt be disedg'd by her,
That now thou tyrest on, how thy memory
Will then be pang'd by me.
Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act iii. sc. 4.

DIS-EMBA'RK, v.
DISEMBA'RKING, s.

See DISBARK. It. Sbarcare; Fr. Désembarquer,—"To disembark or unload a ship; also, to land or go ashore out of a ship," &c. (Cotgrave.)

Great Brute first disembark'd his wand'ring Trojans there.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. i.

This is also strongly proved, for that out of Carthage were sent the next day five hundred horse, to trouble him in his disembarking.—Raleigh. Hist. of the World, b. v. c. 3.

However, the land is not far off, and by disembarking hence we shall suddenly be discharged of all our molestations.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 15.

——— Those stood off'ring to the God
The thighs, his portion, when the Ithacans
Push'd right ashore, and, furling close the sails,
And making fast their moorings, disembark'd.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. iii.

DIS-EMBA'RRASS, v. Fr. "Desembarrasser,—

To unpester, disentangle; rid from intricateness or trouble," (Cotgrave.)

One good effect of this, I hope, may be, that you will have disembarrassed yourself of all sort of business that may detain you here, and so be ready to go with us.
Bp. Berkeley. To Mr. Thomas Prior, Ex. 7.

We have disembarrassed it of all the intricacy which arose from the different forms of declension, of which the Romans had no fewer than five: and from all the irregularities in these several declensions.—Blair, vol. i. Lec. 8.

DIS-EMBA'Y, v. To get out of, to clear the bay.

The fair inamorata, (who from far
Had spy'd the ship, which her heart's treasure bare,
Put off from land: and now quite dis-embay'd,
Her cables coiled, and her anchors weigh'd,
Whilst gentle gales her swelling sails did court,
To turn in scorn her poop upon the port)
With frantic speed from the detested town
To the deserted shore comes hurrying down.
Sherburne. Forsaken Lydia.

DIS-EMBI'TTER, v. To free from bitterness, from acrimony.

Encourage such innocent amusements as may disembitter the minds of men, and make them mutually rejoice in the same agreeable satisfactions.—Addison. Freeholder.

DIS-EMBO'DY. See Disbody. Used in our acts of parliaments respecting the militia.

To embody, (applied to soldiery,) is to convoke or assemble into a body, or corps.

To disembody,—to dismiss them from such assemblage, and the services attending upon it.

DIS-EMBO'GUE, v. I believe, says Skinner, from obsolete Fr. Dis or des-emboucher; It. Sboccare: said of a river, where it discharges itself by a mouth or estuary into the sea. Fr. Bouche; It. Bocca, the mouth, from the Lat. Bucca, caritas interior genarum. Fr. Embouchure, a mouth or passage. Embogue has not been adopted by us.

—— My ships ride in the bay
Ready to disembogue, tackled and mann'd
Even to my wishes.
Beaum. & Fletch. Knight of Malta, Act i. sc. 3.

If I get in adoors, not the power o' th' countrey,
Nor all my aunt's curses shall disembogue me.
Id. The Little Thief, Act v. sc. 1.

You, yeoman fewterer, conduct me to
The lady of the mansion, or my poniard
Shall disembogue thy soul.
Syl. O terrible! disembogue!
Massinger. Maid of Honour, Act ii. sc. 2.

Fair queen, who dost on fruitful Egypt smile,
Who sway'st the sceptre of the Pharian isle,
And sevenfold falls of disemboguing Nile;
Relieve, in this our last distress, she said,
A suppliant mother, and a mournful maid.
Dryden. Ovid. Met. b. ix.

Methinks I hear the bellowing demagogue
Dumb sounding declamations disembogue,
Expressions of immeasurable length,
Where pompous jargon fills the place of strength.
Falconer. The Demagogue.

DIS-EMBO'SOMED. To remove, to depart, to disclose from the bosom.

Uninjur'd from our praise can he escape,
Who, disembosom'd from the father, bows
The heaven of heavens, to kiss the distant earth!
Young. The Complaint, Night 9.

DIS-EMBO'WEL, v. See Disbowel, and Bowel.

To draw out, to deprive of, the bowels, the entrails, the interior contents; to eviscerate.

So [i. e. like a Catchpole] her disbowel'd web
Arachne in a hall or kitchen, spreads
Obvious to vagrant flies.
J. Philips. The Splendid Shilling.

Such were Mr. Anderson's remarks to me, who also told me, that on his enquiring into the method of effecting this preservation of their dead bodies, he had been informed, that soon after their death, they are disbowelled, by drawing the intestines and other viscera out.
Cook. Voyages, vol. vi. b. iii. c. 1.

DIS-EMBRA'NGLE, v. Dis, and embrangle. See Brangle.

To free from dispute, squabbling or quarrelling.

For God's sake disembrangle these matters, that I may once be at ease to mind my other affairs of the college, which are enough to employ ten persons.
Bp. Berkeley. Letters, Ex. 36.

DIS-EMBROIL, v. To free from broil or brawl, confusion, trouble, disorder.

Thus disembroil'd, they take their proper place:
The next of kin contiguously embrace:
And foes are sunder'd, by a larger space.
Dryden. Ovid. Met. b. i.

The system of his politics, when disembroiled and cleared of all those incoherences and independent matters that are woven into this motley piece, will be as follows.
Addison. The Whig Examiner, No. 4.

DIS-EMPIRE. To deprive of empire, of command.

Yet not unlikely other motives also might forcibly perswade him to relent; the remembrance of the Emperour Otho, whom this very Pope (not without foule blot of injustice and lenity) had both eagerly advanced & furiously disempyred.—Speed. K. John, b. ix. c. 5. s. 43.

DIS-EMPLOY, v. To free from, to dismiss from, the engagements, the occupations of business.

But if personal defaillance be thought reasonable to disimploy the whole calling, then neither clergy nor laity should ever serve a prince
Bp. Taylor. Episcopacy Asserted.

DIS-ENABLE. See Disable.

To deprive of ability, of strength, power, force; to strip or deprive or divest of those qualities, which enable or empower; to disqualify.

This was the book then in the lords' hands; and I assure myself that time picked for it, that the sight of it might damp me, and disenable me to speak.
State Trials. Abp. Laud, an. 1640.

He [Good] was presented to the vicaridge of Yarnton, near Oxon, by the chancellor and masters of the University, by virtue of an act of Parliament begun at Westminster, 5th November, 3 Jac. I. disinabling recusants from presenting to church livings.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

DIS-ENAMOURED. Freed from the captivity, the thraldom, of love.

That which most displeaseth me in this, is, that he makes Don Quixote disenamour'd of Dulcinea del Toboso.
Shelton. Don Quixote, vol. iv. c. 18.

DIS-ENCHA'NT, v. } Fr. Désenchanter,—
Disencha'ntment. } To free from enchantment; from the influence or power of charms or spells; to deliver from delusion, from fascination; to dis-encharm.

Where are your promised aids, your charms, your herbs,
Your deep-red scholar's spells and magic rites?
Can all these disenchant me?
Massinger. Unnatural Combat, Act iv. sc. 1.

My early mistress, now my ancient Muse,
That strong Circean liquor cease t' infuse,
Wherewith thou didst intoxicate my youth,
Now stoop with disinchanted wings to truth.
Denham. Progress of Learning, Pref.

All concluded in the promise, which he held for certain, of the disenchantment of Dulcinea.
Shelton. Don Quixote, vol. iv. c. 22.

There is a knight who takes the field
With Saxon pen, and sable shield;
Who doubtless can relieve my ghost,
And disenchant me from the post.
Fenton. To the Knight of the Sable Shield.

No reading or study had contributed to disinchant the fairy land round him, every thing furnished him with an opportunity of mirth.
Goldsmith. Ess. Happiness depends on Constitution.

DIS-ENCHA'RM, v. To free from the influence of charms or incantations; to disenchant; to deliver from delusion, from fascination.

And this lasted till he was told of his duty, and matter of obedience, and fear of a sin had disincharmed him and caused him to take care lest he lose the substance out of greediness to possess the shadow.—Bp. Taylor, pt. ii. Ser. 1.

DIS-ENCOU'RAGEMENT. The original folio of the Spectator reads disencouragement. The common reading is discouragement. See Discourage.

On the 24th of July, 1659, our author (South) preached the assize sermon at St. Mary's, wherein he took occasion to speak of the great discouragement of learning
Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

Fortunatus blustering always, pushes on, promising much, and performing little, with obsequiousness offensive to people of sense; strikes at all, catches much the greater part; raises a considerable fortune by imposition on others, to the discouragement and ruin of those who trade in the same way.—Spectator, No. 443.

DIS-ENCU'MBER, v. See Discumber.

To free from, relieve from, a load or burden; to unload, to disburden, to exonerate.

The court was full of discourse and expectation, that the king being now disincumbred of the care of his daughter, would towards this feast of St. George fill up either all or some at least of those places that had lain vacant so long
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 4[illegible]

In my style I have profess'd to imitate the divine Shakspeare; which that I might perform more freely, I have discumber'd myself from rhyme.
Dryden. Pref. to Antony & Cleopatra

There disencumber'd from her chains, the ties
Of toys terrestrial, she can rove at large,
There freely can respire, dilate, extend,
In full proportion let loose all her powers;
And, undeluded, grasp at something great
Young. The Complaint, Night 9.

The public debt is an heavy and vexatious load on each man's property, from which both his interest and his comfort must prompt him to disencumber himself and his posterity.—Anecdotes of Bp. Watson, vol. ii. p. 42.

DIS-ENGA'GE, v. } Fr. Disengager,—
Disenga'gement. } To free, deliver or release from engagements, from any thing which binds or confines or holds fast; to free from an obligation, an attachment, an affection or desire; to disjoin, separate or disentangle.

When our mind's eyes are disengag'd and free,
They clearer, farther, and distinctly see,
They quicken sloth, perplexities untie,
Make roughness smooth, and hardness mollify
Denham. Of Prudence.

All our witnesses for the most part, are strangers to us, all of them better known and more obliged to the defendant than to us: they are persons disinterested, disengaged, who neither gain nor lose by the trial, however the sentence go.
State Trials. Cd. Fiennes, an. 1643.

Wherefore, this dis engagement of the spirit from the voluptuous appetites of the flesh, is to be studied and intended, when the health and vigour of the body tolerates most the mind's combination towards the senses satisfaction.
Montague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 10. s. 1.

Low as he stoop'd, a mighty stone to rear,
Full in the reins descends the pointed spear;
Then, as he disengag'd the dart with pain,
Fir'd at the sight, bold Hisbon rush'd in vain
Against the prince. Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. x.

We should also beforehand disengage our mind from other things, that we may the more effectually attend to the new object, which we wish to remember.
Beattie. Moral Science, pt. i. c. 1. s. 6.

Like a reed torn from its native bank, like wax separated from its delicious honey, the soul of man bewails its disunion with melancholy musick, and sheds burning tears, like lighted tapers, waiting passionately for the moment of its extinction, as a disengagement from earthly trammels, and the means of returning to its Only Beloved.
Sir W. Jones. On the Persians, Dis. 6.

DIS-ENNO'BLE. To strip, divest or deprive of any thing ennobling; of that which confers renown, or a good name.

The first are such who are not enough sensible that vice and ignorance taint the blood, and that an unworthy behaviour degrades and disennobles a man in the eye of the world as much as birth and family aggrandize and exalt him.—Guardian, No. 137.

DIS-ENRO'LL, v. To enroll, is to write down in a roll or volume, in a register, a list. To disenroll, is,—

To strike out, blot out from a roll, volume, register or list.

From need of tears he will defend your soul,
Or make a rebaptizing of one tear;
He cannot (that is, he will not) disenroll
Your name.—Donne. Letter to the Countess of Bedford

DIS-ENSLA'VE, v. See Beslave.

To free, release or deliver from slavery, from servitude, from captivity.

They expected such an one as should disenslave them from the Roman yoke, make the senate stoop to their Sanhedrim, and the Capitol do homage to their temple.
South, vol. iii. Ser. 8.

DIS-ENTA'NGLE, v. DISENTA'NGLEMENT. } Tangle, Minshew derives, ab angulis (q.d.) inter angulos ducere. Skinner, from tan, a twig. Junius from Ger. Tang, (A. S. Tang,) forceps, pincers, Eng. Tongs. To intangle, he says, is properly to seize with pincers, (forcipe,) and to hold at pleasure, when so seized. Fr. Tenailler; It. Attanagliare. Serenius gives the Goth. Teingua, to bind together. The A. S. Tian, to tie, to bind, to fasten, is probably the root.

To free, deliver or release from entanglement; from being tied, bound, folded, knitted, laced, perplexed together; to release or relieve from perplexity, embarrassment or intricacy.

And, whereas you say that "(as fortune would have it) St. Austin never writ but four epistles to Marcellinus," this is but your usual misfortune, to hamper yourself worse when you would disentangle your own errours.
Marvell. Works, vol. ii. p. 507.

But because we are bound, by the condition of our nature, to ascend to those pure and intellectual ideas, through the medium of sensible images, and to judge of these divine qualities by their evident acts and exertions, it becomes extremely hard to disentangle our idea of the cause from the effect by which we are led to know it.
Burke. Sublime and Beautiful.

In the disentanglement of this distressful tale, [the Nut-browne Maide,] we are happy to find, that all his cruelty was tenderness, and his inconstancy the most invariable truth; his levity an ingenious artifice, and his perversity the friendly disguise of the firmest affection.
Warton. History of English Poesy, vol. iii. s. 26.

DIS-ENTHRA'LL. Thrall. Sw. Trall; A. S. Thral, which Ihre thinks are from thre-an, to chastise, to correct; and applied to those slaves whom their masters chastised at pleasure.

To free, deliver or release from thraldom; from servitude or slavery; from the dominion of a master or tyrant.

Answer me when I call,
God of my righteousness,
In straits and in distress
Thou didst me disenthrall. Milton, Ps. 4. l. 4.

Hereupon, the word being to disenthral the soul from it, must have the same effect upon it, that the sword has upon the body, which is, by penetration and dividing the continuity of the parts.—South, vol. xi. Ser. 1.

DIS-ENTHRO'NE, v. See DETHRONE.
To remove from a throne.

Either to disinthrone the king of heav'n
We warr, if warr be best, or to regain
Our own right lost.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

In Servius name—
I charge thee, Tarquin, disinthrone thyself,
And throwe thee at our feet, prostrate for mercy.
Heywood. Rape of Lucrece, b. ii.

DIS-ENTI'TLE, v. To deprive of that which entitles, of the title or name, under which a claim to certain rights is made or granted.

All that eat are not made Christ's body, and all that eat not are not disentitled to the resurrection; the spirit does the work without the sacrament and in the sacrament when 'tis done.—Bp. Taylor. Of the Real Presence, § 7.

(1.) The reason that every ordinary offence does not disentitle a son to the love of his father, as it does the creature to the protection and favour of his Creator, is not from the obliging nature of that relation beyond the other, but from the law and command of God.—South, vol. viii. Ser. 5.

DIS-ENTRA'IL, v. Fr. Désentrailler.
To deprive of the entrails, bowels or intestines; to disembowel.

——— He with his iron flaile
Gan drive at him, with so huge might and maine
That all his bones, as small as sandy graile
He broke, and did his bowels disentraile;
Crying in vaine for helpe, when help was past
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 9.

DIS-ENTRA'NCE, v. To free, relieve, restore, from trance, or swoon.

Ralpho by this time disentranc'd
Upon his bum himself advanc'd,
Though sorely bruis'd.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3.

DIS-E'SPERANCE. "Fr. Désespérance,—Desperateness, despair," (Cotgrave.) See DESPAIR.

And Troilus he founde alone a bedde
That lay, as done these louers in a traunce
Betwixen hope and derke disesperaunce.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. ii.

DIS-ESPOU'SE, v. To free or release from espousal; to debar or prevent from espousal; to prevent the union of those bethrothed.

——— Sad task, yet argument
Not less but more heroic then the wrauth
Of stern Achules on his foe pursu'd
Thrice fugitive about Troy wall; or rage
Of Turnus for Lavinia disespous'd.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

DIS-ESTE'EM, v. DISESTE'EM, n. DISESTE'EMER. DISESTIMA'TION. } "Fr. Déscstimer,—To disesteem, neglect, contemn, set nought by, make no reckoning of," (Cotgrave.)

Which makes me, as I do, hide from the eye
Of the misjudging vulgar, that will deem,
That sure there was in me some reason why
Which made thee thus my bed to disesteem.
Daniel. Octavia to Marcus Antonius.

If the name of God be prophaned by the disesteeme and misusage of the things it is called upon, then surely it is sanctified when the same are worthily and discriminately used, that is, as becoming the relation they have to him.
Mede. Diatribe, p. 62.

Three kinds of contempt: disestimation, disappointment, calumny.—Bp. Reynolds. On the Passions, c. 30.

With a load of imperfections on their heads, they go on in opposition to general disesteem, while they who are every way their superiors, languish away their days, tho' possess'd of the approbation and good will of all who knew them.
Tatler, No. 168.

It would extremely trouble me to see you a disesteemer of those divine things, which as long as a man under-values, the possession of heaven itself would not make him happy.
Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 66.

Like some fair hum'rists, life is most enjoy'd,
When courted least; most worth, when disesteem'd.
Young. The Complaint, Night 3.

DIS-E'XERCISE, v. To deprive of exercise or employment.

Last, that it will be primely to the discouragement of all learning, and the stop of truth, not only by disexercising and blunting our abilities, in what we know already, but by hind'ring and cropping the discovery that might be yet further made, both in religious and civil wisdom.
Milton. Of Unlicens'd Printing.

DIS-FAME, v. See DEFAME.

Italie: a good schole-house of wholesome doctrine, and worthy masters of commendable scholers; where the master had rather disfame [in the margin diffame] himselfe for hys teaching, than not shame his scholer for hys learning. A good nature of the master; and faire conditions of the scholers.—Ascham. The Schole Master.

DIS-FA'NCY, v. Not to fancy; to have no fancy, no fanciful liking, no partiality for.

Orthodox and heretical titles, that every man will apply as he lists, the one to himself and his adherents, the other to all others that he disfancies.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 545.

DIS-FA'SHION, v. To disform, to disfigure.

If God would neuer punish glotony, yet bringeth it punishment ynoughe wt itself: it disfigureth the face, discoloreth the skin, & disfashioneth the body.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 99.

DIS-FA'VOUR, v. DISFA'VOUR, n. DISFA'VOURABLE. DISFA'VOURABLY. DISFA'VOURER. } "Fr. Disfavoriser, to disfavour, not to favour; to withdraw his favour from, to banish from his favour," (Cotgrave.)

For I shal sende him amonge those ypocrityshe people, amonge the people that haue deserued my disfauoure shall I send him.—Bible, 1551. Of Esay, c. 10.

Beholde Faustine howe ye women are so extreme in all heedlong extremitees, that with a litteli favour ye will exalt, augment, and grow into gret pride: and with a littel disfavour, ye recouer great hatred.—Golden Boke, c. 19.

Master Vescie, vpon respit granted him, would hang in hope, that either the life of your maiestie (which God forbid) should be shortned; or that I, in tract of time, would be disfauoured.—Holinshed. Description of Ireland, c. 6.

And yet, though he was not superiour to all other men in the affection, or rather resignation of the king, so that he might dispense favours and disfavours according to his own election, he had a full share in his master's esteem, who look'd upon him as a wise and able servant, and worthy of the trust he reposed in him.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. p. 4[illegible].

And manie other valient personages, who being entred the sea tasted fortune disfauourable, for by the tempestuous winde that rose, their ships were scattered in sunder, their masts were broke downe, their sailes rent, and many of the small vessels that were victuallers were drowned.
Stow. Rich. II. an. 137[illegible].

Let the scrupulous questioners of these acts of providence, which seem severe towards the sons of men, exhibit a cause proportunate to this act of it in favour of mankind and then, they may be allowed to scruple the reason of these occurrences, which look so aversly to our reasons, and so disfavourably to our nature.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 4. s. 4.

It was verily thought, that had it not been for four great disfavourers of that voyage, the enterprize had succeeded.
Bacon.

This would not only increase the people, but also turn the vein of that we call natural to that of legal propagation, which has ever been encouraged and honoured, as the other has been disfavoured by all institutions of government.
Sir W. Temple. Of Popular Discontents.

Many a good acquaintance has been lost from a general prepossession in his disfavour, and a severe aspect has often hid under it a very agreeable companion.
Tatler, No. 211.

DIS-FI'GURE, v. DISFI'GURE, n. DISFI'GUREMENT. } "Fr. Défigurer or desfigurer,—to disfigure, deform, deface, disgrace, to spoyl the fashion, mar the figure of," (Cotgrave.)

But yet I say, ariseth let vs daunce
And cast your widow's habite to mischaunce,
What list you thus your selfe to disfigure.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. ii.

He [Midas] preied hire, that to no creature
She n olde tellen of his disfigure.
Id. The Wif of Bathes Tale, v. 6542.

For they were both in like traunces, both raulshed from themselues, both tormented alike, both disfigured, like terrible ougly and grysely in sight, and their mouthes drawen aside eue to the very eares of them.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 2[illegible]4.

——— They doe arriue anone,
Where sate a gentle lady all alone,
With garments rent, and hair discheueled,
Wringing her hands, and making pitteous mone;
Her swollen eyes were much disfigured,
And her faire face, with teares was foule blubbered.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 1.

Grace doth us this good office, by a detecting to us the nakedness of our nature, not by a covering and palliation of her disfigurements.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 6. s. 2.

So may we make a probable judgment of the soundnesse of a religion by the faire and healthful aspect thereof, and by the ill looks and disfigurements of some religions, we may warrantably sentence the unsoundness of them.
Id. Ib. pt. i. Treat. 3. s. 2.

Nor would his slaughter'd army now have lain
On Afric's sands, disfigur'd with their wounds,
To gorge the wolves and vultures of Numidia.
Addison. Cato, Act i. sc. 4.

His capital work was the facade of St. Sulpice, but the enormous masses of stone which he has heaped on the tops of the towers, and which are considered enough to disfigure the view of the city itself, destroy the result of so superb a frontispiece.—Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iv. c. 6.

Uncommon expressions, strong flashes of wit, pointed similes, and epigrammatic turns, especially when they recur too frequently, are a disfigurement rather than any embellishment of discourse.—Hume, Ess. 20.

DIS-FLESH, v. To free, or release from, to get rid of, to waste the flesh.

The best is, said the other, not to run, that the lean strain not himself with too much weight, nor the fat man disflesh himself.—Shelton. Don Quixote, vol. iv. c. 25.

DIS-FO'REST, v. See DISAFFOREST.
To strip of the privilege of forest lands; to render common.

He much ingratiated himself with the country people by disforesting Mendip; beef better pleasing the husbandman's palate than venison.—Fuller. Worthies. Shropshire.

DIS-FRA'NCHISE, v. DISFRA'NCHISEMENT. } Fr. Désfranchir; It. Disfrancare. To enfranchise, (Skinner,) is to endow with the liberties and privileges of a free citizen. To disfranchise, is—
To deprive of certain liberties or privileges.

In the seconde yere of the kynge, but in ye sayd mayr's tyme, Sir Wyllyam Fitzwyllyam was disfraunchysed, because he wolde not be shyryfe.—Fabyan, vol. ii. an. 1509.

The ancient Pagan Romans, as they reputed all common actors infamous (as the civilians and our owne statutes now esteeme them) disfranchising them their tribe as unworthy persons.—Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act v. sc. 5.

How reasonable soever this defence was, the House of Peers adjudged him to be disfranchised, and incapable of any office in the city.—Clarendon. Civil War, vol. ii. p. 486.

And they in mortal battle vanquish'd,
Are of their charter disenfranchis'd.—Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 2.

The proof was so full and clear, that they ordered a bill to disfranchise the town for that bribery, and yet, because the bribes were given by a man of their party, they would not pass a vote on him as guilty of it.
Burnet. Own Time, an. 1702.

They went further; they disfranchised them; and having once begun with an act of injustice, they could set no bounds to it.—Burke. A Vindication of Natural Society.

The only reason which can be assigned for this disfranchisement, has a tendency more deeply to ulcerate their minds than the act of exclusion itself.
Id. Letter to Sir Hercules Langrishe, M.P.

DIS-FRI'AR, v. To strip, divest or deprive of the rank or order of a friar.

That ouer great severity would cause a great number to disfriar themselves, and fly to Geneva.
Sir B. Sandys. State of Religion.

Many did quickly un-nun and disfriar themselves, whose aides formerly used to go loose.—Fuller. Holy War, p. 238.

DIS-FU'RNISH, v. } To strip or deprive of DISFU'RNISHING, n. } furniture; of any thing
DISFU'RNITURE. } borne or brought into possession or occupation; and generally—
To strip, divest, or deprive.

Prouided alway, that the ships returning be not disfurnished of one such able man, as shall occupie the captainship.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 236.

This reporte was made by one of the conspiratours, and therewith diuers other thinges agreed the olde hostilitie betwene the houses of Pópie and Cesar, the wild & seditious witte of Cinna, with the place, and tyme, where and whan the emperour shuld be disfurnyshed of seruantes.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. ii. c. 7.

——— For myself, great queen,
I am a thing obscure, disfurnish'd of
All merit, that can rise me higher than,
In my most humble thankfulness for your bounty,
To hazard my life for you.
Massinger. The Picture, Act iii. sc. 5.

At the same time the same rabble enter'd the house of the Countess of Rivers near Colchester, for no other ground, than that she was a papist; and in a few hours disfurnish'd it of all the goods, which had been many years with great curiosity provided, and were not of less value than forty thousand pounds sterling.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. ii. p. 22.

We may consequently, with much ease bear the disfurniture of such transitory movenbles, as were rather ornaments then materials of our fabrick; considering that this denudation may prove the greatest beautifying of your spiritual edifice.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 8. s. 3.

And as she found the treasure much exhausted, so did she the tower disfurnished of stores and ammunition.
Strype. Memorials. Q. Mary, an. 1553.

The king's gold was carried away in such quantities that it was sensibly felt, to the great disfurnishing of the realm.
Id. Edw. VI. an. 1548.

DIS-GAGE, v. See DISENGAGE.
To free from, relieve or release from gage, pledge or pawn.

But when our soule the body hath disgaged,
It seeks the common passage of the dead
Downe by the fearefull gates of Acheron.
Cornelia, 1594. Ep.

He taketh those who had lever lay to gage and pawn their goods, and remaine under the burden of usury, then to sell up all and disgage themselves at once.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 232.

DIS-GA'LLANT, v. To strip or divest or deprive of gallantry, of a gallant spirit.

Sir, let not this discountenance, or disgallant you a whit; you must not sink under the first disaster.
B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revells, Act iii. sc. 1

DIS-GA'RLAND, v. To strip off, throw off a garland; i.e. that which girds, encircles or surrounds, (sc.) the head.

O Pan! O Pan! winter has fallen in May,
Turn'd is to night our day.
Forsake thy pipe, a sceptre take to thee,
Thy locks disgarland, thou black Jove shall be.
Drummond, Song 13. pt. ii.

DIS-GA'RNISH, v. } "Fr. Desgarnir; to DISGA'RRISON. } disgarnish, unfurnish, deprive of, take away from," (Cotgrave.) Garrison, Fr. Garnison.
To strip off or deprive of the garniture or ornament; to divest or deprive of; to disfurnish.

If your master haue louing frendes and faithful subiectes, I am thanke God not disgarnished nor vnprouided of the same.—Hall. Hen. V. an. 2.

But one Lilla ye kinges trusty seruaunt, disgarnished of shylde or other weppon, to defende his mayster, start betwene ye king and the swerde, & was stryken thoroughe ye body & dyed.—Fabyan, vol. i. pt. v. c. 30.

So that he was disgarnished as well of his nobilitie, as of other men of honour to receiue her into his realme, according to her estate and degree.—Grafton. Edw. IV. an. 20.

Be thou our king; set up thy throne in our hearts; dismantle, and disgarrison, all the strong holds and fortifications of sin.—Dr. Henyl. Prayer bef. Serm. (Temp. K. Charles I.)

DIS-GEST, v. } i. e. Digest, and Digestion,
DISGE'STION. } (qv.)

Neuertheless when he had wel digested the natures of the ii. kings his enuiers, he was more glad of the losse of them, then sorye for the losse of his armye and his captaine Sopiryon.—Goldyng. Justine, fol. 57.

If more mildly, there followeth digestion, or maturation; as in drinks and fruits.—Bacon. Naturall History, s. 328.

It must be ordered that with meats hard of digestion, be conjoyned strong liquors, and sauces that may penetrate, and make way: but with meats more easie of digestion, small liquors, and fat sauces.—Id. Hist. of Life and Death.

DIS-GLO'RIFY, v. To strip, to deprive, or divest of glory.

So Dagon shall be magnifi'd, and God,
Besides whom is no God, compar'd with idols,
Disglorify'd, blasphem'd, and had in scorn
By th' idolatrous rout amidst their wine.
Milton. Samson Agonistes, l. 442.

DIS-GORGE, v. } Fr. Desgorger.
DISGO'RGEMENT. } To throw out from the mouth; to empty out from the mouth; to discharge; to throw forth.

But woo to suche informers who they be
That cruelly without conscience right or pity
Disgorgith theyr veneme.
Skelton. Trouth and Information.

This mountaine when it rageth, it soundeth like dreadfull thunder, casteth forth huge stones, disgorgeth brimstone
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 539.

But I must tell you, though you live now upon a brave river, which divides France well near into two parts, yet she is held the drunkenest river in all Christendom, for she swallows thirty-two other rivers, which she disgorgeth all into the sea at Nants.—Howell, b. iv. Let 17.

That for this end, we shall do our best endeavour to get just notice of the sad estate of this distracted church of ours: and to be truly apprehensive of the perill wherein it stands, as also of the horrible blasphemies, and damnable heresies, which have been of late disgorged from the mouth of hell amongst us.—Bp. Hall. Mourners in Sion.

Neither have these prodigious wretches smothered their damnable conceits in their impure breasts, but have boldly vented them to the world, so as the very presses are openly defiled with the most loathsome disgorgements of their wicked blasphemies.—Id. Remains, p. 162.

So that if conscience should at any time become troublesome, and guilt begin to lift up its voice, and grow clamorous, it is but to go and disgorge all the confession, and then absolution issuing of course, eases the mind, and takes off all anguish and despair.—South, vol. v. Ser. 3.

——— And here
Charybdis dire ingulfs the sable flood.
Each day she thrice disgorges, and again
Thrice drinks, insatiable, the deluge down.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xii.

DIS-GO'SPEL, v. A. S. Godspell; either, says Somner, from God, Deus, and spell, sermo, historia; or from God, bonus, and spell, nuntium. The latter is preferred by Skinner and Junius, as a literal interpretation of the Gr. Ευαγγελιον,—good news, good tidings.
To separate, to differ, from the Gospel, or doctrines of the Gospel.

We possess huge benefices for lazy performances, great promotions only for the execution of cruel disgospelling jurisdiction.—Milton. Apology for Smectymnuus.

DIS-GRACE, v. }
DISGRA'CER, n. }
DISGRA'CEFULL. }
DISGRA'CEFULLY. }
DISGRA'CER. }
DISGRA'CING, n. }
DISGRA'CIVE. } Fr. Disgracier; It. Disgraziare; Sp. Desgraciar.
To strip, deprive or divest of grace or favour, to dishonour, to degrade; to put or bring to shame or infamy.

And therewithall so well her graces all agree,
No frowning cheere dare once presume in hir sweete face to bee.
Although some lauishe lippes, which like some other best,
Wyll saye the blemish [a scar] on her browe disgraceth all the rest.—Gascoigne. In Prayse of Lady Sandes.

And looke at last, how of most wretched wights
He taken was, betray'd, and false accused,
How with most scornfull taunts, and foll despights
He was reuil'd, disgrast, and foul abused.
Spenser. Hymn of Heavenly Love

But they like tyrants, mercilesse the more,
Reioyced at his miserable case,
And him reviled, and reproched sore
With bitter taunts, and tearmes of vile disgrace.
Id. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 4.

But coming in the way where sin was grown
So foul and thick, it was her chance to light
Amidst the gross infection of those times:
And so came stain'd with black disgraceful crimes.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. v.

In like manner, God sowes among you those riches, which himself, most disgracefully calls the mammon of unrighteousness, in hope that he may reap the true riches.
Chillingworth, Ser. 6.

I wonder at those, that will assume a knowledge of all; they are unwisely ashamed of an ignorance, which is not disgracive; 'tis no shame for man not to know that, which is not in his possibility.—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 27.

And with sharp quips joy'd others to deface,
Thinking that their disgracing did him grace.
Spenser. Mother Hubberd's Tale.

Avenge this wrong, oh, ever just and wise!
Let Greece be humbled, and the Trojans rise;
Till the proud king, and the Achaian race
Shall heap with honours him they now disgrace.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.

Will no kind flood, no friendly rain,
Disguise the marshal's plain disgrace!
No torrents swell the low Mehayne!
The world will say, he durst not pass.
Prior. An English Ballad, 1695.

He that walketh uprightly is secure as to his honour and credit: he is sure not to come off disgracefully, either at home in his own apprehensions, or abroad in the estimations of men.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 3.

As, on the one hand, it is reasonable to suppose, that any man would rather choose to die than to be arraigned on a charge from which he could not clear himself; so on the other, it is surprising, that he, who was not ashamed to commit the crimes of which he was accused, should yet prefer death to the disgrace of a public conviction.
Melmoth. Pliny, b. iii. Let 9.

——— His deeds,
Disgraceful to my son, then should not want
Retaliation; for he slew not him
Sculking, but standing boldly for the wives,
The daughters fair, and citizens of Troy.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiv

If men were to be rightly estimated, and divided into subordinate classes, according to the superior excellence of their several natures, perhaps the lowest class of either sex would be properly assigned to those two disgracers of the human species, commonly called a beau, and a fine lady.
Fielding. Essay on Conversation.

DIS-GRADE, v. }
DISGRA'DUATE. }
DISGRE'SS. } Degrade,—to throw or cast down from rank or degree.

He caused me to be disgraded and condemned, and put into the hands of the lictor, and so he gaue me ouer to the shriues hands, which were much better than his.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 1352. Second Exam. of M. Rogers.

If they be of mine anoynted and bear my marke, disgresse them, I would say disgraduate them, and (after the example of noble Antiochus, ii. Macc. viii.) pare the crownes and fingers of them, and torment them craftily, and for very payne make them deny the truth.—Tyndall. Works, p. 154

On the one parte the saide Lacedemonians did disgraduate and declaire those to be deffamed and dishonoured, that were takene by the Athenyans in the Islande, for that they rendred themself wyth their army vnto the ennemyes.
Nicoll. Thucidides, fol. 135.

These two [Censores] had power and authority to disgrade a knight, by taking away his horse, and to put any off the senate, whom they saw live dissolutely and disorderly.
North. Plutarch, p. 296.

DIS-GRE'GATE, v. Fr. Disgrégar; It. Disgregare. See CONGREGATE.
To separate things collected, gathered, or assembled together; to separate; to disperse.

Suddenly as she [the soul] would fix her eyes upon the object, her sight is presently dazzled and disgregated with the refulgency and corruscations thereof.—Howell, b. ii. Let. 50.

For there, they're mixt, soil'd and contaminate,
But truth doth clear, unweave, and simplifie,
Search, sever, pierce, open, and disgregate
All ascititious charges.—More. The Soul, pt. ii. c. 3. s. 25.

For heat doth loosen, disgregate, scatter, and dissolve all thick things, which is the reason why those bodies which either boil, thaw, or melt, occupie more room.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 630.

DIS-GUISE, v. } To strip off, throw off the (usual) guise, manner or dress, and as the Fr. Deguiser; "to counterfeit or set a false coat or gloss on; to alter, adulterate, falsifie, sophisticate," (Cotgrave.)
DISGUI'SER.
DISGUI'SING, n.
Disguising, is commonly applied to certain pastimes by disguisers, or performers in disguise. See the examples from Hall, Leland, and Prynne.

After this batalle, the Scottis sent ouer the se
A boye of the rascalle, quaynt & doguise.
R. Brunne, p. 298.

What wol ye more in euery wise
Right as me list I me disguise?
Wel can I beare me vnder wede,
Vnlike is my word to my dede.—Chaucer. R. of the Rose.

And so they came their horses freshly stering
With bloody sounes of her trompes loud,
There sie I many an vncouth disguising,
In the array of these knights proud.
Id. The Flowre and the Leafe.

He meketh him euer freshe and gaie,
And doth all his arale disguyse,
So that of hym the newe guyse
Of lusty folke all other take.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

And she put hir widowes garmentes of from her, and couered her with a clooke, and dysguysed herselfe
Bible, 1551. Gen. c. 38.

And whē they were seuered & departed, ye disguysers dissended frō yᵗ rock, & daūced a great space: and sodeynly ye rocke moued & receaued ye disguysers & ymediatly closed agayn.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 10.

And on Newres day at nyght ther was a goodly disguysyng, and also this Christmas ther wer many and dyvers playes.
The Feast of Christmas. Leland Collect. iv. 235.

And seeing he could not do the same in state,
He seeks, disguiz'd in fashion, to beguile
The world a time, and steal a liberty
And sight of his dear country privately.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. viii.

Magnifick virgin, that in queint disguise
Of British armes doost maske thy royall blood
So to pursue a perilous emprize,
How could'st thou ween, through that disguised hood
To hide thy state from being vnderstood?
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 7.

I find that he travelled England disguisedly, and concealed his state there.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 589.

But alas! the painted faces, and mannishnesse, and monstrous disguisednesse of the one sex.
Bp. Hall. The Impress of God, pt. ii.

For the strange disguisednesse of theatricall attires, it is most apparent. For doe not all actors, mummers, masquers, usually put on the vyzards, shapes and habits, of Jupiter, Mars, &c.—Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. ii. Act ii. sc. 2.

Softly at last he gan his mother aske,
What mister wight that was, and whence derived,
That in so strange disguisement there did maske,
And by what accident she there arriued.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 7.

When we are touch'd with some important ill,
How vainly silence would our grief conceal!
Sorrow nor joy can be disguis'd by art,
Our foreheads blab the secrets of our hearts.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 9.

T. whom the queen' (who mark'd with piercing eyes
The Goddess labouring, in the dark disguise,
To Libyan shores from Latium to convey
The destin'd seat of universal sway)
Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. iv.

I hope he [Gay] is grown more disengaged from his intentness on his own affairs, which I ever disliked, and is quite the reverse to you, unless you are a very dextrous disguiser.—Pope. To Swift, Aug. 11, 1729.

Of him he spake as to Dodona gone,
T' implore Jove's counsel in his oaken bow'rs,
Whether so late returning, he should seek
His kingdom openly, or in disguise.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xix.

DIS-GUST, v. } Fr. Desgouster; It. Disgustare. Aliquid fastidire, indignari, i. e. malè seu molestè gustare, to taste ill or unpleasantly, (Skinner.) "Fr. Desgouster,—to distaste, loath, dislike," (Cotgrave,) to cause loathing or dislike.
DISGU'ST, n.
DISGU'STINGLY.
DISGU'STFUL.
DISGU'STFULNESS.

Enquire you why this table's put before?
I'll tell:—if you disgust it, read no more.
Evelyn. Of Liberty & Servitude. Motto.

In the time of Justinian, the greatest philosophers within all the extent of his dominions, highly disgusted the corrupt manners of their age.—Id. Ib. c. 4.

These and the like recogitations cannot choose but temper and allay somewhat the bitterness of this cup: when the presenting of the benefit is joined with the presence of the disgust.—Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 10. s. 5.

But at this I grieue: that my life and short time of gouernment; which I had deuoted to the good of all; should seem so disgustfull vnto any, as to deserue a violent and hastned death.—Speed. The Romans, b. vi. c. 21. s. 6.

The British waters are grown dull and muddy,
The fruit disgustful: Orontes must be sought for,
And apples from the happy isles
Beaum. & Fletch. Bonduca, Act i. sc. 2.

Duke Hamilton was trusted by the king with the management of his affairs in that kingdom, and had powers to offer, but so secretly, that if discovered, it could not be proved, for fear of disgusting the English, that if they would engage in the king's side he would consent to the uniting Northumberland, Cumberland, and Westmoreland to Scotland.
Burnet. Own Time, vol. i. b. i.

But he, whether upon some disgust, or injury formerly offered to him by the cardinal, but to be sure, taking the opportunity of his calamity, and being destitute of friends, now demanded that money.
Strype. Memorials, Hen. VIII. an. 1530.

To any such person no language can be more disgustfull; nothing can more grate his ears, or fret his heart, than to hear the sovereign object of his love and esteem so mocked and slighted.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 15.

Riley, who was humble, modest, and of an amiable character, had the greatest diffidence of himself, and was easily disgusted with his own works, the source probably of the objections made to him.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iii. c. 4.

——— For day by day themselves
My parents urge my nuptials, and my son
(Of age to note it) with disgust observes
His wealth consum'd.—Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xix.

Then, cautious, I would shun their bitter taunts
Disgustful, lest they mock me as they pass;
For of the meaner people some are coarse
In the extreme. Id. Ib. b. vi.

A crowd was gazing on the head of the dead beast in the manner of carrion eating vultures. One said the disgustfulness of this carcase brings offence to our brain, like wind on a lamp.—Sir W. Jones. Tales by Nizami.

It is really lamentable to observe in many families, the aged parent slighted and neglected, and like an old-fashioned piece of furniture, or useless lumber, thrown aside with contempt. Such treatment is disgustingly unnatural
Knox. Ess. No. 39.

DISH, v. } A.S. Disce; Dut. Dish; Ger. Thisch; Sw. Dich. With the consent of all, says Wachter, from the Gr. Δισκ-ος; Lat. Disc-us; and so called from the shape. To the same purport, Ihre. The A.S. Disce is used in the A.S. version of the passage quoted below from Wiclif, and also in Mark; it is also applied to a table; the table of money-changers. See DISK, DESK, and DAIS.
DISH, n.
DI'SHFULL.
To dish,—to put or place in a dish or platter.

——— Herodes the daffe
Gaf hus douhter for daunsyng in a dish the hefde
Of the blessede Baptiste.—Piers Ploughman, p. 175.

Wherfore with an ooth he behigte to give to hir what ever thing sche axide of him, and sche bifore warnid of hir modet seide give thou to me heere the heed of Jon Baptist in a dische.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 14.

But whether yt ye blind eat flesh or fish
I pray God kepe the flie out of my dish.
Chaucer. Balade. Craft of Lovers.

Whan he hath harped all his fill
The kinges hest to fulfille,
A weie goth dishe, awaie goth cup,
Down goth the borde, the cloth was vp
Thei risen, and gone oute of the halle.
Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

When we beganne to want water, I saw certaine Moores that were officers in the ship, that sold a small dishfull for a ducket.—Hackluyt. Voyage, vol. ii. pt. 1. p. 230.

——— Now for conspiracie,
I know not how it tastes, though it be dish'd
For me to try how.—Shakes. Winter's Tale, Act iii. sc. 2.

What needs me tell their feast and goodly guise,
In which was nothing riotous nor vaine?
What needs of dainty dishes to deuise.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 12.

Goth. I am gazing on
This gorgeous house; our cote's a dishclout to it;
It has no sign,—what do you call it?
Mar. The court.—Massinger. Bashful Lover, Act v. sc. 1.

As for the other prisoners of the Athenians, the most of them died of sickness and of ill handling in the prison, where they had no more allowed them to live withall but two dishfulls of barley for their bread, and one of water for each man a day.—North. Plutarch, p. 465.

See! by the tallest servant born on high,
A sturgeon fills the largest dish and eye.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 5.

Bright silver stands with golden dishes charg'd,
Before the gorgeous thrones another plac'd.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. x.

DIS-HABI'LLE, n. } From the Fr. Habiller, we have the noun habillement, vestitus, the dress or clothing. The Fr. Déshabiller, Cotgrave explains, "To disarray, uncloath, make unready; put or take off cloaths." Dryden does not endenizen the word. The English usage is explained in the extract from the Guardian.
DISHABI'LLE, adj.

Queens, and persons of the first quality, whom you would make appear majestical, are not to be too negligently dressed, or in dishabilles, no more than old men.
Dryden. On Dufresnoy, N. 126.

We have a kind of sketch of dress, if I may so call it, among us, which, as the invention was foreign, is called a dishabille: every thing is thrown on with a loose and careless air, yet a genius discovers itself even through this negligence of dress, just as you may see the masterly hand of a painter in three or four swift strokes of the pencil.
Guardian, No. 149.

"Oh! sir, politely so! nay let me die,
Your only wearing is your paduasoy."
'Not, sir, my only, I have better still
And thus you see is but my dishabille.'
Pope. Satires of Donne, Sat. 4.

But to see the fine ladies in their dishabille
A dress that's sometimes the most studied to kill.
Byron. A Description of Tunbridge.

DIS-HA'BIT, v. Fr. "Déshabiter,—to disinhabit, to deprive of inhabitants," (Cotgrave,) to remove from its habitation, dwelling or abiding place.

And but for our approach, those sleeping stones,
That as a waste doth girdle you about
By the compulsion of their ordinance,
By this time from their fixed beds of lime
Had bin dishabited, and wide havocke made
For bloody power to rush vpon your peace.
Shakespeare. King John, Act ii. sc. 1.

DIS-HA'RMONY, n. } Want of harmony, of concert, of union; discord.
DISHARMO'NIOUS.

There was no jarring or disharmony in the faculties 'till sin untun'd them.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 1.

Reason and faith are at perfect unisons; the disharmony is in the phancy.—Id. Ib. c. 11.

The musician's soul would be the most disharmonious: for according to the tenour of this opinion, our memories will be stored with infinite variety of divers, yea contrary motions, which must needs interfere, thwart, and obstruct one another.—Id. Ib. c. 4.

DIS-HEA'RTEN, v. } To deprive of heart or courage, of animation, ardour, hope or confidence; to discourage, to daunt, to depress, to deject.
DISHEA'RTENING, n.
DISHEA'RTENEDNESS.

Syphax unwilling to dishearten his men, by taking any fright at their first meeting with the enemy, came up with all his horse, which were the best part of his forces, and therewith overcharged Masanissa, whose numbers were far less.
Ralegh. History of the World, b. v. c. 3. s. 18.

But let not the king's love to you or their small ability to do you harm, make you too careless or too credulous of those your enemies, least it give too great encouragement to them, and too great disheart'ning to your faithful friends.
Caballa. L. K. H. to the Duke of Buckingham, an. 1621.

[Great fear fell upon them that saw them;] that is, a disheartenedness and dejection of mind.
Goodwin. Works, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 170.

In the first place for the Dira, or flying pest, which flapping on the shield of Turnus and fluttering about his head, dishearten'd him in the duel, and presag'd his approaching death, I might have plac'd it more properly amongst the objections.—Dryden. Virgil, Ded.

—— Let gentle work,
Or rather playful exercise, amuse
The novel gang: and far be angry words;
Far pond'rous chains; and far disheart'ning blows.
Grainger. The Sugar Cane, b. iv.

DIS-HEIR, v. } To deprive of, prevent from having, an inheritance; to disinherit, to put out of regular hereditary descent. See DISINHERIT.
DISHE'IRIT, v.
DISHE'IRITANCE.
DISHE'IRITING, n.
DISHE'IRIZE, v.
DISHE'IRISON.
DISHE'IRIZING, n.

Verst the castel of Notingham vpe is brother he nom, & suththe his other londes, & deseritide him al clene.
R. Gloucester, p. 490.

So that the diserites in to this lond come
To Constantyn, the gode kyng. Id. p. 85.

Lordynges of my chance wele ge auh [ought] to wite, & that the kyng of France wille me diherite.
R. Brunne, p. 202.

For our state it apeires, without any reson
& the alle our heirs grete disheriteson.—Id. p. 290.

And in her harte had routh and wo
That euer such a noble man as he
Shall been disherited in such degree.
Chaucer. Legend of Dido

So that they of the country were nat of the agrement with the kyng, nor with Jaques Dartuell, who prechd to theym that they shulde diheryte the Erle Loyes, their owne naturall lorde, and also his yong sonne Loyes, and to inheryte the sonne of the kynge of Englande, the whiche thynge they sayd nuerly they wolde neuer agre vnto.
Bernes. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 115.

I gyue and resigne into their handes the gyft that my lorde ye prince hath gyuen me, of fiue hudred markes of yerely reuenewes, to them and to their heyres for euer, in lyke maner as it was gyuen me: I clerely diheryte me thereof, and inherite them without any rebell or condycion.
Id. Ib. vol. i. c. 166.

Whiche by suche vnnaturall demeanour haue gyuen sufficiente cause to the dysherison of you and your posteritie for euer from the possybilitie that ye thinke to haue to the royalme, which ye nowe attempt to inuade.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 8.

'Sword, I durst make a promise of him to thee;
Thou shalt dishear him, it shall be thine honour.
Tourneur. The Revenger's Tragedy, Act i. sc. 1.

But in the mean season England beganne to bee tossed and turmoiled with warres within and without: for the disheriting of the right heyre is alwaies wont to be the beginning of ciuil wars.—Stow. Edward Confessor, an. 1066.

—— And therefore I am sent
By him that has most interest in your sorrow;
Who having chid me almost to the ruin
Of a disheritance, for violating
So continued and so sacred a friendship.
Beaum. & Fletch. The fair Maid of the Inn, Act ii. sc. 1.

While yet therefore stickes in the peoples minde
The lothed wrong of your disheritaunce,
And ere your brother have by settled power,
By guilefull cloke of an alluring showe
Got him some force and fauour in the realme,
Attempt redresse by armes.
Sackville. Ferrex & Porrex, Act ii. sc. 1.

These therefore thus disherized, ought of right (in assurance of helpe from their righteous judge and reuenger) giue first assault on their vnrighteous oppressor.
Speed. Stephen, b. ix. c. 5. s. 25.

Such as were guilty of the death of Burgundy, were iusticed, the disherizing of the daulphin confirmed, and wars prepared against those townes which held for him.
Speed. Hen. V. b. ix. c. 15. s. 56.

Yet still remember that you wield a sword
Forg'd by your foes against your sovereign lord;
Design'd to hew th' imperial cedar down,
Defraud succession, and disheir the crown.
Dryden. Hind and Panther, pt. iii.

Sir H. Yelverton, in Michaelmas term last, was sentenced in the Star-chamber, for breach of trust, in the unwarrantable passing of a charter to the city of London, tending to the dishersion of his majesty, both in matter of kingly power and high pretogative.
State Trials. Sir H. Yelverton, an. 1621.

That as they found the king, and found commodity, they should always fall into devises, as secretly as might be, as time and place offered convenience, touching the things that sounded to the dishersion of the crown of France, its rights and patrimonies.—Strype. Mem. Hen. VIII. an. 1525.

[The oath followeth in these words] 4. Not to suffer the hurt, or disheriting of the king, or that the rights of the crown be decreased by any means as far as he may let it.
State Trials. Judge Jenkins, an. 1647.

DIS-HE'LMED. Fr. Desheaulmer—
To deprive of the helme or helmet.

And the Lorde of Saynt Pye strake the Lord Clyfforde on the helme, so that he was dishelmed.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 48.

DI-SHE'VEL, v. Fr. Discheveler; It. Scapigliare; Fr. Cheveul; It. Capigli. From the Lat. Capilli; the hair of the head, capitis pilus.
To separate, disperse or scatter the hair; to hang in disorder, discomposedly.

She falleth him to fote, and swouneth there
Dischevele with hir bright gilt heere
And saith, haue mercy.—Chaucer. Hypsiphile & Medea.

And all her haire it shone as gold so fine,
Dishiuill crispe down hanging at her backe
A yard in length. Id. The Court of Loue.

—— They do arriue anone
Where sate a gentle lady all alone
With garments rent, and haire discheueled,
Wringing her hands, and making pittious mone.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 1.

Thus having said, she turn'd, and made appear
Her neck refulgent, and dishevell'd hair;
Which flowing from her shoulders, reach'd the ground,
And widely spread ambrosial scents around.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. i.

The clearness of the colouring is equal to either Oliver; the dishevelled hair touched with exquisite freedom.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. ii. c. 3.

DIS-HO'NEST, v. } Fr. Dishonneste; It. Disonesto; Sp. Deshonesto.
DISHO'NEST, adj.
DISHO'NESTLY.
DISHO'NESTY.

Destitute of, void of honesty, of good faith or probity; fraudulent, deceitful, faithless, unchaste.

It is sometimes used as equivalent to dishonourable.

To dishonest, by our old writers, is equivalent to—to dishonour, to disgrace.

Shortly (he saied) thy request
Is nat to mokell dishonest.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

Dishonestly to speake of any wight
She deadly hateth. Id. The Floure of Curtesie.

The felawes of abstinence been attemperance, that beldeth the mene of alle things: also shame, that escheweth all dishonestee.—Id. The Persones Tale.

For hee disputeth thus, some yoñg widowes do dishonest ye congregation of Christ and his doctrine, therefore shall no young widow at all minister in the common seruice therof.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 313.

How dare ye be so bolde as to kisse the booke that the Ghospell is in, the whyche beeyng subiect to lecherye, to auaryce, to ambicion, to sensualitie, and yre, do defile and dishonest the admonicions of the Ghospel.
Udal. Preface to John.

What sorrowe will her kinsfolks make when euerie one shall thinke themselves dishonested by one shame of that mayd.—Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 7.

Marius caused Caius Cesar (who had been both Consul and Censor, two of the moste honorable dignities in the citie of Rome) to be violently drawē to the sepultre of one Uarius, a simple and seditious persone, and there to be dishonestly slayne.—Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. ii. c. 6.

And for to tell at last, my great seruice
From thousand dishonesties have I him drawen;
That, by my meanes, him in no maner wyse
Neuer vyle pleasure once hath overthrowen.
Wyat. Complaynt vpon Loue.

Howbeit at that time many things were established and ordained in honour of the women as to give them place, the upper hand in meeting them: the upper hand in streets; to speak no foul or dishonest word before them.
North. Plutarch, p. 25.

And so consequentlie dishonest their wives, and make their husbands to become changelings.
Holinshed. Description of Ireland, c. 3.

Therefore, as I hope to be saved at the last judgment day, I never spoke dishonourably, disloyally, or dishonestly of his majesty in all my life.
State Trials. Sir Walter Ralegh, an. 1603.

One whiles entring into the church to powre out our prayers, and a very little while after comming into a playhouse to cry out dishonestly with stage players.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act vi. sc. 12.

For the said earl saith, that the assurances which he gave his late majesty and his majesty that now is, concerning these treaties, were such as had been, dishonestly and breach of his duty and trust, for him to have held back.
State Trials. The Duke of Buckingham, an. 1626.

Here Priam's son Delphobus he found:
Whose face and limbs were one continu'd wound.
Dishonest [inhonesto,] with lop'd arms, the youth appears
Spoil'd of his nose, and shorten'd of his ears.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. vi.

From each dishonest act of shame forbear;
Of others and thyself, alike beware.
Rowe. The golden Verses of Pythagoras.

One thing was very dishonestly insinuated, that the prisoner was a Papist, which was only to incense the jury against him, and it had its effect.
State Trials. Stephen College, an. 1681.

To whom Ulysses, ever-wise, replied,
Herdsman! since neither void of sense thou seem'st,
Nor yet dishonest, but myself am sure,
That thou art owner of a mind discreet,
Hear now my solemn oath.
Cowper. Homer Odyssey, b. xx.

A forger, if he had the abilities of an angel, whose imagination must supply him with materials, can never write in such a manner; and if he has tolerable sense, will avoid entering into such a minute detail, in which he must perpetually expose his ignorance and dishonesty.
Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

DIS-HO'NOUR, v. } See DISHONEST, ante. To deprive of honour, of esteem, of value; of any thing honoured, esteemed, highly valued or prized; to disesteem, to disvalue, to disregard, to disgrace; to bring or reduce to shame or ignominy.
DISHO'NOUR, n.
DISHO'NOURABLE.
DISHO'NOURABLY.
DISHO'NOURER.
DISHO'NOURING, n.

It is a dishonoure to the & to thi blode.
R. Brunne, p. 215.

Why holdest him not poore that is neady? Yes parde, (qd. I) and him for dishonoured that much folke dem to reuerence.—Chaucer. The Testament of Loue, b. ii.

Now set I case, the hardest is twis,
Men might demen that he loueth me
What dishonour were it vnto me this?—Id. Troilus, b. ii.

But Progne most of sorow made,
Which sigh hir sister pale and fade,
And specheles, and dishonoured,
Of that she had be defloured. Gower. Con. A. b. v

For where they pretende the zele of Goddes honour himself as though God (to whom onely al honour and glory is to be geuen) were dishonoured in that some honour is done to his holy saintes, they be not so mad nor childishe as they make them selfe.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 118.

But Christ forbiddeth to sweare at all, either by God, or any creature of God's: for thou canst sweare by none of the at all except the dishonour shall redound vnto ye name of God.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 208.

But hee holding nothing so ignominious and reprochfull, as inconstancie and leuitie of minde, and perswading himselfe that a man of valour could not commit a more dishonourable part then for feare of danger to auoyde and shunne great attempts, was nothing at all changed or discouraged with the speeches and words of the Scots, remaining stedfast and immutable in his first resolution.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 246.

The third, if any should speake dishonourably of her maiestie, the partie so offending, to loose his eares, his ship and goods, to be confiscate to the vse of the generall.
Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 166.

What thing can bee done more to the dishonouring of Christ, than to cast our soules awey to the Deuill for the value of a litle money.—Latimer, Sermons, p. 207.

Piercy, how soon, by thy example led,
The household-train forsook their wretched lord!
When with thy staff of charge dishonoured,
Thou break'st thy faith, not steward of thy word,
And took'st his part, that after took thy head.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iii.

There lies he now with foule dishonour dead,
Who whiles he liu'd, was called proud Sansfoy.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 2.

Yet still he wasted as the snowe congealed,
When the bright sun his beames thereon doth beat,
Yet neuer he his hart to her revealed,
But rather chose to die for sorow great,
Then with dishonourable tearmes her to intreat.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 5.

Many of those things of Aristotle that are harshly and dishonourably asserted concerning the Deity, are from his tenacious adhering to certain philosophical propositions that he had fixed upon.—Hale. Cont. vol i. Of Religion.

—— And the Priest
Was not behind, but even at my ear,
Preaching how meritorious with the Gods
It would be to ensnare an irreligious
Dishonourer of Dagon.—Milton. Samson Agonistes, v. 860.

But see the stain of war! the soldier's shame!
And vile dishonour of the Latian's name!
The faithless garrison betray the town,
And captive drag their valiant leader down.
Rowe. Lucan, b. i.

But on the other side, I cannot think so contemptibly of the age I live in, or so dishonourably of my own country, as not to judge we equal the ancients in most kinds of poesie, and in some surpass them.
Dryden. Essay on Dramatick Poesie.

—— Truth
The nearest inmate of the human soul;
Estrang'd from whom, the countenance divine
Of man distigur'd and dishonour'd sinks
Among inferior things!
Akenside. The Pleasures of the Imagination, b. i.

No vow, the God, no hecatomb unpaid,
But the dishonour of his priest, resents,
Whom Agamemnon menac'd, and refus'd
His daughter's freedom at the richest price.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

—— She at first
(The royal Clytemnestra) firm refus'd
The deed dishonourable (for she bore
A virtuous mind, and at her side a bard
Attended ever, whom the king, to Troy
Departing, had appointed to the charge.)
Id. Ib. Odyssey, b. iii.

DIS-HORN, v. Formed to suit the occasion. To strip off, or deprive of, horns.

Mist. Page. The truth being knowne,
We'll all present ourselues; dishorne the spirit,
And mock him home to Windsor.
Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act iv. sc. 4.

DIS-HU'MOUR, v. } To be or cause to be,
DISHU'MOUR, n. } out of humour; out of good humour, or temper.

Maci. O how I doe feed upon this now, and fat myselfe! here were a couple unexpectedly dishumour'd: well by this time, I hope, sir Puntarvolo and his dog are both out of humour to travaile.
B. Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour, Act v. sc. 3.

You are to understand, that all ill-natured words or uneasy gestures are sufficient cause for banishment; speaking impatiently to servants, making a man repeat what he says, or any thing that betrays inattention or dishumour, are also criminal without reprieve.—Spectator, No. 424.

DIS-IMPRO'VE, v. } To prove, is to put to DISIMPRO'VEMENT. } trial or experiment, to establish or confirm by proof, to better by trial or essay, to improve. To disimprove, is—
To strip or deprive or divest of improvement; to deteriorate, to render worse or inferior.

To which may be added this advantage, that the services of churchmen are rewardable upon the churches flock; no need to disimprove the Royal Banks to pay thanks to bishops.—Bp. Taylor. Polemical Discourses, Ep. Ded.

Cutting off all those unprofitable and hurtful branches which load the tree, and hinder the growth, and stock and disimprove the fruit, and revert evil juice to the very root itself.—Id. vol. ii. Ser. 4.

He that repents instantly, breaks his habit when it is in ovo, in the shell, and prevents God's anger and his own debauchment and disimprovement.—Id. Of Repentance, c. 5. s. 2.

I cannot see how this kingdom is at any heighth of improvement, while four parts in five of the plantations for 30 years past have been real disimprovements.
Swift. On the Power of the Bishops.

DIS-INCLINE. } To incline,—Fr. Incliner;
DISINCLINA'TION. } Sp. Inclinar; It. Inclinare; Lat. Inclinare; Gr. Κλιν-ειν, to bend. Inclination is the bent of the mind. To dis-incline,—
To bend or turn a different way; aversely; to indispose, to disaffect, to disfavour.

Wherever they found any person of quality inclined to the king, or but disinclined to them, they immediately seized upon his person, and sent him in great triumph to the parliament: who committed him to prison, with all circumstances of cruelty and inhumanity.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. ii. p. 20.

He [Mr. Nathaniel Finnes] had spent his time abroad, in Geneva, and amongst the Cantons of Switzerland, where he improv'd his disinclination to the church, with which milk he had been nursed.—Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 186.

Applus relies greatly in this conjuncture upon your assistance: and I am persuaded you are not disinclined to serve him.—Melmoth. Cicero, b. v. Let. 5.

The provinces which had been always exempted from the salt monopoly, some of whom were charged with other contributions perhaps equivalent, were totally disinclined to bear any part of the burthen, which by an equal distribution was to redeem the others.—Burke. French Revolution.

While this is the case only with a few, the evil is inconsiderable, but the same taste for expensive living will naturally spread to the lower ranks of the community, and produce a general disinclination to matrimony.
Priestley. On History, Lect. 60.

DIS-INCORPORA'TION. A corporation, (Skinner,) is a company of tradesmen, or a town, endowed with privileges, magistracy, and power of making laws within themselves. To disincorporate, is—
To deprive of the privileges and powers so granted.

The Bishop of Chichester, in opening the disputation of Henry the Eighth with Lambert, in Westminster Hall, ranked the King's disincorporation of the Monks with his rejection of the See of Rome, his abolition of idolatrous adoration, and the introduction of the English Bible, as a matter of an external nature, and in no respect interfering with the essentials of the Catholick communion.
Warton. Life of Sir T. Pope, p. 41.

DIS-INCRE'ASE, v. } i. e. Decrease, (qv.)
DISINCRE'ASE, n. } And see INCREASE.

For the tydings that thou hast brought
Shal vnto him be disencrease,
He better were to haue beene in peace,
Then of folly and presumption
Ayenst me to fetch occasion.
Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. ii.

For euen like without addicioun
Or disencrease, either more or lesse,
For to reherse anone I wol me dresse.
Chaucer. Of the Blacke Knight.

DIS-INFLA'ME. Divested, deprived of flame, of heat, of ardour.

—— His mens fault thus he blam'd;
O Lycians, why are your hot spirits so quickly disinflamed?—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xii.

DIS-INGENU'ITY. } Disingenuous is—
DISINGE'NUOUS. } Unfitting, unbecoming a free-born man,
DISINGE'NUOUSLY. } a gentleman; illiberal,
DISINGE'NUOUSNESS. } mean, mean-spirited, uncandid, unfair.

They [men of activity and faction] contract a habit of ill-nature and disingenuity necessary to their affairs, and the temper of those upon whom they are to work, that liberal-minded men would not perswade themselves to entertain, even for the prevention of all the mischief the others intend.—Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. p. 321.

And self is the most disingenuous abominable principle that ever was.—Goodwin. Works, vol. ii. pt. iv. p. 174.

Besides, is not this unkind and disingenuous, whether in Papists or whomsoever, that this sin forgiven by God, and remembered by him no more, should therefore be forgotten by us.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. pt. i. p. 346.

It is no less disengenuously than constantly done of the exposer in this same p. 1. to concern the author in the nonconformists.—Marvel. Works, vol. iii. p. 39.

For to wrong, dishonour and displease him, that is so good and beneficent to us is great disingenuity and unworthiness.
arrow, vol. ii. Ser. 11.

I am not so vain as to think these remarks free from faults, nor so disingenuous as not to confess them: all writers have occasion for indulgence, and those most who least acknowledge it.—Pope. Odyssey. Conclusion of Notes.

But he disingenuously confessed to Sir Thomas More, Lord Chancellor, several of his companions and fellows, and disclosed the shipmen, who brought over many of these books.—Strype. Memorials. Hen. VIII. an. 1534.

I might press them with the unreasonableness, the disingenuousness of embracing a profession, to which their own hearts have an inward reluctance.
Government of the Tongue.

Such are the arguments in favour of the miracles of the second and third centuries; to which on the other hand is objected the credulity of many of the Christians, the enthusiastic temper of others, the disingenuity of some of them in the matter of pious frauds.
Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

Disputes with men, pertinaciously obstinate in their principles, are, of all others, the most irksome; except, perhaps, those with persons entirely disingenuous, who really do not believe the opinion they defend.
Hume. Principles of Morals, s. 1.

All these preside in subordination to the king, as he well knows, though he disingenuously hints a doubt of it by his ironical words, I hope.
Secker. Answer to Dr. Mayhew's Observations.

DIS-INHA'BIT, v. See DISHABIT.

By the inhabitants thereof hee vnderstoode that from thence forward there were nothing but exceeding rough mountaines which ran very farre, vtterly disinhabited and voyd of people.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 374.

DIS-INHE'RIT, v. } See DISHEIR.
DISINHE'RITANCE. }
DISINHE'RISON. } To deprive of, prevent from having an inheritance; to disheir, or disherit; to put out of regular hereditary descent.

Howbeit, I haue marueyle, howe that ye durste vndertake on you the duchy of Bretayne, wherin ye haue no right, for there is another nerer than ye be, and ye wolde disinheryt hym.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 69.

Also I likewise confess, That to the peril, slander, and disinherison of the king's majesty and his noble son Prince Edward, his son and heir apparent, I have against all right, unjustly, and without authority, born in the first quarter of my arms, ever since the death of my father, the arms of England.—State Trials. Earl of Surrey, an. 1546.

It may be, some will extend the word confirmation to be meant of some right of hunting, which the Archbishop (upon this arbitrement) was to disinherit his church of: whiche I leave to the judgement of lawyers.
Id. Archbishop Abbot, an. 1621.

And Britton, fol. 16. It is high treason to disinherit the king of the realme, and sedition tendeth to the disinheritance of the king; for, as it has been said, Seditio est quasi secessus vias, when the people are severed from the king: or it is, Separans à dilectione, when the people are severed from the power of the king.—Id. W. Stroud, Esq. an. 1620.

Besides, his majesty gave him a whole forrest (Chute Forrest in Hampshire) and much other land belonging to the crown; which was the more taken notice of, and murmur'd against, because, being the chief minister of the revenue, he was particularly oblig'd, as much as in him lay, to prevent, and even oppose such disinherison.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. p. 51.

He was a murderer before a parent, he disinherited all his children before they were born, and made them slaves before they knew the price of liberty.
Bates. The Harmony of the Divine Attributes, c. 2.

Anthony Wood informs us that Owen, distressed as he was by poverty, the epidemical disease of poets, was disappointed in the expectation of riches at the death of a wealthy uncle, who disinherited him for some of his poetry.
Knox, Ess. 60.

DIS-INTE'R. Fr. Désenterrer; enterrer; terrâ condere, to put under the earth, under ground, to inhume.
To release from an earthly covering; generally, to disclose, to unveil.

All tombes shall rue Pompey's no sepulcher:
Isis (their Goddesse now) I'le disinterre,
Osiris linnen-couer'd shrine disperse,
And kill God Anis ouer Pompey's hearse.
May. Lucan, b. ix.

The philosopher, the saint, or the hero, the wise, the good, or the great man, very often lie hid and concealed in a plebeian, which a proper education might have disinterred, and have brought to light.—Spectator, No. 215.

DIS-INTERESS, or DISINTERRST, v. DISINTERRSTED, adj. DISINTERESTEDLY. DISINTERESTEDNESS. DISINTERESTMENT. } Disinterested, or Disinteressed, is— Without interest, gain or profit; not seeking, having no view to, no wish for, interest, gain, benefit, profit or advantage; not influenced by favour or partiality; impartial.

To disinterest (see the extracts from Camden and South) is, to separate from the interest, to abandon the party. "Fr. Désintéresser,—to rid from all interest in," (Cotgrave.

Warburton uses Disinteresting, as equivalent to uninteresting; i. e. having no interest, nothing to win or gain favour or attention.

He protested that he was not able to pay them; and that he might the eastlier speed, advertised her by Reaux, that an advantageous peace had been offered to him by the Pope's Nuncio, with an entire restitution of all places in France except Calice and Ardres, if he would disinterest himself from the queen.—Camden. Queen Elizabeth, an. 1597.

But when in the very censure of excommunication there is a new ingredient put, a great proportion of secular inconveniences, and humane interest, when excommunications, as in the Apostles times they were deliverings over to Satan, so now shall be deliverings over to a foreign enemy, or the peoples rage; as then to be buffeted, so now to be deposed, or disinteressed in the allegiance of subjects.

Bp. Taylor. Episcopacy Asserted.

Because all men are not wise and good and disinterest'd, tradition in these things is to Scripture as a burning glass to the sun, it receives its raise in a point, and unites their strength, and makes them burn as well as shine.

Id. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 3.

How disinterested are they of all worldly matters, since they fling their wealth and riches into the sea, for which they have run such hazard?—Id. Contemplations, b. i. c. 10.

It is, doubtless, one of the greatest absurdities that can well fall within the thoughts of man, to imagine that God who has cast the business of man's salvation into so large a compass, as to share out to every other faculty and affection of the soul its due part and proportion in this great work, should yet wholly disinterest those two noble leading affections of hope and fear, from having any thing to do in the same.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 5.

Saint Paul from the 18th verse of this chapter, to ch. vi. 12. gives another reason for his disinterested carriage in preaching the Gospel, and that is, his love to Christ, who by his death having given him life who was dead, he concludes, that in gratitude he ought not to live to himself any more.

Locke. On 2 Corinthians, v. 13. Note 136.

His fears hastened him [Cromwel] to the accomplishment of his design, lest the disinterested proceeding of the parliament, who were about to leave the nation under a form of government that provided sufficiently for the good of the community, might work the people into a greater aversion to his selfish design.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. ii. p. 16.

You have the very same thought spun out a hundred ways, and drawn into mottoes and devices to set forth this riddle, That act as disinterestedly or generously as you please, self still is at the bottom, and nothing else.

Shaftesbury. On the Freedom of Wit & Humour, pt. iii. s. 3.

The historian or relater of things important to mankind, must, whoever he be, approve himself many ways to us; both in respect to his judgment, candour, disinterestedness, e'er we are bound to take any thing on his authority.

Id. Ib. pt. iv. s. 3.

He [the Earl of Dorset] has managed some of the greatest charges of the kingdom, with known ability; and laid them down with entire disinteressment.

Prior. Postscript to his Pref.

There is such a dull, heavy, succession of long quotations of disinteresting passages, that it makes their method quite nauseous.—Warburton. To Birch.

Lactantius also argues in defence of the religion, from the consistency, simplicity, disinterestedness, and sufferings of the Christian historians, meaning by that term our Evangelists.—Paley. Evidences, vol. i. c. 9. s. 1.

DIS-INVALIDITY, n. Corruptly used as, Disvalidity or Invalidity; want of validity, strength or force.

Againe, I doe call those some men's doctrines in this point, private opinions: and so well may I doe, in respect of the disinvalidity and disproportion of them.

Mountagu. Appeale to Cæsar, pt. ii.

DIS-INVOLVE, v. Lat. Involo-ere, to infold, (in, and volo-ere, to roll.)

To unroll, unfold, disclose.

—— And for thee
Creation universal calls aloud
To disinvolve the moral word, and give
To nature's renovation brighter charms.

Young. Complaint, Night 9.

DIS-INURE, v. To strip, divest or deprive of, usage or custom.

Thus much we are hinder'd and disinur'd by this course of learning toward the true knowledge of what we seem to know.—Milton. Of Unlicens'd Printing.

DIS-INVITE, v. To undo, to revoke or recall an invitation.

I was upon his highness's intimation sent to disinvite them.—Sir J. Finch. On Foreign Embass. p. 143.

DIS-JOIN, v. DISJO'INT, v. DISJO'INT, n. DISJO'INT, adj. DISJO'INTING, n. DISJO'INTLY. DISJU'NCT. DISJU'NCTION. DISJU'NCTIVE, n. DISJU'NCTIVE, adj. DISJU'NCTIVELY. DISJU'NCTURE. } Fr. Disjoindre; Lat. Disjung-ere, junctum, (dis, and jungere, to join.) Jungo, Vossius says, a jugo, n insertâ: jug-are, from jug-um, (the past part. joc, of ge-icam, to yoke, Tooke.)

To sunder or put asunder things joined; to dispart, to separate, to sever; to disunite, to loose; to divide, to part or partition.

Tho gan this Medea to him declare
The peril of this case, fro point to point
Of his bataile, and in what disioint
He mote stond.—Chaucer. Legend. Of Hypsiphile & Medea.

Who wrestled best naked, with olle enoint,
Ne who that bare him best in no disioint.

Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2964.

For they sayd all those landes were holde of right and of the demayne of the crowne of Englande, wherfore they sayde, they wolde not disioyne nor dieceuer thē from the crowne.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 200.

This man is so cunning in his inclusiues and exclusiues that he dyscerneth nothing betweene copulatiues and disiunctiues.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 943.

How happy are all other living things
Which though the day disjoin by several flight,
The quiet ev'ning yet together brings,
And each returns unto his love at night!

Drayton, Idea 37.

But no eruption did in general
Break down their rest with universal sin;
No public shock disjointed this fair frame,
Till Nemesis from out the Orient came.

Daniel. Of Civil Wars, b. vi.

—— Thus we see
That rest and motion cannot be disjoynt,
When motion's swift e'en to infinite.

More. On the Soul, pt. iii. c. 2. st. 12.

Vir. That poor disjointing,
That only strong necessity thrust on you,
Not crime, nor studied cause of mine; how sweetly,
And nobly I will bind again and cherish.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Double Marriage, Act iv. sc. 1.

But then (2.) The divine liberty and freedome consists not in his acting by meer arbitrarious will, as disjunct from his other attributes.—Glanvill. Pre-existence of Souls, c. 7.

The epistle of Pope Gregory the Third, to the clergie of Bavaria, which gives that disiunct charge, of either living chastely, or marrying a wife whom they may not divorce, is nowhere (for sooth) extant, because he finds it not in his Binius or Baronius.

Bp. Hall. The Honour of the Married Clergy.

Reasonably presuming, that as the disjunction had caused their loss, so their union might recompense it with large amends.—Raleigh. History of the World, b. v. c. 2. s. 8.

But it is the manner of the Grecians to bring in the word [Και, and] in the end of a disjunctive enumeration, in a disjunctive sense, as in that, (Gal. iii. 21,) after he had said, there is neither Jew nor Greek, neither bound nor free, he ends that last disjunction, neither male or female: in Greek it is, neither male and female, so in the original, and the Syriac so reads it.—Goodwin. Works, vol. iv. pt. iv. p. 238.

Your Majesty, in your last letter, very wisely put in a disjunctive, that the judges should deliver an opinion privately, either to my Lord Chancellor, or to ourselves distributed.—Bacon. To the King. Feb. 7, 1614.

Now whereas it is said, Erit Jehova et offeram illud holocaustum, the word signifieth et and aut, it may be taken disjunctively; aut offeram, that is, it shall either be the Lord's by separation, or else, an holocaust by common oblation.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 14.

But this word in my text, takes in and comprehends all, and imports a making all whole again; whether in respect of restoring former peace and joy again, instead of pain; or of making all sound again; of those bruises, disjunctures, or brokenness of bones, made by sinnings in our souls, unto a new perfection of peace and holiness, that is, which is comparatively such.—Goodwin Works, vol. ii. pt. iv. p. 347.

There succeeded in the same place the departure of my no less dear niece, your long, and I dare say, your still beloved consort (for love and life are not conterminable) as well appeareth by your many tender expressions of that disjuncture, and by that monument of your own excellent invention which you have raised to her memory.

Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 477.

But either to the clasping vine
Does the supporting poplar wed,
Or with his pruning hook disjoin
Unbearing branches from their head,
And grafts more happy in their stead.

Dryden. Horace, Epode 2.

Then straight in anagram a wretched crew
Will pay their undeserving praises too;
While on the rack his poor disjointed name
Must tell its master's character to Fame.

Parnell. On different Styles of Poetry.

But we were fain to make a much more laborious and diligent exhaustion of the air to procure the disjunction of the marbles this second time, than was necessary to do it at the first.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 276.

Since she had been Queen of England, they left it to the king to determine, whether she should die so infamous a death [burning] or be beheaded, but the judges complained of this way of proceeding, and said, such a disjuncture, in a judgment of treason, had never been seen.

Burnet. History of the Reformation, an. 1536.

I speak this disjuncturely, because the instincts of animals are not all of one kind in differing species, and sometimes are manifold even in the same individual.

Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 728.

Their [the Athenian] sophists taught it [logick] in conjunction with rhetoric and philosophy. But Aristotle brought it to perfection, and seems to have been the first who professedly disjoined it from other arts and sciences.

Beattie. On Truth, pt. iii. c. 1.

Windmill street consisted of disjoined houses; and a windmill, standing in a field on the west side, proves from what its name was derived.—Pennant. London.

All this is done upon their favourite principle of disunion, of sowing jealousies amongst the different orders of the state, and of disuniting the natural strength of the kingdom: that it may be rendered incapable of resisting the sinister designs of wicked men, who have engrossed the royal power.—Burke. On the Present Discontents.

I am entitled to contend, that one side or other of the following disjunction is true, either that the Evangelists have delivered what Christ really spoke, and that the event corresponded with the prediction, or that they put the prediction into Christ's mouth, because at the time of writing the history, the event had turned out so to be.

Paley. Evidences, pt. i. c. 3.

Others [conjunctions] termed disjunctive connect sentences, while they seem to disjoin their meanings, and set, as it were, one part of a sentence in opposition to another; as, Socrates was wise, but Alcibiades was not.

Beattie. Moral Science, pt. i. c. 1. s. 3.

DIS-JUDGE, v. To strip, divest, or deprive of, the rank and authority of a judge.

And that in the last parliament of King Charles the two Chief Justices Brampston and Finch, the Chief Baron Devonport, and all the rest of the judges and barons, except two, were by the whole House of Commons and some of the commissioners here sitting, and counsel pleading against this defendant, impeached of high-treason, disjudg'd and put to fines and ransoms.—State Trials. Dr. John Hewet.

DISK. Lat. Discus; Gr. Δισκ-ος, from Δικ-εω, to throw. Applied, consequentially—

To the form or shape of the thing thrown—figura plana ac rotunda.

A plane round figure.

So Jupiter although at so great distance from us, hath manifestly, we see, his lighter and darker parts; his belts and spots darker than the rest of his disc.

Derham. Astro-Theology, b. v. c. 4.

Mean-time, along the margin of the deep
His soldiers hurl'd the disk, or bent the bow,
Or to its mark dispatch'd the quiv'ring lance.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.

DIS-KINDNESS. Used by Search as more emphatic than the common word unkindness.

He that pulls down his neighbour's house does him a dis-kindness, how inconvenient a dwelling soever it were, unless he furnishes him with a plan and materials for building one more commodious.—Search. Light of Nature, Introd.

DIS-LIKE, v. DISLI'KE, n. DISLI'KENESS. DISLI'KING, n. DISLI'KER. } To dissent, to disagree, to disapprove, dislodge; to have no common (like) or similar will, feeling, inclination or disposition or affection for; to have an ill will towards; to be displeased with or averse from.

Like as the lute delights, or else dislikes,
As is his heart that plays upon the same;
So sounds my Muse, according as he strikes
On my heart strings high tun'd unto her fame.
Daniel, Son. 54.

And let faire Venus, that is queene of loue,
With her heart quelling sonne vpon you smile,
Whose smile they say, hath vertue to remoue
All loue's dislike, and friendship's faultie guile
For euer to assoile. Spenser. Prothalamion.

Our generall could willingly haue consented, if the king himselfe had not first broke his word; the consideration whereof, bred an utter disliking in the whole company, who by no means would give consent, he should hazard himselfe.
Sir F. Drake. The World Encompassed, p. 89.

And as for the rest, that touched the sale of corn, they promised there should be no disliking offered them in price.
North. Plutarch, p. 192.

Among many dislikers of the queen's marriage, it chanced, one, for some other offence, to be committed to the fleete by the councell, who being an inward acquaintance of Wyats, was supposed by him to haue reuealed the conspiracy.
Speed. Q. Marie, b. ix. c. 23. s. 28.

Both the government of the church by bishops, and the forms of public prayer, and consecration and ordination of bishops and ministers, was wholly disliked and disallowed by many of those preachers, and a new discipline and new forms laboured by them to be brought in.
Strype. Life of Abp. Whitgift, an. 1583.

The Puritans (for by that name they now [1564] commonly went) laboured at this juncture, all they could, to shew their utter dislike and resistance of that conformity that was then in agitation, out of hope, belike, that when the superiors should observe how irksome these matters were, they might be discouraged any further to press them.
Id. Life of Abp. Parker, an. 1565.

For that which is not design'd to represent any thing but itself, can never be capable of a wrong representation, nor mislead us from the true apprehension of any thing by its dislikeness to it.—Locke. Of Hum. Underst. b iii. c. 4.

The Americans when the stamp act was first proposed, undoubtedly disliked it, as every nation dislikes an impost; but they had no thought of resisting it, till they were encouraged and incited by European intelligence from men whom they thought their friends, but who were friends only to themselves.—Johnson. Taxation no Tyranny.

To shew any dislike to those who were the favourites of that infamous Emperor [Domitian] was construed by him into an act of treason against himself.
Melmoth. Pliny, b. vii. Let. 33. Note.

DIS-LIMN, v. The fleeting away of the clouds destroys the picture, (Steevens,) i. e. (the work of the limner,) the delineation, the form or figure.

Ant. That which is now a horse, euen with a thoght the racke dislimes, and makes it indistinct, as water is in water.
Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act iv. sc. 12.

DIS-LOCATE, v. } See COLLOCATE. Fr. DISLOCA'TION. } Disloquer; It. Sloggiare; Sp. Dislocar.

To put out of place, out of joint; to displace, to disjoint.

F. Peck. The incision is not deep nor the orifice exorbitant, the perforation is not dislocated, I warrant his life for forty crowns, without perishing of any joint.
Chapman. All Fools, Act iii. sc. 1.

Indeed I have heard how, in the age of our fathers, servants were in far greater subjection than now-a-dayes, especially since our civil wars hath lately dislocated all relations, so that now servants will do whatsoever their masters enjoyn them—so be it they think fitting themselves.
Fuller. Worthies. Barkshire.

But he [Ravillac] scap'd only with this, his body was pull'd between four horses, that one might hear his bones crack and after the dislocation they were set again.
Howell, b. i. s. 1. Let. 16.

Wherefore I prefer the common opinion, which preventeth such dislocation of the months, by setting down a more convenient way of intercalations in the 8th year.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. ii. c. 3. s. 7.

If it had been made of several bones without intervening, we should have had no more use for it, than if it had been but one bone. If each vertebra had had its own distinct cartilages, it might have been easily dislocated.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. i. c. 8. (Note. 3.)

In whichever direction he pushes, he perceives, in the form, or junction, or overlapping of the bones, an impediment opposed to his attempt, a check and guard against dislocation.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 8.

DIS-LODGE, v. } "Fr. Desloger,— DISLO'DGE, n. } To dislodge, remove, shift, flit, part or depart from an accustomed lodging," (Cotgrave.)

When euery thought and euery sorrow
Dislodged was out of mine herte.—Chaucer. Dreame.

The Grekes oft times entended their return,
From Troye town, with long warre all ytired,
For to dislodge. Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

Then eyther may vnfolde
the secrets of the hart,
And show how long dislodge hath bred
our cruell cutting smart.
Turberville. The Ventrous Lover, &c.

How often haue I scal'd the craggie oke,
All to dislodge the rauen of her nest.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calendar. December.

Per. Marry I do think,
That we might all be lords now, if we could stand fer 't.
Hig. Not I if they should offer it: I'le dislodge first,
Remove the bush to another climat.
Beaum. & Fletch. Beggar's Bush, Act v. sc. 2.

Thither forth right he rode to rouse the prey,
That shaded by the fern, in harbour lay;
And thence dislodg'd was wont to leave the wood,
For open fields, and cross the crystal flood.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

First, from the forge dislodg'd, he thrust apart
His bellows, and his tools collecting all,
Bestow'd them, careful, in a silver chest.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xviii.

DIS-LOYAL, adj. } Fr. Desloyal; It. Disleale. DISLO'YALLY. DISLO'YALTY. } Unfaithful to the laws, unfaithful to allegiance; faithless, perfidious, treacherous.

He knewe hym selfe, his actes, yea, and hys name to be had in suche despyte and hatred of the more parte of hys disloyall people, that nothynge (whatsoeuer he dyd) was esteemed, regarded, well spoken of or had in anye pryce.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 1.

It is these strangers that charge me only: the other having dealt so disloyally and confessed it against themselves, are not to be believed.
State Trials. Duke of Norfolk, an 1571.

The Devil and his ministers, wicked seedsmen, sowed in you darnel and cockle, treason and disloyalty; they have made you forget your duty to your natural prince and country.—Id. Robert Hickford, an. 1571.

But the sad virgin innocent of all,
Adoune the rolling riuer she did poure,
Which of her name now Severne men do call:
Such was the end that to disloyall loue did fall.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10.

Dye, rather dye, then so disloyally
Deeme of her high desert, or seem so light:
Faire death it is, to shun more shame, to die:
Dye, rather dye, then euer loue disloyally.
Id. Ib. b iii. c 5.

Kings and princes, therefore, must not blame private men, though they change and alter sometime for their profit: for therein they do but follow the example of princes, who teach them all disloyalty, treason, and infidelity, judging him most worthy of gain, that least observeth justice and equity.—North. Plutarch, p. 336.

What though this prince refuses to receive
The pref'rence, which his juster subjects give,
Fame uncontroll'd, that no restraint obeys,
The homage, shunn'd by modest virtue, pays,
And proves disloyal only in his praise.
Dryden. Ovid Met. b xv.

I need not acquaint my reader that this princess was then under prosecution for disloyalty to the king's bed, and that she was afterwards publicly beheaded upon the same account.—Spectator, No. 397.

I therefore meant to ask thee of thy father,
And (that my want of skill in choice might 'scape
All censure) hide thee close in Harewood castle.
Edgar with smiles consented, and, I think,
Harbours no thought of my disloyalty.—Mason. Elfrida.

DIS-LU'STRE, v. To deprive of lustre or brightness, splendour.

And certain it is, that all those glittering passions, which so much affect our senses, get their lustre in the absence of that intellectual light, which as soon as it appears, deads and dislustres them.
Montague. Devout Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 6. s. 3.

DIS-MAIL, v. To deprive of the coat of mail.

He, soone prepar'd to field, his sword forthdrew,
And him with equall value countervayl'd:
Their mighty strookes their habergeons dismayld.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 6.

DI'SMAL, adj. } Of uncertain origin. Sere- DI'SMALLY. } nius thinks from Dys, an avenging Deity, dea noxia; and mal, a pre-appointed time, (q.d.) Dysas mal, dies vindictæ, (Minshew,) dies malus. Skinner's conjecture is more worthy of attention; that it may be from dimmel, a diminutive of dim; in A.S. Dimn-ian, obscurare, to darken.

Dark, gloomy, clouded, cheerless, dull, melancholy, unhappy.

In the example from Shakespeare's Macbeth, Mr. Steevens, upon mere conjecture, would read dismal-fatal.

I not wel how that I began
Ful yuel reherse it I can,
And eke as helpe me God withall
I trow it was in the dismall,
That was the ten wounds of Egypt. Chaucer. Dreame.

Soone as he entred was, the dore straightway
Did shut, and from behind it forth there lept
An vgly fiend, more foul than dismall day,
The which with monstrous stalke behind him stept,
And euer as he went, due watch upon him kept.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

A lion gaping or yawning from his prey, and the blood of it about his mouth, looks very dismally, the bloodiness and fierceness of his countenance is as if a flaming fire, fire and smoak and brimstone, came out of his mouth.
Hammond. On Revelations, c. 9.

Your vessels and your spells prouide,
Your charmes, and euery thing beside;
I am for th' ayre; this night I'le spend
Vnto a dismall and a fatal end.
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act iii. sc. 5.

Com'st thou, my son, alive to realms beneath,
The dolesome realms of darkness and of death?
Com'st thou alive from pure, ethereal day?
Dire is the region, dismal is the way.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xi.

When prophane, malicious, subtle, treacherous politicians are not onely supplanted in their wicked contrivances, but dismally chastised for them;—these occurrences do more than insinuate divine wisedome to intervene, countermining and confounding such devices.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 11.

Though the Atheist has no God to fear, yet the miserable, forlorn condition of a world without a ruler must keep him under perpetual alarms, in the apprehension of the dismal effects which chance and hazard may produce in the material system.—Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iii. s. 6.

DIS-MAN v. To deprive or divest of manhood.

Though, indeed, if we consider this dissolution, man by death is absolutely divided and dis-man'd.
Feltham, pt. i. Res. 47.

DIS-MA'NTLE, v. "Fr. Desmanteller,—to take a man's cloak off his back; also to dismantle, to raze or beat down the walls of a fortress," (Cotgrave.)

Lambert presently took care so to dismantle the castle [of Nottingham] that there should be no more use of it for a garrison, leaving the vast ruins still standing.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. iii. p. 192.

The word [restore] is also used for the rebuilding a ruined and depopulated city, Dan. ix. 25, &c. which is the sad emblem of a soul laid waste by sin, which defaceth its beauty, dismantles its strength, and brings down its highest and noblest faculties.—Comber. Comp. to the Temple, pt. i. s. 3.

These have been, and these shall be in their day;
And all this uniform, uncolour'd scene
Shall be dismantled of its fleecy load,
And flush into variety again. Cowper. Task, b. vi.

Then brave Sarpedon, tugging with both hands
The battlement, it fell, and ample space
For entrance left in the dismantled wall.
Id. Homer. Iliad, b. xii.

DIS-MA'RSHAL, v. To derange or disarrange; to disorder.

What was dismarshall'd late
In this thy noble frame,
And lost the prime estate,
Hath re-obtain'd the same,
Is now most perfect seen. Drummond. Sonnets.

DIS-MA'RY, v. To divorce or separate from marriage or matrimonial union; to disjoin those united in wedlock.

Howebeit agaynst the yonge mannes mynde he was dismaryed, and maryed agayne to another gentylwoman, at the pleasure of the Duke of Burgoyne and of the Lord de la Treinoyle, who toke on them the quarrell.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 190.

DIS-MASK, v. To strip or deprive of a mask; to uncover, reveal, disclose.

Vnhappie ghost, go waile thy grief below,
Where neuer soule but endless horrour sees,
Dismask thy mind among the mirtle trees,
Which here I see thou art asham'd to show.
Sterling, Son 20.

Boy. Faire ladies mask't, are roses in their bud
Dismask't, their damaske sweet commixture showne,
Are Angels vailing cloudes, or roses blown.
Shakespeare. Love's Labour Lost, Act v. sc. 2.

DIS-MAST. To strip or deprive of the mast.

The weather proving somewhat more moderate on the 27th, we sent our boat to the captain of the Tryal, who, when he came on board us, produced an instrument, signed by himself and all his officers, representing that the sloop, besides being dismasted, was so very leaky in her hull that even in moderate weather it was necessary to ply the pumps constantly, and that they were then scarcely sufficient to keep her free.—Anson. Voyage, b. ii. c. 5.

Mr. Anson then represented to the viceroy the case of the ship Hashingfield, which having been dismasted on the coast of China, had arrived in the river of Canton but a few days before.—Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 10.

DIS-MAW, v. To throw out of the maw or mouth; to disgorge; (a word coined for the occasion.)

The first that broke off their silence, was Don Quixote, saying, now Mistress Rodriguez, you may unrip yourself, and dis-maw all that you have in your troubled heart and grieved entrails.—Shelton. Don Quixote, vol. iv. c. 7.

DIS-MAY, v.
DISMA'Y, n.
DISMA'YEDNESS.
DISMA'YFUL.

By an easy and elegant metaphor, says Skinner, from the Lat. Dis, and Sp. Majar, to bruise, to crush; from the Lat. Malleus, (q.d.) malleo frangere. More probably, dis, and may, to have might or power. A. S. Mag-an; Ger. Mog-en; Dut. Mag-en; "posse, valere, prævalere; to may or can, to be able, to avail, to prevail," (Somner.)

"Fr. Esmayer,—to be sad, pensive, astonied, careful," (Cotgrave.) "Sp. Desmayar,—to faint, to swoon, to lose courage, to dismay," (Delpino.) In English, dismay is more strongly applied.

To deprive of might or power, of all active courage, of fortitude; to daunt, to dispirit, to dishearten.

Al by nygte he wende forth, and sogte out here son.
Some heo fonde ligge slepe, heo demayde hem anon.
R. Gloucester, p. 156.

——— That falle mad him afright,
He [William] stode alle dismaied, than said tille him a knyght. R. Brunne, p. 70.

Like him, that wand'ring in the bushes thick,
Trodes on the adder with his rechlesse foote,
Rered for wrath swelling her speckled neck,
Dismay'd, gones back all sodenly for fere
Surrey. Virgile. Æneid, b. ii.

Perdy (said he) heere comes and is hard by
A knight of wondrous powre, and great assay,
That neuer had encountred enemy,
But did him deadly daunt, or foul dismay,
Ne thou for better hope, if thou his presence stay.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 4.

Her husband desired her not to be in the least manner dismayed at his sufferings, and so for a while they parted, she using these words, "Farewell my dearest, be of good comfort, I am not dismayed."
State Trials. Bastwick, Burton, and Prynne, an. 1637.

All our mundanities are not to be assaulted at once, for fear of sensitive natures being subject to too great and sudden desolation, and dis-mayedness.
Mountagus. Devonte Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 6. s. 3.

She comming forth, when as she first beheld
The armed prince, with shield so blazing bright,
Her ready to assaile, was greatly queld,
And much dismay'd with that dismayfull sight,
That back she would haue turn'd for great affright.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 11.

She thought herself the trembling dame who fled,
And him the grisly ghost that spurr'd th' infernal steed:
The more dismay'd, for when the guests withdrew
Their courteous host, saluting all the crew
Regardless pass'd her o'er.—Dryden. Theodore & Honoria.

Beneath thy arm the Nemean monster fell;
Thy arm with terrour fill'd the realms of hell;
Ev'n hell's grim porter shook with dire dismay
Shrunk back and trembled o'er the mangled prey.
Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. viii.

Say, Juno, why this sudden resscent?
Thou seem'st dismay'd: return'st thou by command
Of Jove, thy terrible though wedded lord.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xv.

In the dread season of dismay,
In that your hour of trial say,
Who then shall prop your sinking heart?
Who bear affliction's weightier part?
Brookes. Sparrow & Dove.

DISME. Fr. Disme, a tithe or tenth. From the Lat. Decimus.

The disme goth to the battaile,
As though Christe might not availe
To do them right by other waie.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

Nowe yf the spiritualtie had bene aboute to haue gathered a disme amonge them and geuē it me: Tyndall here had loste it me euery peny.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 423.

The Abbot of Waltham being appointed collector of a disme, granted unto the king, in discharge of himself, in the Exchequer, pleadeth, Quo, &c.
State Trials. Proceedings on the Habeas Corpus, an. 1627.

DIS-ME'ASURED, v. Out of measure; immoderate.

I will not that my penne bee so dismeasured to reproue so muche the auncients men, that the glorie all onely shoulde abyde with them that be present.
Golden Boke, Prologue.

DIS-ME'MBER, v.
DISME'MBERMENT.
DISME'MBERING, n.

Fr. Dismembre; It. Dismembrare; Sp. Desmembrar.

To separate, disjoin, disunite, member from member; limb from limb, one part or portion of a whole or entire body from another; "to tear, mangle, cut, rend from or in pieces," (Cotgrave.)

& among alle othere meest reuthe it was ido,
That sir Simon the olde man demembred was so.
R. Gloucester, p. 559.

——— The coreune fort[illegible]e
Dismembred not a dele. R. Brunne, p. 313.

For Cristes sake swere not so sinnefully, in dismembring of Crist, by soule, herte, bones, and body: for certes it seemeth, that ye thinken that the cursed Jewes dismember'd him not ynough, but ye dismembre him more.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

As the hamer cuttith, brekyth, or disseuerith iron and other harde metallys, so dyd this Charlis dismembre and cut or broke the enemyes of France throughe his hyghe prowesse.—Fabyan, vol. i. c. 147.

But that there was no sutche dismembringe of the holy communion at that time, we may wel vnderstande both by S. Basile, Nazianzene, Gregorie, Nyssene, and others of that age.—Jewel. A Replie to M. Hardinge, p. 137.

His goodly corpse on rugged cliffs vrent,
Was quite dismembred, and his members chaste
Scatt'red on euery mountaine, as he went,
That of Hippolytus was left no moniment.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 5.

They found matter of dispute upon the territories that belonged to the several towns, and especially upon the Châtelenie of Aeth, which France had dismembered since it was in their possession, and had joined above three-score villages to the Châtelenie of Tournay.
Sir W. Temple. Memoirs from 1672—79.

The partition treaties forced the king of Spain to make a will in favour of the house of Bourbon; and the Spaniards threw themselves into the arms of France, to prevent the dismemberment of their monarchy.
Bolingbroke. The Occasional Writer, No. 11.

Whose pulse in every vein beats strong,
Whose limbs leap light the vales along,
May yet ere noon tide meet his death,
And lie dismember'd on the heath.
Beattie. The Hares. A Fable.

All their [the Scotts] members met in the same house, and the king's vassals were not increased upon the dismembering a royal fief, as was the custom in England.
Priestley. On History, pt. v. Lect. 46.

I perhaps shall prove in a future letter, with the political map of Europe before my eye, that the general liberty and independence of the great Christian commonwealth could not exist with such a dismemberment; unless it were followed (as probably enough it would) by the dismemberment of every other considerable country in Europe.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 4.

DIS-MISS, v.
DISMI'SS, n.
DISMI'SSAL.
DISMI'SSION.
DISMI'SSIVE.

It. Dimettere; Lat. Dimittere, dimissus. Mittere—facere, ut eat, to cause to go, to send.

To cause to go or depart, to send away, to discard, to discharge.

And thereupon hee dismissed his friends from him, and continued many daies in the same place.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 272.

They being dismissed spread by and by a report abroad of the arriuall of a strange nation of a singular gentlenesse and courtesie.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 246.

Then was that whole assembly quite dismist,
And nature's selfe did vanish; whither no man wist.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vii. c. 7.

His majesties servants, with great expressions of grief for their dismiss, poured forth their prayers for his Majesty's freedom and preservation, and so departed.
Sir T. Herbert. Memoirs of Charles I. p. 14.

35 Henry VI. It was the resolution of all the Judges, that matter of Utlawry was a sufficient cause of dismission of any member out of the house.
State Trials. Goodwin & Fortescue, an. 1604.

Nor only dost degrade them, or remit
To life obscur'd, which were a fair dismission,
But throw'st them lower than thou didst exalt them high.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

But to end this moot, the law of Moses is manifest to fix no limit therin at all, or such at least as impeaches the fraudulent abuser no more then if it were not set; only requires the dismissee writing without other caution, leaves that to the inner man, and the bar of conscience.
Milton. Tetrachordon.

The liquid air his moving pinions wound,
And, in a moment, shot him on the ground.
Before he came in sight the crafty God
His wings dismiss'd, but still retain'd his rod.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. i.

If, as our dreaming Platonists report,
There could be spirits of a middle sort,
Too black for heaven, and yet too white for hell,
Who just dropt half way down, not lower fell;
So pois'd, so gently she descends from high,
It seems a soft dismission from the sky.
Id. The Hind and the Panther.

I accept of your invitation to supper: but I must make this agreement before hand, that you dismiss me soon and treat me frugally.—Melmoth. Pliny, b. iii. Let. 12.

"They besought him, saying, send her away, for she crieth after us." Send her away.—that is, grant her petition, and give her her dismissal.—Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 28.

With them, [the Gods] I therefore fight not, but if earth
Produce thy food, and thou be man, approach,
And win a swift dismission to the shades.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. vi.

DIS-MOUNT, v. Fr. Desmonter; It. Dismontar, smontare; Lat. Mons, montis, high or elevated ground.

To descend or cause to descend, to get down or alight, to throw off or cast down.

Of their falsehood more could I recount,
But now the bright sunne ginneth to dismount.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calendar. May.

There we found six great pieces of brass ordnance, mounted upon their carriages, some demy, some whole culverins: we presently dismounted them.
Sir F. Drake Revived, p. 10.

Thus to their fame, when finished was the fight,
The victors from their lofty steeds alight:
Like them dismounted all the warlike train,
And two by two proceeded o'er the plain.
Dryden. The Flower and the Leaf.

Did not Samuel exercise such a charity, when being ingratefully and injuriously dismounted from his authority, he did yet retain toward that people a zealous desire of their welfare, not ceasing earnestly to pray for them.
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 25.

——— O the sorceries of sense!
They work this transformation on the soul,
Dismount her, like the serpent at the fall,
Dismount her from her native wing (which soar'd
Ere while ethereal heights,) and throw her down,
To lick the dust, and crawl in such a thought
Young. The Complaint, Night 7.

DIS-NA'TURED, adj. "Fr. Desnaturer,—to make unnatural; to weaken nature," (Cotgrave.

Unnatural, ill-natured.

And make this empire of the north to shine,
Against all th' implous workings, all th' assays
Of vile disnatur'd vipers; whose design
Was to embroil the state, t' obscure the light,
And that clear brightness of thy sacred right.
Daniel. A Panegyric to the King's Majesty.

——— If she must teeme,
Create her childe of spleene, that it may live
And be a thwart disnatur'd torment to her.
Shakespeare. Lear, Act i. sc. 4

Can the stern mother, than the brutes more wild,
From her disnatur'd breast tear her young child;
Flesh of her flesh, and of her bone the bone,
And dash the smiling babe against a stone?
Churchill. Gotham, b. III.

DIS-OBE'Y, v. DISOBE'ISANCE. DISOBE'ISANT. DISOBE'DIENT. DISOBE'DIENCE. DISOBE'DIENCY. DISOBE'DIENTLY. Fr. Désobeir; Sp. Desobedecer; It. Disubbidire. Obey, from ob-ed-ire, compound of ob, and aud-ire, to hear, hearken or listen to; and thus, to obey is — to comply with, submit to the will or wishes of another; and to disobey—

To refuse, or deny, or withhold, or withdraw, obedience, compliance or submission, to the will or wishes of another; to act contrary to rule or order, or command; to resist authority.

And touching this, full few men there be
Unneths any dare I safely say,
Pro day to day as men may all day se
But that the best of God they disobey.
Chaucer. The Letter of Cupide.

For as moche as a man is not obeisant to God, that is his Lord, therefore is his herte to him disobeisant thurgh concupiscence, which is called nourishing of sinne and occasion of sinne.—Id. The Persones Tale.

Anone begonne to disobeie
With werres vpon euery side.—Gower. Con. A. b. v

Nowe then vpon that other aide
To tell my disobeisance
Ful sore it stant to my greuance. Id. Ib. b. i.

And though I make no semblant,
Myn herte is all disobeisant,
And in this wise I me confesse
Of that ye clepe vnbuxomnes. Id. Ib.

O that ye wolde feare the Lord and serue him and heare his voyce, and not disobeye the mouth of the Lord: and that both ye & the kynge that raygneth ouer you, wolde folow the Lord youre God.—Bible, 1551. 1 Kynges, c. 12.

Thenne they all with one voyce answered, we wyll that this be done, for surely he is disobeysaunt and a rebell agaynst you.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, c. 43.

For lacke of whiche dylygence, thei that were disposed to do disobeysaunce, were incoraged and inboldened.
Hall. Hen. VI. an. 4.

And nowe, for your contempte and disobedience, goo you to the prysone of the kynges benche, whereynto I commytte you, and remayne ye there prisoner vntyle the pleasure of the kynge your father be further knowen.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. II. c. 6.

And howe is the king obeyed, whose wisest be withstanded, the disobedientest obeyed, the high in authoritie not waied, the vnskillfullest made chief capitaines.
Sir J. Cheke. The Hurt of Sedition.

Rich. Villaines set downe the coarse, or by St. Paul
I'le make a coarse of him that disobeys.
Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act I. sc. 2.

Meanwhile I cannot omit to take notice of one auxiliary consideration, taken in to approve the sincerity of his doctours, considering, saith he, the corruptness of our nature, the prejudice ought rather to stand on the part of the disobeyers than obeyers of any government.
Hammond. Works, vol. II. pt. II. p. 228.

[It is found grievous] that these commissioners usually appoint and allot to women discontented at and unwilling to live with their husbands, such portion and allowance for present maintenance, as to them shall seem meet: to the great encouragement to wives to be disobedient and contemptuous against their husbands.
State Trials. The great Case of Impositions, an. 1606.

Search thro' the world, we shall not know a thing,
Which may to reason's eye more horror bring,
Than disobedience to the highest cause,
And obstinate auersion from his laws.
Beaumont. Of Sinne.

And from thence labour to bring in again
The outlet will of disobediency;
Send terrour, threats, intreaties, but in vain.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. VII.

I will go seek some unfrequented path,
Either in desert woods or wilderness,
There to bewail my innocent mishaps,
Which heav'n hath justly poured down on me,
In punishing my disobediency.
Taylor. The Hog hath lost his Pearl, Act III.

He disobedientlie refused to come, pretending some feare of bodilie harm, through the malice of some that were about the king.—Holinshed. Edw. III. an. 1340.

——— And when night came on
Sleep and the same forewarning dream begun:
Once more the God stood threatening o'er his head,
With added curses if he disobey'd.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. XV.

A father commands his son to ask him blessing every day, and is ready to give it him; but so long as he is undutiful to him in his other actions, and lives in open disobedience, forbids him to come in his sight.—Tillotson, vol. I. Ser. 25.

Whereby you might at all times have repressed the insolency, and corrected the disobediency of such as therein should have presumed to offend, if such care and vigilancy had been used within your charge as appertaineth.
Strype. Life of Abp. Grindall, an. 1580.

Man, who was placed originally with every circumstance of happiness about him, disobeyed his Maker, fell from that happy state, and became subject to God's displeasure.
Gilpin, vol. II. Ser. 27.

——— Whose sire,
Percosian Merops, in prophetic skill
Surpass'd all others; he his sons forbade
The mortal field, but disobedient they
Still sought it, for their destiny prevail'd.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. XI.

The same favourable conclusions may also be drawn from the weakness of human nature, which though it be no excuse for stubborn disobedience, yet seems to render the penitent proper objects of divine mercy.
Jortin. On the Christian Religion, Dis. V.

DIS-OBLI'GE, v. DISOBLIGA'TION. DISOBLI'GEMENT. DISOBLI'GER. DISOBLI'GINGLY. It. Disobbligare; Sp. Desobligar; Fr. "Désobliger,—to release or discharge of a bond, to quit of an obligation," (Cotgrave.) Lat. Ob-lig-are, ob, and ligare, to bind, to hold to. Our old English writers use the word properly as the Fr. and It. viz. to release or free from bond or obligation. To oblige is, to bind, sometimes with a subaudition of,—by acts of kindness or service; and disoblige is opposed to this—

Not to bind or attach by kindness or service; to withhold, to refuse a kindness or service; and thus—

To offend, to give offence to, to displease.

Sir, I hope I [Whitelocke.] may be thought capable to know my king, and to understand what protection I was to have from him, the mutual relations of both; and further I hold myself disobliged.
State Trials. Hollis and Whitelocke, an. 1645.

If the contrary reason makes them so that the law could not justly have been impos'd, or if it had been de facto impos'd, it could not oblige the conscience, then the conscience is restor'd to liberty and disobligation.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. III. c. 6. s. 3.

That if he receded from what he had promised, it would be such a disobligation to the prince who had set his heart now upon the journey, after his majesty's approbation, that he could never forget it, nor forgive any man who had been the cause of it.—Clarendon. Civil War, vol. I. pt. I. p. 16.

If I make a voluntary covenant as with a man to do him good, and he prove afterward a monster to me, I should conceive a disobligement.
Milton. The Tenure of Kings and Magistrates.

For sure there is no precept of Christianity, wherein the speculation and the practice are more distant one from another then in this of loving our enemies, and benefitting our disobligers.—Mountagne. Devonie Est. pt. I. Treat. 15. s. 4.

He could not but well remember how foully that business had been managed, and how disobligingly he himself had been treated by that ambassadour.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. I. p. 14.

But however, could a man by his will, oblige himself, or make any thing vnlawful to him, there would be nothing got by this, because then might he by his will, disoblige himself again, and make the same lawful as before.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 893.

Thus doth God's design concerning the abolition of this religion appear by verbal testimonies; the same we see also declared by real effects; his providence hath made good his word, he hath not only disobliged men from that religion, but hath manifestly discountenanced it.
Barrow, vol. II. Ser. 15.

I likewise either found or form'd an image to myself of the contrary kind; that those who lost the prizes, were such as had disoblig'd the poet or were in disgrace with Augustus, or enemies to Mecænas: and this was the poetical revenge he took.—Dryden. Virgil, Ded.

Nor can it be any just offence unto her majesty of France, whom they highly honour and esteem, as a good and glorious queen; nor any disobligation to the ambassador the Prince D'Harcourt, whom likewise they desire to treat with all demonstrations of civility and respect, if, according to the laws of all nations, the law of this kingdom be put in execution against one who is a native, a subject, a delinquent.—Parliamentary History. Charles I. an. 1643.

DIS-O'CCIDENT, v. To turn away from the west. Lat. Occidens, the setting, (sc.) of the sun. See DISORIENT.

Perhaps some roguing boy that managed the puppets, turn'd the city wrong, and so disoccidented our geographer.
Marvell. Works, vol. III. p. 39.

DIS-O'RBED. Thrown out of its orbit or sphere of motion.

And reason flyes the obiect of all harme;
Who maruels then when Helenus beholds
A Grecian and his sword, if he do set
The very wings of reason to his heels.
And flye like chidden Mercury, from Ioue,
Or like a starre disorb'd.
Shakespeare. Troyl. & Cres. Act II. sc. 2.

DIS-ORDA'IN, v. See infra, To DISORDER. Fr. Desordonné,—"disorderly, disordinate, unruly, disordered, outrageous, unbridled, out of all compass," (Cotgrave.) In R. Gloucester it appears to mean, "To put out of orders, (sc.) as a clerc."

——— Zuf eni clerc as felon were itake,
& vor felon iproued, & ne mute it nert uorsake,
That me solde him uerst disordeine.—R. Gloucester, p. 473.

Glotonie is unmesurable appetit to ete or to drinke, or elles to do in ought to the unmesurable appetite and disordeined coveitise to ete or drinke.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

DIS-O'RDER, v. DISO'RDER, n. DISO'RDEREDLY. DISO'RDERLY, adj. DISO'RDERLY, ad. DISO'RDERLINESS. DISO'RDINATE. DISO'RDINATELY. DISO'RDINANCE. Fr. n. Disordre; It. Disordine; Sp. Desorden; It. v. Disordinare; Sp. Desordenar. (See CO-ORDAIN.) To Disorder, is—

To put, cast or throw, out of bounds or limits, out of station or rank, rule or regularity or method; to discompose, to disarrange, to disturb, to confound or confuse.

Alas! may not a man see as in our daies, the sinneful costlewe array of clothing, and namely in too moche superfluitee, or elles in to disordinate scantnesse.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

For right as reson is rebel to God, right so is sensualitee rebel to reson, and the body also, and certes this disordinaunce, and this rebellion, our Lord Jesu Christ abought upon his precious body ful dere.—Id. Ib.

The kynge of Hungery was sore displeased whan he sawe howe he had lost ye iourney by disordering of the Frenchemen, and sawe no remedy but to flye, or else be taken or slayne.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol II c. 217.

And whiles in one gyfte neither wouldo gyue place to other, there was such disordre and confusion, so that euen theyr wemen in open places both spoke and taught.
Udal. Pref. to 1st Epistle of Corinthians.

For lyke as the disordered loue of the parent or child, is hatred rather than loue, sith it is noysome vnto both: so the disordered care to preserue the lyfe, is verey destruccion of the lyfe.—Id. Matthew, c. 10.

On other side the Turkes, which trusted power to much,
Disorderly did spread their force, the will of God was such.
Gascoigne. A Devise of a Masque, &c.

The effect of whiche supplication was, that the temporall landes deuoutely geuen, and disordinately spēt by religious and other spiritual persones, might suffice to maintein to the honor of the king and defence of the realme XV. erles, &c.
Hall. Hen. V. an. 2.

We may easily trace almost all the sins and enormities, and distempers, and troubles, and disorders, that we observe in ourselves or others, to the immoderation and disorder of the passions.—Hale. Cont. vol. II. Of the Moderate Affections.

When as the king thereof ascertained,
Supposing some small pow'r would have restrain'd
Disorder'd rage; sends with a simple crew,
Sir Humphry Stafford, whom they overthrew.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. VI.

Surelie these men so disorderedlie confounding all things, they in the end shall be confounded themselues.
Holinshed. Conquest of Ireland, vol. VI c. 41

Saul in much different state at Gilgal, lay;
His forces seem'd no army, but a crowd,
Heartless, unarm'd, disorderly, and loud.
Cowley. Davideis, b. IV.

For they alone live as they would, who have learned to will that which they should: whereas if our actions and affections both be disordinate and not ruled by reason, the liberty of our free will is small, slender, and feeble, yea and intermingled for the most part with much repentance.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 43.

They dance with disordinate gestures, with monstrous thumping of the feete, to pleasant sounds, to wanton songs, to dishonest verses.

Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act v. sc. 8.

Tis not more natural for the stomach to digest, the lungs to breathe, the glands to separate juices, or other intrans to perform their several offices; however they may by particular impediments be sometimes disordered or obstructed in their operations.

Shaftesbury. Enquiry concerning Virtue, b. ii. pt. i. s. i.

He [Turnus] heav'd it at a lift: and poiz'd on high
Ran staggering on against his enemy:
But so disordered, that he scarcely knew
His way: or what unwieldy weight he threw.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. xii.

If we were at peace at home, we should be so abroad; i. e. if we subdue our unruly and disorderly passions within ourselves, we should live more easily and quietly with others.—Stillingfleet, vol. iii. Ser. i.

And thus does Celsus in Origen declare the nature of God, God is not the president or head of irregular and irrational lust or appetite, and of loose erratick disorderliness, but of the just and righteous nature.—Cudworth. Intell. Syst. p 873.

The following lines upon delirious dreams may appear very extravagant to a reader, who never experienced the disorders which sickness causes in the brain.

Thompson. Sickness, b. iii. Note.

Begin, my Muse, and Damon's woes rehearse,
In wildest numbers and disorder'd verse.

Lyttleton. The Progress of Love, Ecl. 2.

Seneca draws a picture of that disorderly luxury which changes day into night, and night into day, and inverts every stated hour of every office of life.

Hume. Ess. Populousness of Ancient Nations.

DIS-ORGANIZE, v. } To destroy the or-
DISORGANIZA'TION. } ganical or instrumental construction, disposition or arrangement of parts; to discompose, disarrange, disorder.

The anarchy of the administration of Pache, which has completely disorganized the supply of our armies; which by that disorganization reduced the army of Dumourier to stop in the middle of its conquests, &c.

Burke. App. Address of M. Brissot.

They take an action as near the true one, as the difficulty and the disorganization, with which they have to contend, will allow of.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 26.

DIS-ORIENTED. Fr. Désorienter,—to turn away from the east; Lat. Oriens, the rising, (sc.) of the sun. It seems equivalent to the vulgar expression—

To be or put out of his latitude; to have lost the right way.

I doubt then the learned professor was a little disoriented when he called the promises in Ezekiel and in the Revelations the same.—Warburton. Divine Legation, b. v.

DIS-OWN, v. Own, from Ger. Eig-en, egg-en; A.S. Ag-an, agn-ian, geagnian, "to possess, to own, to appropriate, to challenge to himself, to make to become his own," (Sonner.) And to disown—

To refuse to own or acknowledge, to disclaim, disallow, disavow, renounce.

But when you say it is impossible for you, upon the sudden, and without advice of counsel to own or disown books, you seem very dark to me, I cannot dive into your meaning.—State Trials. Col. John Lilburn, an. 1649.

And yet neither he, nor the rest are to be thought any more blame-worthy herein, than many others, that holding the same premises have either dissembled or disowned those conclusions, which unavoidably follow therefrom.

Cudworth. Morality, b. i. c. i.

Being all unanimous, and led to the clear evidence of so direct and so important an interest (which must have been lost by the usual delays) they [the deputies of the States General] all agreed to run the hazard: and were so far from being disowned, that they were applauded by all the members of every province.

Sir Wm. Temple. On the United Provinces, c. 2.

When somebody told him that his mother and his brethren stood without, desiring to see him, he seemed almost to disown this earthly relation to them, and pointing to his followers, said, my mother and my brethren are those which hear the word of God and do it.—Pearce, vol. iv. Ser. 10.

DI-SPACE, v. Lat. Spatiari, to walk up and down.

To move about, range about.

But when he spide the loyous butterflie
In this faire plot dispacing to and fro,
Fearelesse of foes and hidden ieopardie,
Lord, how he gan for to bestirre him tho.

Spenser. Muiopotmos.

Thus wise long time he did himself dispace
There round about, when as at last hee spide,
Lying along before him in that place,
That flocks grand captain, and most trustie guide.

Spenser. Virgil. Gnat.

They [the Saints] in this lower field dispacing wide,
Through windy thoughts, that would their sails misguide;
Anchor their fleshly ships fast in his wounded side.

G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph after Death.

DIS-PAIR, v. To separate a pair; to separate or join those matched.

—— Forgive me, lady,
I have destroy'd Gerrard, and thee: rebell'd
Against heaven's ordinance; dispair'd two doves,
Made 'em sit mourning, slaughter'd love, and cleft
The heart of all integrity.

Beaum. & Fletch. Four Plays in One.

DIS-PA'RAGE, v. }
DISPA'RAGE, n. }
DISPA'RAGEABLE. }
DISPA'RAGEMENT. }
DISPA'RAGER. } It. Disparegiare; Fr. Disparager,—"to offer unto or impose upon a man unfit or unworthy conditions," (Cotgrave.) Mid. Lat. Disparigare, (Vossius, de Vitus, iv. 6.)
DISPA'RAGING, n. }
DISPA'RAGINGLY. }

Spelman says,—the French use parage for family, consanguinity, parentage; hence, in our law, to disparage is the same thing as to bind together unequals in blood. From the Lat. Dispar, unlike, unequal.

To degrade, to underrate, to undervalue, to disgrace.

A false traitour, false clerk, (quod he)
Thou shalt be ded by Goddes dignitee,
Who durst be so bold to disparage
My doubter, that is come of swiche linage.

Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4269.

For ever he demed, sin it first began,
That whan the lord fulfilled had his corage,
Him wolde think it were a disparage
To his estat, so lowe for to alight

Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8781.

Denoyde of good corage,
Dismoyde of wysedome sage,
Mad, frantyke, and savage
Thus he dothe disparage
His blode with fonde dotage.

Skelton. The Duke of Albany and the Scottes.

Also the damesell suffereth no dispergement in hyr bloode, or hyndrance in her marriage, but is moche rather aduanced (no dyspreyse to my dere frende Gysippus.)

Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. ii. c. 12.

And beside that, offering to his ward couenable marriage without dispergment before the age of xxi. yeares if it be a man, of fourteene if it be a woman.

Smith. Commonwealth, b. iii. c. 5.

Sith it is an vnfitting thing, & a verie blemish, & highe disparagemet, to the sacre magesty of a prince, yt ought as nigh to approche priesthode in clenes as he doth in dignitie, to be defouled wt bigamy in his first mariage.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 59.

Yet do not sdeigne to let thy name be writt
In this base poeme, for thee far unfitt:
Nought is thy worth disparaged thereby.

Spenser. To the Earle of Essex.

So as it fell, there was a gentle squire
That lov'd a lady of high parentage;
But for his meane degree might not aspire
To match so high: her friends with counsel sage,
Diswaded her from such a disparage.

Id. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 8.

They disdained this marriage with Dudley as altogether disparageable and most unworthy of the blood royal and regal majesty.—Camden. Elizabeth, an. 1565.

He seeing with that chorle so faire a wight,
Decked with many a costly ornament,
Much merueiled thereat, as well he might,
And thought that match a foule disparagement.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 8.

So that if his charity had equally drawn with his learning, he would have forborn to procure the envy of so powerful a number upon him, from whom he cannot but expect the return of a like measure of blame, and only have made way to his own grace, by the proof of his ability, without the disparaging of us, who would have been glad to have stood quietly by him.—Daniel. A Defence of Rhyme.

Let not my liege misdeem these humble lays,
As lickt with soft and supple blandishment,
Or spoken to disparagon his praise.

G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph & Death.

Why should he speak so disparagingly of many books and much reading.—Peters. On Job, p. 423.

Their actors think themselves disparag'd by the poet, if they may not twice or thrice in a play entertain the audience with a speech of an hundred or two hundred lines.

Dryden. An Essay on Dramatick Poesie.

Nothing hath wrought more prejudice to religion, or has brought more disparagement upon truth, than boisterous and unseasonable zeal.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 22.

Be pleased to consider with me, that there are divers things, which ought to lessen the authority of the disparagers of scripture.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 302.

Two Gods of no inferior fame,
Whom ancient wits with reverence name;
Though wiser moderns much disparage,
I mean the Gods of love and marriage.

Mallet. Cupid & Hymen.

All of whom I mention to honour, and surely without disparagement to any or all of those most respectable princes and grandees.—Burke. On Mr. Fox's East India Bill.

DIS-PA'RATE, adj. } Lat. Dis-parare, se-
DI'SPARATES, n. } parare, et sejungere, to separate, to disjoin. Disparata, quasi ab aliis sejuncta separataque. (Vossius in v. Paro.)

Of disparates, Cockeram says, "Words which are differing one from another, but not contrary, as heat and cold are contraries, but heat and moisture disparates.

Separated, disjointed, distinct.

But if the office of an Evangelist be higher, then as long as they are not disparate, much less destructive of each other, they may have leave to consist in subordination.

Bp. Taylor. Episcopacy Asserted.

Certainly this punishment of excommunication is very disparate and distant from the crime of schism.

Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 505.

All the objections raised suppose the sums total of all infinites to be equal, when in disparate parts they manifestly are not so.—Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. i.

The maxim may be true in all human friendship except the conjugal, but fails completely in the love between Christ and the church, in which the affection on both sides is the most cordial, though the rank of the parties be the most disparate.—Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 8.

DI-SPARCLE. By this word Brende renders spargere, and dissipare, to spread, disperse, dissipate. It is compounded of Dis, (augmentative, see Dis,) and to sparkle; i. e. throw out sparks, to spread, to scatter, as sparks do. See SPARKLE.

When the Inhabytoures that dwelled in cottages disparkled [sparsis tuguriis habitabant] thereaboutes saw men comming, whome they iudged to be theire enemies, thinking they had ben enclosed about, slew such as were not able to folow them, & fled to the wild mountaynes that were full of snowe.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 121.

Then all his men for feare disparcled [dissipantur metu] flying by such waies as were open for them, and threwe away their armoure, whiche before they had taken for theire defence.—Id. Ib. fol. 40.

Ye will have the very church a secret vnknowen, not a company & congregacion, but a disperckled noumber of only good men.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 182.

But the left wing of the horsemen (considering a great number of them were yet disparcled asunder) being with much difficultie brought together, marched a main pace.

Holland. Ammianus, p. 422.

DIS-PARITION. Used by Hall as equivalent to disappearance; and in opposition to Apparition.

How could any son of the prophets stay within the colledge walls that day when he knew what was meant to Elijah? Perhaps, though they knew that to be the prophet's last day; yet they might think his disparition should be sudden, and insensible; besides, they found how much hee affected secrecie in this intended departure; yet the fifty Prophets of Jericho will make proofe of their eyes, and with much intention assay who shall have the last sight of Elijah.

Bp. Hall. Cont. The Rapture of Elijah.

DIS-PA'RITY. Lat. Dispar, unlike, unequal. Unlikeness, inequality.

—— Just such disparity
As is 'twixt air and Angels' purity,
'Twixt woman's love, and men's will ever be.

Donne. Air & Angels.

But the disparity of years and strength,
Between you and your son, duly consider'd,
We would not so expose you.

Massinger. The Unnatural Combat, Act i. sc. 1.

For if to produce alike in any kind or degree, be to generate; then to give a being without any dissimilitude or disparity is the most proper generation. But Saviour, therefore, hence truly is the Son of God the Father.

Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 21.

And yet the disparities of understanding between the wisest and most learned author, and the most ignorant of the mechanics whose manual art and industry must concur in the publication of his labours—the disparity between the wisest man and the humblest of his instruments—is nothing in comparison of that which must be confessed to subsist between the two intellects which have concurred in the publication of the prophetic word, (the divine spirit and the prophet.)—Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 18.

DIS-PARK, v. } Fr. "Déparqué,—disparked, DISPA'RKING, n. } disinclosed, laid open: also broken or got out of a park or inclosure," (Cotgrave.)

But this I hope shall not need in time, for the owners of a great sort of them begin now to smell out, that such parcels might be employed to their more gain, and, therefore, some of them doo grow to be disparked.

Hollinshed. Description of England, c. 19.

For they riotously, with routs and companies, with sword and violence, of their own heads and authority, assembled themselves in many places, plucked down the men's hedges, disparked their parks.—Strype. Mem. Edw. VI. an. 1545.

The rocks did rend, the veil of the Temple divided of itself and opened the inclosures, and disparked the Sanctuary, and made it pervious to the Gentiles eye.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 4.

And we shall find that the little undecencies and riflings of our souls, the first openings and disparkings of our vertue differ only from the state of perdition, as infancy does from old age, and sickness from death.—Id. Ser. 16. pt. ii.

DIS-PART, v. } Lat. Dispartiri, to separate; DISPARTA'TION. } Dis, and partiri, to divide, to deal.

To divide, to separate, to dissever, to sunder.

That done, he leads him to the highest mount,
Such one, as that same mighty man of God,
That blood red billowes like a walled front
On either side disparted with his rod,
Till that his army dry foot through them yod,
Dwelt forty daies vpon.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b.I. c.10.

Why, look you, Sir, there are so many lobbies,
Out-offices, and disparations here.

Massinger. The Renegado, Act ii. sc. 6.

The flood disparts: behold! in plated mail
Behemoth rears his head. Thomson. Summer.

Phylides, meeting with preventive spear
The furious onset of Amphicles, gash'd
His leg below the knee, where brawny most
The muscles swell in man; disparted wide
The tendons shrank, and darkness veil'd his eyes.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xvi.

DIS-PA'SSION, n. } Equivalent to Dispassion is apathy; Gr. Ἀπαθεία; and to compassion, sympathy, Gr. Συμπαθεία. See COMPASSION, and APATHY.
DISPA'SSIONED,
DISPA'SSIONATE, adj.
DISPA'SSIONATELY.

Want of, freedom from, passion or feeling; calmness, coolness of feeling, temperance, moderation.

What is called by the Stoics apathy, or dispassion; by the Sceptics indisturbance; by the Molinists quietism; by common men peace of conscience, seems all to mean but great tranquillity of mind, though it be made to proceed from so diverse causes, as human wisdom, innocence of life, or resignation to the will of God.

Sir W. Temple. On Gardening.

We look upon you as wise and dispassionate men, and good patriots, who will raise up those banks and fences which have been cast down, and who will most reasonably hope, that the same prosperity will again spring from those roots, from which it hath heretofore and always grown

Clarendon. Conf. Bar, vol. iii. p. 745.

The proofs of the truth of the Christian religion are of a moral nature, and though not of equal clearness with the testimonies of sense or a mathematical demonstration, yet are so pregnant and so convincing that the considering dispassionate spirit fully acquiesces in them.

Bates. The Divinity of the Christian Religion.

They dispute without strife, and examine as dispassionately the events and the characters of the present age, as they reason about those which are found in history.

Bolingbroke. Remarks on the History of England.

Yet ease and joy, dispassion'd reason owns,
As often visit cottages as thrones.

Cawthorn. The Equality of Human Conditions.

Whereas reason requires a calm and dispassionate situation of the mind to form her judgments aright, she wants the whole attention to look round upon every circumstance, and places her objects in all the lights wherein they are capable of standing.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. c. 21.

Religion, my Lords, is the only sure basis of every government, for you may as well attempt to build a city without a foundation, as to preserve a state without religion—if any thing of this kind has happened, surely it becomes the legislature to avert to those things speedily, seriously, and dispassionately.—Anecdotes of Bp. Watson, vol. ii. p. 12.

DISPATCH, or DESPA'TCH, v. DISPA'TCH, n. DISPA'TCHER. DISPA'TCHFUL. DISPA'TCHING, n. DISPA'TCHMENT. } Despatch is more consistent with the origin of the word. Fr. Despescher, dépescher; Sp. Despachar; It. Spacciare. Menage says, Dépêcher, quasi depedare, i. e. expedire; and to the same purport Skinner. Ex-ped-ire; dicitur qui pedem retentum liberat. (Donatus, in Ter. Heeyram, v. 1. 28.) "Fr. Despescher,—

To hasten, rid, send away quickly, to take a speedy course with, make a speedy end of," (Cotgrave.)

A despatch,—messages or letters sent expeditiously, with haste, with speed.

Commaunde them, that they be not (as the commune sorte is) hyghe mynded in trustyng vpon their riches, not that they repose their chief helping felicitie in thinges, that are fyrst vayne, than so vncertain that yf casualtie take them not awaye, yet at least death despatcheth vs from them.—Udal. 1 Timothee, c. 6.

But whā I had cleane dispatched my self of this great charge and taske, I looked not that I should at any time afterward, haue any more to doe with this kinde of writing.

Id. Preface vpon Matthew.

And afterwards, hauynge addressed and revsed their trophee vpon the rocky place of the sepulcre of the deade, they despeched a brigantyne, by the which they aduertysed the Athenyans of that same victorie

Nicoll. Thucidides, fol. 223.

After the dispatch of Rodolph, in Lent last, as he had made show before, that he intended to go over sea, and was all this while practising about this treason: at length being frighted with these rumours, he came to sue to the queen for a passport.—State Trials. Duke of Norfolk, an. 1571.

The said lord cardinal, by his ambition and pride, hath hindered and undone many of your poor subjects for want of dispatchment of matters; for he would no man should meddle but himself.—Id. Cardinal Wolsey, an. 1529.

After he had taken his leave of them all, he drank Bull's blood, as most men think (or as other say) poyson, which dispatcheth a man in 24 hours, and so ended his days.

Notes. Plutarch, p. 112.

David Ramsay, Colonel Alexander Hamilton, and sir James Hamilton, attending their dispatch from the king of Sweden at Elneby, were forced to reside with me in my ship, for at this time we were all on ship board.

State Trials. Lord Cranstoun, an. 1631.

The first attempt of our dispatcher, is to give an account of his writing at all, and his second, to defend his manner of treaty from the charge or blame of contumeliousness.

Hammond. Works, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 167.

So saying, with dispatchfull looks in haste
She turns, on hospitable thoughts intent.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

I have differred the dispatching of a curriar (with an evident danger that he will now arrive too late, and put in hazard a businesse of mine of consideration, which obligeth me to dispatch him) that he may not go without them.

Cabbala. The Marquis Inojosa to the Lord Conway.

Some hero too must be dispatch'd, to bear
The mournful message to Peleides' ear;
For sure he knows not, distant on the shore,
His friend, his lov'd Patroclus, is no more.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xvii.

Great Ormond's arms the sword of caution wield
And hold Britannia's broad-protecting shield;
Bright Bolingbroke and worthy Dartmouth treat
By fair dispatch, with every foreign state.

Parnell. On Queen Anne's Peace.

The blooming virgin with dispatchful cares
Tunics, and stoles, and robes imperial, bears.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. vi.

When they become my grandfather and grandmother, they mount to the two pair of stairs, and then, unless dispatched to the mansion house in the country, or crowded into the house-keeper's room, they perish among the lumber of garrets.—Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iv. c. 1.

A husbandman, or a gardener, will do more execution, by being able to carry his scythe, his rake, or his flail, with a sufficient dispatch through a sufficient space, than if, with greater strength, his motions were proportionably more confined and slow.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 9.

——— But at the groves
Arriv'd, at length, of Ida fountain fed,
Their keen-edg'd axes to the tow'ring oaks
Dispatchful they applied, down fell the trees
With crash sonorous.—Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiii.

DIS-PEL, v. Lat. Dispellere; dis, and pellere.

To move or cause to move apart; to drive asunder, to disperse.

And though I do not speak any way in glory, indeed at this present there is a cloud hanging over our heads, I desire there may be a fair sunshine to dispel it.

State Trials. Col. John Morris, an. 1649.

Now let rebellion, discord, vice and rage,
That have in patriots' forms debauch'd our age,
Vanish with all the ministers of hell:
His rays their poisonous vapours shall dispel.

Dryden. The Art of Poetry, c. 4.

And when the king of lightnings, Jove, dispels
From some huge eminence a gloomy cloud,
The groves, the mountain-tops, the headland heights
Shine all illumin'd from the boundless heav'n.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xvi.

DI-SPEND, v. } Fr. Despendre; It. Dispendere; Lat. Dispendere, to take
DISPE'NDER. } from a weight or mass. Dis,
DISPE'NDING, n. } and pendere, to weigh. Dispendium est, si ponderi aliquid detrahatur cum damno nostro. Etymology requires that we should write dis-pend, (dis, and pendere.) Eng. usage, de-spend, as if a comp. of the Eng. Spend.

To take from, use out of, a collected weight or mass, out of a heap; to dispose of, to disburse, to distribute; and (now more the common word) to expend, (qv. and spend.) Dispence is also used in our elder writers as equivalent to,—Expence. See under v. Dispense.

For bisshopes that thei kende, & other that thei found,
That ilk gere mot dispende of londes tuenty pound
Suld com ther he was. R. Brunne, p. 290.

Yf thow hast wonne ouht wickely, wisliche dispende hit.

Piers Ploughman, p. 140.

And the Lord seide, who geessest thou is a true dispender, and a prudent; whom the Lord hath ordeyned on his meyne, to gyue to him in tyme mesure of wheete?

Wiclif. Luke, c. 12.

Eeh man as he hath reseeyued grace mynystringe it into eeh othir as goode dispenderis of the manyfold grace of God.

Id. 1 Petir, c. 4.

They laugh and daunce, trippe and sing,
And laie nought vp for her liuing,
But in the tauerne all dispendeth,
The winning that God him sendeth.

Chaucer. The Rom. of the Rose.

And Salomon saith that the greter richesses that a man hath, the more dispendours he hath.—Id. Tale of Melibeus.

Then said the Lady Welshe, a stout and wise woman (as Tyndall himselfe reporteth) well sayd she, there is such a doctour which may dispend a cl. & an other cl. and an other ccc. poûdes. And what, were it reason thinke you that we should beleeue you before them.

Tyndall. Workes. Life by Fox.

Spende yee thilke trulich to the worship of God, least ye leesen the blisse of heauen, for the vntrue dispending of God's goods in this world.

Fox. Martyrs, p. 373. The Comp. of the Plowman, &c.

My lord (said he) do you keep a priory sessions in your own house for me, and call me Roger, whose father is a knight and may dispend a thousand pounds within one mile of your nose? and he that can dispend ten pounds by the year as I can, I thank God, is no vagabond.

Strype. Memorials. Queen Mary, an. 1555.

Flam. O yes, yes;
Had women navigable rivers in their eyes,
They would dispend them all.

Webster. Vittoria Corombona, Act v.

DI-SPE'NSE, v. } Fr. Dispenser; It. Dispensare; Sp. Despensar; DISPE'NSE, n. } Lat. Dispensare. (See
DISPE'NSABLE. } DISPEND.) Low Lat. Dispensare, canone vel legibus solvere. (Vossius, DISPE'NSABLENESS. } de Vitiis, l. 34.)
DISPE'NSARY. }
DISPENSA'TION. } To distribute, to deal
DISPE'NSATIVE. } out, to apportion, to give
DISPE'NSATIVELY. } a portion or allowance,
DISPENSA'TOR. } to allow; to give leave
DISPE'NSATORY, n. } or permission to do or DISPE'NSATORY, adj. } not to do, to exempt, to DISPE'NSATORILY. } excuse, to make or claim
DISPE'NSER, or } an excuse.
DISPE'NSOR. }
DISPE'NSING, n. }

Dispensator is used as equivalent to steward.

The which sacrament he purposide in him in the dispensacioun of plentee of tymes to enstore alle thingis in Crist which ben in heuenes and which ben in erthe in him.

Wiclif. Effesies, c. 1.

And God beholder and foreweter of all things dwelleth aboue, and the present eternitie of (his) sight, renneth alway with the diuers qualitie of our deedes, dispensing or ordeining medis to good men, and torments to wicked men.
Chaucer. Boecius, b. v.

For all his purpose, as I gesse,
Was for to make great dispence
Withouten warning or defence.
And richesse might it well sustaine,
And her dispences well maintaine,
And him alwaie such plentie sende
Of golde and siluer for to spende
Without lacking or daungere,
As it were pounde in a garnere.—Id. The Rom. of the Rose.

Then the wise dispensacion of God spareth him, the whiche man aduersitie might empairen, for that God wil not him to trauaile to whom trauaile nis not couenable.
Id. Boecius, b. iv.

But for he had golde enough
To yeve, his sinne was dispensed
With golde, whereof it was compensed.
Gower. Con. A. b iii.

Thou shalt be large of thy dispense.—Id. Ib. b. v.

And they all kept such port, and made so large dispēce that it semed that syluer and golde fell out of their hādes.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, c. 29.

Another is made vicare, to whom he geueth a dispensation to goe where he will, and to set in a parishe priest which can but minister a sort of dumme ceremonies.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 102.

Not onely for that, one man hathe the autoritie ouer so many tounes, but muche more in that the moost parte of them ouer and beydes the dyspensacion and teaching of the Gospell, whiche is ye chiefest and the very peculiar office of a byshop, are burthened with the administracion of secular offices.—Udal. St. Paul, to Timothy, Ded.

An euangelical steward and dispenser of Goddes woorde, cannot by any thing better winne his lord and maister's hert vnto him, then whan his lord is absent, to represent the gracious boūtie of him, towards the neighbour.
Id. Luke, c. 12.

What shal I now best doe, seeing that my Lorde & maister taketh awai from me the power and office any longer to haue the dispensing of his goodes.—Id. Ib. c. 16.

But I pray you, what is to be looked for in a dispensour? This surely, that he be found faithfull, and that he truly dispense, and lay out the goods of the Lord, that he give meate in time, give it I say, and not sell it: meate I say, and not poyson.—Latimer. Sermons, p 6.

His louely words her seem'd due recompence,
Of all her passed paine. one louing houre
For many yeeres of sorrow can dispence:
A dram of sweet is worth a pound of sowre.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 3.

In which whatsoeuer in this worldly state
Is sweet, and pleasing vnto liuing sense,
Or that may daintiest fantasie aggrate,
Was powred forth with plentifull dispence
And made there to abound with lauish affluence.
Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 12.

He [Lord Paulkland] was a great cherisher of wit and fancy and good parts in any man; and, if he found them clouded with poverty and want, a most liberal and bountiful patron towards them, even above his fortune; of which, in those administrations, he was such a dispenser, as, if he had been trusted with it for such uses.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. ii. p. 351.

If they be lawes, they must be deemed part of the laws of the land, and desirable and dispensable by the ordinary courts of the land.—State Trials. Colonel Andrewe, an. 1680.

Upon this occasion we might be engaged to enter into an examination of the Romish Doctrines: 1. Of Penances, &c. &c. 6. Of Dispensableness of Oaths.
Hammond. Of Fundamentals, c. 12. s. 2.

But peace, I must not quarrel with the will
Of highest dispensation, which herein
Happ'ly had ends above my reach to know.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

Let the kingdom of Scotland witness for the space of so many years before his coming hither, whether either flattery or fear, (no not upon that enterprise of the 17th of November, which would have put the pacience of any prince in Europe to his proof) could draw from the king the least inclination to this dispensative indifference, that was only believed because it was eagerly desired.
Proceedings against Garnet, &c. (1606.)

First for the point of conscience, I can now hold my place canonically, which I held before but dispensatively.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 328.

The state [is] absolutely monarchical in Christ, dispensatively monarchical in respect of particular churches; forasmuch as that power, which is inherent in the church, is dispensed and executed by some prime ministers.
Bp. Hall, Ser. Canticles, b. ix.

But now secondly, there is a dispensatory kingdom, (as Diuines use to call it,) as he is considered as Mediator between God and his church; which kingdom is not his natural due, but it was given him, and given him by choice.
Goodwin. Works, vol. i. pt. i. p. 439.

And the description of the whole oyntment is to be found in the chymicall dispensatory of Crollius.
Bacon. Naturall History, s. 997.

We look not on our afflictions as on medicines sent us immediately out of the special dispensatory of heaven, but as the ordinary diet and portion of mutable man.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 535.

He is the God of all grace dispensatorily, or by way of performance, and execution, and gracious dispensations of all sorts.—Goodwin. Works, vol. iv. pt. iv. p. 217.

It [faith] discovereth the special aids dispensed to us for the support of our weakness against all temptations and discouragements incident to us through the course of our life.—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 2.

Some lead their youth abroad, while some condense
Their liquid store, and some in cells dispence
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. i.

In every benefaction between man and man, man is only the dispencer, but God the benefactour; and therefore let all ungrateful ones, know, that where gratitude is the debt, God himself is the chief creditor.—South, vol. i. Ser. 11.

Which undoubtedly were either because it was suggested in that act, that the marriage with Queen Catharine was not dispensible by the Pope as being against the law of God; or, &c.—Strype. Memorials. Hen. VIII. an. 1534.

But the natural gaiety and spirit which shine in the complexion of such as form to themselves a sort of diverting industry by chusing recreations that are exercises, surpass all the false ornaments and graces than can be put on by applying the whole dispensary of a toilet.—Tatler, No. 248.

The original of this difference (among the members of the College of Physicians) has been of some standing, though it did not break out to fury and excess, until the time of erecting the dispensary, being an apartment in the college, set up for the relief of the sick poor, and managed ever since with an integrity and disinterest suitable to so charitable a design.—Garth. Preface to the Dispensary.

Soph. Though sovereign princes bear a privilege of entering when they please within the walls. In others, 'tis a crime past dispensation.—Dryden. Assignation, Act v. sc. 4.

But I confess, I have not without wonder, and something of indignation, seen even in the publick dispensatories, I know not how many things ordered to be distilled with others in balneo.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 126.

These spirits were called Demons, distributors or dispensers of good and evil to mankind.
Farmer. On Miracles, c. 3. s. 2.

The grand principle which runs through the whole Jewish dispensation is, that Jehovah is the one true God, that he is sole Creator and sovereign of the world, which he governs by fixed and invariable laws, and that no superior beings whatever, besides God, are able to control those laws, or that course and order of events which he established.
Id. On the Demoniacs of the New Testament, c. 3. s. 9.

On the contrary, all sciences, and natural history among the rest, have a language and a manner of treatment peculiar to themselves, and he who attempts to dress them in borrowed or foreign ornaments, is every whit as uselessly employed as the German apothecary we are told of, who turned the whole dispensatory into verse.
Goldsmith. Pref. to Dr. Brookes. Natural History.

DIS-PE'OPLE. } Fr. Despeupler. See DE-
DISPEO'PLER. } PEOPLE, ante.

To drive out, expel or destroy the people; to depopulate.

He letteth them dwell there indeede, because they were to many to cary all awaye, and to many to kill them all to, but if he sholde either leaue the land dispeopled and desolate, or elles some other countreys of his owne, from whence he shold (which woulde not well bee done) conuaye the people thyther, to people that land withall.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1212.

Nay, do you suppose that the kinge of England will euer suffer so great a parte of his dominions, and so great and famous a kingdome as Scotland to be dispeopled?
State Trials. The Case of Postnati, an. 1608.

Now bright the ninth expected morning shone,
Now rose the fiery coursers of the sun,
When endless crowds the vast assembly crown'd
From all the wide dispeopled country round.
Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. v.

Nor drain I ponds, the golden carp to take,
Not troll for pikes dispeoplers of the lake.
Gay. Rural Sports, c. 1.

Thus then with force combin'd, the Lybian swains
Have quash'd the stern despeopler of the plains.
Lewis. Statius. Thebaid, b. ix.

By incommodious encampments and unwholesome stations, where courage is useless, and enterprise impracticable, fleets are silently dispeopled, and armies sluggishly melted away.—Johnson. The Fortunate Islands.

DI-SPE'RPLED. The It. Sparpagliare, Menage derives from the Lat. Dispergere, to disperse, to scatter. "Fr. Esparpiller,—
To scatter, disperse, dasparkle asunder," (Cotgrave.)

& there this gode lawe hli despeplede al aboute
R. Gloucester, p. 517.

There it was despepled the edit (edict.) ywis.—Id. p 568.

And if a rewme be departid agens itself, thilke rewme may not stonde, and if an hous be disparpelid [dispertiatur] on itself thilke hous mai not stonde.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 3.

Jesus answeride to hem, now ghe bileuen, lo the hour cometh and now it cometh, that ghe be disparpiid [dispergamini] ech into hise owne thingis, and that ye leeue me aloone.—Id. Jon, c. 16.

But he shortly afterwarde assemblyd, and gaderyd agayne togyder, all suche as before were disperbiyd. [Other editions disperplyd.]—Fabyan, vol. i. c. 145.

Yea and those persones, who bearyng themselves bolde on theyr owne wisdom, and trustyng in their own power, haue sturdely lifted vp theyr neckes agaynst God, he hath wonderfully disperpled and scattered with theyr veray owne deuises and appoyntmentes.—Udal. Luke, c. 1.

—— I bath'd; and odorous water was
Disperpled lightly, on my head, and neeke;
That might my late heart hurting sorrowes chocke
With the refreshing sweetnesse.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. x.

DIS-PERSE, v. } Lat. Dispergere, dispersum, (dis, and spargere, to scatter.)
DISPE'RSEDLY. }
DISPE'RSEDNESS. }
DISPE'RSENESS. }
DISPE'RSER. } To scatter, to spread, to dissipate.
DISPE'RSING, n. } Our elder writers used—
DISPE'RSION. } to Disperple, and to Disparcle,
DISPE'RSIVE. } (qv.) now obsolete.

Without proprete of place
Thei liuen out of God's grace,
Dispers in all londes out.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

And ouer this I sigh also
The noble people of Israel
Dispers, as shepe vpon an hille
Without a keeper vnarmed.—Id. Ib. b. vii.

Out of some he taketh ye whole people awaie, disparsing them for slaues among many sondry countreys of hys, veryo farre fro their owne, without any sufferaunce of regresse.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1212.

The cloudy night gan thicken from the sea,
With mantells spred: that cloked earth and skies,
And eke the treason of the Grekish guile:
The watchmen lay dispers't to take their rest.
Surrey Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

That all his manly powres it did disperse,
As he were charmed with enchaunted rimes.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 9.

And for these causes it was determined, and publique notice thereof given at our departure from the Iland of Cape Verde, that the next randevouze both for the reconnecting of our navy (if it should be dispersed) as also watering, and the like, should be the river of Plate.
Sir F. Drake. The World Encompassed, p. 16.

For I am persuaded, and I may speak it with an absit invidia verbo, and no ways in derogation of antiquity, but as in a good emulation, between the vine and the olive, that of the choice and best of those observations upon texts of Scriptures, which have been made dispersedly, in sermons within this your Majesty's island of Britain, by the space of these forty years and more, leaving out the large excess of exhortations and applications thereupon, had been set down as a continuance, it had been the best work in divinity that had been written since the Apostles time.
Bacon. Advancement of Learning.

9. Lastly from their dispersedness, ready from every part to be reflected, if the clouds had any such reflexivity in them.
More. Antidote against Atheism, b. vi. c. 16.

William Page that dispersed the copies, and Singleton the printer were apprehended, against whom sentence was pronounced, that their right hand should be cut off, by virtue of a law made in the reign of Philip and Mary against the authors and dispersers of seditious writings.
Baker. Queen Elizabeth, an. 1581.

He is also culpable of the dispersing and divulging of the said infamous libel, in manner particularly above declared.
State Trials. Lord Balmerino, an. 1634.

The torrid parts of Africk are by Piso resembled to a libbard's skin, the distance of whose spots represent the dispersedness of habitations or towns in Africk
Brerewood. On Languages.

Saint Peter promis'd to the Jews of the dispersion, that he would do something to put them in remembrance of the things he had taught them: and he was as good as his word, and employ'd Saint Mark to write the Gospel.
Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. ii. b. i. § 8.

A fond popularity bewitches the soul, to strow about the wealth, and means: and, to feed that dispersive humour, all wayes shall be trodden, though they [be] never so much unworthy the man.—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 53.

Fierce was the fight, but, hastening to his prey,
By force the furious lover freed his way:
Himself alone dispers'd the Rhodian crew,
The weak disdain'd, the valiant overthrew.
Dryden. Cymon & Iphigenia.

So are all Jews, however living dispersedly over the world, reckon'd one nation, or people; so all kinsmen do constitute one family: and thus also all men, as made of one bloud, are one people.—Barrow. On the Unity of the Church.

The disperser of this copy was one Munsey, of that college, whom (as he thought) they made their instrument.
Strype. Life of Abp. Whitgift, an. 1595.

For if God did, in former captivities, punish them for their sins, when they were brought back again into their own land after 70 years, we must conclude that this is a sin of a higher nature which hath not been expiated by 1600 years captivity and dispersion.—Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 8.

As when two lions in the still dark night
A herd of beeves disperse, or num'rous flock,
Suddenly, in the absence of their guard,
So fled the heartless Greeks.—Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xv.

Not in a professed history of persecutions or in the connected manner in which I am about to recite it, but dispersedly and occasionally, in the course of a mixed general history, which circumstance alone negatives the supposition of any fraudulent design.—Paley. Evidences, vol. i. c. 4.

Though pleas'd to see the dolphins play,
I mind my compass and my way,
With store sufficient for relief,
And wisely still prepar'd to reef,
Nor wanting the dispersive bowl
Of cloudy weather in the soul.—Green. The Spleen.

DIS-PIERCE, v. Probably so written for Disperse; see above.

Your like we in a burning glass may see,
When the sun's rays therein contracted be
Bent on some object, which is purely white,
We find that colour doth dispierce the light,
And stands untainted.—Drayton. To the Lady J. S.

DI-SPI'RIT. } (Met.) To deprive of or
DISPI'RITED. } destroy the spirit; to cast
DISPI'RITEDNESS. } down or deject, sink or depress the spirit; to dishearten, to discourage.

The danger being very obvious, and easily foreseen, that what was beaten out in immoderate length, will lose of the massiness; and nothing more fit to be averted in religious offices, than their degenerating into heartless dispirited recitations.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. Pref.

For, said he, they are a successful army, and our men are dispirited, and not likely to get any thing by fighting with them.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 266.

That arsenical appears have, (especially in some persons and circumstances) produced some of the noxious effects of arsenical poisons, and particularly caused in some, great faintness and dispiritedness, I find by the testimony of divers eminent physicians.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 45.

The making of the peace, my lord, will vex none but those who are vexed already, and of whom I hope the resolution is taken of never striving to please: beside which, it is to be considered that as the conclusion of your work will exasperate so it will disarm and dispirit.
Lord Bolingbroke to Lord Strafford.

DISPI'TIOUS. } Mr. Tyrwhitt says, Angry
DISPI'TIOUSLY. } to excess. It is sometimes used as if from Despite, (qv.) and at other times as if compounded of dis, and pity; and will then mean—

Pitiless, merciless: having no pity, no mercy, no compassion.

He [the Persone] was to sinful men not dispitous.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 518.

This Palamon, when he those words herde
Dispitously he loked, and answered:
Whether sayest thou this in ernest or in play?
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1126.

[He was] dispitious and cruell, not for euill will alway, but after for ambicion, and either for the suretie or encrease of his estate.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 37.

Towns, cityes, kingdomes ye would ruinate,
In your auengement and dispiteous rage
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 3.

"God neuer gaue this world a more notable example, neyther in what vnsuretie stadeth this worldly weale, or what mischefe worketh the proude enterprise of an hie heart, finally or what wretched end ensueth such dispiteous cruelties.
Stow. Rich. III. an. 1483.

The mortall steele dispiteously entayld
Deepe in their flesh, quite through the iron walles,
That a large purple streame adown their giambeux falles.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 6.

My heart euen bleedes to tell you all and some,
And how Lord Hastings when he feared least,
Dispiteously was murdered and opprest.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 438.

DIS-PLACE, v. } Fr. Desplacer; "A. S.
DISPLA'CING, n. } Place, platea, a street, a place," (Somner.)

To move from, away from, a place; to move into another place or station, from any station or situation; to dislocate, to dispose, to disorder.

That then it shall, and may be lawful, for vs, our heires and successours, to remooue, and displace every such gouernour, and to place another of the said fellowship in the same office.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 147.

And when as Pastorella, him to grace,
Her flowry garlond tooke from her owne head,
And plac't on his, he did it soone displace,
And did it put on Coridon's instead.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 9.

All other loues, with which the world doth blind
Weake fancies, and stirre vp affections base,
Thou must renounce, and vtterly displace,
And giue thy selfe vnto him full and free,
That full and freely gaue himselfe for thee
Id. An Hymne of Heauenly Loue.

Wherefore religion and theism must of necessity be displaced, and removed out of the way, to make room for the leviathan, to roll and tumble in.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 890.

It therefore seemes, that he was not growne stronger or richer, by the displacing of Hubert Earl of Kent and the rest.
Speed. Hen. III. b. ix. c. 9. s. 43.

Lord Inchiquin made use of the opportunity to displace those officers that had been put in by the Lord Lisle, preferring his own creatures to their employments, to the great prejudice of the English interest in that country.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 217.

——— Achilles, then,
Retiring to his tent, displac'd the lid
That clos'd a curious chest by Thetis plac'd
On board his bark, and fill'd with tunics, cloaks,
And fleecy arms.—Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xvi.

DIS-PLA'CENCY. Lat. Displicens, (dis, and placere, to please.) Opposed to complacency, (qv.) Displeasure, dislike.

For them that are grown up and know it, he [Bonaventure] says, (1.) It is meet indeed and fit that his sin should displease them, that they should have a displacency, not a contrition or brokenness of heart for it: for afterwards it follows that he is not bound to afflict himself for it.
Goodwin. Works, vol. iii. pt. i. p. 343.

If a thing or a person give us pleasure or seem fit to do us good, we regard it with complacency or delight; if fit to do us evil or deprive us of pleasure, with displacency, or, to use a more common word, with dislike.
Beattie. Moral Science, pt. i. c. 11. s. 5.

DIS-PLANT, v. } It. Spiantare, dispiantare;
DISPLANTA'TION. } Fr. "Desplanter,— DISPLA'NTING, n. } To displant or pluck up by the root; to unplant, unset, remove," (Cotgrave.)

I did not think, a look,
Or a poor word or two, could have displanted
Such a fix'd constancy.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Woman's Prize, Act iii. sc. 1.

Ador. You may perceive I seek not to displant you,
Where you desire to grow; for further thanks,
'Tis needless compliment.
Massinger. The Guardian, Act i. sc. 1.

And this transmigration, plantation, and displantation, happened in the year of the world 3292, the 6th year of Ezekiah, King of Judah.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. ii. c. 9. s. 3.

And as this soyle was thus rich before the entrance of this people, so since the displanting of them from thence, and the Saracens possessing it, it hath not altogether lost its ancient fruitfulness.—Hakewill. Apologie, p. 141.

DIS-PLAT, v. To unfold; to untwist.

If any thing lye out of order, if every thing fall not even into their rings or curles, which of these would not rather choose that the state wherein he is a member should be in combustion then his haire should bee displatted?
Hakewill. Apologie, p. 413.

DIS-PLAY, v. } Fr. Desplier, desployer;
DISPLA'Y, n. } It. Dispiegare, spiegare, to DISPLA'YER. } unfold, to dilate, to extend; (q.d.) displicare, (Skinner.) Lat. Dis, and Plicare; Gr. Πλεκ-ειν, to fold.

To unfold, to expand; to spread or stretch out; to extend, to open widely; to show, to exhibit; (sc.) fully, clearly, ostentatiously.

At the poynt of the batalle, displayed his baners.
R. Brunne, p. 23.

And right anon withouten more abode
His banner he displaide, and forth he rode
To Thebes ward, and all his host beside.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 968.

So that vpon that other date
He came, where he this hoste beheld,
And that was in a large feide
Where the baners ben displaied.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

He was skantely entered into the toune, but he was by his postes aduertysed that the Erles with baners displaied and battailes ranged, were comyng toward hym.
Hall. Hen. IV. an. 3.

The wearie traueiler, wand'ring that way,
Therein did often quench his thirstie heate,
And then by it his weary limbes display.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 5.

This charter, as it was acknowledged by themselves, was granted at Running Mead, where the banners were displayed, when there was war or rebellion between the Barons, Commonalty, and the King
State Trials. John Hampden, an. 1637.

The displayer of his high frontiers.
Gaylon. On Don Quixotte.

If all this satisfie not, I begg from the ingenious the favour of this consideration: that some graine must be allow'd to a rhetorical display, which will not bear the rigour of a critical severity.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, b. iv. Pref.

It consequently may be, yea hath been, that the singular integrity of one, or of a few persons displaying itself, hath appeased divine wrath, and hath stayed off eminent ruine from a people.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 33.

For the more lively display of him, [the upright man] and the rendring him, as more amiable, so more imitable, it will be fit that we represent him a little more particular under those several respects and capacities, in which his uprightness is principally seen and expressed.—Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 5.

There was no rivalship between us, and we united our common efforts in this trial, without being mutually excited by any envious contention to display superior talents.
Melmoth. Pliny, b. iii. Let. 9.

DI'SPLE. } Corrupted from disciple, and
DI'SPLING, n. } discipline, (qv.)

That is to say, six fustigations or displings about the parish church of Aldborough aforesaid, before a solemne procession, sixe seuerall sundaies, and three displinges about the market-place of Hereistone in our said dioces.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 609. Displings of T. Pie and J. Mendham.

And bitter Penance, with an iron whip,
Was wont him once to disple euery day,
And sharpe Remorse her heart did prick and nip,
That drops of blood thence like a well did play.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

The dear and tender discipline of a father, the sociable and loving reproof of a brother, the bosom admonition of a friend, is a Presbytery and a consistory to them. 'Tis only the merry Friar in Chaucer can disple them.

Full sweetly heard he confession,
And pleasant was his absolution,
He was an easy man to give penance.
Milton. Of Reformation in England, b. i.

DIS-PLEASE, v. } Fr. Displaire; It. Dispiacere; Sp. Desplazer; Lat. Displacere, (dis, and placere.)
DISPLE'ASANT. }
DISPLE'ASANCE. }
DISPLEA'SANTLY. }
DISPLE'ASANTNESS. }
DISPLE'ASEDLY. }
DISPLEA'SEDNESS. }
DISPLE'ASINGLY. }
DISPLEA'SINGNESS. }
DISPLE'ASURE, v. }
DISPLE'ASURE, n. } To deprive of, to destroy, pleasure; to cause dislike, offence, anger, vexation, grief; to offend, to anger, to vex, to grieve.

& therfore the duke & the emperour were
Gladde to do Kynge Rychard displeasure.
R. Brunne, p. 200.

Consaile nat the comune. the kyng to displese.
Piers Ploughman, p. 532.

Than said I, sir, not you displease
To knowen of my great vnease.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R

So teacheth me, how that I may deserue
Your thonk, so yt I through mine ignorance
Ne do nothing that you be displeasance.—Id. Troil. b. iii

God wote this sinne is ful displesant to God, for he said himself, do no lechene.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

For there was eke the cruel aduersary
The louer's foe that cleped is displeasure.
Id. The Court of Loue.

——— Than all my disease
I tell: and though it hir displease
I spoke it forth, and nought ne leue.—Gower. Con. A. b iii.

I had my wish alwaies at will;
Ther was no wo might me displease,
Of pleasant ioyes I had my fill.
Incertaine Auctore. The Louer telleth his diuers Ioies.

Wherevnto the sayde Emperour displeasantly answering, said in this manner, God forbede, that euer I shoulde deuise any lawes, wherby my people should be compelled to do any thing, whiche I myselfe can not tollerate.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. iii c 3.

When Philip had read the letter, hee shewed more tokens of displeasauntnes then of feare.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, b. iii. p 29.

For displeasures prolonged & differed engendre hatred.
Udal. Matthew, c 5.

And weeping said, Ah my long lacked Lord,
Where haue yee been thus long out of my sight?
Much feared I to haue been quite abhord,
Or ought haue done, that ye displeasen might.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4.

This act of the king was displeasant to the whole realme, and one of the first things by which hee fell into dislike.
Speed. Rich. II. b. ix. c. 13. s. 35.

Thus tooke she place, displeasedly: the feast in generall
Bewraying privie spleenes at Jove: and then (to colour all)
She laught, but meerely from her lips
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b xv.

To secure our peace against this so fair pretence of disturbance, we must be advis'd not to enter into any sharp or froward displeasedness upon the occasions of our defects and frequent lapses.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 8. s. 3.

It is counted by some, a weaknesse in princes to haue favourites: but it is, of all others, the best remedy against ambitious great ones. For when the way of pleasuring and displeasuring, lieth by the favourite, it is impossible any other should be over great.—Bacon. Ess. Of Ambition.

With such faire words she did their heat asswage,
And the strong course of their displeasure breake,
That they to pitty turn'd their former rage,
And each sought to supply the office of her page.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 5.

Seeing then adversity is so wholesome and useful, the remedy of so great mischiefs, the cause of so great benefits to us, why should we be displeased therewith?
Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 7.

He told the ambassadors, that by granting this commission, denyal of inhibitions, which should be required, and confirmation of the sentence, which must be passed by him, he thought verily the Emperor should take it more displeasantly than if his holiness had declared himself.
Strype. Memorials. Hen. VIII. an. 1528.

The relish of the mind is as various as that of the body, and like that too may be altered, and 'tis a mistake to think that men cannot change the displeasingness or indifferency that is in actions into pleasure and desire, if they will do but what is in their power.
Locke. On Hum. Understanding, b. ii. c. 21. s. 69.

Or, if my heedless youth has stept astray,
Too soon forgetfull of thy gracious hand:
On me alone thy just displeasure lay,
But take thy judgments from this mourning land.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis, s. 265.

Mosquitoes, sand-flies seek their shelter'd roof,
And with fell rage the stranger-guest assail,
Nor spare the sportive child: from their retreats
Cockroaches crawl displeasingly abroad.
Grainger. The Sugar Cane, b. i.

My youth's first hope, my manhood's treasure,
My prattling innocent attend,
Nor fear rebuke nor sour displeasure,
A father's loveliest name is friend.
Cowper. A Father's Advice to his Son.

DIS-PLI'CENCE. } Displeasure, dislike.
DISPLI'CENCY. } See, above, DISPLEASE, and DISPLACENCE.

Wherefore I beseech you every one whom it may concern, to put on a serious displicence, upon these occasions, that they may not incurre this menace of Christ, "Woe be unto you that laugh now," but rather entitle themselves to this promise of the Holy Ghost, "they shall laugh in the latter day."—Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 2. s. 2.

It [natural conscience] may cause a great unwillingness to commit a sin, not only a remissness, but a displicence and reluctancy, and heart-rising against it, so as the man shall not sin with a full consent of will.
Goodwin. Works, vol. iii. pt. i. p. 274.

And hence arose quædam simultas, I will not say a grudge against them, for they had no sin, yet a kind of displicency with them, as mere creatures, if alone, and apart considered.
Goodwin. Works, vol. i. pt. i. p. 135.

DIS-PLODE, v. } Lat. Dis-plod-ere; dis,
DISPLO'SION. } and plaud-ere,—
To burst or break asunder with a loud noise. Explode is now the more common word.

——— Far in view
Stood rank't of Seraphim another row,
In posture to displode their second tire
Of thunder Milton. Paradise Lost, b vi.

But Etna roars with dreadful ruins nigh,
Now hurls a bursting cloud of cinders high,
Involv'd in smoky whirlwinds to the sky;
With loud displosion, to the starry frame,
Shoots fiery globes, and furious floods of flame.
Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. iii.

Soon as the feeble pulse, which leaps so long
Almost by miracle, is tir'd with play,
Like rubbish from disploding engines thrown,
Our magazines of hoarded trifles fly.
Young. The Complaint, Night 5.

DIS-PLUME, v. Fr. Desplumer. See DEPLUME.
To strip off the feathers.

Have you endeavoured to make these your rent gatherers respectable to us? No. You have sent them to us with their arms reversed, their shields broken, their impresses defaced, and so displumed, degraded and metamorphosed, such unfeathered two-legged things, that we no longer know them.—Burke. On the French Revolution.

DIS-PONE, v. } Lat. Disponere. See to DISPO'NENT. } DISPOSE.

For which I would alwaies on auenture
To the demsen of my sepulture
The forme, and of my mouable thou dispone
Right as thee semeth best is for to done.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. v.

That the benefices now vacant, or that have fallen void since the month of March, 1558, and such as should happen thereafter to be void, should be disponed to persons qualified for the ministry, upon trial and admission by the superintendents.—Spotswood. Church of Scotland, an. 1564. b. iv.

Motion disponent, or that parts may be rightly placed in the whole.—Bacon On Learning, by G. Wats, b. iii. c. 4.

DI-SPONGE, v. In first folio dispunge,—
To distil or drop; as from a full sponge. See SPONGE.

Knob. Oh soueraigne mistris of true melancholy,
The poysonous dampe of night dispunge vpon me,
That life, a very rebell to my will,
May hang no longer on me.
Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act iv. sc. 9.

DI-SPORT, v. } "Fr. Déporter,—to disport,
DISPO'RT, n. } play, recreate himself, pass
DISPO'RTING, n. } away time," (Cotgrave.) It. Disportare; perhaps, as Skinner thinks, jucundè se portare, i. e. ferre, to bear himself pleasantly.
To sport, to play about, to gambol, to divert, to amuse; to please or be pleasing.
Disporting, in Prynne, is literally from deportare, to carry or bear away.

An gan her arme right over his shulder laie,
And him with all her wit to recomfort
As she best could, she gan him to disport.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. ii.

For frewil holdeth this opinion,
That it is great duresse and discomfort
To kepe a hart in so strait a prison,
That hath but one body for his disport.
Id. La Belle Dame sans Mercie.

He in all his proude fare
Unto the forest gan to fare
Amonge other, that there were,
To hunt, and disporte him there.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

For than anone my fiste I breke
On suche wordes, as she saith
That ful of trouth, and full of feyth
Thei ben, and of so great disporte,
That to myn eare greate comforte
Thei done, as thei that ben delices.—Id. Ib. b. vi.

Good reader then, beholde what gallant spring
This booke brings forth, of fruits of finest sortes:
Be bold to take thy list of euerie thing,
For so is ment. And for thy glad disportes
The paine was tane.
Gascoigne. E. C. in Prayse of his Posies.

So well I wrought with mildnesse and with paine,
That I her caught disporting on the greene,
And brought away fast bound with siluer chaine.
Spenser. Daphnaida.

Thereat Diana gan to smile in scorne
Of her vain plaint, and to her scoffing said;
Great pity sure, that ye bee so forlorne
Of your gay sonne, that giues ye so good ayd
To your disports: ill mote yee been apayd.
Id. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c 6.

And in the first parliament of his raigne there was this act of indemnity passed, That all and singular persons coming with him from beyond the seas into the realme of Englande, taking his party and quarrell, in recovering his just title and right to the realme of England, shall be utterly discharged quite, and unpunishable for ever, by way of action, or otherwise, of or for any murther, slaying of men, or of taking and disporting of goods, or any other trespasses done by them, &c.
Prynne. Treachery and Disloyalty, pt. iii. p. 45.

Sooner shall eels disport in waters clear,
And speckled mackrell graze on meadows fair.
Gay. The Shepherd's Week. Wednesday.

Say, father Thames, for thou hast seen
Full many a sprightly race
Disporting on thy margent green,
The paths of pleasure trace,
Who foremost now delight to cleave
With pliant arm thy glassy wave?
Gray. On a distant Prospect of Eton College.

And so [Mr. Pope] after having disported himself at will in the flowry paths of fancy, and revelled in all the favours of the Muses, boasts of having taken up in time and courted and espoused truth.

That not in fancy's maze he wander'd long,
But stoop'd to truth, and moraliz'd his song.
Warburton. Commentary on Pope's Essay on Man.

DIS-POSE, v. } Fr. Disposer; It. Disporre, disponere; Sp. Disponer; DISPO'SER, n. } Lat. Disponere, (dis, and DISPO'SABLE. } ponere, to put or set.)
DISPO'SAL. } To put or set in separate
DISPO'SEDNESS. } places, in particular places,
DISPO'SEMENT. } in proper places, in order;
DISPO'SER. } in fit or suitable places; and
DISPO'SING, n. } thus, to arrange, to adapt,
DISPO'SINGLY. } to appropriate, to regulate.
DISPO'SIT, v. } To form or frame for par-
DISPOSI'TION. } ticular places or purposes;
DISPO'SITIVE. } and thus, to incline, to direct,
DISPO'SITIVELY. } to manage, to settle.
DISPO'SURE. } To employ for, or apply to, a particular purpose or use; and thus, to bestow.
Disposition, in Shakespeare, is, collectively, the whole arrangement of parts, the frame.

And I dispose to you as my fadir hath disposid to me a rewme.—Wiclif. Luke, c. 22.

God the fadir seynge the tribulacioun whiche holi chirche was to suffre that was foundid of the Apostlis on Crist the stoon, disposede with the sone and the Holi Goost to schewe hem that me drede hem the lesse, and al the tryuyte schewide it Crist in his manheed, and Crist to loon bi an aungel, and loon to holi chirche.—Id. Prol. to Apocalips.

Sens God seeth euery thing out of doutáce
And hem disposeth through his ordinaunce.
Chaucer. Troilus, b iv.

Fortune, which that permutation
Of all things hath, as it is her committed
Through purueyance and disposicion
Of high Jone. Id. Ib

For which this Emelie astonied was,
And sayde; what amounteth this, alas!
I putte me in thy protection,
Diane, and in thy dispositon.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2366.

Nowe it is light, now it is darke,
And thus stant all the worldes werke
After the disposicion
Of man and his condicion.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

But God, who secretly disposed the course of things, saw yt was not best for Tyndal's purpose, nor for the profite of his church, and therefore gaue him to fynde litle fauour in the bishop's sight.—Tyndal. Works. Life by Fox.

I will that the tapers, and also the said torches be at the disposicion of myn executrice.—Fabyan. Will, Pref.

No man is lorde of that whiche he hath receaued: he is nothing but the disposer: for the thyng that he disposeth, is the Lordes.—Udal. 1 Peter, c. 4.

——— Words, well dispost,
Haue secret powre, t' appease inflamed rage.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 8.

The rest themselues in troupes did eke dispose
Like as it seemed best to euery one;
The knights in couples marcht, with ladies linkt attone.
Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 4.

Lug. We'll leave you—to your own disposes.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Wild Goose Chase, Act iii. sc. 1.

Sir Edward said he would conclude with one example: if a ward be not found within one year, he is reputed concealed, and falls within the dispose of the Master of the Courts of Wards.

State Trials. Lord Treasurer of Middlesex, an. 1624.

By this brief account, you may easily discerne the soveraigne power of the realme and states of Bohemia over their kings and princes, most of the great officers of which realme are hereditary, and not disposable by the king.

Prynne. Treachery and Disloyalty, &c. pt. v. p. 85.

God indeed hath a glory arising from his own mercy and grace, but then it is but what is dispensed unto others; the riches thereof are disposable no way but to the use and benefit of creatures.—Goodwin. Works, vol. ii. pt. iv. p. 124.

This was the condition they propounded to him before they would accept him for their king, and upon this condition only would they admit him to reign over them; therefore doubtlesse the disposall of the crown and limitation of the king's royall power resided in all the congregation, who had authority to prescribe their kings, what equal and just conditions they pleased.

Prynne. Treachery and Disloyalty, &c. pt. v. p. 126.

They accuse God, but the cause is in themselves, their owne dispositeness to evill, no necessitating decree maketh them so liable unto just punishment

Mountagu. Appeale to Cæsar, pt. i. p. 66.

If any be not satisfied in this order and disposement of these two severall sentences in v. 9, both in these two references to the 7th and 8th verses respectively; I shall further add this account touching either of them.

Goodwin. Works, vol. ii. pt iv p 54.

But, above all such extrinsical contrivances and disposements there is this one, which the Scriptures do single out and insist upon, and that is, God's dispensations towards temporaries and children of the outward kingdom.

Id. Ib. p. 156.

But such is the dispose of the sole disposer of empires, that they have their risings, their fals, and their fals; neuer staying in one and the same point, neither entailed to one and the same nation, how strong, politicke, or populous soeuer.—Speed. The Saxons, b. viii. c. 31. s. 2

And though some constitutions are genially disposited to this mental seriousness yet they can scarce say, Nos numeri sumus.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 12.

His majesty referring chiefly to the said Earl of Strafford and the Archbishop of Canterbury the ordering and disposing of all matters concerning the parliament.

State Trials. Earl of Strafford, an. 1640.

Christians doe hold and believe it too, [Deum ire per omnes] but dispositiue, &c. in his providence, according to that axiome of the wise, Pertingit a fine, ad finem fortiter, disponens omnia suaviter.

Mountagu. Appeale to Cæsar, pt. i. c. 9.

——— What may this meane?
That thou dead coarse agaime in compleat steele,
Reuisits thus the glimpses of the moone,
Making night hideous? And we fooles of nature,
So horridly to shake our disposition,
With thoughts beyond the reaches of our soules

Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 4.

Sam. Appoint not heavenly disposition, Father,
Nothing of all these evils hath befall'n me
but justly. Milton. Samson Agonistes.

Grace had the dominion, the throne, given it; the dispositive power (which the throne always carries with it) of all, both without God, that is, of all creatures, &c. and of all within God, that is, of attributes, and persons in the Godhead, to conspire into its glory.

Goodwin. Works, vol. ii. pt. iv. p. 157.

And therefore also that axiome in philosophy, that the generation of one thing, is the corruption of another, although it be substantially true concerning the form and matter, is also dispositively verified in the efficient or producer.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 9.

What I possess I may, with justice, call
The harvest of my industry. Would you have me,
Neglecting mine own family, to give up,
My estate to his disposure?

Massinger. The City Madam, Act i. sc. 3

But was by sweetning so his will,
All order and disposure, still
His mind as pure, and neatly kept
As were his houseeries.

B Jonson. Epitaph on M. Vincent Corbet.

Yet since I see your mind is worldly bent,
I'll do my best to further your content.
And therefore of two gifts in my dispose,
Think ere you speak, I grant you leave to choose.

Dryden. The Wife of Bath's Tale.

And the ἀκροθίνια, the first and the best of the prey, they dedicated to the adornment of his temple by whose favourable disposal they had obtained the victory.

Barrow, vol. i. Ser 8.

Nothing in nature being more irrational and irregular, and consequently more immoral, then for an intelligent being to oppose, or disobey that sovereign, supreme will, which gave him that being, and has withall the sole and absolute disposal of him in all his concerns.

South, vol. ii. Ser 9.

It assureth the favour and friendship of God, of him that is absolute lord and disposer of all things: the which he that hath, and confideth in, what can he want or wish more?

Barrow, vol i. Ser. 3.

And as my want of leisure, and sometimes of dispositedness to write, induced me to make some of my considerations but short; so I thought fit to let them pass for their sakes to whom for want of time or skill, the brevity of those may make them the fitter, and the more recommend them.

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 206.

We know too well these tricks of yours,
To leave it ever in your powers,
Or trust our safeties or undoings
To your disposing of outgoings.—Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2.

He was indeed a mortified man to the world, and the things of it, yet his disposition led him to do things agreeable to his quality and condition, wherein God had placed him.—Strype. Life of Abp Parker, an. 1575.

His providence is the band that unites the parts of the universal commonwealth, the vital spirit and virtue that sustains all, without his eye and hand, his dispositive wisdom and power, the whole frame would disband and fall into confusion and ruin.

Bates. The great Duty of Resignation.

One act may make us do dispositively, what Moses is recorded to have done literally (at the foot of Mount Sinai) break all the ten commandments at once.

Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 10.

So if there were no sensitive beings, those bodies that are now the objects of our senses would be but dispositively, if I may speak, endowed with colours, tastes and the like.

Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 25.

In the doctrines of faith as well as in the disposures of providence, it is sufficient to check presumptuous curiosity, that God is the author.

Bates. The Christian Religion proved by Reason, c. 5.

We are prone to believe what we wish to be true, and most of this author's [Hume] philosophical tenets are so well adapted to what I fear I may call the fashionable notions of the times, that those who are ambitious to conform to the latter, will hardly be disposed to examine scrupulously the evidence of the former.—Beattie. On Truth, Introd.

This is not the disposal by parliament of any office derived from the authority of the crown, or now disposable by that authority.—Burke. On Mr. Fox's East India Bill.

Doubt we this? what solid proof remains,
That o'er the world a wise disposer reigns!
Whilst all creation speaks a pow'r divine,
Is it deficient in the main design?
Not so.—Jenyns. On the Immortality of the Soul, b. ii

There is not, there cannot be a stronger proof, that pride was not designed for man, than that the most excellent of the human race thought it not a proper temper and disposition of mind for him to appear in.

Pearce, vol. iii. Ser. 12.

DIS-POSSE'SS, v. Fr. Despossséder; It. Dispossedere; Sp. Desposseer. Lat. Dis, and possidere, perhaps contracted from potes sedere; that may or can stay or remain, keep its seat or position.
DISPOSSE'SSING, n.
DISPOSSE'SSION.
DISPOSSE'SSOR.

To put out of, strip or divest of possession; to deprive of the tenure or occupation.

Aboute the yeare of our Lorde a M. and lxxii. one Wyllyam Byshop of Durham dyspossessed the prestes of the college or cathedrall churche of Durham bycause of theyr wyues, and placed the monkes there in their rowmes.

Bale. Votaries, pt. ii.

And that at least she will witsaue [vouchsafe]
To graunt my iust and last request
When that she shal behold his graue,
That lyeth of life here dispossest.

Vncertaine Auctors. Testament of the Hawthorne.

Yet I protest, my high-desiring will
Was not to dispossess her of her right;
Her sov'reignty should have remained still;
I only sought the bliss to have her sight.

Daniel, Son. 33.

I remit the reader to his life extant at large in print, wherein this is most remarkable, viz. his dispossessing of John Fox near Nottingham of a divel, there passing betwixt them a large discourse, by way of question and answer.

Fuller. Worthies. Lancashire.

On Monday the court sate again, and the Earl [of Strafford] appeared, and was charged with the sixth article concerning the dispossession of the Lord Mount-Norris of the Mannor of Tymore.—Baker. Charles I. an. 1641.

This were a wicked pretension even though the whole family were destroyed; but the heirs (blessed be God!) are yet surviving, and likely to out-live all heirs of their dispossessors, besides their infamy.

Cowley. On the Government of Oliver Cromwell

And surely our senses cannot more justly complaine of devotion, as a dispossessor of their properties, then wilde people can call a law-giver a tyrant.

Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 4. s. 2

One's entering into a strong man's house, and forcibly dispossessing him of his goods, is an evident demonstration, that he who so enters, is stronger and comes with greater authority, than he that had the first possession.

Clarke, vol. i. Ser 86

But having dispossess'd me of my prize
So foully, let him not assay me now,
For I am warn'd, and he shall not prevail.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. ix.

If by possession they intended only to describe a disorder, as we have shown they did; the removal of it was all they could intend by dispossession.

Farmer. On the Demoniacs of the New Testament, c. 2. s. 3.

DIS-PRAISE, v. Fr. Despriser; It. Dispregiare.
DISPRA'ISER, n.
DISPRA'ISING, n.
DISPRA'ISINGLY.

To deprive of, deny or refuse praise or estimation; to disesteem, to disregard, to disvalue; to condemn, to blame.

And Senek saith, that we so wel have sapience, shal no man dispraise, but he shal gladly teche the science that he can, without presumption or pride.

Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus

For right as men sayn that overgret homlinesse engendreth dispreising, so fareth it to gret humilitee or mekenesse.

Id Ib

The kynge bethought himselfe tho,
Howe he his brother mate chastie
That he through his surquedrie
Toke vpon houde, and to dispreise
Humilitee, which is to preise.—Gower. Con A. b i.

Sith the feast Berecsinte, mother of the Goddis, I haue seene no seruaunt of thy howse, nor letter of thy hande, that I haue redde the whiche putteth me in great suspection of thy health, and that thou arte in some perill, or els thou dispraysest our amitee.—Golden Boke, c. 49.

Dispraise and rebuke ought to bee shunned more than death, for it doeth redounde to the infamye and slaunder of the Gospell.—Udal. Matthew, c. 5.

And on the other side, cursed be the peacebreakers, picquarels, whisperers, backbyters, sowers of discorde, dispraysers of the that be good to bring thē out of fauour.

Tyndall. Workes, p. 194

Things may be therefore necessary, and yet praiseworthy, as also necessary, and yet dispraised, and neither of them both in vain; because praise and dispraise, and likewise reward and punishment, do by example make and conform the will to good and evil.—Hobbs. Of Liberty & Necessity.

He thought the boord one of the chiefest means to breed love amongst men, and at his own table would always praise good men and vertuous citizens, but would suffer no talk of evil men, neither in their praise nor dispraise

North. Plutarch, p 301.

Praisers and dispraisers many times doe but aime at their own ends, and do not think all they say.

Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. vi. c. 3.

——— What? Michael Cassio,
That came a woing with you? and so many a time
(When I have spoke of you dispraisingly)
Hath tane your part, to haue so much to do
To bring him in trust?—Shakes. Othello, Act iii. sc. 3

Looks fright not—man: the general has seen Moors,
With as bad faces; no dispraise to Bertran's.

Dryden. The Spanish Fryar, Act i.

Dear to the wise and good, disprais'd by none,
Here sleep in peace the father and the son.

Mallet. Epitaph on Mr. Aikman & his Son

DIS-PRAVE. Used by Chaucer as, to Deprave.

To clerkes lesse ought suffice
Then to dispraue women generally,
For worship shul they none get therby.

Chaucer. The Letter of Cupide

DI-SPREAD, v. Dis, (augm.) and spread.
DISPRE'ADER. To spread, to spread abroad, to spread widely.

Great Junoes golden chaire, the which they say
The Gods stand gazing on, when she does ride
To Joue's high house through heauen's brass paued way
Drawne of faire peacocks, that excell in pride,
And full of Argus eyes their tailes dispreaden wide.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4.

Baldwin his ensigne faire did next dispread
Among his Bulloyners of noble fame,
His brother gaue him all his troupes to lead,
When he commander of the field became.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. i. s. 40.

Besides another inconvenience, if learned men be the first receivers out of books, and dispreaders both of vice and errour, how shall the licensers themselves be confided in, unless we can confer upon them, or they assume to themselves above all others in the land, the grace of infallibility, and uncorruptedness!—Milton. Of Unlicens'd Printing.

Soon as the rising ramparts hostile height,
And towers advancing, struck the anxious sight,
Sudden from Petra's safer camp he led
And wide his legions on the hills dispread.
Rowe. Lucan, b. iv.

(My vest suspended on the boughs) I lave
My chilly feet, then plunge beneath the wave,
A ruddy light my blushing limbs dispread
And the clear stream half glows with rosy red.
Harte. Ovid. Met. b. v.

DIS-PRE'JUDICE, v. To free from prejudice or prejudgment, from opinions formed before inquiry.

Whilst those (who are moved but to visit the Catholique church, with reverence, and consideration of the exteriour religious offices corresponding to the familiaritie with Christ Jesus his outward and humane carriages and acts) will easilie be so far disprejudic'd in point of the doctrine, as to seek the acquainting their understandings with the grounds and reasons of this religion.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 7. s. 5.

DIS-PREPA'RE, v. To deprive of preparation, readiness, fitness; to render unfit.

The kingdom of darkness, as it is set forth in these and other places of the Scripture, is nothing else but a confederacy of deceivers, that to obtain dominion over men in this present world, endeavour by dark and erroneous doctrines, to extinguish in them the light, both of nature, and the Gospel; and so to disprepare them for the kingdom of God to come.—Hobbes. Of the Kingdom of Darkness.

DIS-PRI'VILEGE, v. To deprive of privilege, of a peculiar or proper right, law or power.

What! hath the addition of the manhood unto his person, made that person, as he is God, uncapable of dwelling in us immediately, as well as the person of the spirit? Is he disprivileged thereby, when as indeed by reason of his relation to us as God-man, it is that he doth dwell in us any way.
Goodwin. Works, vol. i. pt. iii. p. 33.

DIS-PROFE'SS, v. To renounce, to cease to profess.

His armes, which he had vow'd to disprofesse,
She gather'd vp, and did about him dresse,
And his forwandred steed vnto him got.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 11.

DIS-PRO'FIT, v. Dispro'fit, n. Dispro'fitable. } To be or cause to be without profit, benefit or advantage; to lose, to injure, to damage.

Yet do they rather loose than wynne, fall then ryse, disprofyght than profyghte.—Bale. Image, pt. ii. c. 7.

For the moste parte they take and extorte of all mē, without pitie and conscience, and put maryners, and wayfarying menne to muche busynesse, unto whom many tymes damage, & disprofyte enough otherwyse happeneth.
Udal. Mark, c. 2.

He had released and discharged twelue articles, whiche wer moste greuous & disprofitable to the Frēche kyng, not for the Frenche kynges sake, but at the intercessiō of the kyng of Englande.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 19.

For shortly after, all was ruled, by the queene and her counsell, to the great disprofit of the king and his realme, and to the great mauger (it is Fabian's word) & obloquy of the queene, who (as since hath been well proued) had many a wrong, and false report made of her.
Speed. Hen. VI. b. ix. c. 16. s. 39.

And whereas he sought profite, he fell into double disprofite, that neither with good men he coulde auoid secret shame, nor yet with euill men the note of dissimulation.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 1710. The Recantation of Cranmer.

DIS-PROPE'RTY, v. To cause any property to cease to be such; to dispossess of, plunder of.

We must suggest—the people, in what hatred
He still hath held them: that to's power he would
Haue made them mules, silenc'd their pleaders,
And dispropertied their fredomes.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act ii. sc. 1.

DIS-PROPO'RTION, v. Dispropo'rtion, s. Dispropo'rtionable. Dispropo'rtionableness. Dispropo'rtionably. Dispropo'rtional. Disproportiona'lity. Dispropo'rtionate. Dispropo'rtionately. } Fr. Disproportion; It. Disproportione; Sp. Desproporcion; Lat. Dis, pro, and portio, quasi partio, (says Voss.) from pars, a part or share. To deprive of proportion; to give an undue share or proportion; to give more or less than the share or portion; to associate or conjoin unfitly, unsuitably.

The "dis-proportionatelness of orbs and motions" is an expression of Henry More, (Notes on Psychodia.)

As a just punishment for this neglect, it pleased God to desert and suffer me, with a fatal blindness, to be led on, and engaged in such counsels as were wholly disproportioned to the rest of my life
State Trials. Waller and others, &c. an. 1643.

For great men over grac'd, much rigour use;
Presuming favourites discontentment bring;
And disproportions harmony do break;
Minions too great argue a king too weak.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. i.

What amazement is it, that the heat of a poor fever should consume the mightiest power and fortune of the world? And the greatest of temporal and human prosperities should be drowned by the overflowing of one irregular and inordinate humour! How great a monster is human life, since it consists of so disproportionable parts.
Bp. Taylor. Contemplations, b. i. c. 6.

Considering my own great defects, the incompetency and disproportionableness of my strength and a few years consideration to the length and weight of this work, and knowing that as oft and as far as I differed in my sense from other men, so often and in the same distance did other men differ from me.—Hammond. Works, vol. iii. Advertisement.

Hath the sheriff rated Mr. Hampden disproportionably, according to his estate and degree? If he hath let him tell.
State Trials. John Hampden, an. 1637.

Nay rather the perfection consists in this, that out of many moderate varieties and brotherly dissimilitudes that are not vastly disproportional, arises the goodly and graceful symmetry that commends the whole pile and structure
Milton. Of Unlicens'd Printing.

——— The world so's setten free
From that untoward disproportionalitie.
More. On the Soul, pt. ii. b. iii. c. 3. s. 60.

But how is it possible, that purely passive insensible matter should transfuse habits or inclinations into a nature that is quite of another make and quality? How can such a cause produce an effect so disproportionate?
Glanvill. Pre-existence of Souls, c. 2.

Your lordship's friendship has left me little to desire or complain of, unless it be when I find my own fortune so disproportioned to my mind, in the resolutions I have of doing his majesty all the honour, as well as all the service I can.—Sir W. Temple. To Lord Arlington, Aug. 1666.

If any Atheist can be induced to stake his soul for a wager, against such an inexhaustible disproportion, let him never hereafter accuse others of easiness and credulity.
Bentley, Ser. 5

In the first year of the king, the courtiers got away from him a great number of fair lordships and manors, on pretence either of services, or for making good King Henry his father's last will, or by way of purchase of disproportionable sums of money, made in consideration of former services, and in complement of the deceased king's will.
Strype. Mem. Edw. VI. an. 1547.

Though the history of the Evangelists, and the Acts, have something easier, yet, taken all together, it is very disproportional to the understanding of childhood
Locke. On Education, s. 158.

How much these few and narrow inlets are disproportionate to the vast whole extent of all beings, will not be hard to persuade those, who are not so foolish as to think their span the measure of all things.
Id. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 3. s. 23.

And I thought it much more pardonable, that any of these sections should be disproportionately short, than lengthened either by untruths or by impertinences.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 470.

And all that freedom's highest aims can reach
Is but to lay proportion'd loads on each.
Hence, should one order disproportion'd grow,
Its double weight must ruin all below.
Goldsmith. The Traveller.

From the widely disproportionate effects which attend the preaching of modern missionaries of Christianity, compared with what followed the ministry of Christ and his Apostles under circumstances either alike, or not so unlike as to account for the difference, a conclusion is fairly drawn in support of what our histories deliver concerning them, viz. that they possessed means of conviction, which we have not; that they had proofs to appeal to, which we want.
Paley. Evidences, pt. ii. s. 2. c. 2.

DIS-PROVE, v. Dispro'vable. Dispro'ver. Dispro'or. } It. Disprovare,— To divest of, clear from proof or evidence; to prove not to be; to show to be incapable of proof; to show by trial to be false; to confute, to convince or convict of error: sometimes used, as in Stirling and Wotton, as equivalent to, Disapprove.

Yea forsooth (qd she) and now I wol disproue thy first wales, by which many wenen to get thilke blisse.
Chaucer. Testament of Loue, b. ii.

Deare brother, if it had bene so that I had spoken certayne wordes in deede, which mighte haue seemed in your eyes to be rayling, detracting, and slaundering (as I haue not, sauing a little gesting) would you disproue my doctrine thereby.
Frith. Workes, p. 67.

And now hauing thus farre informed you of the trueth in reproofe of the slanderous, false, and vntrue reports of this glorious lying generall, with a true disproffe to some of the grossest of his lies, I will leaue him.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 596.

For the disproofe of which statute we haue sufficient authoritie remaining as yet in the parliament rolles to be seene in her maiesties court of recordes.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 482. Laws against Christians

Much thou hast said, and willingly I hear.
As one that am not so possess'd with love
Of what I do; but that I rather bear
An ear to learn, than a tongue to disprove.
Daniel. Musophilus

The thoughts of those I cannot but disprove,
Who basely lost, their thraldome must bemone:
I scorne to yeeld my selfe to such a one,
Whose birth and virtue is not worth my love.
Stirling. Aurora, Son. 27.

And indeed there needs no great disproof hereof.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. i. c. 7. s. 7

But admit, that the Deuill himselfe were not the immediate forger, and parent of these theatricall enterludes, which no man can disproaue by any orthodox records: yet this must needs be granted: that idolatrous infidels, and the debonest Pagans, were the first actors and contrivers of them.—Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act i. sc. 2.

This being the single example that our annals have yielded from William de la Pole, Duke of Suffolk, under Henry the Sixth, of such a concurrence of two extreams, within so short a time, by most of the same commenders and disprovers, (like the natural breath of man that can both heat and cool) would require no sleight memorial of the particular motives of so great a change.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ. The Duke of Buckingham.

If that be true, I would fain know how the prisoner shall escape; is it that his innocence shall appear in his forehead, or an Angel come from heaven and disprove the accuser?
State Trials. Stephen College, an. 1681.

The uncorruptibleness and immutability of the heavenly bodies is more than probably disprovable by the sudden and irregular generation, changes, and destruction of the spots of the sun.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 187.

But then, either those miracles (as they are called) have been acted confessedly in secret; or, if they are said to have been done in public, yet the account which was given of them, came too late to deserve credit or to leave room for a disproof.—Atterbury, vol. iii. Ser. 1.

That all these transactions really passed, as I relate them, and fully disprove the false pretences on which our adversaries now insist, I discovered a method of evincing with the utmost clearness
Sir W. Jones. Isæus. On the Estate of Ciron, Speech 7.

DIS-PROVI'DED. Lat. Providere. Disprovided, is—
Unprepared, unfurnished.

This makes me sadly walk up and down in my laboratory, like an impatient lutanist, who has his song book and his instrument ready, but is altogether disprovided of strings.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 40

DIS-PUNCT, v. Lat. Dispungere, punctum, to point or mark off.
To point or mark off; to separate or sever; to part off.

I desire the reader so to take me, as though I doe not here deale withall, nor speake of the matter, but vtterly to haue pretermitted, and dispuncted the same.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 646. Lady Eleanor & Roger Onley.

Amo. Stay. That were dispunct to the ladies.
B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revells, Act v. sc. 3

DIS-PUNGE, v. Lat. Dispungere, to point off; but used as equivalent to—
To expunge, to blot out. See EXPUNGE.

Thou then that hast dispond'd my score,
And dying wast the death of death,
Be to me now, on thee I call,
My life, my strength, my joy, my all.
Wotton. Hymne to my God in my late Sickness.

And I do suspect that the Bishop of London's Chaplains, and some of the society, in the dispunging did join against me, or else some others had been charged for plagiaries or men of no reading, who have escaped I know not how.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 94. The Life.

DIS-PU'NISHABLE. That may not be punished; free from punishment, pain or penalty.

If this were in anie dispunishable wise raked vp in the ashes, they should no sooner trauerse the seas, than some other would inkindle the like fire afresh
Holinshed. Description of Ireland, c. 3.

(And I further desire) that no leases of any part of the said lands shall ever be made, other than leases for years not exceeding thirty-one, in possession, and not in reversion or remainder, and not dispunishable of waste, whereon, &c.
The last Will of Dean Swift.

DIS-PU'RPOSE, v. To separate, to turn from, the purpose, meaning, intent or design.

She, but in a contrary manner, seeing her former plots dispurposed, sends me to an old witch called Acrasia, to help to wreck her spite upon the senses
Brewer. Lingua, Act iv. sc. 8.

DIS-PU'RSE, v. To disburse or deburse, (qv.)

No—many a pound of mine owne proper store,
Because I would not taxe the needie commons,
Haue I dispursed to the garrisons,
And neuer ask'd for restitution.
Shakespeare. 2 Part Hen. VI. Act iii. sc. 1.

DIS-PURVE'Y, v. DIS-PURVE'YANCE. To deprive of provision or preparation, to disfurnish.

Whereof ye Arogons beyng ware, supposynge the Frenshemen might so lightly haue wonne vnto theym, beynge thus out of aray, and dispurueyed to fyght, fled vnto the next holdes, leuynge to the Frenshemen moche of theyr vytaill and harneys.—Fabyan, an 1283.

But the Apostles, which were as chiefe piers of this newe eltie beeyng dispurueied of worldely goodes, but rich in giftes of the Holy Ghoste, augmented their coumpaignie euerie daie more then other.—Udal. Actes, c. 4.

So that in this wise was Britaine dispurueied of all manner of able men for defense, whereof the Scots and Picts tooke good occasion to inuade the British borders.
Holinshed. Scotland. Eugenius, an. 440.

One is, that the said Cardinall of Yorke aduanced to that dignity, must thereby leaue all other his promotions, and consequently should bee dispurueyed of any habitation, place, or conuenient liuing, if remaining in another strange country, hee should deferre to come vnto Rome, where should be the place of his see, and entire liuing.
Fox. Martyrs, p 905. Instruct. to the King's Orator.

No fort so fencible, no walles so strong,
But that continuall battery will riue,
Or daily siege through dispurueyance long,
And lack of reskewes will to parley driue.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 10.

DIS-PUTE, v. DISPU'TER, n. DISPU'TABLE. DISPU'TABLENESS. DISPUTA'CITY. DI'SPUTANT, n. DI'SPUTANT, adj. DISPUTA'TION. DISPUTA'TIOUS. DISPU'TATIVE. DISPU'TER. DISPU'TESON. Fr. Disputer; Sp. Disputar; It. Disputare; Lat. Disputare, dis, and putare, that is, opinari, to think, nam cum disputatur, diversis opinionibus contenditur.

To think differently from; to hold or maintain, or contend for different opinions; to oppose or controvert the opinions of others; to argue, to debate, to discuss; to discourse upon; and, generally,—to contest, to struggle against.

Pandolf proued the kyng in his dispuieson,
He mayntened wrongfulle thing, & wild to no reson.
R. Brunne, p. 211.

Thus thei speke and dispute that eche dispiseth other.
Piers Ploughman, p. 93

And whanne they weren in the house he axide hem what tretiden ye in the weye? And thei weren stille for thei disputiden among hem in the weye who of hem schulde be grettist.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 9.

And when he was come to house, he axed them what was it that ye dysputed betwene you by the waye? And they helde theyr peace: for by the waye they reasoned amonge themselues who should be the chefest
Bible, 1551. Ib.

Nece, al thing hath time I dare auow,
For whan a chamber a fire is, or an hall,
Wel more nede is to sodainly resceow,
Than to dispuien and aske amongs all
How the candle in the straw is fall.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. iii.

It nis not to doubten of the things folowing when euery thynge of this disputacion, shal hauen ben stedfast to me, by vndoubtous faith.—Id. Boecius, b. v.

Witnesse on him, that any parfit clerk is,
That in scole is gret altercation
In this matere and gret disputison,
And hath ben of an hundred thousand men.
Id. The Nonne Preestes Tale, v. 15,244.

Thus she disputeth in hir thought
And wote not what she thynke maye.—Gower. C. A. b. iv.

In great despuieson thei were
Amonge themselfe, what was the best.—Id. Ib. b. i.

I say generally that these matters be merely spiritual points of doctrine and disputable in schools, no part of mine indictment, not to be geuen in evidence, and unfit to be discussed at the king's bench.
State Trials. Edmund Campion, an. 1581.

And now to descend vnto our matter and disputacion whiche is of purgatory, I shall shew you what occasio I had to take it in hand.—Frith. Workes, p 4. Vnto the Chr. Reader.

See that thou rather let suche maner of wranglinges passe, and studye to shewe thyselfe a ghospellyke workeman, not a disputour, but a workeman, laudable not vnto man but vnto God.—Udal. Timothye, Ep. 2. c. 2.

In the sixt he exhorteth ye byshops to cleaue to the Gospell of Christ, & true doctrine, & to auoyde vayne questions, and superfluous dyspulynges.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 53.

My soul disputes well with my sence,
That this may be some error, but no madnesse.
Shakespeare. Twelfth Night, Act iv. sc. 3.

I here in this place make this offer to them, That if I [Prynne] may be admitted a fair dispute, on fair terms, for my cause: that I will maintain, and do here make the challenge against all the prelates in the king's dominions, and against all the prelates in Christendom, (let them take in the Pope, and all, to help them) that their calling is not Jure Divino.
State Trials, an. 1637. Bastwick, Burton, and Prynne.

But these two every honest Papist will confesse, with voluntary shame and griefe; and grant that it may grow a disputable question whether mountebanks or priests are the greater cozeners.—Bp. Hall. Decad. i. Epist 3

When slipping from thy mother's eye thou went'st
Alone into the Temple; there was found
Among the gravest rabbies disputant
On points and questions fitting Moses's chair,
Teaching, not taught. Milton. Par. Regained, b. iv.

Yet all this was nothing else, but lusus ingenii, a sportful exercise of Zeno's wit, he being a subtil logician and disputant.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 390.

And that's the cause why all this time
I did not answer your last rhyme:
Nor do I now, 'tis not my fashion
In verse to make a disputation.
Brome. To his Friend, C. S. Esquire.

So that I verily think, that there is none so subtle a disputer in the controversy of liberum arbitrium, that can with all his distinctions fasten or carp upon the act, but that there was free will in it.
State Trials, an. 1615. Mr. Oliver St. John.

In the unity of time you find them so scrupulous, that it yet remains a dispute among their poets, whether the artificial day of twelve hours, more or less, be not meant by Aristotle, rather than the natural one of twenty four.
Dryden. Of Dramatick Poesie.

If, upon the king marrying another wife, the pope should refuse to confirm it, then the king would be in a worse case than he was now in, and his marriage and issue by it should be still disputable.—Burnet. Hist. Reformation, an. 1527.

By the best information I can gather, it was never in the least meant that these should sit to pass acts as a lawful parliament, which were only like to prove a snare to the people, as other parliaments of the like nature, so called, have done through the disputableness and unwarrantableness of their authority.—T. Philips. Long Parl. revised.

As mercy will direct me to treat my erring brother with meekness and compassion, so it will also instruct me [not] to tease and importune him with disputacity.
Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 1.

Thus, like a subtle disputant, casting his argument into such a dilemma, as should be sure to gain him his point, and gall his enemy one way or other.—South. vol. v. Ser. 3.

Once more; perhaps disputacious men may say, I ascribe the investigation of truth to one faculty, when it is in reality the joint business of several.
Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 3.

Hell may be full of learned scribes, and subtile disputers, of eloquent orators, and profound philosophers; who when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankfull, but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 29.

What the Scripture expressly declares to us, is all we can ever know concerning these matters; and this the meanest Christian is as capable of understanding, as the learnedest disputers in the world.—Clarke, vol. i. Ser. 58.

If our discourses constantly were directed thus rationally towards their proper end, all disputes about regeneration, about the meaning and the use of it, would soon be set aside, and in the room of it would arise such terms, and such advices as are suited to the case of every kind of Christians.
Pearce, vol. ii. Ser. 11.

The skilful disputant well knows, that he never has his enemy at more advantage, than when by allowing the premisses, he shews him arguing wrong from his own principles, for the question being then to be decided by the certain rules of logic, his confutation exposes the weakness of the advocate as well as of the cause.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. iv. s. 2.

I mean that you should reason in silent thought and not obtrude your arguments on every occasion, and in all company. A cavilling, wrangling, disputatious habit will not be borne.—Anon. To a Young Nobleman, Let. 20.

So that, even in these societies, the scholastic disputative genius still prevailed, to the exclusion of that more liberal plan of studies, which is fitted to all times, and would have suited better to the general purpose of their established seats of education.—Hurd. Uses of Foreign Travel, Dial 8.

DIS-QUA'LIFY, v. DISQUALIFICA'TION. To strip off, divest or deprive of qualifications, of certain qualities, fitting, enabling or entitling; to unfit, to disable, to disentitle.

Not infants dropt, the spurious pledges
Of gipsies littering under hedges;
Are so disqualify'd by fate
To rise in church, or law, or state,
As he whom Phœbus in his ire
Hath blasted with poetic fire.
Swift. On Poetry. A Rhapsody, 1733.

As we are always ashamed of our own envy, we often pretend, and sometimes really wish to sympathise with the joys of others, when, by that disagreeable sentiment, we are disqualified from doing so.
Smith. Moral Sentiments, pt. i. s. 3.

For as it now stands, the fault of overstraining popular qualities, and, irregularly if you please, asserting popular privileges, has led to disqualification, the opposite fault never has produced the slightest punishment.
Burke. On the Cause of the Present Discontents.

I make no secret of my opinion; a cordial reception of Catholics and Dissenters into the bosom of the constitution, by the extinction of all disqualifications is become necessary to secure the independence of the empire and the safety of the country.—Anecdotes of Bp. Watson, vol. ii. p. 433.

DIS-QU'ANTITY, v. To reduce the quantity, diminish the number.

——— Be then desir'd
By her, that else will take the thing she begges,
A little to disquantity your traine.
Shakespeare. K. Lear, Act i. sc. 4.

DIS-QUI'ET, v. DISQUI'ET, n. DISQUI'ET, adj. DISQUI'ETAL. DISQUI'ETER. DISQUI'ETFUL. DISQUI'ETING, n. DISQUI'ETLY. DISQUI'ETMENT. DISQUI'ETNESS. DISQUI'ETOUS. DISQUI'ETUDE. Obsol. It. Disquietare, squietare, disquietudine, squietudine.

To deprive of quiet, ease, rest, peace or tranquillity; to disease or make uneasy; to discompose, to disturb, to vex, to harass.

These are they whyche come vnto Christ by fayth, out of the great tribulacion of worldlye wyckednesse, fleshlye cares, and disquieted consciences.—Bale. Image, pt. i.

Neyther went they to Hierusalem to learne of the Apostles, whether they had dooen well beefore tyme or not, but that the troublous commocion, and disquieting of the weaker sort might be layed down and appeased by the authoritee of the elders.—Udal. Actes, c. 15.

For what getteth a mã of al ye labour and trauayle of hys mynde, yᵗ he taketh vnder yᵉ sunne, but heuines, sorow, and disquietnes al yᵉ dayes of his life
Bible, 1551. Eccles. c. 2.

But men doe walke in shadoes, and
Disquiet themselues in vaine,
To gather riches ignorant
To whom they shall remaine.
Warner. Albion's England, b. v. c. 27.

And this hath set the window open
Unto licence, lust and riot:
This way confusion first found broken,
Whereby enter'd our disquiet.
Daniel. Choruses in Cleopatra.

But when as long he looked had in vaine,
Yet saw her forward still to make her flight,
His weary eye return'd to him againe,
Full of discomfort and disquiet plight,
That both his iewell he had lost so light,
And eke his deare companion of his care.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 8.

——— At its own fall
Grows full of wrath and rage, and gins to fume,
And roars and strives 'gainst its disquietal,
Like troubled ghost forc'd some shape to assume.
More. On the Soul, pt. ii. b. i. c. 2. s. 21.

At the daie appointed (saie they) there came before the Catholike prince his presence, the nobles of his realme: and amongst other, the archbishop, the disquieter both of the kingdom and church.—Holinshed. Hen. II. an. 1164.

King Henry now in perfect peace abroad, was not without some little disquietings at home.—Baker. Hen. I. an. 1112.

Machinations, hollownesse, treacherie, and all ruinous disorders follow vs disquietly to our graues.
Shakespeare. K. Lear, Act i. sc. 2.

Jan. 9, 1657, they conspired to burn Whitehall, where his highness was in his own person, and to the end brought a basket filled with match, brimstone, gunpowder, and other combustible stuff and materials, and set the same on fire in the chapel there, to the great danger and disquietment of his highness and ill example of others, &c.
State Trials. Miles Sindercome.

But when as you never had been troubled, or having been troubled, have worn it off, you may be sure such a piece of conscience is far worse and more dangerous than the most horrid troubles and disquietments of conscience can be.
Hopkins, Ser. 26.

The ioyes of loue, if they should euer last,
Without affliction or disquietnesse,
That worldly chances do amongst the cast,
Would be on each too great a blessednes.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 11.

Concerning, therefore, this wayward subject against prelaty, the touching whereof is so distasteful and disquietous to a number of men.—Milton. Reason of Church Government.

——— Do not speak one word
In my behalf; for to disquiet her,
Ev'n happiness itself were bought too dear.
Dryden. The Rival Ladies, Act ii.

It is an oppressing bondage when the disquieting anxious fears of death hinder our temperate enjoyment of his favours and blessings.—Bates. The Four Last Things, c. 1.

There is no man that wilfully commits any sin, but his conscience smites him for it, and his guilty mind is frequently gall'd with the remembrance of it, but the reflection upon honest and virtuous actions hath nothing of regret and disquiet in it.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 6.

The determining these articles to be of faith, without plain authority of Scripture, will, instead of making quietness (for that was the pretence, as appears in the preamble of the act,) create disquietness.
Strype. Memorials. Hen. VIII. an. 1539.

Let it be considered that by making haste to keep God's commandments, as David here did, we mightily consult the pleasure and comfort of our following days, as, on the contrary, by delaying, we necessarily prepare fears and disquietude, and unavoidable anxieties of mind all our life after.
Sharp, vol. vi. Ser. 8.

He is a citizen of a heavenly country, towards which he is travelling; his accommodations on the road are sometimes, it must be owned, wretched enough; but they are only temporary inconveniencies: they are trivial disquietudes, which are below his notice; for at home he knows every thing will be to his mind.—Porteus, vol. ii. Ser. 1.

DIS-QUISI'TION. Lat. Disquisitio, from Disquirere, disquisitum, to seek or search after; (dis, (augm.) and quærere, to seek or search.)

A seeking or searching after or about; an examination, an investigation; a discussion.

That is, the serious practice of religion is that which every considerate man after all his other disquisitions, will find to be his chief interest, and that which doth deserve his utmost care and diligence.—Bp. Wilkins. Of Nat. Religion, b. ii. c. 1.

On hypothetic dreams and visions
Grounds everlasting disquisitions,
And raises endless controversies
On vulgar theorems and hearsays.
Butler. Satyr upon the Weakness & Misery of Man.

His [our Saviour] lessons did not consist of disquisitions; of any thing like moral essays, or like sermons, or like set treatises upon the several points which he mentioned.
Paley. Evidences, pt. ii. c. 2.

DIS-RANK, v. See ARRANGE.

To throw out of the rank, to disarrange, to disturb, to disorder, to put out of order, to throw into confusion.

Till all disrank'd, like silly sheep they run,
By threats nor pray'rs to be constrain'd to stay,
For that their hearts were so extremely done
That fainting, oft they fall upon the way.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt, p. 25.

The retreat of the Protector's horsemen, disordering their fellowes (as it said) gaue signes vnto the Scottis of a present victory, who now vpon a forward courage disranked themselues for hast, and fel vpon the disbanded Englishmen.
Speed. Edw. VI. b. ix. c. 22. s. 16.

The French horse disorderly retiring, they were miserably trodden down and disranked by their own company.
Baker. Hen. V. an. 1415.

DIS-RAY. See DISARRAY, ante.

He [Theodosius] understood for certaine, that Firmus under colour of a well-willer and suppliant, in a covert policie reached at this, to come in manner of a sodaine tempest upon our armie fearing no hostilitie, and to put it in diray.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 368.

DIS-REA'LIZE. To deprive of the reality; to render vague and uncertain.

And yet haue thei not alwaies plentie or aboundaunce of these readie at hand neither, or in case thei haue, yet is it marred and disrealised with much gaule of sondrie griefs and sorowes.—Udal. Luke, c. 15.

DIS-REGA'RD, v. } Dis, re, and guard.
DISREGA'RDER. } Fr. Garder; from the DISREGA'RDFULL. } A.S. Ward, or weardian, to look at, or to direct the view. The French, Spelman observes, always use g for the A.S. w. Fr. Regarder; to look again, i. e. to remember, to reconsider. See Tooke.

Not to hold in remembrance or consideration; to pay no regard, attention or respect to, to take no notice of, to neglect, to slight, to disrespect.

Thus you see how little it avails you to take sanctuary among those churches which in the general scope of your actions formerly you have disregarded, and despised; however, your fair words would now smooth it over otherwise.
Milton. Animad. upon Rem. Def.

Yet let me tell thee, without love to God it signifies nothing, thy tears will be all rejected, thy prayers slighted, thy alms despised, and all thy performances disregarded, as things nothing worth, unless they proceed from love to God.
Bp. Beveridge, vol. i. Ser. 140.

But in some kind of sullenness for that disregard and contempt of the clergy, that then was visible enough at the court, he thought it best to say nothing to her majesty, and content himself with his beef.
Strype. Life of Abp. Parker, an. 1663.

As to most of those, that are looked upon as the witty disregarders of the Scripture, scarce any thing, so much as the vanity and boldness of owning that they disregard it, makes them (but undeservedly) be looked upon as wits.
Bayle. Works, vol. ii. p. 314.

All social love, friendship, gratitude, or whatever else is of this generous kind, does by its nature take place of the self-interesting passions, draws us out of ourselves, and makes us disregardful of our own convenience and safety.
Shaftesbury. An Enquiry concerning Virtue.

Will God, think we, be so partial and fond to us, disregardful and injurious toward himself, that he will vouchsafe to appear in favour to us when we deign not to appear in respect to him, that he will openly tender our repute, when we apparently disregard his honour.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 7.

It is too common for those who have been bred to scholastic professions, and passed much of their time in academies, where nothing but learning confers honours, to disregard every other qualification, and to imagine that they shall find mankind ready to pay homage to their knowledge, and to crowd about them for instruction.—Rambler, No. 137.

DIS-RE'GULAR. Used by Evelyn as equivalent to irregular.

It remains now that we consider whether it be very likely there should any men be, who in all the rest do enjoy a true philosophique liberty, and who (not having more disregular passions) despise honours, pleasures, riches.
Evelyn. On Liberty and Servitude.

DIS-RE'LISH, v. } Skinner and Lye copy
DISRE'LISH, n. } from Minshew; Fr. Relicher or relicher, to lick again; now applied to the savory taste which occasions this action. To disrelish, then, is,—

To be or cause to be without savour, without a pleasant taste, to distaste; to dislike the taste or savour; generally, to dislike.

Thus have you a view of his spiritual, and in a manner angelical charity, as the most excellent, so (in the generality of the world) the most disputed, disrelisht duty.
Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 298.

For we have many infirmities, and we need the Spirit to help; as doubting, coldness, weariness, disrelish of heavenly things, indifferency.
Bp. Taylor. Apology for Set Forms of Liturgy.

Ram. Is vengeance, which is said so sweet a morsel
That Heaven reserves it for its proper tast,
Is it so soon disrelisht?
Dryden. Love Triumphant, Act iv. sc. 1.

When some squeamish and disrelished person takes a long walk to the physician's lodging, to beg some remedy for his inappetence, his very walking thither does, in some measure, give him that good stomach he hopes to regain by the medicines he shall get there.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 23.

Bread or tobacco may be neglected, where they are shown to be useful to health, because of an indifferency or disrelish to them; reason and consideration at first recommends, and begins their trial, and use finds, or custom makes, them pleasant.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 21. s. 69.

I am well aware, that men love to hear of their power, but have an extreme disrelish to be told of their duty.
Burke. Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs.

DIS-REPU'TE, v. }
DISREPU'TE, n. }
DISRE'PUTABLE. }
DISRE'PUTABLY. }
DISREPUTA'TION. } Lat. Reputare, (re, and putare,) to think again, to reconsider, to respect, to repute, (sc.) as estimable or valuable; and disrepute—

To hold in no consideration, no estimation or honour; to disesteem, to disregard, to disrespect, to dishonour.

And yet her mariage was more misterious; for as besides the miracle, it was an eternal honour and advancement to the glory of virginity, that he chose a virgin for his mother; so it was in that manner attempered, that the virgin was betrothed, lest honorable mariage might be disreputed, and seem inglorious by a positive rejection from any participation of the honour.
Bp. Taylor. Great Exemplar, pt. i. s. 1.

You quote us the homilies, but it is at randome, as if you speake it by heare-say, having never read them; and no marvell: for I think you disrepute them, as all your faction doe.—Mountagu. Appeale to Cæsar, pt. ii. c. 7.

What is it, that upon any disgrace, or disrepute, or affront put upon man, makes him vex himself, even to death, that he hath not leisure scarce for one quiet or composed thought?
Hale. Cont. vol. i. Of Humility.

Jesus refused to be relieved, and denyed to manifest the divinity of his person rather then he would do an act, which had in it the intimation of a diffident spirit, or might be expounded a disreputation to God's Providence.
Bp. Taylor. Great Exemplar, pt. i. s. 9.

Is it not infinitely better to be unjustly defamed by men than to be disreputed by God, exposed to most disgraceful condemnation at his bar, and thrown into that state of everlasting ignominy.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 34.

Another vice, which by reason of its commonness hath almost lost all disrepute among us, and among some is passed into credit, is revelling, and drunkenness.
Sharp, vol. v. Ser. 8.

Or whether Wolsey having no mind to carry the load of the judgment on himself, made the king apprehend that it would bring a disreputation on his cause, if none but his own subjects judged it. (I am not lawyer enough to discover.)—Burnet. Hist. of the Reformation, an. 1528.

If your origin has been less fortunate, you must have supported yourself, either by manual labour or the exercise of your genius. Why should you think that disreputable in priests, which you probably consider as laudable in yourself?
Bp. Watson. An Apology for the Bible, Let. 2.

Propositions are made, not only ineffectually, but somewhat disreputably, when the minds of men are not properly disposed for their reception; and for my part I am not ambitious of ridicule; not absolutely a candidate for disgrace.
Burke. On Conciliation with America.

DIS-RESPE'CT, v. }
DISRESPE'CT, n. }
DISRESPE'CTER. }
DISRESPE'CTFULL. }
DISRESPE'CTFULLY. }
DISRESPE'CTIVE. } Fr. Respecter; Sp. Respectar; It. Rispettare; Lat. Respicere, (re, and specere,) to look again, to regard, to keep in view, to hold in consideration, (sc.) as estimable or honourable. To disrespect, is—

To hold in no consideration, in no estimation, in no honour; to feel, have or pay no regard or honour; to disesteem, to disregard, to disrepute, to dishonour.

Let then the world thy calling disrespect;
But go thou on, and pity their neglect.
Donne. To Mr. T. M.

Having seen me I [Garland] could not shrink from them for fear of my own destruction, and thereupon I did go in, and did that which I have confessed to your lordships, not out of any malignity to his majesty, I never had any disrespect to him in my life.

State Trials. The Regicides, an 1660.

In the debate of quartering, Lord Wentworth talked very imperiously, and very disrespectfully, and one day, after he had been drinking, very offensively to some of the council, in the presence of the Prince.

Clarendon. Civil War, vol. ii. p. 707.

But, if at any time thou seest me decline to a careless obduration and to a disrespective forgetfulness of thy mercies, do thou so chastise me with the fatherly hand of thy afflictions, and so work me a gracious use of thy desertions, that my soul may seek thee with more vigour of affections and may recover thee with more sensible comfort.

Bp. Hall, Soliloquy 62.

We have disrespected and slighted God and his worship, and he may justly put us out of his protection.

Comber. Companion to the Temple, Pref.

It looks rather like ingratitude on my part, that where I have been so often obliged, I have appear'd so seldom to return my thanks; and where I was also sure of being well received. Somewhat of laziness was the case, and somewhat too of modesty, but nothing of disrespect, or of unthankfulness.—Dryden. Virgil, Ded.

I shall, therefore, without any further mention of scandalous particularities, take it for granted, that there have been, and are but too many witty disrespecters of the Scripture

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 295.

He is well satisfied with our rendering to him that obedience, honour and respect which are due to him; and highly offended with injurious and disrespectfull behaviour toward him, in commission of sin and violation of his most just and holy commandments.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 23.

——— These princes he hath sent
Charg'd with entreaties, thine especial friends,
And chosen, for that cause, from all the host;
Sought not their embassy, not disrespect,
Their intercession.—Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. ix.

To speak disrespectfully, or to prophecy against the temple, was considered by the Jews as blasphemy, and of course a capital offence.—Porteus, Lect. 21.

DIS-RE'VERENCED. Treated without reverence, without respect; irreverently or disrespectfully or profanely.

And also we should of our dutie to God, rather forbeare the profyte that ourselfe might attayne by a masse, than to see his maiestye disreuerenced, by the bold presumpcion of such an odyous minister as he hath forbodë to come about him.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 227.

DIS-ROBE, v. To take off the robe.

Thus when they had the witch disrobed quight,
And all her filthy feature open shewne
They let her goe at will, and wander waies vnknowne.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 8.

——— I'le disrobe me
Of these Italian weedes, and aunt myselfe,
As dares a Britaine peazant: so I'le fight
Against the part I come with; so I'le dye
For thee (O Imogen) euen for whom my life
Is euery breath, a death.

Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act v. sc 1.

Pallas disrobes: her radiant veil unty'd,
With flowers adorn'd, with art diversifyd,
(The labour'd veil her heavenly fingers wove)
Flows on the pavement of the court of Jove.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

The restless fever of ambition laid,
Calm I retire, and seek the sylvan shade.
Now be the Muse disrob'd of all her pride,
Be all the glare of verse by truth supplied.

Churchill. The Prophecy of Famine.

DIS-ROOT, v. To separate from the root. As here applied,—To throw out of the seat, to dissent.

——— When nought serv'd,
When neither curb would crack, girth break, nor diff'ring plunges
Dis-root his rider whence he grew, but that
He kept him 'tween his legs, on his hind hoofs on end he stands.

Beaum. & Fletch. Two Noble Kinsmen, Act v. sc. last.

DIS-RU'LILY. Contrary to rule or order; disorderly.

And maketh him loue euill companie
And lede his life disrulilie.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

DIS-RU'PTION. Fr. Disruption; Lat. Disrumpere, ruptum, to break or burst asunder.

A breaking, bursting or rending asunder

Others do ground this disruption upon their continued or protracted time of delivery

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 16.

Or burst this earth, torn from her central place,
With the disruption from her deepest base

Broome. Battle of the Gods and Titans.

The Angel having said this, took me up in his arms and carried me back to my vehicle, he opened a cleft in my head, which having applied against the rent in the vehicle, he injected me thereinto and closed up the rent; so that the bag became entire as before disruption.

Search. Light of Nature, pt ii. c. 23.

DIS-SA'TISFY, c. / DISSATISFA'CTION. / DISSATISFA'CTORY. / DISSATISFA'CTORINESS. } Fr. Satisfaire; It. Satisfare; Sp. Satisfazer; Lat. Satisfacere, to cause to have enough, as much as is required for the purpose, as much as is wished for, from satis and facere, satis, perhaps from the Gr. Σατ-ειν, refercire, constipare, to stuff or stow close.

Not to give enough, not to supply so much as or that which is required, for any purpose, or so much as is wished for or desired; to discontent.

Himself [Essex] also was very much dissatisfied and displeased that the queen had in the mean time conferred on Sir Robert Cecyl the gainfull office of master of the wards, which in a credulous hope he had promised to himself

Camden. Queen Elizabeth, an. 1599.

Saying, they discover'd by what they heard abroad, and by the spirit that govern'd in the city, that there would be a general dissatisfaction in the people, if this ordinance were not passed.—Clarendon. Civil War, vol. ii. p. 606.

For the more wise and sagacious any man were, the more he must needs be sensible of death, which sense would sour all happiness of a sensible good, the more sensible he must needs be, not only of the shortness and uncertainty of sensible enjoyments, but also of their poorness, emptiness, insufficiency, dissatisfactoriness.

Hale. Cont. vol. ii. An Enquiry touching Happiness.

All with applause, the rightful sentence heard,
Midas alone dissatisfied appear'd,
To him unjustly giv'n the judgment seems,
For Pan's barbaric notes he most esteems.

Croxall. Ovid. Met. b xi.

By retrenching our inordinate desires we do not rob ourselves of any true pleasure, but only prevent the pain and trouble of farther dissatisfaction.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 6.

Conditions were prepared, and sent to Paris by the Earl of Feversham in November last; and in December following, the earl returns with an answer very dissatisfactory.

Parliamentary History. Charles II. an. 1678.

When a new government is established, by whatever means, the people are commonly dissatisfied with it, and pay obedience more from fear and necessity, than from any idea of allegiance or of moral obligation.

Hume. Ess. Of the Original Contract.

To be deprived of some good which by a proper conduct might have been secured and obtained, if it be attended with dissatisfaction or regret, is certainly a punishment; and, if it always lasts, an eternal punishment.

Jortin. On the Christian Religion, Dis. 7.

DIS-SCA'TTER, v. To shed abroad, to disperse.

Yet worthy Talbot, thou did'st so employ
The broken remnants of disscatter'd pow'r,
That they might see it was our destiny,
Not want of spirit, that lost us what was our.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vi.

And future dangers naught respecting,
Whereby, (O how easy matter
Made this so general neglecting,
Confus'd weakness to disscatter!)
Cæsar found th' effect true try'd,
In his easy entrance making.

Id. Chorusses in Cleopatra.

DIS-SEAT, v. To remove from, throw out of, the seat.

——— Seeks all foul means
Of boystrous and rough Jadrie, to disseat
His lord, that kept it bravely.

Beaum. & Fletch. Two noble Kinsmen, Act v. sc. 1.

DIS-SECT, v. / DISSE'CTION. / DISSE'CTIBLE. / DISSE'CTOR. } Fr. Dissequer; Sp. Disecar; Lat. Dissecare, ctum, (dis, and secare, to cut.) To cut apart or in pieces; and thus, to lay open for inspection or examination; to inspect or examine, (sc.) in separate parts or divisions.

Slaughter is now dissected to the full;
Here from their backs their batter'd armours fall;
Here a cleft shoulder, there a cloven skull;
There hung his eyes out-beaten with a mall.

Drayton. Battle of Agincourt

So likewise to comparative anatomy appertaine accurate observations, as well of all kinds of humors, as of the footsteps and impressions of disease in diverse bodies dissected.

Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. iv. c. 2.

Yet these are the men cryd out against for schismatics and sectaries, as if, while the temple of the Lord was building, some cutting, some squaring the marble, others hewing the cedars, there should be a sort of irrational man who could not consider there must be many schisms and many dissections made in the quarry and in the timber, ere the house of God can be built.—Milton. Unlicens'd Printing.

Pious dissector, they one hour did treat
The thousand mazes of the heart's deceit;
Thou didst pursue our lov'd and subtle sin,
Through all the foldings we have wrapp'd it in.

Sidney Godolphine. Elegy on Dr. Donne.

Yet old Lucilius never fear'd the times;
But lash'd the city, and dissected crimes.

Dryden. Persius, Sat 1.

Some time since I made divers accurate dissections of the eyes of moles, with the help of microscopes having a doubt whether what we take to be eyes, were such or no.

Derham. Physico-Theology, b iv. c. 2. Note 12.

I am content to assure you, that that dextrous dissector, Dr. Jolive (of whom we formerly made mention) did the last year at my request take out the spleen of a young setting dog I brought to him.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 67.

Galen he [Hippocrates] observes are remarkably subject to the epilepsy, and on dissecting the head, the brain is found to be overcharged with a rheum of a very bad smell, a plain proof, he adds, that the animal was diseased, not possessed by a deity.—Farmer. Demoniacs of the New Test. c. i. s. 9

Keill has reckoned up, in the human body, four hundred and forty-six muscles dissectible and describable, and hath assigned a use to every one of the number.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 9.

DIS-SEISE, v. / DISSE'ISER. / DISSE'ISIN. / DISSE'ISTRE. } Fr. Désaisir,—to deprive of saisine, i. e. of hold, tenure or possession. Fr. "Se désaisir de,—To dispossess, bereave or deprive himself of; to forego, give over, loose or let go, his hold of," (Cotgrave.)

He disseised him self of alle, gald it to Sir Jon.

R. Brunne, p. 250.

You were iocund and pleasant, when your brother vniustly and vntrulye deprined and disseized my brother of the same

Hall. Hen. IV. an 1.

Hee so disseized of his gryping grosse,
The knight his thrillant speare againe assaid
In his brass-plated body to embosse,
And three mens strength vnto the stroke he laid.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

He went to Dyme for to disseizen the garison of Ætolians, which they had sent for and received into the citie [of Dyme] from the Eleans.—Holland. Livie, p. 652.

My love attempted in that youthful mood,
I might have been thine own inheritance:
Where ent'ring now by force, thou hold'st by might,
And art disseiser of another's right.

Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. iii.

As in case of disseisin, the law hath been that the disseisor could not re-enter without action, unless he had as it were made a present and continual claim, yet if he had been out of the kingdom in single pilgrimage (that is, not in general voyages to the Holy Land) or in the king's service in France, or so, he had allowance of forty days, two floods and one ebb, to come home in, and fifteen days, and four days after his return.—Selden. Illustr. of Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 17.

But the inuincible earl marshall had now crost the seas into Ireland, to take reuenge for the spoyles and disseizures, which his hided enemies had made in his lands there.

Speed. Hen. III. b. ix. c. 9. s. 47.

I never can forgive, much less forget,
How he (the younger soldier) was prefer'd
To that command of horse which was my due.
Sere. And after that, by force disseiz'd you of Your quarters.—Dryden. The Rivals, Act iv. sc. 2.

When one man invades the possession of another, and by force or surprize turns him out of the occupation of his lands: [this] is termed a disseisin, being a deprivation of that actual seisin, or corporal freehold of the lands, which the tenant before enjoyed.—Blackstone. Com. b. ii. c. 13.

DIS-SE'MBLE, v. / DISSE'MBLE, n. / DISSE'MBLANCE. / DISSE'MBLER. / DISSE'MBLING, n. / DISSE'MBLINGLY. } Fr. Dissimuler; Sp. Dissimular; It. Dissimulare; Lat. Dissimulare, (Dis, and simulare, from similis, like.) Dissimulare, is to feign or pretend that (sc. likeness,) not to exist, which actually does exist; and simulare, to feign or pretend that (sc. likeness) to exist, which does not exist. See DISSIMULE.

To divest of likeness, of similar or like appearances, to substitute, or invest with, unlike, with false appearances or qualities, to discolour; and thus, to hide, to conceal.

Dissemble stood not far from him in trouth,
With party mantle, party hood and hose.
Chaucer. The Court of Love.

Trust not ye contrary I was neuer discreuable
Kepe wel true loue, forge no dissemblance
Id. The Craft of Louers.

These holy doctours perceaning those great errours, thought it not best by and by to condemne all thinges indifferetly: but to suffer and dissemble wyth the lesse, that they might weede out the opinions which were most noysom.
Frith. Workes, p. 51.

Euery vtward reuerent behauior is a token of an inward worship & reuerence of the same thing where vnto thou knelest, as in the prostracion before thy parets or kyng, a sygne of thy inwarde loue, obedīēce, and worship to them, or els thou art but a dissembler.
Joye. Expos. of Daniel, c. 3.

That yf in the sayde prophetes ye see auaryce, arrogancye, enuye, desyre of vengeaunce, dissemblyng, and suche other, whiche are cleane contrary to the fruytes of the euangelicall myndes: thynke not that any good fruyte wyll spring of the same trees.—Udal. Matthew, c. 7.

Squinting his eyes he gan to nod.
to call me thence away,
And yet dissemblingly he thoughte
to dallye and to play.—Drant. Horace, b. i. Sat. 9.

But to herselfe it secretly retained,
Within the closet of her couert brest:
The more thereby her tender heart was payned.
Yet to await fit time shee weened best,
And fairely did dissemble her sad thoughts vnrest.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 5.

With him dissemblance went, his paramour,
Whose painted face might hardly be detected;
Arms of offence he seld or never wore,
Lest thence his close designs might be suspected;
But clasping close his foe so loth to part,
He steals his dagger with false smiling art,
And sheaths the trait'rous steel in his own master's heart.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 7.

What would you have me say? I know nothing.
Duke. Thou liest dissembler: on thy brow I read
Distracted horrours figur'd in thy looks.
Ford. Love's Sacrifice, Act iii, sc. 3.

All rules he reads of living great in courts,
Which some that art of wise dissembling call;
Put pow'r (born to have foes) much weight supports
By their false strength who thirst to make it fall.
Daniel. Conflict, b. iii. c. 1.

For the Earle of Lincolne (a purjured man) without any occasion minstred by vs, defends an vnjust quarrell against vs: neither doth he it dissemblingly, but most openly impudent, without any feare of God.
Speed. Hen. VII. b. ix. s. 7. c. 21.

So like a lion, that unheeded lay,
Dissembling sleep, and watchful to betray,
With inward rage he meditates his prey.
Dryden. Sigismonda & Guiscardo.

Soon as he found it vain to shun by flight
The female warrior, or maintain the fight;
Ready'd to circumvent the hostile maid,
Thus to the queen the low dissembler said.
Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. xi.

Here this knave of a forger makes Peter, or Lord Peter as he commonly calls him, and the rest of the Apostles, more politicians, who persuade Gamaliel to dissemble his religion and to act the part of a spy and a hypocrite.
Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

DIS-SE'MINATE, v.
DISSEMINA'TION.
DISSE'MINATIVE, adj.
DISSEMINA'TOR.

Lat. Disseminare, (Semen, quasi serimen. Lat. Serere, to sow.) To scatter as seeds are scattered in sowing; to scatter or spread abroad, to disperse.

How can it be then that a naughty quality should be more apt to be disseminated than a good one; when it is not the goodness or the badness of a quality, that hinders its dissemination, but its being an acquir'd and superinduc'd quality that makes it cannot descend naturally?
Bp. Taylor. Of Original Sin, c. vi. s. 1.

But the reason of this is because the effect of heresie is, like the plague, infectious and disseminative.
Id. Rule of Conscience, b. iv. c. 1.

Nor can we certainly learn that any one philosopher of note embraced our religion, till it had been for many years preached and disseminated, and taken deep root in the world.
Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 3.

By them, and their imitators, a style merely ornamented has been disseminated throughout all Europe. Rubens carried it to Flanders; Voet to France; and Lucca Giordano to Spain and Naples.—Sir J. Reynolds, Dis. 4.

The horrid scenes that have been passing there have all been occasioned, it has been said, by the dissemination of speculative notions about liberty and the rights of man among the negroes of that island.
Horsley. Speech on the Slave Trade.

DIS-SENT, v.
DISSE'NT, n.
DISSE'NSION.
DISSE'NSIOUS.
DISSE'NSIOUSLY.
DISSENTA'NEOUS.
DISSE'NTARY, adj.
DISSE'NTATION.
DISSE'NTER.
DISSE'NTIENT, adj.
DISSE'NTIENT, n.
DISSE'NTING, n.

Fr. Dissention; It. Dissentire, Dissenzione; Sp. Dissentir, Dissention; Lat. Dissentire, (Sentire, to think or feel.) To think or feel differently from; to differ or disagree in sentiment or opinion; to differ or disagree or be discordant from.

And whanne he hadde seid this thing, dissencioun was maad betwixt the Pharisees and the Saducees, and the multitude was departed.—Wiclif. Dedes, c. 23.

What maketh the world to be so variable
But just that men haue in discension.
Chaucer. To the Lords and Gentelmen.

For the wise man sayth: the discention beginneth by another man, and the reconciling beginneth by thyself
Id. The Tale of Melibeus.

But then vpon discencion
Thei fell, and in division
Amonge them selfe.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

But where they first say bread and wine cannot be the very body and blood of Christ: There they vary and dissent from them, affirming that bread and wine may and also is Christe's body really and very bloud of Christ.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 445.

First, because we feared, lenst they, seeing the dissentions and warres which are among vs, should be the more encouraged to make warre against vs.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 70.

And to unite them all in one consent,
Plac'd the fair marke of glory in their eye;
That malice had no leisure to dissent,
Nor envy time to practice treachery.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. v.

But you did say he was privy to them, and to the debates of them. Had he declare any dissent [illegible]
State Trials. Christopher Love, an. 1651.

——To leave their jars,
Their strifes, dissentations, and all civil warres.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 2.

Her name was Até, mot her of debate,
And all dissension, which doth daily growe
Among fraile men, that many a publique state,
And many a private oft doth overthrowe.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 1.

Our own dissentious hands op'ning the gate
Unto contempt, that to our quarrels wait,
Discover'd have our inward government.
Daniel. Musophilus.

This sounds as if by the judgment of Paul, a man might put away any wife but the mushroving; or else the parts are not discreet, or dissentary, for both conclude not putting away, and consequently in such a form the proposition is ridiculous.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

It cannot be denied but some very honest and entire men stay'd still there and opposed all their unjustifiable proceedings with great courage, and much liberty of speech; which was more frankly permitted to them than had been before, when the number of the dissenters was greater.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. p. 666.

I see no reason why any of those worthy divines of our church there present, should take any offence at my dissenting, who had no authority, that I know of, to conclude me; more than I do at them for differing from me in their judgments.—Mountagu. Appeale to Cæsar, pt. i. c. 7.

And therefore when Vincentinus Lirinensis and Thomas of Waldon affirmed, that the consent of the major part of fathers from the Apostles downwards is Catholick, Canus expounds their meaning to be, in case that the few dissentients have been condemned by the church, then the major part must carry it.
Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. ii. Introd.

——Thy strong hand, the broad way'd town of Troy
Shall now take in. So more the Gods dissentiously employ
Their high-hous'd powers Juno's suit hath wonne them all to her,
And ill fates ouer-hang these towers, addrest by Jupiter.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.

If any God dissent and judge too great
The sacred honours of the heav'nly seat,
Ev'n he shall own his deeds deserve the sky,
Ev'n he reluctant shall at length comply.
Gay. Ovid. Metam. b. ix.

He [St. Cyprian] disavoweth the practice of one bishop excluding another from communion, for dissent in opinion about disputable points.—Barrow. The Pope's Supremacy.

Alas! too late I find myself involv'd
In endless griefs and labyrinths of woe,
Born to afflict my Marcia's family,
And sow dissension in the hearts of brothers.
Addison. Cato, Act i. sc. 4.

They were onely suted to their [Jews] inclinations, and their capacities; their inclinations, which were very stubborn and perverse; their capacities, which were very low and gross, as their own prophets do upon many occasions affirm and complain; being dissentaneous and repugnant to the common humour and genius of mankind.
Barrow, vol ii. Ser. 15.

Of which questions whatever the true resolution be, it cannot me thinks be of so great consequence, as to cause any great anger or animosity in dissenters one toward another, seeing they all conspire in avowing the acts, whatever they be, meant by the word justification, although in other terms.—Id. Ser. 5.

For by the account which the sacred writers and the ancient Christians have given us of ancient heretics we find that they were turbulent factious men, who wanted to make themselves heads of parties, or to sow dissension amongst Christians.—Jortin. Christian Religion, Dis. 1.

Had he [Dryden] written to none but classical scholars, his epithet [Bacchus honest face] would have been applauded without one dissentient voice; but to the common reader, it gives an image very different from that which existed in the poet's mind.
Knox. Winter Evenings. Even. 37.

The counsel or purpose of the king is formally comprised in every prosecution: it becomes in part your counsel, when you have unanimously concurred in finding the bill, and, when it has been found by a majority of your number, it is their counsel, which the dissentient must not disclose.—Sir W. Jones. Charge to the Grand Jury, at Calcutta, June 10, 1790.

DIS-SERT, v.
DISSERTA'TION.
DISSERTA'TOR.
DISE'RTLY.

Sp. Dissertar, Disserto; It. Dissertazione; Lat. Disserere, sertum, (dis, and serere, to sow,) quod dicimus disserit partes, item areas, translato neque ex agris verbo utimur. Ut olitor disserit in areas unius cujusque generis res, sic in oratione qui facit, disertus, (Varro, l. 5.) Vossius thinks from serere, i. e. nectere; and that disserere means, to connect or bind together fitly in discourse, i. e. to put proper words in proper places. Cockeram has the verb, "To dissert; to dispute on matters." To discuss or discourse upon, to dispute or debate, to argue or reason upon.

Neither was hee [Edward VI.] willing to put heretikes to death, as in a certaine dissertation had once with Master Cheeke it appeared.—Speed. Edw. VI. b. ix. c. 22.

For Heraclitus directly and disertly nameth Water the father, king, and lord of all the world.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 1063.

Beside the repetition of the Augustan confession before mentioned, concerning the Lord's supper the divines of Wittemburgh laboured other articles with the ambassadors in single dissertations drawn up by Melancthon, as it seemed.
Strype. Memorials. Hen. VIII. an. 1535.

Our dissertator learnedly argues, if these books lay untouched and unstirred, they must have mouldered away.
Boyle. On Bentley's Phalaris, p. 114.

Under the waters. Mr. Peters in his excellent Dissertation on Job, (p. 539) and others, suppose, that Job here refers to the waters with which the giants were overwhelmed at the flood.—Farmer. Demoniacs of the N. Test. c. i. s. 10.

Could I however repeat you the words of a venerable sage (for I call him no other,) whom once I heard disserting on the topick of religion, and whom still I hear, whenever I think on him; you might accept perhaps my religious theories as candidly, as you have my moral.
Harris. Dialogue concerning Happiness.

DIS-SERVE, v.
DISSE'RVICE.
DISSE'RVICEABLE.
DISSE'RVICEABLENESS.

Fr. "Desservir,—to do one ill service or bad offices," (Cotgrave.) To harm or injure, to do a mischief or damage.

To believe purgatory, serves the ends of the Roman clergy, and to have so much easiness and leave in venial sins, serves the ends of their laity; but as truth is disserv'd in the former, so is piety and severities of a holy life very much slacked by the latter
Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, s. 4. c. 3.

This digression (much longer than was intended) will not appear very impertinent, when the great disservice shall appear, which befel the king by the swearing of those lords formerly mention'd (I speak but of some of them) privy counsellors.—Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. p. 197.

He [Cromwell] seemed to take well what I said: and it might have been no disservice to him, if he had acted accordingly.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i p. 213.

I easily found that base affections of pride, which commonly is the fly that haunts such employment, would render me dishonourable to thy majesty, and disserviceable in the employment.—Hale. Cont. vol. i. The Good Steward.

So that the objection will as much disserve the cause of the Church of Rome, who would have tradition, and the authority of the Pope for their rule of faith, as it will disserve our cause, who pretend to be governed by the Scriptures.
Sharp, vol. viii. Ser. 4.

If, on the contrary, any requisite passion be wanting; or if there be any one supernumerary, or weak, or any-wise disserviceable, or contrary to that main end: then is the natural temper, and consequently the creature himself, in some measure corrupt and ill.
Shaftesbury. Enquiry concerning Virtue, b. i. pt. ii. s. 29.

With regard to the publick, then, there is no reason to think that our Lord's injunction will disserve it, in any respect.—Hurd. Works, vol. viii. Ser. 19.

It is easy therefore to conceive, that many indulgences, though in themselves not, strictly speaking, perhaps vicious or immoral, may yet be prohibited as dangerous on account of the infirmity of our minds; for the same quantity of wine which would be of no disservice to a person in health, might prove fatal to one in a fever.
Bp. Horne. vol. v. Self-Denial, Dis. 1.

DIS-SE'TTLE, v. } Settle, dim. of set or DISSE'TTLEMENT. } sit,—
To remove from its seat; from its station, position or abiding place.

We shall in the next place endeavour not to shake or dissettle any thing thereby, but to confirm and establish the truth of God's existence, and that from the very idea of him.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 721.

I [Cromwell] think in my conscience, that they would have proceeded in another manner than you have done; and not have exposed things to those difficulties and hazards they now are at, nor given occasion to leave the people so dissettled as now they are.
Parl. Hist. Cromwell. On Dissolving Parl. an. 1654.

No conveyancer could ever in more compendious or binding terms have drawn a dissettlement of the whole birthright of England.—Marvell. Works, vol. i. p. 515.

They allowed not any declaration of private sentiments, when such a declaration might tend to the disgrace or dissettlement of legal appointments, or any articles of the establish'd religion.—Glanvill. Ess. 7.

DIS-SE'VER, v. } To separate into several
DISSE'VERANCE. } parts or divisions, to part,
DISSE'VERING, n. } to sunder, to disperse.

An eye or an hand is fairer and better in a body set in his kindly place, then from the body disseuered.
Chaucer. The Testament of Loue, b. ii.

And lilly forhead had this creature
With hueish browes, flawe [yellow] of colour pure,
Betwene the which, was meane disseuerance
From euery browe, to show a distance.
Id. The Court of Loue.

So that I shulde not disseuer
Fro hir, in whom is all my light.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

They [Pure Mathematiques] are two, Geometry, and Arithmetique; the one handling quantity continued, the other disseuered.—Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. iii. c. 6.

O ye mistook, ye should have snatcht his wand,
And bound him fast; without his rod reserv'd,
And backward mutters of dissevering power,
We cannot free the lady that sits here.—Milton. Comus.

The dissevering of fleets hath been the overthrow of many actions.—Raleigh.

(1) That by common motion (without attraction) the dissever'd particles of the chaos could never make the world: could never convene into such great compact masses as the planets now are; nor either acquire or continue such motions as the planets now have.—Bentley, Ser. 7.

Myself, the while, dissevering with my knife
A waxen cake, the numerous portions chaf'd
Between my palms.—Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xii.

DIS-SHA'DOW, v. To free from shadow or shade; from that which eclipses, darkens or obscures.

But soon as he again dis-shadowed is
Restoring the blind world his blemish'd sight,
As though another day were newly his
The cou'ned birds busily take their flight
And wonder at the shortness of the night.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Victory and Triumph.

DIS-SHEATH, v. To draw, drop or fall from the sheath. The common word is unsheath, (qv.)

And in mounting hastily on horseback, his sword dis-sheathing, pierced his own thigh.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. iii. c. 4. s. 3.

DIS-SHIP, v. To remove from a ship. See UNSHIP.

Item, that the captaine by discretion shal from time to time disship any artificer or English seruing man or apprentice out of the Primrose into any of the other three ships.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 296.

DIS-SI'DENT. Lat. Dissidens, pres. part, of dis-sidere, to set apart, (dis, and sedere.)
Being or keeping apart, or disunited; disagreeing.

But in that new found part of the world which is scarcely so far from us beyond the line equinoctial as our life and manners be dissident from theirs, no trust or confidence is in leagues.—Sir T. More. Utopia, b. ii. c. 9.

DIS-SILITION. Lat. Dissilire, to leap asunder.
A leaping, springing or starting asunder.

It seemed probable, that the dissilition depended chiefly upon the peculiar texture of the glass in this or that vessel.
Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 35.

The air in the smaller having so much room in the greater to receive it, the dissilition of that air was great.
Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 92.

DIS-SI'MILAR, adj. } Lat. Dissimilis. See
DISSIMILA'RITY, } DISSIMULE, infra.
DISSIMI'LARLY. } Having unlike appearances, unlike qualities; having no likeness or resemblance.
DISSIMI'LITUDE. }

Yet to the farther opening, how little holde there is in the causes that he laieth of dyssymilitude & vnlikenes, betwene the witnesses brought into a spyritual court, & the wytnesses brought into the temporal for informacion of ye iury, I marueil much, &c.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 998.

Our imaginations paint souls and angels in as dissimilar a resemblance.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 7.

For all goodness has a positive resemblance of God; which is a state of more excellence, than any evil (which is but a privative dissimilitude to him) can be of unworthiness.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 4. s. 3.

It might exactly as well be argued, that if God (according to Spinoza's supposition) does always necessarily produce all possible differences and varieties of things; therefore his will and nature is always necessarily infinitely various, unequal, and dissimilar to itself.
Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 9.

If we be fierce, hard-hearted, unmercifull or uncharitable, how can we claim kindred with him who is all love and benignity, all munificence and mercy? there can be no affinity in relation, where there is such a dissimilitude in nature.
Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 10.

—— The Appenine
Of a free Italy, whose chalky sides
With verdant shrubs dissimilarly gay,
Still captivate the eye, while at his feet
The silver Medway glides.—Smart. Hop Garden, b. i.

And we might account even for a greater dissimilarity by considering the number of ages, during which the several swarms have been separated from the great Indian hive, to which they primarily belonged.
Sir W. Jones. On the Chinese, Dis. 7.

The uncertainty of our duration is impressed commonly by dissimilitude of condition: it is only by finding life changeable that we are reminded of its shortness.
Idler, No. 103.

DIS-SI'MULE, v. } Fr. Dissimuler; Sp.
DISSI'MULATE, adj. } Dissimular; It. Dissimu-
DISSIMULA'TION. } lare; Lat. Dissimulare.
DISSI'MULING, n. } See DISSEMBLE, and also
DISSI'MULER. } the example below from the Tatler.

To divest of likeness, of similar or like appearances; to substitute or invest with unlike, with false appearances or qualities; to discolour; and thus, to hide, to conceal.

That all that liuen, sothe to saine,
Ne should haue wiste, by worde or by manere
What that he ment, as touching this matere
From euery wight, as ferre as is the cloud,
He was so wise, and well dissimulen coud.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. iii.

O false dissimulour, O Greek Sinon,
That broughtest Troye al utterly to sorwe!
Id. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 15234.

This sike man woxe wel neigh wood for ire,
He wolde that the frere had ben a-fire
With his false dissimulation.
Id. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7705.

Under smiling she was dissimulate
Prouocatiue with blinkes amorous.
Chaucer. The Testament of Creseide.

Who coude tellen you the forme of daunces
So uncouth, and so freshe contenaunces,
Swiche subtil lokings and dissimulings.
Id. The Squieres Tale, v. 10599.

By which ye shal see that I deceue you not as Master Masker dooeth, that thorow all his exposicion flitteth all fro the poynte, & dyssimuleth all the woordes of those old holy men.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1050.

Neither are these things to be dissimuled the which we haue spoken of, for he that may correct any thing and doeth neglect to do the same, without all doubt he maketh himself partaker of the sinne or offence.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 422. Disput. in the Vniver. of Prague.

Whan Wyllyam was deed, men spake of hym as they doo of other prynces, and sayd that he was wyse and gylefull, riche and couytous, and loued well to be magnyfied and prayesed; a fare speker and great dissymuler.
Fabyan, vol. i. pt. ii. c. 229.

We commaunde as kynges, and pray as men, that al thyng be forgiuen to them that be olde and broken, and to them that be yonge and lusty, to dissimulate for a time, and nothyng to be forgiuen to very yong children.
Golden Boke, c. 9.

For where it [the Gospel] is truly receaued, there it purifieth the heart, and maketh the person to consent to the laws of God and to beginne a newe and godly lyuyng, fashioned after God's lawes, and without all dissimulation.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 198.

This kind of dissimuled praises requires greater and much more wary circumspection to be taken heed of.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 79.

These garments and coverings of devotion may abuse the eye of the world, but we know the master of all sanctity distinguishes dissimulation in all the specious similitudes it weareth.—Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 4. s. 2.

Before we discourse of this vice, it will be necessary to observe, that the learned make a difference between simulation and dissimulation. Simulation is a pretence of what is not, and dissimulation a concealment of what is.
Tatler, No. 213.

His spirit was daring, subtle and changeable; he was expert in all the arts of simulation and dissimulation.
Rose. Sallust. The Conspiracy of Catiline.

DIS-SI'PATE, v. } Fr. Dissiper; Sp. Dis-
DI'SSIPABLE. } sipar; It. Dissipare; Lat.
DISSIPA'TION. } Dissipare; propriè est dis-
jicere, dispergere, ab antiquo sipare, (jacere.) Vossius.
To cast or throw away, to disperse, to scatter abroad.

And the reason is this, heate beeing chiefe qualitie, doth drawe things vnto it (as we may see by the sunne) the which notwithstanding are soner after dissipated and resolued.
Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 213.

There muste nedis folowe horible derkenes blindnes heuy plages both publyk and priuate, present and perpetuall, yea & subuersions of empires & kingdo skatterings and dissipacions of nacions & of many comon weales.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 12.

Nor, until the more clear light of the Gospel, yet continuing its comfortable beams among us, dissipated those foggy mists of errour and smoke-selling imposture, ended these collected revenues.
Selden. Illustrations of Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 16.

But those things which pertain to making the juices oily, and rosid, help on both sides; for they render the aliment both less dissipable, and more reparable.
Bacon. History of Life and Death.

This active substance of the soul, though but of a brute, being a more noble essence, and partaking more of its Maker's perfection, then the dull dissipable matter.
H. More. App. to Antidote, c. 10.

Shortly, now the flourishing kingdome of the ten tribes is come to a finall and shameful end; and so vanished in this last dissipation, that, since that day, no man could ever say, this was Israel.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Destruction of the Kingdom of Israel.

Thus struggling through the dissipated grove,
The whirling tempest raves along the plain.
Thomson. Winter.

As one extreme commonly produces another, so his father's covetousness led him [Henry VIII.] to be prodigal: and the vast wealth which was left him, being reckoned no less than 1,800,000*l.* was in three years dissipated, as if the son in his expence had vied in industry with the father in all his thrift.—Burnet. History of the Reformation, an. 1509.

But I could not obtain a present hearing; my case being put off till a farther time, and then delayed from day to day, till the dissipation of those who should have been my judges.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. ii. p. 334.

In one of the canoes was a little boy, who was much frightened; but I soon dissipated his fears, by giving him beads, and putting him on shore.

Cook. Voyages, vol. vi. b. i. c. 10.

We see the vanity of the living in their boundless provision for futurity, and in the dissipation of the large fortunes of covetous persons, by the extravagance of their heirs.—Priestley. On History, Lect. 3.

DIS-SLA'NDER, v. } "Fr. Esclandre; a
DISSLA'NDER, n. } slander, a defamation;
DISSLA'NDEROUS. } a detraction, unjust imputation. Esclandir; to slander, defame, dishonour, deprave, detract from," (Cotgrave.)

For if I would it openly disturbe,
It must be disclaundre to her name,
And me were leauer die than her diffame.

Chaucer. Troilus, b. iv.

We that weren in prosperitie
Been now disclaundred.—Id. Legend of Dido.

By theyse meanes, & blowyng of fame, yᵗ place was yᵉ more vysyted by women & vndyscrete persones, of yᵉ which some watchyd there yᵉ hoole nyght ſ prayer, so yᵗ the leger this cõtynuyd, yᵉ more disclaunder was anotyd to the iustyces, & to such as put hym to deth.—Fabyan, an. 1198.

He declareth you a true man to hym and that ye haue so bee to my lorde his father and his graundefather, and also true man to my lorde his father whiles he was prince or else in any other estate, the saied dislaunder and noysinge notwithestandinge.—Hall. Hen. VI. an. 1.

Of this Duke Wyllyã some disclaũderous wordes are lefte in memory, both i the Englysah Cronycle and also of other wryters, yᵉ which I ouer passe.—Fabyan, vol. i. c. 228.

In this while, by styrynge of disclaũderous & deuylysshe persones, a grudge was arreryd attweene the kynge and a duke of his landa called Coill or Coilus.—Id. vol. i. c. 65.

DIS-SO'CIATE, v. } Lat. Dissociare, atum.
DISSOCIABI'LITY. } To part company; to
DISSOCIA'TION. } separate from society, company, or fellowship; to part, separate, or disunite.

That I dooe therefore goe before to my father, is to the intent I may there prepare a place for you also, whom I wil not suffre to be dissociate or disseuered from me.

Udal. John, c. 14.

Let us in the next place see, how our modern atheistick philosophers and politicians, will mannage and carry on this hypothesis, so as to consociate men by art, into a body politick, that are naturally dissociated from one another.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 893.

And when we have truly heard this voyce, and answerde to it by a self abnegation, then the hundred-fold which he assigned even in this life, is paid in the relinquishment of all and dissociation from the world, by this union with him, who is so much above all we leave, as he is all we can wish to have.—Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 17. c. 2.

Before the dissociation of the seventeen provinces, this town [Antwerp] was one of the greatest marts of Europe, and greatest bank this side the Alps; most princes having their factors here, to take up or let out moneys: and here our Greesham got all his wealth, and built our Royal Exchange by model of that here.—Howell. b. i. Let. 15. s. 2.

In the dissociating action even of the gentlest fire, upon a concrete, there does, perhaps, vanish though undiscernedly, some active and fugitive particles, whose presence was requisite to contain the concrete under such a determinate form.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 373.

Why then was it called mere obstinacy? The reason is seen above: universal prejudice had made men regard a refusal of this intercommunity as the most brutal of all dissociability.—Warburton. Divine Legation, b. ii. s. 6.

If, after a while, the confiscation should not be found sufficient to support the paper coinage (as I am morally certain it will not) then, instead of cementing, it will add infinitely to the dissociation, distraction, and confusion of these confederate republics, both with relation to each other, and to the several parts within themselves.—Burke. French Rev.

DIS-SOLVE, v. } Fr. Dissouldre; It. Dissolvere; Lat. Dissolvere; (Dis, and solvere.) To disjoin, (by delivering from bonds, Vossius.) See ABSOLVE.
DISSO'LVABLE.
DI'SSOLUBLE.
DI'SSOLUBLENESS.
DISSOLUBI'LITY.
DISSO'LVENT, n.
DISSO'LVENT, adj.
DISSO'LVER.
DISSO'LVIBLE.
DISSOLVIBI'LITY.
DI'SSOLUTE.
DI'SSOLUTED.
DI'SSOLUTELY.
DI'SSOLUTENESS.
DI'SSOLUTION.
DI'SSOLUTIVE.

To destroy the solidity or continuity; to change or convert from solid to fluid or liquid, to melt; generally, to loosen, to relax, (to disjoin,) to disunite, to break the bonds or ties, fastenings or connections, or conjunctions; to free from restraint, check or controul. And—

Dissolute,—the adj. is loose, unrestrained, (in morals,) licentious, riotous, debauched, profligate. Brende renders, Temulentus, dissolute.

Bi whom heuenes brennynge schulen be dissolued, and elementis shulen faile bi brennyng of fier.

Wiclif. 2 Petir, c. 3.

And yet April with his pleasant showres
Dissolueth yᵉ snow, and bringith forth his flours.

Chaucer. A Balade.

And sothly, a dissolute tonge sleth the spirit of him that repreveth, and also of him that is repreved.

Id. The Persones Tale.

If thou be sadde or sobre of countenaunce,
Men woll faine thou thinkest some treason,
And if thou be glad of daliaunce,
Men wol deme it dissolucion,
And call faire speech adulacion.

Lidgate. Balade of Good Counsaile.

The perfitt forme, that God hathe geuen to other man,
Or other beast, dissolue it shall to earth wher it began,
And who can tell yf that the sowle of man ascende,
Or with the body if it dye, and to the groun decende.

Surrey. Ecclesiastes, c. 3.

And forasmuch as wee be in hand with laughinge, which is a signe of a verye light and dissolute minde, let her see that shee laugh not vnmeasureably.

Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, I. 6.

For both the age yᵗ was then, and the posteritie yᵗ came after, instructed, and tooke it for a wonder, yᵗ he durst go so dissolutelye amonges those nacions, not yet established vnder his empyre, the barbarous people reputinge his rashenes, for an assured confidence.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 285.

The fourthe plage maye well be vnderstande, to be the breakyng in of the Turkes & Sarasens, whiche is, as it were a worthye and well deserued scourge or whyppe, whiche shoulde scourge and punyshe the christendome fallyng into synne and dyssolutenes.—Udal. Revelacion, c. 8.

But what maner dolor & payne, what maner of grieuous pangea, what intollerable torment, the sely creature feeleth in the dissolucion and seuerannce of the soule fro the body, neuer was there body that yet could tel the tale.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 77.

No April can revive thy wither'd flow'rs,
Whose springing grace adorns the glory now,
Swift speedy time, feather'd with flying hours,
Dissolves the beauty of the fairest brow.—Daniel, Son. 36.

Those things which are made by me are indissoluble by my will, and though every thing which is compacted, be in its own nature dissoluable, yet it is not the part of one that is good, to will the dissolution or destruction of any thing, that was once well made.—Cudworth. Intel. Sys. p. 119.

As salt and sugar, which are easily dissoluble in water, but not without difficulty in oyl; and well rectified spirits of wine.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 1.

I shall, therefore, pursue the same method, and first consider such bodies as seem to have an intrinsic principle and alteration or corruption from the dissolvibility of their parts, and the conduition of several particles endued with contrary and destructive qualities each to other; or such as least tend to a gradual alteration.

Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 84.

Nor is it only the exclusion of ayr by water, or repletion of cavities possessed thereby, which causeth a pot of ashes to admit so great a quantity of water, but also the solution of the salt of the ashes into the body of the dissolvent.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 5.

But here the patrons of wickedness and dissolvers of Christian discipline will object, that it is the part of man and wife to bear one another's cross, whether in calamity or infamy, that they might gain each other, if not to a good name, yet to repentance and amendment.

Milton. Martin Bucer concerning Divorce.

Man hath a double state, namely, a state in this life in conjunction of the soul with the body, naturally dissolvible, and a state of immortality after this life, either in the soul alone, or in the soul in conjunction with an immortal body, as shall be shown in its due time.

Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 378.

At last, by subtill slights shee him betraid
Vnto his foe, a giant huge and tall,
Who him disarmed, dissolute, dismaid,
Vnwares surprised.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 7.

The lawless exile did return with speed,
Not to defend his country, but to kill.
Then were the prisons dissolutely freed,
Both field and town with wretchedness to fill.

Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. iv.

When Moses now those tables to renew
Of that essential Deity doth merit,
Which from his hands he dissolutely threw,
In the deep anguish of his grieved spirit.

Id. Moses his Birth and Miracles, b. iii.

And this I speake not to take away laughter altogether, but that I might quite extinguish all dissolutenesse of life.

Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act vi. sc. 4.

Death to such a man becomes nothing else but a gate into a better life; not so much a dissolution of this present life, as a change of it, for a far more glorious, happy and immortal life.—Hale. Cont. vol. i. Of our latter End.

Then in the polish'd bath, refresh'd from toil,
Their joints they supple with dissolving oil.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. x.

Refined gold, the most ponderous of known bodies, must be allowed to be porous too, because it's dissoluble in mercury, aqua regis, and other chemical liquors

Bentley. Ser. 7.

It acquired at once both whiteness in colour, dissolubleness in aqua fortis, and aptness to compose a bitter body with it, and I know not how many other qualities are attributed.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 97.

In man and viviparous quadrupeds, the food moistened with the spittle [saliva] is first chew'd and prepar'd in the mouth, then swallowed into the stomach, where being mingled with some dissolvent juices, it is by the heat thereof concocted, macerated, and reduc'd into a chyle or cremor, and so evacuated into the intestines.

Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

I have not yet myself seen any severe and satisfactory trial made to evince the efficacy of insipid dissolvents

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 98.

Thou kind dissolver of encroaching care,
And ease of every bitter weight I bear,
Keep from my soul repining, while I sing
The praise and honour of this glorious king.

Otway. Windsor Castle.

It was one Garvey, and one Dr. Ackworth, a civilian, (the latter a man of no good fame, and put from his places for the dissolute life he led,) that for their own private advantage first moved for a commission of this nature.

Strype. Life of Abp. Grindall, an. 1577.

The queen's subjects lived dissolutely, vainly, and luxuriously, with little fear of God and care of honesty, and in a neglect of that honour and obedience that was due to her.

Id. Life of Abp. Parker, an. 1563.

This may in good part be ascribed to our civil confusions and distractions, which for the time do lay all laws asleep and do not only occasion a general licentiousness and dissoluteness of manners, but have usually a proportionable bad influence upon the order and government of families

Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 30.

In the Old Testament, death generally signifies that temporal death which is the dissolution of the body, though when it is threatened as the punishment of sin, it prefigures and includes in it eternal death.—Clarke, vol. i. ser. 75.

Of that corruptive or dissolutive power of air near those mines, the same author mentions other instances.

Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 91.

By this means the air might promote the dissolutive action of the menstruum.—Id. Ib. vol. v. p. 500.

She [France] increased her forces, while other nations reduced theirs; and was ready to defend, or to invade her neighbours, while their confederacy being dissolved, they were in no condition to invade her, and in a bad one to defend themselves.—Bolingbroke. State of Europe, Let. 8.

If any shall take offence at my making the soul compounded, and dissoluble and perishable, let them consider it is not I who make it so but themselves by their application of the term.—Search. Light of Nature, pt. i. c. 6.

The operation of assaying is still more difficult, still more tedious, and unless a part of the metal is fairly melted in the crucible, with proper dissolvents, any conclusion that can be drawn from it, is extremely uncertain.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 4.

From the stiffness introduced by Holbein and the Flemish masters, we were fallen into a loose, and, if I may use the word, a dissolute kind of painting, which was not less barbarous than the opposite extreme, and yet had not the merit of representing even the dresses of the age

Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol iv. c. 1.

The next, mad Mathesis; her feet all bare,
I'ngirt, untrimm'd, with dissolved hair;
No foreign object can her thoughts disjoint,
Reclin'd she sits, and ponders o'er a point.

Smart. The Temple of Dulness

If it [religion] check in some degree, personal dissoluteness, if it beget a general probity in the transactions of business, if it produce soft and humane manners in the mass of the community, and occasional exertions of laborious or expensive benevolence in a few individuals, it is all the effect which can offer itself to external notice.

Paley. Evidences, vol. ii. c. 7.

DIS-SO'NANT, adj. } Fr. Dissonant; It. and Sp. Dissonante; Lat. Dissonans. See CONSONANT.
DI'SSONANCE.
DI'SSONANCY.

Sounding apart, in disunion; disjoined or disunited in sound, unharmonious, discordant; and thus, disagreeing, inconsistent with.

This saying, to all curteise dissonant
Which semeth that it of malice grewe
In this rude treatise I wol not plant
A parcel thereof.—Chaucer. The Remedie of Loue.

This diuersitie of propositions, is verie necessary to discerne the treuth, from that which is false, for when we ioyne two propositions that are dissonant, we shall easely trie the chaffe from the corne.—Wilson. Arte of Logike, fol 21.

It must needs be, that, how far a thing is dissonant and disagreeing from the guise and trade of the hearers, so far it shall be out of their belief.—Sir T. More. Utopia, b.ii. c.6.

Hanno would fain have asswaged their fury, but he knew not how; for he less understood their dissonant loud noises, than they did his oration.
Ralegh. History of the World, b. v. c. 2. s. 1.

The levity and dissonance of later writers, enforceth vs (though with some wariinesse,) to follow his light, for that, concerning this great conspiracy itselfe, our late authors doe fondly encounter one the other, and some of them (as it must needs be,) the truth.
Speed. Henrie IV. b. ix. c. 12. s. 13.

Then he shall clearly see the ugliness of sin, (and) the dissonancy of it unto reason.—Bp. Taylor. Const. b. i. c. 9.

So far, therefore, as conscience reports any thing agreeable to, or deducible from these, it is to be hearkened to, as the great conveyer of truth to the soul; but when it reports any thing dissonant to these, it obliges no more than the falshood reported by it.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 11.

The praise of goodness from an unsound hollow heart, must certainly make the grossest dissonance in the world.
Shaftesbury. Letter concerning Enthusiasm, s. 5.

I must confess, said I, I have hitherto been one of those vulgar, who cou'd never relish the shades, the rustick, or the dissonancys you talk of.—Id. The Moralists, pt. iii. s.2.

From every palace bursts a mingled clamour,
The dreadful dissonance of barb'rous triumph,
Shrieks of affright and wailings of distress.
Johnson. Irene, Act i. sc. 1.

The versification which he had learned from Dryden he debased rather than refined. His thymes are often dissonant; in his Georgick he admits broken lines.
Id. Life of Addison.

DIS-SUADE, v.
DISSUA'DER.
DISSUA'SION.
DISSUA'SIVE, adj.
DISSUA'SIVE, n.

Fr. Dissuader; Sp. Disuadir; It. Dissuadere; Lat. Dissuadere, (dis, and suadere, perhaps from Suave, sweet, pleasant; ut proprié sit opinionem, qua quis abhorret, edulcare; to render sweet, pleasant, or agreeable, an opinion from which any one is averse or abhorrent.)

To represent as disagreeable, unfitting, unadvisable, disadvantageous; to advise, or solicit (or persuade) not to do.

The king begā to diswade him from his purpose, thinkyng to haue brought him frō the doing of so horrible an acte.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 290.

They saye, they all vowed virginitie, & were persuaded of Saint Michael the Archangel and of S. Johan the Euangeliste, neuer to marrye (as though they were diswaders of mariage.)—Bale. English Votaryes, pt. i.

With slaũderous dissuasions, & perplexe impertinēt interpretatiōs (they) go about to bring the most pure playne worde of God into contempt.—Udal. Prol. to Ephesians.

As when he said to the Achaians, on a time, (who would needs unjustly usurp the Isle of the Zazinthians,) to dissuade them from it, my lords of Achaia, if ye once go out of Peloponnesus, you put yourselves in danger as the torteyses do, when they thrust their heads out of their shels
North. Plutarch, p. 325.

For it happened, that one Sir Thomas Overbury, a very ingenious gentleman, and the earl's special friend, had written a witty treatise of a wife; and it seems not thinking the lady in all points answerable to his description, had been an earnest dissuader of the match; and to strengthen his dissuasion, laid perhaps some unjust imputation upon the lady's fame.—Baker. James, an. 1610.

His Homily upon the 140 Psalme; an excellent dissuasive from ill company, who keepe man from repentance, and harden them in their sinnes.)
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act vi sc. 4.

What should he do? or seek his old abodes,
Or herd among the deer, and skulk in woods?
Here shame dissuades him, there his fear prevails,
And each by turns his aching heart assails.
Addison. Ovid. Metam. b. iii.

In spite of all the dissuasions of his friends, and the affrighting eruptions of that hideous place, he (Pliny) resolved, that flaming wonder should rather kill him than escape him; and thereupon approached so near, that he lost his life to satisfy his curiosity, and fell (if I may so speak) a martyr to physiology.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 6.

I shall not at all insist on the first branch of the division, the dissuasive, as remembring that I am to preach not an ordination, but a visitation sermon; and to discourse, not to candidates of holy orders, but to such as are already engaged in that sacred profession.—Bp. Bull, vol. i. Ser. 6.

That is to say, a hearty dissuasive from that practice which is too much in use among all sorts of persons, and may justly be accounted one of the reigning sins of the nation; I mean the practice of swearing and cursing in our discourse.—Sharp, vol. iv. Ser. 18.

Difficult as it must be to a man of delicacy, yet it is certainly desirable that while he gives dissuasives against vice in general, he should specify some vices, and paint in lively colours the particular ill-consequences which arise from them.—Knox. Liberal Education, c. 25.

DIS-SU'NDER, v. Lat. Dis, aug, and sunder. To separate, to sever.

——— Whose misrule, Automedon restraines,
By cutting the intangling gears, and so dissundering quite,
The brave slaine beast.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xvi.

But he himselfe solemnized a retreate
To th' Æthiops, farre dissundered in their seate.
Id. Ib. Odyssey, b. i.

The hollow ground, ah! how my sense it fills
With sound of solid horses hoofs. A wonder
It is to think how cold my spirit thrills
With strange amaze. Who can this strength dissunder?
Hark how the warlike steeds do neigh, their necks do thunder.—More. On the Soul, pt. i. b. iii. c. 25.

DIS-SY'LLABLE.
DISSYLLA'BICK.

B. Jonson writes syllabe without the l, and says, "A syllabe is a part of a word that may itself make a perfect sound." A dissylable is—
A word of two syllables.

All verbes dissillabes, ending in er, el, ry, ish, accent in prima: as cóver, cancel, carry, bury, levy, ravish, &c.
B. Jonson. English Grammar.

The accent is intreated to the first as in all nounes dissyllabick, simple in the first; as bléeke, hónor, crédit.
Id. Ib.

He seems, says Dennis, to have been the very original of our English tragical harmony, that is, the harmony of blank verse, diversified often by dissyllable and trissyllable terminations.—Johnson. Preface to Shakespeare.

DIS-TA'CKLED. Found only in Warner.
Having lost the tackle. (qv.)

At length, these instruments of their long wandrings, and the causes of Anchusis, and of many noble personages there perishing, counterpleaded (as is fabled) by Venus, tossed their distackled fleet to the shore of Libya.
Warner. Albion's England, Addition to b. ii.

DI-STAFF, n. Skinner thinks the Dut. Toustaff, baculus stuppeus; and thus,—
A staff round which the tow or lace (as Chaucer writes it) is wound for spinning.

This Absolon ne raughte not a bene
Of all his play: no word again he yaf.
He hadde more lace on his distaf
Than Gervels knew. Chaucer, Millers Tale, v. 3747.

This Ranulphe dyed at Walyngforde, and was buryed in the chapter house of the munkys at Chester, and ordeygned the fore named John Scotte to be his heyre, for that he wolde not haue so noble a lordshyp ruinne amonge, or to be denydyd atwene so many dystanys.—Fabyan, an. 1213.

About the 20th yeer of Henry VII. Anthony Bonuise an Italian came into this land, and taught English people to spynne with a distaf, at which time beganne the making of Devonshire kerseis, and corall clothes
Stow. King James, an. 1605.

There shee them found, all sitting round about
The direful distaffe standing in the mid:
And with vnwearied fingers drawing out
The lines of life, from liuing knowledge hid.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 2.

He's so below a beating, that the women find him not worthy of their distaves, and to hang him were to cast away a rope.—Beaum. & Fletch. A King and no King, Act iv. sc. 1.

What time the poor laborious frugal dame,
Who plies the distaff, stirs the dying flame;
Employs her handmaids by the winking light,
And lengthens out their task with half the night.
Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. viii.

DI-STAIN. In Chaucer, (says Junius,) is contaminare, maculare. Fr. "Desteindre; to distain, to dead or take away the colour of," (Cotgrave.)

To sully; (met.) to sully with disgrace, dishonour, infamy; to disgrace, to dishonour.

I loue one, which that most is ententife
To seruen well, vnwerily or vnfained
That euer was, & lest with harme distained.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. ii.

His blood distilled downe on my visage
My clothes eke the droppes did distaine.
Id. The Lamentation of Marie Magdalene.

When Nessus wist he shulde die,
He toke to Delanyre his aherte,
Whiche with the bloud was of his hert
Throughout destemed ouer all. Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

That now she swoneth, now she pleineth,
And all hir face she disteineth
With teres, whiche as of a well
The streames from her eien fell. Id. Ib. b. iv.

His noble blode neuer destayned was;
Trew to his prince for to defend his ryght,
Doblenes hatyng, fals matters to compas
Treytory and treason he banysht out of syght.
Skelton. The Dethe of Northumberland

I found her golden girdle cast astray,
Distayn'd with dirt and bloud, as relique of the prey.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 8.

But the more wary beast prevents the blow,
And upwards rips the groin of his audacious foe.
Ancæus falls; his bowels from the wound
Rush out, and clotted blood distains the ground.
Dryden. Ovid. Met. b. viii.

The brook, that flow'd a scanty stream before,
Swell'd to a river red with human gore;
Verbeia then in wild amazement stood
To see her silver urn distained with blood.
Faukes. Bramham Park.

DI'STANCE, v.
DI'STANCE, n.
DI'STANT, adj.
DI'STANTLY.
DI'STANCY.
DISTA'NCIAL.

Fr. n. Distance; Sp. Distancia; It. Distanza, Fr. adj. Distant; It. and Sp. Distante; Lat. Distans; pres. part. of Distare, to stand apart; (Dis, and stare, to stand.) The verb is formed upon the adj.

To stand apart, separate or removed from; to remove from, put away from; to pass, leave or put afar off.

Distance is used, in elder writers, for aversion, dissension, discord.

So that the barons sende to the King Phillip of France,
That he hem sende socour in this luther destance.
R. Gloucester, p. 511.

Suththe ther was at Londone a lute destance.—Id. p. 571.

For it [the equinoctiall] departeth the first meuable, that is to saine ye sphere in two like parties, euen distant from the poles of this world.—Chaucer. Of the Astrolabie.

How so there fall nowe distance
Amonge ve, yet remembrance
I haue of mercie, which he dede.—Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

That when I think vpon the distance and the space,
That doth so farre deuide me from my dere desired face,
I know not how t' attaine the winges that I require,
To lyft me up, that I might fly, to follow my desyre.
Wyat. Complaint of the Absence of his Loue.

All other nacions were astonnied to se suche an honorable compaignie come from a countree so farre distant.
Holl. Hen. V. an. 1.

Most pure and piercing the aire of this shire; and none in England hath more plenty of clear and fresh rivulets of (trouthful) water; not to speak of the friendly sea conveniently distanced from London.
Fuller. Worthies. Hantshire.

Stones seventy-seven stand, in manner of a ring,
Each full ten foot in heighth, but yet the strangest thing
Their equal distance is.—Drayton. Poly Olbion, s. 10.

Even absent things be seen by phantasie;
By sense things present at a distance.
More. On the Soul, pt. iii. c. 2. s. 6.

Now in a roomful house this soul doth float,
And, like a prince, she sends her faculties
To all her limbs, distant as provinces.
Donne. The Progress of the Soul.

These Irish matters though in time somewhat distantly acted, I have thought good to mention together, that they might be better remembered.—Camden. Elizabeth, an. 1580.

And certainly such objects of virtue are more impressive upon our affections, than those which may be greater in themselves, but more distantiall from the eye.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 10. s. 6.

But alas how distancial are we from this ingenious coercion of our polluted fancies!—Id. Ib. pt. i. Treat. 12. s. 1.

Like the swift hind, the bounding damsel flies,
Strains to the goal, the distanc'd lover dies.
Gay. The Fan.

This space consider'd barely in length between any two beings, without considering any thing else between them, is call'd distance.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b ii. c. 13.

So stands the Thracian herdsman with his spear,
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear,
And hears him rustling in the wood, and sees
His course at distance by the bending trees.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. ii.

At Gaverburgh, a town nine German miles distant from Ausburg, many Jews dwelt; where he was, and saw many Hebrew books well written; but they would not sell him so much as one, though he offered them money.
Strype. Life of Sir John Cheke, an. 1550.

Since distanc'd quite, like a galled jade he winces,
And lashes unknown priests, and praises well known princes,
So I, when first I tun'd th' heroic lay,
Gain'd Pownall's praise, as well as Almon's pay.
Mason. Epistle to Dr. Shebbeare.

For, distant from the dang'rous field, the Greeks
Had rang'd their barks beside the hoary deep.
The foremost next the plain, and at the sterns
Of that exterior line had built the wall.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b xiv.

I do him first all honour,—speak of Kunastrokius as a great man,—(be he whom he will) and then most distantly hint at a droll foible in his character.
Sterne. Letter 3. to Miss L——.

DIS-TASTE, v. }
DISTA'STE, n. }
DISTA'STEFUL. }
DISTA'STEFULNESS. } Taste (lit.) is applied to certain sensations or feelings caused upon the palate by the touch. To distaste, is—
DISTA'STIVE. }
DISTA'STURE. }

To have or cause to have an unpleasant taste, i. e. sense or feeling, upon the palate; and generally, to disgust, to dislike, to disrelish, to loathe, to nauseate.

Or whether in applause of these new edicts
Which so distaste the people, or what cause
I know not. Heywood The Rape of Lucrece.

And what avail'd his answer in that case?
Which the time then did utterly distaste,
And look'd upon him with so stern a face,
As it his actions utterly disgrac'd.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. vi.

Providing for protection of the king,
Men of most power, and noblest of the peers,
That no distaste unto the realm might bring,
For ripen'd judgement, or well-season'd years.—Id. Ib.

But when my means to fail me I did find,
Myself to travel presently I took:
For 'twas distasteful to my noble mind,
That the vile world into my wants should look.
Drayton. The Legend of Thomas Cromwell.

And our receiving the physitian under this notion of a minister and commissioner of God, (besides the mediation of a blessing to the remedies) affords this special sensible ease, viz. the allaying and qualifying much of the bitter and distastefulness of our physick.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 10. s. 2.

Some faults and mis-spent time, (with blushes I may speak it,) my youth hath committed, yet those made much more by such fleering pick-thanks, that blow them stronger into your unwilling and distastful ear.
Speed. Hen. V. b. ix. c. 15. s. 10.

This duke (saith Grafton) being an aged man, and fortunate before in all his warres, vpon this distasture impressed such dolour of minde, that for very griefe thereof he liued not long after.—Id. Queene Marie, b. ix. c. 23. s. 32.

My sentence hear: with stern distaste avow'd,
To their own districts drive the suitor crowd.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

The king [Henry VIII.] loved to raise mean persons, and upon the least distaste to throw them down: and falling into disgrace, he spared not to sacrifice them to public discontents.—Burnet. Hist. of the Reformation, b. i. an. 1515.

Why shou'd you pluck the green distasteful fruit
From the unwilling bough,
When it may ripen of itself and fall.
Dryden. Don Sebastian, Act iii. sc. 1.

He fell at length by the hands of the melancholy Felton, who, taught by the murmurs of the people, thought he did an acceptable service, by freeing his country from so distasteful a minister.—Pennant. Journey from Chester.

DIS-TE'MPER, v. }
DISTE'MPER, n. }
DISTE'MPERANCE. }
DISTE'MPERATE. }
DISTE'MPERATURE. } Fr. Détremper; Sp. Destemplar; It. Distemperare; Low Lat. Distemperare.
DISTE'MPEREDNESS. }
DISTE'MPERMENT. }

To temper is to suit to time (tempus) or season; to distemper. See ATTEMPER.

To unsuit or unfit for the time or season; to separate from, to divest of, to destroy, the seasonable moderation, regulation, government or controul; to disorder, to disease, to disturb, to confuse.

Distemper, in Painting, appears originally to have been applied, when the simple temperature or admixture of colours with water, (for limning,) or with oil, (for oil-painting,) was altered by the substitution of one or more ingredients; as of size, to render the whole composition more adhesive, of galls for marbling paper, &c.

The fourthe is, whan thurgh the gret abundance of his mete, the humours in his body ben distempered.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

Sire, (quod the lord,) yo wot what is to don:
Distempre you not, ye ben my confessour.
Ye ben the salt of the erthe, and the savour;
For Goddes love your patience now hold;
Telle me your grefe.—Id. Sompnoures Tale, v. 7777.

And certes so doth distemperaunce to feble men, that mowe not wrastlen ayen these vices.—Id. Boecius, b. iv.

By this ensample sonne attempre
Thyn herte, and let no will distempre
Thy witte; and do nothing by might
Whiche may be do by loue and right.
Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

The spirite of errour and lyenge, of dyscorde and of dyuision, the dampned Diuel of hell so entangleth their tounges, and so distempereth their braines, that thei neither vnderstand well one of theim another, nor any of theim wel himselfe.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 864.

For where the meates doo moche excede in degree the temperature of the bodye, they annoye the body in causyng distemperaunce.—Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. ii.

Thus you see, that the cause of the Ethiopians blacknesse is the curse and naturall infection of blood, and not the distemperature of the climate.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 52.

Which words by Warwick spoke so deeply seem'd to sting
The much distemper'd breast of that courageous king,
And straight he made proclaim'd, that every fainting heart,
From his resolved host had licence to depart.
Drayton. Poly Olbion, s. 22.

For if there be a passage once disclos'd,
That wrong may enter at the self-same gate
Which serves for right, clad in a coat of law;
What violent distempers may it draw?
Daniel. To Sir T. Egerton.

But thanks be to thee, O blessed God, the author of peace, that has vouchsafed by thy spirit so to bridle the distemperate affections of men, that their busie spirits being stirred up have not boyled forth into more fearful divisions.
Bp. Hall, Ser. 12. Noah's Dove.

That virtue must be out of countenance,
If this gross spirit, or that weak shallow brain,
Or this nice wit, or that distemperance,
Neglect, distaste, uncomprehend, disdain.
Daniel. Musophilus.

Tell how the world fell into this disease;
And how so great distemperature did grow:
So shall we see by what degrees it came;
How things at full do soon wax out of frame.
Id. Civil Wars, b. i.

But you are now going to fly into extravagancies and heats, which will manifest the rancour of the distemperedness and invenomedness of spirit which is within you.
State Trials. John Lilburne, an. 1649.

Then as some sulphurous spirit sent
By the torne air's distemperment,
To a rich palace; finds within
Some painted maid or Helen queen.
Feltham. Lusoria, b xxiv.

What worse, he said, can Argos undergo?
What can more gratify the Phrygian foe,
Than these distempered heats? If both the lights
Of Greece their private interest dissunites?
Dryden. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

Peradventure it will be replied, that there are many sinners who escape all these calamities, and neither labour under any shame or disrepute, any unquietness of condition, or more than ordinary distemper of body, but pass their days with as great a portion of honour, ease, and health, as any other man whatsoever.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 1.

As for that sort of trouble of mind, which we properly call religious melancholy, and which is my present argument, the best account I can give of it is this, that it is a dejection of mind occasioned from the temperament or most commonly from the distemperature of the body, accompanied with unreasonable fears and frights about our spiritual condition.
Sharp, vol. iii. Ser. 2.

I flatter'd my poor soul that all its fears
Were grief's distemper'd estrange, that my love
Rais'd causeless apprehensions, and at length
Edgar would quite forgive.—Mason. Elfrida.

It is necessary here to take notice of the influence which the body sometimes hath upon the mind, and to observe that melancholy is not unfrequently constitutional, taking its rise from some distemperature of the blood and juices.
Horne, vol iv. Dis. 31.

They glued a linnen cloth upon the wall, and covered that with plaister, on which they painted in distemper.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol i p. 44.

DIS-TEND, v. }
DISTE'NT. }
DISTE'NTION. } Fr. Distendre; It. Distendere; Sp. Distender; Lat. Distendere; (dis, and tendere,) Gr. Δειν-ειν.

To stretch apart, to stretch out, to widen, to enlarge, to dilate, to expand.

When wearied I remaine,
That sighs, teares, voice, and all do faile,
Discolour'd, bloudless, and growne pale
Vpon the earth my bodie I distend.
Stirling. Aurora, Song 2

What can give bounds to Alexander's ends,
Who counts the world but small, that calls him great;
And his desires beyond his prey distends,
Like beasts, that murder more than they can eat?
Daniel. Chorusses in Philotas.

So a sponge is mischievous, not in itself, for in its power it is harmless: but because being received into the stomack it swelleth, and occasioning a continual distension, inducetth a strangulation.—Brown. Vulg. Errours, b ii. c. 5.

But to our purpose, when our mother went
The bright Latona, (and her womb distent,)
With the great burden that by Jove she bare, &c.
Drayton. The Man in the Moon.

The distentions of those parts hath stopt all fruitfulness.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Double Marriage, Act iii. sc. 1.

Or that the warmth distends the chinks, and makes
New breathings, whence new nourishment she takes.
Dryden. Virgil, Geor. 1.

It is not nature's abhorrency of a vacuum, but the distention of the water, that breaks glasses, when the contained liquors come to be congealed.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii p 641.

How such ideas of th' Almighty's power,
And such ideas of the Almighty's plan,
(Ideas not absurd) distend the thought
Of feeble mortals.—Young. Complaint, Night 9.

DIS-TER, v. See CONTERRANEAN.

To separate from the land; to banish, to exile.

As it is the most pleasant, so it is also the temperat'st clime of all Spain: and they commonly call it second Italy, which made the Moors, whereof many thousands were disterr'd and banish'd hence to Barbary, to think that Paradise was in that part of the heavens which hung over this city.
Howell, b. i. s. 1. Let. 24.

Hereupon they were all suddenly disterr'd and exterminated, yet I believe in Portugal there lurks yet good store of them.—Id. b. i. s. 3. Let. 32.

DIS-TE'RMINATE, adj. } See DETERMINE.
DISTERMINA'TION. } Separate in bounds or limits; separate, divided, severed or cut off.

—— Six nights and daies
We sail'd; the seventh, we saw faire Lamos rise
Her loftie towres (the Lastrigonian state)
That beares her ports, so farre disterminate.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. x.

There is one of the same church of Christ, however far disterminate in places, however aggregated and infinitely severalized in persons, however differing in rites and circumstances of worship, however squaring in by-opinion.
Bp. Hall. The Peace-Maker, c. 1. s. 3.

For of the four punishments put into Esdra's hand by Artaxerxes, Esd. vii. 26. the second (rendred by us, banishment, but in Heb. eradication; i. e. saith Schindler, casting out of his inheritance,) is in the Septuagint παιδευσαι, and so vulgarly paideia for discipline or punishment, but there peculiarly for determination, and so the fitter to express, this turning out of the church, this church-banishment or determination.—Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 450.

DIS-THRONIZE. See DETHRONE. "Fr. Désthroner,—

To disthronize or unthrone, to depose from, or put out of, a throne," (Cotgrave.)

But Peridure and Vigent him disthronized.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10.

DI-STICH. } Fr. Distique; It. Distico; Sp.
DI'STICHON. } Disticho; Lat. Distichon; Gr. Δι-στιχον, carmen duorum versuum, δυο στιχους εχων, i. e. duos continens versus: comprising two verses; στιχους from στιχ-ειν, to go, to march, to go by measured steps.

Howbeit, as secretly conueied as it was, out it came, and was made known by this distichon.
Holinshed. Scotland, p 224.

If it be true what the poets frequently sing, that affection is fire, you shall need no other than the clear flames of the Donor's love to make ignition, which is comprehended in this distich.—Howell, b. iii. Let. 7.

From among many other distichs no less to be quoted on this account, I cannot but recite the two following lines:
A painted vest Prince Vortiger had on,
Which from a naked Piet his grandsire won.
Spectator, No. 44.

One is on Philemon Holland, the famous translator. He was school-master and physician in the city. A wag made this distich on one of his labours
Philemon with translations doth so fill us,
He will not let Suetonius be Tranquillus.
Pennant. Journey from Chester.

DI-STIL, v. } Fr. Déstiller; Sp. Distilar; It. Distillare; Lat. Distillare; (de, and stillare, to drop or drip, to fall in drops.)
DISTI'LLABLE.
DISTILLA'TION.
DISTI'LLATORY, adj.
DISTI'LLER.
DISTI'LLERY.
DISTI'LMENT.

To separate drop by drop; to fall, descend from, in small particles, portions or quantities, by slow degrees; gradually, gently.

Lo Lady, howe then I am comforted by your comming, and with that I gan in teares to distill, and tenderly wepe.
Chaucer. The Testament of Love, b. i.

A gentill herte his tongue stilleth,
That it maye none distilleth,
But presseth, that is to be preised.—Gower. Con. A. Ded.

Fyrst of the distillacion.
Forthwith the congelacion, &c. Id. Ib. b. iv.

Hys harpe he taketh in hand to be his guide,
Wherewyth he stilleth playnte his soule to save,
That from his hearte dystylleth on euery syde.
Wyat. Prologue to the Psalmes.

Whilst on his hoary beard his breath did freese;
And the dull drops that from his purpled bill
As from a limbeck did adowne distil
Spenser. Of Mutabilitie, c. 7.

All his life time he [Augustus] tasted of certaine grievous and dangerous sickness, but especially after the subduing Cantabria, what time, by reason of his liver diseased and corrupted by destillation, hee was driven to some extremity.
Holland. Suetonius, p. 74.

That as she sat, the poor distiller
Look'd on the tripod, like the famous
Astrologer blight Mostradamus.
Cotton. To John Bradshaw, Esq.

Vpon my secure hower thy vncle stole
With iuyce of cursed Hebenon in a viol,
And in the porches of mine eares did poure
The leaperous distilment.—Shakes. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 5.

To calm their passions with the words of age,
Now from his seat arose the Pylian sage,
Experienc'd Nestor, in persuasion skill'd,
Words sweet as honey from his lips distill'd.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

And others, though they should succeed, would give but a sophistical spirit, much of the obtained liquor coming from the distillable concretes.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 225.

Hence we may collect, that the analysis, wont to be acquiesced in by vulgar chymists, is as yet but an undetermined thing, since they have not declared (nor perhaps thought of any such thing) what number of distillations, (whether one or more, or if more than one, how many,) shall be made the standard, by which we are to conclude, that a substance, obtained by distillation, is a chemical principle.—Id. Ib. vol. iv. p. 499.

I remember I have taken camphire, of which a little will fill a room with its odour, and having in well closed distillatory glasses caught the fumes driven over by heat, I thereby reduced them to re-conjoin into true camphire.
Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 136.

——— Explore
What healing virtue swells the tender veins
Of herbs and flowers; or what the beams of morn
Draw forth, distilling from the clifted rind
In balmy tears.—Akenside. Pleasures of Imagination, b. i.

While through th' obstructed pores the struggling vapour
And bitter distillation force their way:
E'en through the bowels runs the scalding plague,
And wastes the flesh with floods of eddying fire.
West. Triumphs of the Gout.

All hope is fled, our families are undone:
Provisions are all carry'd up to London;
Our copious granaries distillers thin,
Who raise our bread—but do not cheapen gin.
Warton. The Oxford Newsman's Verses, for 1767.

In foreign parts a colonna infame would have been erected on the spot [Faux-hall] but the site is now occupied by a distillery, and several other buildings
Pennant. London, p. 41.

DIS-TINCT, v. } Fr. Distinguer; Sp. Destinguar; It. Distinguere; Lat. Distinguere. Vossius is in doubt, whether from dis, and tinguere, or from stinguere or stingere; Gr. Στιζ-ειν, pungere, vel notas pungendo infigere. If from the latter, distinguere will signify dispungere, Gr. Διαστιζειν, and the Gr. Στιγμη, he adds, is by grammarians rendered distinctio; but if from tingere, it will mean coloribus separare, or more fully, ita diversis coloribus tinguere, ut colores tamen separentur, non confundantur. Valckenaer, apparently with good reason, decides for the former. See Στιζω, in Lennep.
DISTI'NCT, adj.
DISTI'NCTION.
DISTI'NCTIVE.
DISTI'NCTIVELY.
DISTI'NCTIVENESS.
DISTI'NCTLY.
DISTI'NCTNESS.
DISTI'NCTOR.
DISTI'NGUISH, used
DISTI'NGUISHABLE.
DISTI'NGUISHABLY.
DISTI'NGUISHER.
DISTI'NGUISHINGLY.
DISTI'NGUISHMENT.

To separate by marks or notes, (or by different tints or colours;) to mark or note or discern the separation or difference; the separate or different qualities; to show or declare or make manifest the difference, (sc.) by some token; to be or cause to be, to put or place, in a situation, separated from that of others, (sc.) an eminent, a conspicuous situation.

And ther is no distinccioun of Jew and of Greek, for the same lord of al is rich in all that ynwardli clepen him, for ech man who euer schal ynwardli clepe the name of the Lord schal be saaf.—Wiclif. Romaynes, c. 10.

There can be no wight distinct it so
That he dare sain a worde thereto.—Chaucer. R. of the R.

In other maner ben distinct the spices of glotonye, after Seint Gregorie.—Id. The Persones Tale.

——— But who so of these miracles
The causes knowe bet than I
Deme he, for I certainly
Ne can hem not, ne never thinke
To busie my witte for to swinke
To knowe of her significations
The gendres, ne distinccions.—Id. House of Fame, b. i.

Then toke I and waxed my label, in maner of a paire of tables to receiue distinctly the prickes of my compace
Id. Of the Astrolabie.

Art thou distinguished and embellised, by the springing floures of the first sommer season.—Id. Boecius, b. ii.

For the kingdome of Christe is distincted in very deede, from the kingdome of ye Deuyll.—Barnes. Workes, p. 256.

Yt spirituall actiō should be distincted from the worldly courses, and hee that should serue God should not wrappe hym selfe in worldly busi[illegible]sses.—Id. Ib. p. 307.

In the which yeare [1228] died Stephen Langton, Archbishop of Canterburie, by whome (as it is recorded by Nic. Trivet) the chapters of the Bible, in that order and number as we now vse them, were first distincted.
Foe. Martyrs, p. 248, Chapter of the Bible Distincted.

Flesh is one thing, and fish is another, and either of them hath their proper being, and distinct substaūce.
Wilsons Arte of Logike, fol. 51.

Peraduenture some men will thinke myne argumentes to bee of small pyth, and to dissolue them by a distinction.
Frith. Workes, p. 10.

First, therefore, I will describe vnto you those rites and ceremonies, which are common vnto all their idole-temples: and then the superstitions of the foresaid Iagures, which be, as it were, a sect distinguished from the rest.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 114.

The faire Serena (so his Lady hight)
Allur'd with mildnesse of the gentle weather,
And pleasance of the place, the which was dight
With diuers flowres distinct with rare delight,
Wandered about the fields.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 8.

So they lov'd as love in twain
Had the essence but in one;
Two distincts, division none:
Number there in love was slain.
Shakespeare. A Lover's Complaint.

Ten thousand thousand ensignes high advance,
Standards, and gonfalons twixt van and reare
Streame in the aire, and for distinction serve
Of Hierarchies, of orders and degrees.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

But this essential dependence, and gradual subordination of hypostases, in the Platonick Trinity, will yet more fully appear, from those particular distinctive characters which are given to each of them
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 582.

In learning's better part her [Queen Elizabeth] skill was such,
That her sweet tongue could speake distinctly
Greeke, Latin, Tuscane, Spanish, French, and Dutch.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 655.

And the distinctiveness is imported both in the article put to each τον πατρος of the Father, τον υιον of the Son, τον ἁγιον πνευματος, of the Holy Ghost; but in the particles, as distinctly put to each, and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost.—Goodwin. Works, vol. iii. pt. ii. p. 13.

——— We understood
Her by her sight; her pure and eloquent blood
Spoke in her cheeks, and so distinctly wrought
That one might almost say her body thought.
Donne. Progress of the Soul, Ann. 2.

From the same principle of reason before mentioned, that nothing of itself can come from nothing, nor go to nothing, the ancient philosophers were induced likewise to assert the soul's immortality, together with its incorporeity or distinctness from the body.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 37.

But certes, in my fantasie such curious distinctors may be verie aptlie resembled to the foolish butcher, that offered to haue sold his mutton for fifteen grots, and yet would not take a crowne.—Holinshed. Ireland, c. 1.

And in the world scarce two so like there are,
One with the other which if you compare,
But being set before you both together,
A judging sight doth soon distinguish either.
Drayton. Matilda to King John.

Also every piece ought to have a certain form of impression, which may be knowable and distinguishable; for as wax is not a seal without a stamp, so metal is not money without an impression.
State Trials. Case of Mixed Money in Ireland, an. 1605.

If I should ask any the most subtil distinguisher, what middle nature there were between an infinitely subtil substance, and a mere thought of phantasm, by what name could he call it?—Hobbs. An Answer to Dr. Bramhall.

But then still, if we observe distinguishingly, and exactly apply and proportion the arguments to the imperfect Christian state, you shall find that promises are the most proper, congruous, agreeable argument, most apt and hopeful to do the deed, to have the impression upon the heart.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 504.

Which [comeliness] doth in dancing show itself most clear,
When troops confus'd, which here and there do trace
Without distinguishment or bounded space,
By dancing rule into such ranks are brought,
As glads the eye, as ravisheth the thought.
Davis. On Dancing.

——— Be that again,
Be that again proclaim'd, distinct and loud.
Loud and distinct, it was again proclaim'd,
And still as midnight in the rural shade
When the gale slumbers, they the words devour'd.
Thomson. Liberty, pt. iii.

Cast from our course, we wander in the dark,
No stars to guide, no point of land to mark.
Ev'n Palinurus no distinction found
Betwixt the night and day; such darkness reign'd around.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. iii.

(As it is in Hannah's song) There is none holy as the Lord; neither is there any beside thee: there is none beside God absolutely and perfectly holy (that is by a most remote distance severed from all things, far exalted above all things, peculiarly venerable and august in majesty (whence ὁ ἁγιος, the Holy One, is a distinctive title of God.
Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 34.

To what end also doth he distinctively assign a peculiar dispensation of operations to the father, of ministeries to the son, of gifts to the Holy Ghost?—Id. vol. ii. Ser. 24.

The Scripture always expresses this matter accurately, with great and exact distinctness, and with high acknowledgment of the original and essential goodness of God the father of all.—Clarke, vol. ii. Ser. 159.

He was in logic a great critic,
Profoundly skill'd in analytic:
He could distinguish, and divide
A hair 'twixt south and south-west side.
Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2.

The dame herself the Goddess well express'd,
Not more distinguish'd by her purple vest,
Than by the charming features of her face,
And ev'n in slumber a superior grace
Dryden. Cymon & Iphigenia.

Things that move so swift, as not to affect the senses distinctly with several distinguishable distances of their motion, and so cause not any train of ideas in the mind, are not also perceiv'd to move.
Locke. On Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 14.

For if writers be just to the memory of King Charles the Second, they cannot deny him to have been an exact knower of mankind, and a perfect distinguisher of all their talents.
Dryden. Dedication to King Arthur.

Eternity, the various sentence past,
Assigns the sever'd throng distinct abodes,
Sulphureous, or ambrosial.
Young. The Complaint, Night 9.

—— For Pallas had his heart
With manly courage arm'd, that he might ask
From Nestor tidings of his absent sire,
And win himself distinction and renown.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. iii.

They appeared to aim only at gaining time. They never entered into the peculiar and distinctive character of the war.—Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. i.

In order to write with precision, though this be properly a quality of style, one must possess a very considerable degree of distinctness and accuracy in his manner of thinking.—Blair, vol. i. Lec. 10.

Few are formed with abilities to discover new possibilities of excellence, and to distinguish themselves by means never tried before.—Rambler, No. 101.

The characteristick symptom of human madness is the rising up in the mind of images not distinguishable by the patient from impressions upon the senses.
Paley. Evidences, prop. 2. c. 1. s. 7.

These eight lines, and the apostrophe occasioned by the heroes disappointment in the third book, are distinguishably in the taste of the most admired reflections of some of our favourite authors.—Cambridge. The Scribleriad, b. iv.

We have both spices of Carissa in this province; but they melt, scarce distinguishably, into each other.
Sir W. Jones. On Select Indian Plants.

The lungs also of birds, as compared with the lungs of quadrupeds, contain in them a provision, distinguishingly calculated for the same purpose of levitation.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 12.

DIS-TITLE. To divest of title. See Dis-ENTITLE.

Phi. That were the next way to distitle myselfe of honor.
B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revells, Act iv. sc. 2.

DIS-TONE, or Dist∪'ne. } See Dissonant. To put out of tune, to disorganize, to disorder.

Discordaunt euer fro armony
And distoned from melody.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

But is he gone? and live I rhyming here,
As if some Muse would listen to my lay?
When all distun'd sit waiting for their dear,
And bathe the banks where he was wont to play.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ. Life, xliv.

Untimely fever, rude insulting guest,
How didst thou with such unharmonious heat
Dare to distune his well-composed rest,
Whose heart so just and noble strokes did beat.
Id. To a Noble Friend in his Sickness, p. 380.

DIS-TORT, v. Dist∘'rt, adj. Dist∘'rtedly, Dist∘'rtion. } Lat. Distorquere, tortum; (Dis, and torquere, to twist,) —to twist apart or away; to turn out of a right line. See Torture.

To turn or bend away; to turn aside; to twist, to wrest, to writhe.

And through that bitter agony,
Which still is th' agony of pious wits,
Disputing what distorted thee,
And interrupted evenness with fits.—Donne. Litany.

Her face was vgly, and her mouth distort,
Foaming with poison round about her gils,
In which her cursed tongue (full sharp and short)
Appear'd like aspis sting that closely kills.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 12.

These words of Mr. Hooker, thus pitifully distorted, are the only proof he hath for his assertion, that this church of ours hath now no subsistence.
Hammond. Works, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 51.

More ordinary imperfections and distortions of the body in figure, are so far from excluding all hope, that we usually see them attended with some notable compensation one way or other.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 79.

And to this purpose, let a man fly from every thing which may leave either a foulness, or a byass upon it; for the first will blacken and the other will distort it, and both be sure to darken it.—South, vol. iii. Ser. 2.

For other wise, to what purpose should they so violently and distortedly pervert the natural order and dependency of things in the universe, and cut off that cognation and connexion which is betwixt things imperfect and things perfect of the same kind, betwixt created minds and the increated mind.—Cudworth. Morality, b. iv. c. 4.

He [death] summons each disease! the noxious crew,
Writhing in dire distortions, strike his view.
Savage. On the Recovery of a Lady of Quality.

They carry from five to thirty men or more; and have often a large head ingeniously carved, and painted, with a figure at the point, which seems intended to represent a man with his features distorted by rage.
Cook. Voyage, vol. v. b. i. c. 8.

Montanus, the heretic, and his female associates, seem to have been the authors of these prophetic trances towards the end of the second century, and acquired great credit by their visions and ecstasies, in which they had acted their part so well by feigned distortions and convulsive agitations of the body, as to appear to be out of their senses.
Middleton. Enquiry into the Miraculous Powers.

DIS-TRACT, v. Distra'ct, adj. Distra'ctedly. Distra'ctedness. Distractful. Distra'ction. Distra'ctious. Distra'ctive. } Fr. Distraire; Sp. Distrahir; It. Distrarre; Lat. Distrahere, ctum, to draw apart; (dis, and trahere, to draw, formed from trans, and vehere, (q. d.) travehere, to carry over.)

To draw apart, to tear apart, to draw separate ways; met. to draw away the thoughts, the attention; to draw from one thing to another; and thus, to unsettle, to disturb, to confuse, to confound, to perplex, to harass; emphatically—a distracted mind is a mind drawn, torn away, unsettled from its strength or soundness, its firmness or sanity; mad.

Askest thou glory? thou shalt ben so distract by aspre things, that thou shalt forgone sikerness.
Chaucer. Boecius, b. iii.

Some of the Jewes preferring their owne ease and idlenes above their religion, were wode wo indignation, distractinge the myndes of other, and perswaded them to not beleue their prophetis.—Joye. Expasicion of Daniel, c. 10.

Eno. Most worthy sir, you therein throw away
The absolute soldiership you haue by land,
Distract your armie, which doth most consist
Of warre markt footmen.
Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act iii. sc. 7.

For lo! no sooner was his person joined
With this distracted body of his friends,
But straight the duke, and all that faction, find,
They lost their only engine for their ends.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. viii.

—— And to your audit comes
Their distract parcels in combined sums.
Shakespeare. A Lover's Complaint.

Their hearts so heavy, makes their heels so light,
That there was no entreating them to stay;
O'er hedge and ditch distractedly they take,
And happiest he that greatest haste could make.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

But when some doubt did her deep thoughts appall,
Distractedly she did her hands extend
For speedy help. Id. The Barons' Wars, b. ii.

Thou who wert uncapable of distraction from him, with whom thou wert one, wouldst yet so much act man, as to retyre, for the opportunity of prayer: to teach us, who are nothing but wilde thoughts, and giddy distractedness, to goe aside when wee would speak with God.
Bp. Hall. The Walke upon the Waters.

Arise, kneel not to me
But thanke thy sisters, they apparell'd thee
In that distractful shape.
Heywood. Loves Mistris, Sig. F. 9.

During which season every twinkling light
In their still motion, at this monstrous sight,
By their complexion a distraction show'd,
Looking like embers that through ashes glow'd.
Drayton. Noah's Flood.

Our meditation first sequesters the heart from the world, and shakes off those distractive thoughts, which may carry us away from these better things; for what room is there for God where the world hath taken up the lodging.
Bp. Hall. The Devout Soul, s. 23.

And thus may the slow and imperfect wit of mortals, be satisfied, that providence to the Deity, is no molliminous, laborious, and distractious thing.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 885.

No taste of sleep these heavy eyes have known;
Confus'd, and sad, I wander thus alone,
With fears distracted, with no fix'd design;
And all my people's miseries are mine.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. x.

More peevish, cross, and splenetic
Than dog distract or monkey sick.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1.

As for me, during my confinement to this melancholy solitude, I often divert myself at leisure moments in trying such experiments, as the unfurnishedness of the place, and the present distractedness of my mind, will permit me.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 41. Life.

While he long lurking was to war betray'd;
Forc'd to the field he came, but in the rear;
And feigned distraction to conceal his fear.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xiii.

The enemies of the government tried what could be made of this, to create distractions among us; but the princess gave no encouragement to them.
Burnet. Own Time, an. 1692.

Commis'erate also thy unhappy sire,
Ere yet distracted: whom Saturnian Jove
Ordains to perish overwhelm'd with wo
In the extremity of age.—Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xxii.

Here stands the man, from whom, O beautiful maid, thou fearest rejection, though he loves you distractedly.
Sir W. Jones. The Fatal Ring, Act iii.

The throbbing heart its fears declares,
And upright stand the bristled hairs;
The head in wild distraction swims;
Cold sweats bedew the trembling limbs.
Churchil. The Ghost, b. ii.

DISTRA'IN, v. Distra'inable. Distra'iner. } Fr. Distraindre; It. Distringere; Lat. Distringere, (dis, and stringere,) to strain, press or wring away from.

"Fr. Destraindre,—to strain, press, wring, vex extremely; also, to straiten, restrain or abridge of liberty," (Cotgrave.) See Distress, and the quotation there from Blackstone.

Ne power ne maketh not a man mighty ouer himselfe, which that vicious luste holden distrained with chaynes that ne mowen not be vnbounden.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. ii.

The gentle faucon, yt with his fete distreineth
The king's hand.—Id. The Assemblie of Fowles.

But he, whom all wo dystreineth,
This sorowfull kynge was so bestadde,
That he shall never more be gladde.—Gower. Con. A. b ii

When raging loue with extreme paine,
Most cruelly distreines my hart;
When that my teares, as flouds of raine,
Beare witnes of my woful smart.
Surrey. The Louer comforteth himself.

For lake of payment whereof I geue vnto the saide churchwardeyns for that tyme beyng, sufficient auctorite to distreyn in any of the said tenements.—Fabyan. Pref.

For, that same net so cunningly was wound,
That neither gulle nor force might it distraine,
They tooke them both, and both them strongly bound
In captive bands, which there they ready found.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

They that at first would not pay ship money, till 'twas decided, did like brave men, (though perhaps they did no good by the trial) but they that stand out since, and suffer themselves to be distrained, never questioning those that do it, do pitifully, for so they only pay twice as much as they should.—Selden. Table Talk.

When Squire Peremptory distrained his tenant for rent, perhaps he did no more than write his orders in a letter, this his servant carried to the post, the postman conveyed it into the country, where it was delivered to the steward, who sent his clerk to make the distress.
Search. Light of Nature, pt. i. c. 2.

Instead therefore of mentioning what things are distrainable, it will be easier to recount those which are not so, with the reason of their particular exemption.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 1.

Over which the distrainer has no other power than to retain them till satisfaction is made.—Id. Ib.

DIS-TRAUGHT, i. e. Distract, (qv.) Met. Vagis et insanis cogitationibus distractus; Distracted, torn to pieces by wild and insane thoughts.

And with the noise and lamentacioun
The quene distraught, is descended down.
Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. iii.

That I the schole shall declare
Of Aristotle, and eke the fare
Of Alisander, howe he was taught,
I am somdele therof distraught.—Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

Upsprang the crye of men, and trumpet's blast,
Then as distraught I did my armure on t
Ne could I tell yet whereto armes sualde.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

—— That I may showe
Some little beames to mortall eyes belowe,
Of that immortall beautie, there with thee,
Which in my weak distraughted mind I see.
Spenser. Of Heavenlie Beautie.

She sent an arrow forth with mighty draught,
That in the very doore him over-caught,
And in his nape arriving, through it thrid
His greedy throat, therewith in two distraught.
Id. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 7.

Much was I troubled in my heaule spright,
At sight of these sad spectacles fore past,
That all my senses were bereaued quight,
And I in mind remained sore agast,
Distraught 'twixt feare and pitie.—Id. Ruines of Time.

The trembling shipman, all distraught with fear,
Forgets his course, and knows not how to steer.
Rowe. Lucan, b. v.

DISTRESS, v. DISTRE'SS, n. DISTRE'SSEDNESS. DISTRE'SSFUL. DISTRE'SSFULLY. DISTRE'SSING, n. } Angustia, difficultas, from the Fr. Destresse; It. Distretta. Angustia, (q.d.) Districtio, from dis, and stringere. (See DISTRAIN.) The Fr. Estrecir, to straiten, Skinner adds, he believes to be of the same origin.

To press or strain or pinch close or tight; to wring hard; met. to cause painful sensations, to agonize; to harass or afflict with calamity or misfortune, with misery or wretchedness.

See the quotation from Blackstone.

Verstegan explains the A. S. Theafnesse,—distresseduess.

The kyng hyre fader was old man, & drou to feblesse,
And the anguysse of hys dogter hym dude more distresse.
R. Gloucester, p. 442.

The kyng hadde rewthe of hem, & ys conseil hym gaf tho,
Nom of hem sikerness to ys thral euer mo,
And of eche that with hym was, and in gret distresse,
Bi syde Scotlond hem gef a place, al in wildernesse,
To wone inne in thraldam vnder the kyng euer mo.
Id. p. 113.

Abide and suffer thy distresse
That hurteth now, it shall be lesse.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

Thus stande all men franchised
But in estate thei ben deuised,
To some worship and richesse
To some powertee and distresse.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

This spirite patteth vs in suche a sure truste and confidence, that in all our distresses we maye boldly speake vnto God those wordes, which fathers most gentilly and fauorable are wonte to geue eare vnto, callyng vpon him: O father, father.—Udal. Romaines, c. 8.

So doubly is distrest 'twixt joy and cares
The dreadlesse courage of this Elfin knight,
Hauing escapt so sad ensamples in his sight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. I. c. 6.

Farre hence (quoth he) in wasteful wilderneasse
His dwelling is, by which no liuing wight
May euer passe, but thorough great distresse.
Id. Ib. b. i. c. 1.

So wretched is this execrable war,
This civil sword—wherein though all we see
Be foul, and all things miserable are,
Yet most distressful is the victory.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vii.

Farewell, farewell! I feel my long long rest,
And iron sleep my leaden heart oppressing:
Night after day, sleep after labour's best,
Port after storms, joy after long distressing.
P. Fletcher. Eliza, an Elegy.

Myself distress'd, an exile, and unknown,
Debarr'd from Europe, and from Asia thrown,
In Lybian desarts wander thus alone.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. i.

Know you the tear that flows o'er worth distrest,
The joy that rises when a people's blest?
Cawthorn. Nobility, a Moral Essay.

The master of our bark did every thing in his power to alleviate our distresses; but this kind of vessell is so exceedingly inconvenient, that we were obliged to lie on the floor.
Swinburn. Spain, Let. 5.

1. And, first it is necessary to premise, that a distress, districtio, is the taking a personal chattel out of the possession of the wrong doer into the custody of the party injured, to procure a satisfaction for the wrong committed. The thing itself taken by this process, as well as the process itself, is in our law books very frequently called a distress.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 1.

Of all the distressful calamities to which man's life is subject, sickness is the most afflictive.
Warburton. Works, vol. x. Ser. 30.

DIS-TRI'BUTE, v. DISTRI'BUTABLE. DISTRI'BUTER. DISTRI'BUTION. DISTRI'BUTIVE. DISTRI'BUTIVELY. DISTRI'BUTIVENESS. } Fr. Distribuer; It. Distribuere; Sp. Distribuir; Lat. Distribuire, (dis, and tribuere, from tribus, the portion of each tribe or third.) See CONTRIBUTE.

To part, portion, share or deal out; to allot, to assign to each his share or portion; to divide, to dispense.

The lepre folke to Creseide than couth draw
To see the equal distributioun.
Chaucer. The Complaint of Creseide.

The Englishe men required, that Kynge Charles, should haue nothyng, but at the hande of the King of Englande, and that not as duetie, but as a benefite, by hym of hys mere liberalitie geuen, and distributed.—Hall. Hen. VI. an. 13.

This is my derelye beloued sonne, the delight of my mynde, & distributer of my goodnes towardes you.
Udal. Matthew, c. 3.

And touchyng the distribution of my temporal goodes, my purpose is by the grace of God, to bestow them to be accepted as fruites of fayth.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 130.

And if that no spare clothes to give he had,
His owne coate he would cut, and it distribute glad.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

I am also by office, an assisting sister of the deacons, and a deuourer, instead of a distributer of the alms.
B. Jonson. Bartholomew Faire, Act v. sc. 2.

Wherefore, to despite him the more, he [Agesilaus] made him [Lysander] distributer of his victuals: and having done so, some say that he spake these words in open presence of many: now let them go and honour my flesh-distributer.
North. Plutarch, p 512.

The church itself (which is the body mystical of Christ) might by analogy be properly resembled to the stomach of a body natural, which though it receive much, yet makes equal distribution, by dividing and dispersing that which it receives, to the use and sustenance of all the other parts.
State Trials. Speech of Northampton. H. Garnet, an. 1606.

Of human positive laws, some are distributive, some penal. Distributive are those that determine the rights of the subjects, declaring to every man what it is by which he acquireth and holdeth a propriety in lands or goods, and a right or liberty of action, and these speak to all the subjects.
Hobbs. Of Commonwealth, pt. ii. c. 26.

For in verie deed although wee cannot bee free from all sinne collectiuely in such sort that no part thereof shall be found inherent in vs, yet distributiuely at the least all great and grieuous actuall offences, as they offer themselues one by one, both may and ought to bee by all meanes auoyded.
Hooker. Ecclesiastical Politie, b. v.

The carving at the table he always made his province which he said he did as a diversion to keep him from eating over-much: but certainly that practice had another more immediate cause, a natural distributiveness of humour, and a desire to be employed in the relief of every kind of want of every person.
Hammond. Works, vol. i. Life by Fell, p. xvi.

Abdal. Justice distributes to each man his right.
But what she gives not, should I take by might?
Zule. If justice will take all, and nothing give,
Justice methinks is not distributive.
Dryden. The Conquest of Granada, Act ii.

In a government where the people are sharers in power, but no distributers or dispensers of rewards, they expect it of their princes and great men, that they shou'd supply the generous part; and bestow honour and advantages on those from whom the nation itself may receive honour and advantage.—Shaftesbury. Advice to an Author, pt. ii. s. 1.

How his unvary'd labour he repeats,
Returns at morning, and at eve retreats;
And, by the distribution of his light,
Now gives to man the day, and now the night.
Blackmore. Creation, b. ii.

The other species of justice, called distributive (as consisting in the distribution of rewards and punishments) admits of some latitude and degrees in the dispensation of it.
South, vol. iii. Ser. 1.

He will pass sentence on the evil Angels: he will raise up the dead, and distribute rewards and punishments to all, proportionably to their behaviour in the days of their mortality.—Jortin. On Christian Religion, Dis. 3.

Still less can any mortal suppose me to be capable of such consummate folly, as to give false evidence in favour of another man, in order to make my patrimony distributable among a great number.—Sir W. Jones. Fragments of Isæus.

These spirits were called demons, distributors or dispensers of good and evil to mankind.
Farmer. On Miracles, c. 2. s. 3.

——— Ample was the boon
He gave them, in it's distribution fair
And equal; and bade them dwell in peace.
Cowper. Task, b. v.

To us therefore, who see the present moment only, the government of the world will appear upon many occasions not conformable, in our judgments, formed upon limited and narrow views of things, to the maxims of distributive justice.—Horsley, vol ii. Ser. 29.

When an universal term is taken distributively, sometimes it includes all the individuals contained in its inferior species: as when I say, every sickness has a tendency to death; I mean every individual sickness, as well as every kind.
Watts. Logic, pt. ii. c. 2.

DISTRICT, adj. DI'STRICT, n. DI'STRICTLY. DISTRI'CTION. } Lat. Distringere, districtum. See DISTRAIN.

District, the adjective, is used as the Lat. Districtus—

Rigorous, harsh, severe. District, the noun—All that space within which the Lord has the power distringendi, i. e. of coercing and punishing. More largely—region, territory.

Distriction, in Collier, below, seems to be applied, met. (from districtus ensis,) i. e. the glitter of a drawn sword.

They should not inforce nor compell the citizens, people, or inhabitants of the common society of the Hans, or of the aboue named cities, or of any other cities of the Hans aforesaid (hauing receiued sufficient information of their dwelling and place of abode) to more difficult or district proofes of their articles of complaints alreadie exhibited.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 165.

And, to be short, there is such district seuerity in degrading those that vniustly or negligently demeane themselves, from an honourable vnto an inferiour and base office, or altogether in depriuing them of the king's authority; that all magistrates doe stand in feare of nothing in the world more than that.
Id. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 95.

The other which obstinatly persist in their errour, punishing with the rod of district seuerity according to the decrees of the canons and lawes of the church, that by their example, such as stand, may remain in faith, and they which are fallen may be reduced.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 782. The Pope's Slanderous Let. of Luther.

We send our mandats againe vnto your brotherhood, in these apostolical writings, districtlie and in virtue of obedience commanding you, that whether ye be present in your church, or absent, &c.
Id. Ib. p. 215. Pope Urban's Let. to Baldwine of Canterbury.

Even the decrees of general councils bind not but as they are accepted by the several churches in their respective districts and dioceses of which I am to give an account in the following periods.
Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, b. i. pt. ii. §7.

These districts which between the tropics lie,
Which scorching beams, directly darted, fry,
Were thought an uninhabitable seat,
Burnt by the neighbouring orb's immoderate heat.
Blackmore. Creation, b. ii.

A smile plays with a surprising agreeableness in the eye, breaks out with the brightest distriction, and sits like a glory upon the countenance.—Collier. On the Aspect.

The duty produced from them [salt works] amounts annually to near five thousand pounds: from the whole district, including the works at Lawton, and a small one at Dartwich from eighteen to twenty thousand pounds.
Pennant. Journey from Chester, p. 35.

DIS-TROUBLE, v. *A. S. Tribul-an, tundere, conterere, pinsere, to pound, to vex. See TOOKE.

To harass, to distress, to perplex, to confuse, or throw into confusion.

What did this burgeis? disturbled his wendyng.
R. Brunne, p. 226.

Edward withut cessayn salle gyue Philip the kyng
Alle holy Gascoyn, withouten disturblyng.—Id. p. 254.

And thei seynge him walkinge on the see weren disturblid and seiden that it is a fantum and for drede thei crieden.
Wiclif. Matthew, c. 14.

But he moste nede delyuere hem oon by the feeste day, and al the puple criede togidere and seide, do him awey and delyuere to us Barabas; which was sent into prisoune for disturblyng maad in the citee and for man sleyng.
Id. Luke, c. 23.

Thistles sharpe of many maners
Nettles, thornes, and hooked briers—
For much they disturbled me
For sore I dradde to harmed be.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

And how many spices ther ben of penance, and which thinges apperteinen and behoven to penance, which things distroublen penance.—Id. The Persones Tale.

God hath taken this kyngdome into the handes of enemyes for a tyme, and fyndes shall wake and destroble ye people.
Fabyan, c. 214.

But the Ligurians enuying the prosperitie of the cytie, distroubled the Grekes with their continuall warres.
Goldyng. Justine, p. 178.

Her dolour soone she ceast, and on her dight
Her helmet, to her courser mounting light:
Her former sorrowe into suddaine wrath,
Both coosen passions of distrouled spright,
Conuerting, forth she beates the dusty path.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 4.

DIS-TRU'ST, v. DISTRU'ST, n. DISTRU'ST, adj. DISTRU'STFUL. DISTRU'STFULLY. DISTRU'STFULNESS. DISTRU'STING, n. DISTRU'STLESS. } Trust, from A. S. Tryesian, fidem dare, fœdus inire, to pledge ones faith, to plight ones troth, or truth.

To diffide in, to discredit or disbelieve, to suspect; or be suspicious, or apprehensive.

For he that sweareth, eyther he thynketh yll of him to whom he sweareth, or els he yᵗ requireth yᵉ othe doeth distrust that other partie.—Udal. Matthew, c. 5.

Jesus to confirm the fayth and trust of his disciples, which ought to be so great that sumtyme it might helpe the distruste of others, sayeth: The weakenesse of your faith was partely the cause.—Id. Ib. c. 17.

Therefore to the ende that thou shalt not bee in any mannier distruste, it is God that is the maker of this promisse: and I the messagier sent from the same, to make relacion of the matier vnto thee, and to bryng thee glad tydinges.—Id. Luke, c. 1.

But notwithstanding, many of them through too much distrustfulness, departed and prepared to depart with their packets at the first sight of vs.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 159.

Therefore if a man be mynded to obteyne of him that he asketh, let him ask without distrusting, without doubt or wauering.—Udal. James, c. 1.

Who gave thee knowledge; who so trusted thee
To let thee grow so neare himselfe, the tree?
Must he then be distrusted? shall his frame
Discourse with him, why thus and thus I am.

F. Beaumont. The Honest Man's Fortune.

The cause of this their unreasonable distrust (as I do take it) was the fresh remembrance of the great wrongs they had done to old master William Hawkins of Plimouth, in the voyage he made foure or five yeares before, when as they did both breake their promise, and murthered many of his men.—Sir Francis Drake. West Indian Voyage, p. 26.

A weak distrustful heart is virtue's aguish spell.

P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 8.

Fye, haplesse wretch! O thou! whose graces sterving,
Measur'st God's mercy by thine owne deserving;
Which cry'st, (distrustfull of the power of Heaven)
"My sinnes are greater than can be forgiven."

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 5.

Ananias and Sapphira were distrustfully covetous, false and double-hearted in disposing the money they received for the sale of their estate.—Mede. Works, b. i. Dis. 26.

[Flatterers] set on work and exasperate their inbred naughtinesse and lewd disposition; their illiberal mind and covetous nature, their diffidence and distrustfulnesse of others.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 82.

God is he only that needs no help, and God hath created the physician for thine: therefore use him temperately, without violent confidences; and sweetly; without uncivil distrustings, or refusing his prescriptions upon humours or impotent fear.—Bp. Taylor. Holy Dying, c. 4. s. 1.

Hee [K. John] had the fealty of almost all the English peeres obliged to him by their owne charters; which made him distrustlesse of attaining easily his wished successe.

Speed, b. ix. c. 8. s. 48.

T' intrench in what you grant—unrighteous laws,
Is to distrust the justice of your cause;
And argues that the true religion lies
In those weak adversaries you despise.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

The greater care the higher passion shows;
We hold that dearest we most fear to lose.
Distrust in lovers is too warm a sun;
But yet 'tis night in love when that is gone.

Id. The Conquest of Grenada, Act iii.

It appears evidently, that God's moving David: or Satan's provoking him: or his own distrustful heart tempting him to number the people; are all phrases, that have one and the same meaning.—Clarke, vol. i. Ser. 67.

The same Divine teacher enjoins his Apostles to consider the lillies, or (as some would have it) the tulips of the field, and to learn thence that difficult virtue of a distrustless reliance upon God.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 29.

With thee be chastity, of all afraid,
Distrusting all, a wise suspicious maid.

Collins. Oriental Eclogues, Ecl. 1.

Yet dares a bard, who better knows,
This point distrustfully propose.

Sir W. Jones. The Hindu Wife.

DIS-TURB, v.
DISTU'RB, s.
DISTU'RBANCE.
DISTU'RBATION.
DISTU'RBER.

Fr. Destourber; Sp. Disturbar; It. Disturbare; Lat. Disturbare. Dis, and turbare; Gr. Τυρβη, a mob, crowd or multitude.

To put out of order, to disorder, to disarrange; to put or throw into confusion, to confuse, to disquiet, to perplex.

Hyt byuel ther aboute, that the erl Tebande de Bleys
That was Kyng Henry suster sone, dystourbed the peys,
And thoru Kyng Henrye's rede made destourbance,
And bygan to arere worre vp the kyng of France.

R. Gloucester, p. 436.

With that came he, and all his folke anone
An easie pace riding, in routes tweine
Right as his happie daie was sothe to seine
For which men saith may not distourbed be
That shall betide of necessitie.—Chaucer. Troilus, b. ii.

O woful Mars, alas, what maist thou sain
That in the palais of thy distourbance
Art left behind in peril to be slaine.

Chaucer. The Complaint of Mars and Venus.

The rightful Emperor Conrade
To kepe peas suche laws made,
That none within the citee
In disturbance of vnitee
Durst ones meuen a matere.—Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

At the last with his labour, sweating and toyling, when he saw that nothing would go forward, but that all his inchauntmentes were voyde, he was compelled openly to confesse that there was some man present at supper which disturbed and letted all his doinges

Tyndall. Workes, p. 10. Life by Fox.

And women be full of whaning for the most part, and ill to entreat & oft times when they haue chidden their husbandes for a light matter, it commeth at last vnto great disturbance.—Vives. Instruc. of a Christian Woman, b. ii. c. 5.

I doubt not but you knowe howe the deuil, continuall enemie to human nature, disturber of concorde and sower of sedicion, hath entered into the harte of an unknowen Welchman.—Hall. Richard III. an. 3.

And euermore, when he began to winke,
The bellowes noyse disturb'd his quiet rest,
Ne suffred sleepe to settle in his brest.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 5.

Instant without disturb they took allarm,
And onward move embattel'd.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

In summer time as in an evening fair,
The gnats are heard in a tumultuous sound
On tops of hills, so troubled is the air
To the disturbance of the wondering ground.

Drayton. Moses his Birth and Miracles, b. ii.

Besides as exiles ever from your homes,
You live perpetual in disturbancy;
Contending, thrusting, shuffling for your rooms
Of ease or honour, with impatiency.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. viii.

And he that shall by wicked offices
Be th' author of the least disturbancy,
Or seek t' avert thy Godly purposes,
Be ever held the scorn of infamy.

Id. To Sir Thomas Egerton.

For now the realm, he thought, in this dismay
To avoid the mischiefs, neither would resist,
Nor feel the wound at all since by this way,
All future disturbations would desist.

Id. Civil Wars, b. iii.

And euery one threw forth reproches rife
Of his mischeuious deedes, and said that hee [Cupid]
Was the disturber of all ciuil life,
The enemy of peace, and author of all strife.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 6.

"Dear heart," said she, "for love of Heauen, declare
Your pain, and make me partner of your care,
You groan, Sir, ever since the morning light
As something had disturb'd your noble spright."

Dryden. The Cock and the Fox.

The Duke of Savoy seemed to wonder, that the confederates lay so quiet, and gave the Duke of Vendome no disturbance; and that they could not, at least, oblige him to keep all his army together.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1707.

——— The Gods themselves
They menac'd, and preparing to disturb
With all-confounding war the realms above,
On the Olympian summit thought to fix
Huge Ossa, and on Ossa's tow'ring head
Pelion with all his forests.—Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xi.

We have seen, that inordinate passions are the great disturbers of life; and that, unless we possess a good conscience, and a well-governed mind, discontent will blast every enjoyment, and the highest prosperity will prove only disguised misery.—Blair, vol. i. Ser. 7.

DIS-TURN, v. "Fr. Distourner,—
To turn, divert, distract, avert," (Cotgrave.)

Thy father pray, all thilke harme disturne.

Chaucer. Troilus, b. iii.

Who with large promises so woo the Scott
To aid their cause as he consents to it;
And glad was to disturn that furious stream
Of war on us, that else had swallowed them.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

For thee vain foolish things thy prophets sought;
Thee thine iniquities they have not taught,
Which might disturn thy bondage: but for thee
False burthens and false causes they would see.

Donne. The Lamentations of Jeremy, c. 2.

DIS-VA'LUE, v.
DISVA'LUE, s.
DISVALUATION.

To underrate, the price or value, to under*value*; to set or fix a low price or value upon; to disesteem, to disregard.

——— Which was broke off,
Partly for that her promis'd proportions
Came short of composition: But in chiefe
For that her reputation was disvalued
In leuitie.—Shakespeare. Meas. for Meas. Act v. sc. 1.

When first this flow'ry orb was to us given,
It but a place disvalu'd was to heaven.

Drummond. Hymn on the Fairest Fair.

After this manner must we endeavour to stop the impetus of self-seeking nature: continuing to check it by degrees, and to slacken the pursuance of honor and estimation, till we come to acquiesce, ev'n to the world's disvalue and depression.—Mountaigne. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 9. s. 2.

Nor is't the time alone is here disprais'd,
But the whole man of time, yea Cæsar's selfe
Brought in disvalew; and he aymd at most
By oblique glance of his licentious pen.

B. Jonson. Sejanus, Act iii.

What can be more strange or more to the disvaluation of the power of the Spaniard, upon the continent than that with an army of eleven thousand English land soldiers, and a fleet of twenty-six ships of war, we should, within the hour-glass of two months, have won one town of importance by Scalado, &c. &c.—Bacon. Of a War with Spain.

He that chooses evil company, is like one that voluntarily frequents a house infected with the plague; who is either a fool and disvalues life, or desperate and seeks death.

Bates. The sure Trial of Uprightness

DIS-VANTA'GEOUS, i. e. Dis-advantageous, (qv.)

——— When Warwick by and by
With his left wing came up, and charg'd so home and round,
That had not his light horse by disvantageous ground
Been hinder'd, he had struck the heart of Edward's host.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 22.

DIS-VE'NTURE, i. e. Disadventure, (qv.)

Don Quixote heard it and said, what noise is that Sancho? I know not, quoth he, I think it be some new thing: for adventures, or rather disventures never begin with a little.

Shelton. Don Quixote, vol. i. b. iii. c. 6.

DIS-VI'SERED. To take off the visor, or mask that covers or protects the visage.

The kynges most noble grace neuer disuisered nor breathed tyll he ranne the flue courses and deliuered his counter partie.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 12.

At the instance of the Frenche quene the king and all his, then disuisered and shewed theyr faces, and al the ladies of England likewise.—Id. Ib.

DIS-UNI'TE, v.
DISU'NITY.
DISU'NION.
DISU'NIFORM.

See CO-UNITE.

To sever or sunder the unity or oneness; to separate, to disjoin, to be or put at variance, at discord.

Disuniform,—wanting uniformity; irregular,

Go on both hand in hand, O Nations, never be disunited, be the praise and the heroick song of all posterity; merit this, but seek only vertue, not to extend your limits.

Milton, Reformation in England, b. ii.

Now this in the nature of it, is nothing but aliud extra aliud, one thing without another, and therefore perfect alterity, disunity, and divisibility.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 829.

It would be a great blessing to his Majesty, if he could offer an expedient to remove that rub, which must prove fatal to Ireland in a short time; and might grow to such a disunion between the two Houses, as might much cloud the happiness of this kingdom.

Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. p. 327.

The beast they then divide and disunite
The ribs and limbs, observant of the rite.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. iii

Though he had at first opposed the treaty between the Pope and Francis, yet afterwards he was not troubled that it took effect; hoping that it would disunite these two kings, whose conjunction had been so troublesome to him.

Burnet. Hist. of Reformation, an. 1533.

——— To them I haste,
Their feuds innumerable to compose,
Who disunited by intestine strife
Long time, from conjugal embrace abstain.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xiv.

The royal preacher in my text, assuming that man is a compound of an organized body and an immaterial soul, places the formality and essence of death in the disunion and final separation of these two constituent parts

Bp. Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 20.

DIS-VOUCH, v. See AVOUCH, and DISAVOW. To disavow, to disaffirm.

Esc. Euery letter he hath writ, hath disroucht'd other.
Ant. In most vnsauen and distracted manner, his actions show much like to madnesse, pray heauen his wisedome be not tainted.—Shakespeare. Meas. for Meas. Act iv, sc. 4.

DIS-USE, v. DIST'SE, n. DISU'SAGE. } To quit, cease or desist from using: not to use; to disaccustom, to diswont.

Now Priam's fate perhaps you may enquire:
Seeing his empire lost, his Troy on fire
And his own palace by the Greeks possest,
Arms long disus'd his trembling limbs invest.
Denham. Virgil Æneis, b. ii.

Disusage of law is some excuse for him who falls into a transgression; but the non-existence of a law, is a justification of the greatest offence.
State Trials Colonel Andrew, an. 1650.

Let us follow her wise directions, and conspire with her kindly motions: let us not stifle, or weaken by disuse, or contrary practice, but by conformable action cherish and confirm the good inclinations of nature.
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 30.

While ev'ry breeze exhales perfumes,
And Bion his mute pipe resumes;
With Bion long disus'd to play,
Salute Melissa's natal day.
Blacklock. On Melissa's Birth-day.

DIS-WARN, v. See AWARE.
To warn from, to caution or admonish not, to dissuade.

My Lord Brook diswarning me (from his Majestie) from coming to Theobalds this day, I was enforced to trouble your lordship with these few lines.
Cabbala. The Lord Keeper to the Duke, Sep. 1622.

DIS-WITTED, v. Stript, divested or deprived of wits.

Which when they heard, there was not one
But hasted after to be gone,
As she had been diswitted.—Drayton. Court of Fairy.

DIS-WONT, v. To disaccustom.

As if my tongue and your eares could not easily be diswonted from our late parliamentary language, you have here in this text liberty, prerogative, the maintenance of both.
Bp. Hall. Remaines, p. 19.

DIS-WORKMANSHIP; i.e. ill, or bad workmanship.

When I would have taken a particular account of the errata, the printer answered me, hee would not publish his own diswork emanship.
Heywood. Apology for Actors. Ep to Okes.

DIS-WORSHIP, v. DISWO'RSHIP, n. } To refuse to worship, to treat as unworthy, to degrade, to disgrace, to expose to shame.

For it is not of worshipping, but dispyting and disworshipping of saintes.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 198.

Suche as seme vngoodly, to them loyne we some comly vesture, with our diligence recompensing that whiche elsewyse semeth vnperfite, knowyng well, that by the vncomlynesse of any parte, the whole body is diswurshipped.
Udal. 1 Corinthians, c. 12.

For it were a great discorship and shame even for them that in their countries there should remaine in bondage any of those by whose meanes they themselves were set free and delivered out of bondage.—Holland. Livius, p. 881.

Of evils, the first and greatest is, that hereby a most absurd and rash imputation is fixed upon God, and his holy laws, of conniving and dispensing with open and common adultery among his chosen people; a thing which the rankest politician would think it a shame and discorship that his laws should countenance.
Milton. Doctrine, &c. of Divorce, b. i. c. 4.

DIT, v. A. S. Dyttan, occludere, obturare, to stop up, to shut in. The verb (says Tooke) is used in its participle, by G. Douglas. (See DOT.) The verb itself is used by H. More.

The riuaris dittit with dede corpis.—Æneid, b. v. p. 155.

Your brains go low, your bellies swell up high,
Foul sluggish fat dits up your dulled eye.
More. Cupid's Conflict, Poems, 1647.

DITA'TION. Lat. Ditare, to enrich.
An enriching.

After all the presents of those easterne worshippers (who intended rather homage, than ditation) the blessed Virgin comes in the forme of poverty with her two doves unto God.
Bp. Hall. Cont. The Purification.

DITCH, v. DITCH, n. DI'TCHER. } The A. S. Diccian, (Lye says) is fossam fodere, i. e. to dig a ditch; Somner,—"To make a trench, a ditch or moat." Dut. Diick. A ditch or dike, that which is digged or dug. In some countries that which is dug out, i. e. the mound or bank formed by digging out is called the ditch or dike: but generally—the cavity left. See DIG, DIGUE, and DIKE.

As he was aboute this ditch, he ne gan not muche wynne
For he fel al amidde, and dreynt hym ther inne.
R. Gloucester, p. 86.

For let a dronken dasse, in a diche falle
Leet hym lyg. Piers Ploughman, p. 227.

They bene dygne as dich-waiere, that dogges in baytheth.
Id. Crede.

——— Swiche a noble theatre as it was,
I dare wel sayn, in all this world ther n'as.
The circuite a mile was aboute,
Walled of stone, and diched all without.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1890.

And first the roses for to kepe
About hem made he a dich depe
Right wonder large, and also brode.—Id. Rom. of the R.

Wherof men made diches depe,
And high walles, for to kepe
The golde, which Auarice encloseth.—Gower. Con. A. b v.

Ye male commonly see that not onely the teachers of the people, and rulers of the churches, but also husbandmenne, and ditchers, and heardmenne, and graffers canne reason of the Holy Trinitie, and of the creation of the world, and of the nature of mankinde, a greate deale more skilfully, than either Plato, or Aristotle was ever hable to do.
Jewell. A Replie to M. Hardinge, p. 544.

This onlie remaineth certaine that the walles made by Adrian and Seuerus were ditched with notable ditches and rampiers made in such wise, that the Scotish aduersarie had much adoo to enter and scale the same in his assaults.
Holinshed. Desc. of Ireland, c. 23.

I, by the East Angles first, who from this heath arose,
The long'st and largest ditch to check their Mercian foes;
Because my depth, and breadth, so strangely doth exceed
Men's low and wretched thoughts, they constantly decreed,
That by the Devil's help, I needs must raised be,
Wherefore the Devil's-ditch they basely named me.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 21.

It seems not suitable to the common, and most impartial judgment of mankind, that one of a noble family and extraction should be put to hedging and ditching, and be forced to support himself with labour of his hands, and the sweat of his brow.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 10.

[The king] marching on Causam side, in order to relieve it, was opposed by a small party of ours; who taking the advantage of some ditches and pales to shelter themselves, repulsed his men, and forced him to retreat to Oxford.
Ludlow Memoirs, vol. i. p. 50.

——— Thy cliffs a ditch-like river laves,
Rude as thy rocks, and muddy as thy waves.
Savage. London and Bristol Delineated.

DITE, i. e. dight, (qv.) to prepare, to make ready, (sc.) to smite. See DITT, infra.

His hideous club aloft he dites.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 8.

DITHEISM. DI'THEIST. DITHEISTICK. DITHEISTICAL. } Gr. Διθεια; δις, two, and θεος, God. The examples explain the word.

Now as for that forementioned ditheism, or opinion of two Gods, a good and an evil one, it is evident that its original sprung from nothing else, but first a firm perswasion of the essential goodness of the Deity, together with a conceit that the evil that is in the world, was altogether inconsistent and unreconcilable with the same, and that therefore for the salving of this phenomenon, it was absolutely necessary, to suppose another animalish principle self-existent, or an evil God.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 213.

Wherefore as these ditheists, as to all that which is good in the world, held a monarchy, or one sole principle and original, so it is plain, that had it not been for this business of evil (which they conceived could not be salved any other way) they would never have asserted any more principles or Gods than one.—Id. Ib.

The chiefest and most eminent assertors of which ditheistick doctrine of two self-existent animalish principles in the universe, a good God and an evil Dæmon, were the Marcionites and the Manicheans, both of which, though they made some slight pretences to Christianity, yet were not by Christians owned for such.—Id. Ib.

We find ditheism and tritheism established in the most early ages, concerning which we have many anecdotes.
Bolingbroke. Human Reason, Ess. 2. s. 7.

If we had been to reason with Pagan ditheists on their own notions, we might have insisted that it is no disgrace to a prince to reign according to the constitution of his country, jointly with another.—Id. Ib

I have spoken somewhere of the ditheistical doctrine. It was very ancient, no doubt, though not so universally professed as Plutarch represents it to have been.
Id. Authority in Matters of Religion, Ess. 4. s. 27.

DITHYRA'MB. DITHYRA'MBICK. } See Vossius. A kind of hymn to Bacchus, who was himself also named Dithyrambus. The etymology is unsettled.

And verily, to Bacchus they do chant in their songs certain dithirambick ditties and tunes, full of passion and change, with motions and agitations to and fro, for according as Æschylus saith,
The dythirambe with clamours dissonant
Sorts well with Bacchus, where he is resiant.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 1134.

For Diagoras Melius himself was once a superstitious religionist, insomuch that being a dithyrambick poet, he began one of his poems with these words, παντα δαιμονια και τυχην παντα τελειται, All things are done by God and fortune.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 80.

He [Plato] had the genius of those dithyrambick poets, who were said proverbially, and with allusion to their extravagant sallies of imagination, never to drink water.
Bolingbroke. Human Reason, Ess. 2. s. 9.

DITT, or DI'TTY, n. DI'TTYING, n. DI'TTIED. } A. S. Dihtan, to dispose, to set in order, to compose, to write, to endite; dihtan æn ærend gewrit; dictare epistolam; to endite a letter. Hence (saith Verstegan) our names of ditties for things that be dighted, or made in meeter, (Somner.) Sw. Dickta; Ger. Dichten, fingere. Dichter, poeta. This northern etymology is rejected by Skinner and Tooke, who adopt the Lat. Dictum, pp. of dicere, to say.
Any thing said or sung.

He made a boke, and let it write
Wherin his life he did all dite.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

Pythagoras himselfe rehersed
In a booke that the gold verses
Is cleped, for the nobilitie,
Of the honorable dite.—Id. Ib.

A doly season til a careful dite
Should correspond, and be equivolent.
Right so it was when I began to write
This tragedy, the weder right feruent.
Id. The Testament of Cresside.

Tragedie is to saine, a ditte of a prosperitie for a time, that endeth in wretchednes.—Id. Boecius, b. ii.

For in the floures of his youth,
In sondrie wise, as he [Chaucer] well couth
Of dites, and of songes glade
The whiche he for my sake made,
The londe fulfilled is ouer all.—Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

In all that route of laciuious poetes, that wrate epistles and ditties of loue, some called in Latine Elegiæ, & some Epigrãmata, is nothing conteyned, but incitation to lechery.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. i. c. 13.

No tree, whose branches did not brauely spring;
No branch, whereon a fine bird did not sit:
No bird, but did her shrill notes sweetly sing;
No song but did containe a louely dit.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 6.

And there is said Alcyon bent to mourne,
Though fit to frame an euerlasting ditte,
Whose gentle spright for Daphne's death doth tourn
Sweet layes of love, to endlesse plaints of pittie.
Id. Colin Clout's come home againe.

Who with his soft pipe, and smooth-ditted song,
Well knows to still the wild winds when they roar,
And hush the waving woods. Milton. Comus.

But you, O Muses! by soft Charnus sitting,
Your dainty songs unto his murmure fitting,
Which bears the under-song unto your cheerful dittying.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. i.

Yet if he steps forth with a Friday look and a lenten face; with a blessed Jesu! and a mournful ditty for the vices of the times: Oh! then he is a saint upon earth; an Ambrose, or an Augustine.—South, vol. vi. Ser. 3.

We soon should see the lawns and groves,
Quite filled with Zephyrs, sighs and doves,
With am'rous ditties, fairy dances,
Such as we read of in romances.
Cawthorn. The Temple of Hymen.

O were my pipe as soft, my ditted song
As smooth as thine, my too, too distant friend,
Shenstone; my soft pipe, and my ditted song
Should hush the hurricane's tremendous roar,
And from each evil guard the ripening cane.
Granger. The Sugar Cane, b. ii.

DI'TTANY. Either Lat. Dictamnus; Gr. Δικταμνος, απο του τικτειν, i. e. parere; because it was supposed, partum accelerare; or dictamus.

because it grows plentifully on Dicta, a mountain of Crete, (Vossius.) It. Dittamo; Sp. Dictamo; Fr. Dictame. See DICTAMNE.

A branch of healing dittany she brought:
Which in the Cretan fields with care she sought:
Rough is the stem, which wooly leafs surround;
The leafs with flow'rs, the flowrs with purple crown'd:
Well known to wounded goats.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. xii.

DIVA'N. A word of extensive use in Arabic, Persian, and Turkish, applied to denote a Collection of Poems, or a Public Office,—in the two former languages; and the Supreme Court of Judicature, or Audience-chamber of the Prime Minister—in the latter.

Forth rush'd in haste the great consulting peers,
Rais'd from thir dark divan, and with like joy
Congratulant approach'd him, who with hand
Silence, and with these words attention won.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

When this conversion was related,
The grey divan at once awarded
His banishment should be abated,
And further vengeance quite discarded.
Cooper. Ver Vert.

DIVA'RICATE. } Lat. Divaricare, to stride
DIVARICA'TION. } or straddle; (dis, and varicare,) which Vossius says, is interpreted by Nonius, distortis cruribus; and by Festus, incurva crura habentes, with distorted, or having bandy, legs; see also Martinius. (See PREVARICATE.) It seems equivalent in its application to,—

To diverge, to distend, to separate, to divide.

He puts me in mind of the incorrigible scold, that though she was ducked over head and ears under water, yet stretched up her hands with her two thumb nails in the knit-cracking posture, or with two fingers divaricated, to call the man still in that language lousy rascal and cuckold.
Marvell. Works, vol. ii. p. 114.

Fourthly, to take away all doubt or any probable divarication, the curse is plainly specified in the text, nor need we dispute it, like the mark of Cain.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 11.

In this, [the taste,] as in the last sense, we have an apparatus abundantly sufficient to the sense; nerves curiously divaricated about the tongue and mouth, to receive the impressions of every gusto.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 5.

I could instance in many actions of brutes that are hardly to be accounted for without reason and argumentation as, that commonly noted of dogs, that running before their masters they will stop at a divarication of the way, till they see which hand their masters will take.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

Just so it is with the divine nature; it is one simple individual perfection in the Godhead himself; but when refracted and divaricated, in passing through the medium of the human mind, it becomes power, justice, mercy; which are all separately and adequately represented to the understanding.—Warburton. Divine Legation of Moses, b. ii. Ap.

DIVE, v. } A. S. Dippan; Dut. Doop-en,
DIVER. } mergere, immergere, to sink, to immerge.

To dip or go beneath the surface; to move or continue in motion, to remain beneath the surface. See DIDAPPER, and DIP.

That on hath connynge, and can swummen and dyven
That oth' is lewede of that labour, and lernede nevere swymme. Piers Ploughman, p. 235.

And it chaûced at the same time a mõster of an exceeding bygnes to appeare as well in the sight of the Tyrians as y^e^ Macedons, which lying vppon his back aboue the water came towards the Mole, and whẽ he had lifted vp him selfe at the head of the Mole, diued vnder the water againe.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 61.

The men saued themselues being in euery canoe four, six, or eight persons all naked & excellent swimmers and diuers.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 817.

Sir, if you will see any fish taken, goe with me. Then hee led me vnto the foresaid bridge, carying in his armes with him certaine diue-doppers or water-fowles, bound vnto a company of poles, and about euery one of their neckes he tied a threed, least they should eat the fish as fast as they tooke them.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. pt. i. p. 59.

Why then (may some diuers in the deep of providence say) doth God ordain no more good men and actions, whereof the raritie is so notorious; since he's so much honour'd by such divine resemblances?
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 4. s. 3.

Divers at the bottom of the sea, can hear the noises made above, only confusedly. But, on the contrary, those above cannot hear the divers below. Of which an experiment was made, that had like to have been fatal: one of the divers blew an horn in his diving-bell, at the bottom of the sea; the sound whereof (in that compressed air) was so very loud and irksome, that it stunned the diver, and made him so giddy, that he had like to have dropped out of his bell, and to have been drowned.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 3. Note.

——— No man knowes
The reason whence, and how, the da knesse grewes;
The reason, how the morne is thus beginne:
The reason, how the man enlightning sunne
Dives vnder earth: the reason how againe
He reares his golden head.—Chapman. Homer. Ody. b. x.

Go! let the diving Negro seek
For gemms hid in some forlorn creek;
We all pearls scorn,
Save what the dewy morn
Congeals upon each little spire of grass.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 402.

Not so bold Arnall; with a weight of skull,
Furious he dives, precipitately dull;
Whirlpools and storms his circling arm invest,
With all the might of gravitation blest.
Pope. The Dunciad, b. ii.

If perseverance gain the diver's prize,
Not everlasting Blackmore this denies:
No noise, no stir, no motion canst thou make,
Th' unconscious stream sleeps o'er thee like a lake.
Id. Ib. b. ii.

He, diver-like from his exalted stand
Behind the steeds pitch'd headlong and expired.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xvi.

DIVEL, v. } Lat. Divellere; (dis, and vellere, DIVULSION. } to tear.)

To tear or rend; to pluck or pull asunder.

At the first littering, their eyes are fastly closed, that is, by coalition or joining together of the eye-lids, and so continue until about the twelfth day; at which time they begin to separate, and may be easily divelled or parted asunder.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 27.

Empedocles holdeth that nature is nothing: only that there is a mixture and divulsion, or separation of elements.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 669.

If you should hold them perpendicular to it, their divulsion would not cease to be difficult, provided it were attempted to be made by suddenly pulling one of the broad surfaces from the other in a level line, and not by making one of the surfaces slide upon the other.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 406.

DIVE'RB. Lat. Diverbium; (dis, and verbum, a word; quia diversi loquantur, Vossius.) The Lat. usages of diverbium, and the Eng. of diverb (only found in Burton) are very different. The Eng. word is applied to—

An antithetical proverb or saying, in which the parts or members are contrasted or opposed.

England is a paradise for women, a hell for horses; Italy a paradise for horses, hell for women, as the diverbe goes.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 597.

Austin l. 4. de Civitat. Dei, c. 9. censures Scævola, saying and acknowledging, expedire civitates religione falli, that it was a fit thing cities should be deceived by religion, according to the diverbe, Si mundus vult decipi, decipiatur, if the world will be gulled let it be gulled.—Id. Ib. p. 645.

DIVE'RGE, v. } Lat. Divergere; di, and DIVE'RGENCE. } vergere, (from vert-ere, Vos-DIVE'RGENCY. } sius,) to turn.

To turn away or apart; (sc. from the same point,) to bear or direct the course separate ways; to separate points.

The rays proceeding from nigh objects do more diverge, and those from distant objects less.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 2. (Note 27.)

As birds and fishes are in divers things conformable, so in some sort they are in their eye; to enable it to correspond to all the convergencies and divergencies of the rays which the variations of each of the mediums may produce.
Id. Ib. (Note 28.)

Ethelred's house the center of six ways,
Diverging each from each, like equal rays,
Himself as bountiful as April rains,
Lord paramount of the surrounding plains,
Would give relief of bed and board to none,
But guests that sought it in th' appointed one.
Cowper. Hope.

This confused appearance of the object doth therefore seem to be the medium, whereby the mind judgeth of distance in those cases, wherein the most approved writers of optics will have it judge by the different divergency, with which the rays flowing from the radiating point fall on the pupil.—Berkeley. A New Theory of Vision.

Thus it is the province of the philosopher, to discover the true direction and divergence of sound propagated by the successive compressions and expansions of air, as the vibrating body advances and recedes.
Sir W. Jones. On the Musical Modes of the Hindus.

These changes in the eye vary its power over the rays of light, in such a manner and degree, as to produce exactly the effect which is wanted, viz. the formation of an image upon the retina, whether the rays come to the eye in a state of divergency, which is the case when the object is near to the eye, or come parallel to one another, which is the case when the object is placed at a distance.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 3.

DIVERS, or } Fr. Divers; It. and Sp.
DIVERSE, v. } Diverso; Lat. Diversus,
DIVERSE, adj. } from divertere, diversum,
DIVERSELY. } to turn away or aside;
DIVERSENESS. } (di, and vertere, to turn.)
DIVERSIFY, v. } To diverse or to divert,
DIVERSIFICATION. } Fr. Diverter; to turn
DIVERSIFIABLE. } away, aside or apart from;
DIVERSION. } to bend or draw away, to DIVERSITY. } withdraw: met., to with-
DIVERSORY. } draw the thoughts, the
DIVERSIVOLENT. } attention, (sc.) from se-
DIVERT, v. } vere study, from painful
DIVERTER. } subjects; and thus, to re-
DIVERTINGLY. } create, to amuse, to cheer,
DIVERTIVE. } to please. And so also is
DIVERTISE, v. } used—to divertise.
DIVERTISEMENT. }

Diverse, adj. turned away, apart or aside, and thus pursuing a different course; different, sundry, several, various, dissimilar, unlike. Wiclif renders—et nihil discrevit,—and nothing diversed, i. e. made no difference or distinction.

To diversify; Fr. Diversifier; Sp. Diversificar; It. and Lat. Diversificare; to be or cause to be different, various, dissimilar, unlike; to variegate: and, as Cotgrave says, "to deck with sundry colours, work in various fashions; interlace or mingle sundry forms together; to change or alter often."

And lette clope that water aftur Auerne
And setthe tuong diuerse tonge me clepede hit Seuerne
R. Gloucester, p. 27

Jewen, Gentiles and Sarrasines. lugen hem selve
That leeliche thei by leyven. and gut here lawe dyversen.
Piers Ploughman, p. 292.

For alle we ben breythrene. thauh we be diverseliche clothede. Id. Ib. p. 246.

And God that knewe hertis bear witnessyng and ghaf to hem the Hooli Goost as also to us, & nothing diversyde bitwixe us and hem, and clensede the hertis of hem bi feith.
Wiclif. Dedis, c. 20.

And dyuerse ther be, but it is al oo spirit: and dyuerse seruyces ther ben, but is it al oo Lord. and dyuerse worchyngis ther ben, but al is oo God that worchith alle thingis in alle thingis.—Id. 1 Corynth. c. 12.

And thei herden these thingis and weren dyuersli turmentid in her hertis, and grennidon with teeth on hym.
Id. Dedis, c. 7.

Whan folk han laughed at this nice cas
Of Absolon and hendy Nicholas,
Diverse folk diversely they saide.
But for the more part they lough and plaide.
Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 3855.

And for there is so great diversite
In English, and in writing of our tong
So pray I to God, than none miswrite the,
Ne the misse metre, for defaut of tong.
Id. Troilus, b. v.

What shall befalle here afterwarde
God wote, for nowe vpon this tide
Men see the worlde on euery side
In sondrie wise so diuersed
That it well nigh stant all reuersed.—Gower. C. A. Prol.

But for there is diuersite
Within himselfe, he may not laste. Id. Ib.

But well assured in his manly hert
List not once aside to diuert
But kept his way. Lidgate. Story of Thebes, pt. ii.

The Gospel is euery where one, though it be preached of diuers, and signifieth glad tydinges, that is to witte, an open preachyng of Christ and the holy testament & gracious promises that God hath made in Christ's bloud, to all that repent and beleue.—Tyndall. Works, p. 127.

A spoyle of diuers coloures for Sisara, a spoyle of diuerse coloures wt brodered workes, dyuerse coloured browdered work for the necke for a praye.—Bible, 1551. Judges, c. 5.

The wordes which the Scripture veeth in the worshipping or honouring of God are these: loue God, cleaue to God, dread, serue, bow, pray, and call on God, beleue and trust in God and such like; which wordes all we vse in the worshipping of man also, how be it diuerely, and the difference thereof doth all the Scripture teach.—Tyndall. Works, p. 269.

Yet lest ether the simple should be discouraged, or the malicious haue any occasion of iust cauillation, seing some translations reade after one sort, and some after another, wheras all may serue to good purpose and edification, we haue in the margent noted that diuersitie of speech or reading.—Geneva Bible, 1561. Epistle to the Reader.

But you, this diuersenesse that blamen most
Change you no more, but stil after one rate
Treate you me well; and kepe you in that state.
Wyat. Of Change of Mynde.

When the earle had searched all the coaste of Fraunce, and had found not one pirate or sea robber, he was aduertised by hys espials that they herying of his armie, were diuerted to the parties of Britayn.—Hall. Hen. IV. an. 9.

He being of his approache, credibly aduertised, by his espials, diuerted from the kynges waies, and toke his iorney toward London.—Id. Hen. VI. an 30.

Then each to other, well affectionate,
Friendship professed with vnfained heart,
The red crosse knight diuerst, but forth rode Britomart.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 3.

It was not an ill conceit of Menedemus the Eretrian, that there was but one virtue which had divers names.
Bp Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 4. s. 3.

Wonder it is to see, in diuerse minds
How diuersely Loue doth his pageants play,
And sheweth his powre in variable kinds.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 3.

Cicero, Plautus, Pausanias, and others have remembered divers sorts of lots, used by the Romans, Grecians, and other nations: as in the division of grounds or honours; and in things to be undertaken the two first kinds were called diercory; the third divinatory; and into one of these three all may be reduced.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. ii. c. 16. s. 2.

O gold! what a God art thou; and O man, what a Devil art thou to be tempted by such a cursed mineral! You deuorsicolend lawyer, mark him.
Webster. The White Devil, Act iii.

But to this inner earth divert we from the deep,
Where those two mighty meres, outstreach'd in length do wander.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 28.

It [angling] was, after tedious study, a rest to the mind, a cheerer to the spirits, a diverter of sadness, a calmer of unquiet thoughts, a moderator of passions, a procurer of contentedness; and begat habits of peace and patience.
Walton. In his Life.

With the history of animals they should be showed anatomy as a divertisement, and made to know the figures and natures of those creatures which are not common among us, disabusing them at the same time of those errours which are universally admitted concerning many.
Cowley. Ess. The School.

Justification there we see is expressed a result of Christ's redemption, and the act of God consequent thereon; so is remission of sins; God by them jointly demonstrating his justice and goodness, so that they may be well conceived the same thing diversly expressed, or having several names according to some divers formalities of respect.
Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 5.

From hence there is a general inclination in men to worship the Deity impressed from the author of nature; but the ways are diverse.
Bates. Christian Religion proved by Reason, c. 1.

Which directions being of necessity no other than general, are and must be left to be diversified in particular, according to every man's own sense of his private and personal wants.
Clarke, vol. ii. Ser. 158.

I could propose divers ways of bringing this to trial, there being several insipid bodies which I have found this way diversifiable.—Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 263.

These last named principles are more numerous, as taking in the posture, order, and situation, the rest, and above all, the almost infinitely diversifiable contextures of all the small parts.—Id. Ib. vol. iv. p. 231.

There will be small reason to deny these to be true colours, which more manifestly than others disclose themselves to be produced by diversifications of the light.
Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 691.

You, for these ends, whole days in council sit;
And the diversions of your youth forget.
Waller. To the King.

But see in all corporeal nature's scene,
What changes, what diversities have been!
Matter not long the same appearance makes,
But shifts her old, and a new figure takes.
Blackmore. Creation, b. v.

Then am I vanquish'd, must I yield, said she,
And must the Trojans reign in Italy!
So fate will have it, and Jove adds his force;
Nor can my pow'r divert their happy course.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. i.

Others have try'd to divert and entertain the troubles of other men by pretty and plausible sayings, such as this, That if evils are long they are but light, if sharp but short, and a hundred such like.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 5.

He confuted it by saying, that it was not meant of boys in age but in manners; not of women in sex, but in feebleness of wit; and then added, diuertingly, that this argument therefore arose of wrong understanding the word.
Strype. Life of Aylmer, c. 14.

For if the subject's of a serious kind,
Her thoughts are manly, and her sense refin'd;
But if divertise, her expressions fit,
Good language, join'd with inoffensive wit.
Pomfret. Strephon's Love for Delia.

But I think we had better carry the gentleman home with us, and because it is already late, sup at home, and divertise the gentleman at cards, till it be ready.
Wycherly. The Gentleman Dancing-Master, Act i. sc. 1.

He [Corneille] avows boldly, that in spite of censure his play was well, and regularly written; which is more than I dare say for mine. Yet it was well receiv'd at court; and was more than once the divertisement of his majesty by his own command.—Dryden. Pref. to the Wild Gallant.

But it must be observed concerning moral inability, in each kind of it, that the word inability is used in a sense very diverse from its original import.
Edwards. On the Freedom of the Will, pt. i. s. 4.

It has been discovered by Sir Isaac Newton, that the distinct and primogenial colours are only seven; but every eye can witness, that from various mixtures in various proportions, infinite diversifications of tints may be produced.
Adventurer, No. 95.

They must act as their equals act; they must like others, dress, keep a table, an equipage, and resort to public diversions: it is necessary, according to their ideas.—Knox, Ess. 5.

Yet here it is answered by the bolder sort of objectors that nobody can say, what is clear in scripture; there are diversities of opinion about the most fundamental points of revelation.—Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 21.

From the antiquary I expect greater thanks; he is more cheaply pleased than a common reader; the one demands to be diverted, at least instructed—the other requires only to be informed.—Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. Pref.

To tell him that he may squander without fear of poverty, gluttonize without danger of distempers, and bring a secret mischief upon others without hazard of its ever coming round upon himself, were no temptation to him for he has no relish to such divertisements, his appetites having been long since set upon what is just, and becoming, and beneficent.—Search. Light of Nature, pt. ii. c. 36.

DIVEST, v. Divestible. By older writers more commonly written Devest, (qv.) Lat. Devestire, (di, and vestire, to clothe.) "Fr. Desvestir; to unclouth; despoyle, depriue, disseize, dispossesse of," (Cotgrave.)
To strip, to denude, to free or deliver from.

Sooner may you divest the creature of any other feeling or affection than that towards society and his likeness.
Shaftesbury. The Moralists, pt. ii. § 4.

And liberty being too high a blessing to be divestible of that nature by circumstances; I (that seldom deplore him, who by loosing his mistress recovers himself) think that Hermione has but intentionally, not eventually disobliged you.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 248.

They thought or pretended to think, that it was highly unjust to divest Cæsar of his government, before the time was completed for which it had been decreed; and of which there now remained about two years unexpired.
Melmoth. Cicero, b. iii. Let. 32, (Note 18.)

DIVIDE, v. Dividable. Dividant, adj. Dividedly. Dividend. Divident. Divider. Dividing, n. Dividual, adj. & n. Dividible, adj. & n. Dividibleness. Divisibility. Dividibly. Division. Divisive. Fr. Diviser; Sp. Dividir; It. Dividere; Lat. Dividere; from di, or dis, and the Hetruscan verb, iduo, (whence idus,) that is, partiri, to part or portion; Becman conjectures iduo, to be εις δυο, into two; and Martinius, that it is from ιδιος, that is, proprius, proper or peculiar to; so that iduare may mean, to put, place or set ιδια or κατ' ιδιαν, that is, seorsim, separately, asunder.
To part or portion, to share, to distribute, to distinguish; to set or put or place, to keep or hold, apart; to separate, to sunder, to sever; to disunite, to cause to be at disunion or discord.

In mareis and in mores, in myres and in wateres
Dom thynges dyeyden.—Piers Ploughman, p. 224.

For thilke thing that simply is one thing without any division, the errour and foly of mankind divideth and departeth it and misleadeth it, and transporteth from very and parfite good, to goods that be false and vnperfite.
Chaucer. Boecius, b. iii.

This aler in periferie three
Divided is of suche degree;
Beneth is one, and one amidde,
To which aboue is the thridde.
And vpon the divisions.
There ben diuers impressions,
Of moyst, and eke of drie also.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

Then sayd God: let there be lyghtes in the firmament of heauen, to deuide the day from the nyghte, yᵗ they may be vnto sygnes, seasons, dayes, and yeares.
Bible, 1551. Genesis, c. 1.

My first question (Reuerend father) is concerning bishops, how they ought to behaue themselues toward their clerks, or of such oblations as the faithfull offer vpon the altar, what portions or diuidents ought to be made thereof.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 105. Gregorie's Answers to Austin.

And he said unto him, man, who made me a judge, or a diuider over you?—Bible. Modern Version, Luke xii. 14.

But the Lorde shall make a division betweene the beastes of the Israelites, and the beastes of yᵉ Egyptians: so that there shal nothing die of all that perteineth to the childrē of Israel.—Bible, 1551. Exodus, c. 9.

Then with his wauing wings displaied wide,
Himselfe vp high he lifted from the ground,
And with strong flight did forcibly diuide
The yielding ayre.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

—— Twin'd brothers in one wombe
Whose procreation, residence, and birth,
Scarce is dividant; touch them with seuerable fortunes,
The greater scorns the latter
Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act iv. sc. 3.

Shall I set there
So deepe a share
(Dear wounds) and only now
In sorrow draw no dividend with you.
Crashaw. Charitas Nimia, or the Dear Bargain.

Hate is of all things the mightiest divider, nay, is division itself.—Milton. Discipline of Divorce, b. ii. c. 21.

Another time when Cæsar had made a law for the dividing of the lands of Campania unto the souldiers, divers of the senate were angry with him for it, and among other, Lucius Gellius (a very old man) said he would never grant it while he lived. Cicero pleasantly answered again, alas, tarry a little, the good old man will not trouble you long.
North. Plutarch, p. 720.

So that a man may say his religion is now no more within himself, but is become a dividual movable, and goes and comes near him, according as that good man frequents the house.—Milton. Of Unlicens'd Printing.

For in as much as that infinite word is not divisible into parts, it could not in part, but must needs be wholly incarnate, and consequently whersoeuer the word is, it hath with it manhood, else should the word be in part or somewhere God only and not man, which is impossible.
Hooker. Ecclesiastical Polity, b. v. § 55.

He could not run division with more art
Upon his quaking instrument, than she,
The nightingale, did with her various notes
Reply to.—Ford. Lover's Melancholy, Act i. sc. 1.

In this discharge of the trust put upon us by God, we would not be looked upon as sowers of sedition, or broachers of national and divisive motions.
Milton. Articles of Peace with the Irish.

While she with cheerful, but impartial grace
(Born for no One, but to delight the race
Of men) like Phœbus, so divides her light,
And warms us, that she stoops not from her height.
Waller. The Countess of Carlisle. Of her Chamber.

The reason of the ancient incorporealists, will evince that the humane soul and mind, cannot possibly be any body whatsoever, though never so fine, thin, and subtle; whose parts are by motion dividable and separable from one another.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 781.

If therefore, God be every where: it cannot possibly be, that he should possibly be so dividedly; because then himself would not be every where, but only a part of him here and a part of him there, throughout the whole world; himself being not one undivided thing.—Id. Ib. p. 783.

It was found by ordinances of the dean formerly made, that married canons should not be bound to be present at the common table in their college of petty canons, but should be permitted to be by themselves, with their families, and to have convenient victuals: and that besides in all dividends and common profits, the same account should be had of the married as of others.
Strype. Life of Abp. Grindal, an. 1561.

The known properties of matter are, that it is not necessary or self-existent, but dependent, finite, (nay, that it fills but a few very small and inconsiderable portions of space,) that it is divisible, passive, unintelligent, and consequently incapable of any active powers.
Clarke. Evidences of Nat. and Rev. Religion, Pref.

The composition of bodies, whether it be of dividibles or indivisibles, is a question which must be rank'd with the indissolvibles.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 5.

I would fain have instanc'd any thing in our notion of spirit more perplexed, or nearer a contradiction, than the very notion of body includes in it, the divisibility in infinitum of any finite extension, involving us, whether we grant or deny it, in consequences impossible to be explicated or made in our apprehensions consistent.
Locke. On Hum. Understanding, b. ii. c. 23.

Do what they can, actual infinite extension every where, equality of all bodies, impossibility of motion, and a world more of the most palpable absurdities, will press the asertors of infinite divisibility.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 5.

Besides body, which is impenetrably and divisibly extended, there is in nature another substance, that is both penetrable of body and indiscerpible, or which doth not consist of parts separable from one another.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 834.

For, first, with its [the mind] subtle divisive power, it will analyse and resolve this concrete phantasmatical whole, and take notice of several distinct intellectual objects in it.
Id. Morality, b. iv. c. 3.

Some of whose fruits I can yet shew you, which were made upon the account of the divisibleness of nitre into fixed and volatile parts.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 376.

The experience of all corrupt ages has abundantly shown, that men's presumptuous reproaching each other upon account of such things as these; has been the great cause of all the schisms and divisions, of all the contentions and animosities, which have overrun and in great measure destroyed the Christian world.—Clarke, vol. i. Ser. 47.

——— Ulysses is no more;
Dead lies the hero in some land unknown,
And thou no sooner shall depart, than these
Will plot to slay thee, and divide thy wealth.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. ii.

That power, by which the several parts of matter, such as stone, wood, or the like, firmly hold together, so as to make them hard and not easily dividable, is certainly no necessary effect of matter, but depends on the mere arbitrary pleasure of God, who exerts every moment an immediate act of his power, in thus binding, and retaining its parts together.
Pearce, vol. i. Ser. 2.

A good deal more than double the whole dividend of the East India company, the nominal masters to the proprietors in these funds.—Burke. On the Nabob of Arcot's Debts.

While through the pores nutritive portions tend,
Their equal aliment dividual share,
And similar to kindred parts adhere.
Brooke. Universal Beauty, b. iv.

To this I answer, that as we must suppose matter to be infinitely divisible, it is very unlikely, that any two, of all these particles, are exactly equal and alike.
Edwards. On the Freedom of the Will, pt. iv. s. 3.

No priestly dogmas, invented on purpose to tame and subdue the rebellious reason of mankind, ever shocked common sense more than the doctrine of the infinite divisibility of extension, with its consequences.
Hume. On Hum. Underst. pt. ii. s. 12.

From a principle of gratitude I adhered to the coalition; my vote was counted in the day of battle; but I was overlooked in the division of the spoil.
Gibbon. Memoirs of his own Life.

DIVI'NE, v. DIVI'NE, n. DIVI'NE, adj. DIVI'NAL. DIVINA'TION. DIVINA'TOR. DIVI'NATORY. DIVI'NATING. DIVI'NELY. DIVI'NEMENT. DIVI'NENESS. DIVI'NER. DIVI'NERESS. DIVI'NIFY. DIVI'NITY. DI'VINIZE. Fr. Deviner; Sp. Divinar; It. Indovinare; Lat. Divinare; Fr. adj. Devin; It. and Sp. Divino; Lat. Divinus, from Divus; Gr. Διος. Godlike. Divinus was sometimes used (says Vossius) as a substantive pro vate, a prophet; because they were supposed to be able to understand and declare the will of the gods (divûm voluntatem) from certain signs or tokens. And hence, to Divine, is—

To foretell, to predict, to presage, to foreknow, to prognosticate; and also, to conjecture or surmise, to guess, to presume, to anticipate.

Adj. Divine,—Godlike, having the powers or attributes of God; superhuman, supernatural; preeminent, supremely excellent; by Milton, divining, presaging.

A Divine is applied in common to a professor of divinity or sacred theology; to one whose duty it is to study and expound the divine will as declared in Holy Writ; a clergyman.

Divine, the verb, is used by Drayton and Spenser, and Ramsay, as, to cause to be divine, to consecrate, to sanctify.

And Dauid the douhty that deuyned how Urye
Mighte slilokeste [most slily] be slayn.
Piers Ploughman, p. 179.

And deleth in deuynyle, as dogges bones.—Id. Crede.

And it was don whanne we gheden to preier, that a damysel that hadde a spirit of dyuynacioun mette us which ghaf greet wynnynge to hir lordes in dyuynyng.
Wiclif. Dedis, c. 16.

The paleis ful of peple up and doun,
Here three, ther ten, holding her questioun,
Devining of these Theban knightes two.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2517.

Now fell it so, that in the towne there
Dwelling a lord of great authorite
A great diuine, that cleped was Calcas
That in that science so expert was, that he Knew wel, that Troy should distroied be
By answere of his God. Id. Troilus, b. i.

Then saied shee, this is (q^d she) the olde question of the purueighaunce of God, and Marcus Tullius, when he deuided the deuinacions, that is to sayne, in his bookes that hee wrote of deuinacions, he mooued greathe this question.
Id. Boecius, b. v.

What say we of hem that beleven on divinales, as by slight or by noise of briddes or of bestes, or by sorte of geomancie, by dreames by chirking of dores, or cracking of houses, by gnawing of rattes, and swiche maner wretchednesse?
Id. The Persones Tale.

He [Sphinx] was ordained on the hill t'abide
To slea all tho, that passeden beside
And specially all, that did faile,
To expoune, his misty deuinale
Lydgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. i.

Els what difference is there betwene the prescience of thilke laje, worthy deuinyng of Tirene deuinour, that saied. All that I say (qd he) either it shall be, or else it shall not be.
Chaucer. Boecius, b. i.

Thou salest not sothe (qd he) thou sorceresse
With all thy selfe ghost of prophecie
Thou weenest been a deuineresse. Id. Troilus.

Thus was the halle full of divining
Long after that the sonne gan up spring.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2523.

Therefore I stent, I am no diuinistre.—Id. Ib. v. 2813.

Ye gaue me ones a diuine responsaile
That I should be the floure of loue in Troye.
Id. The Testament of Creseide.

Sir, I wol fillen so mote I go
My paunch, of good meat and wine
As should a maister of diuine.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

Philosophy is knowing of deuinely and mâly things ioyned with study of good liuing, and this stant in two thyngs, that is cunning and opinion.—Id. Testament of Loue, b. iii.

And right thus were men wont to teek
And in this wise would it preek
The maisters of diuinite
Sometime in Paris the cite.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

To this science been priuee
The clerkes of diuinitee
The whiche vnto the people preche
The feith of holy churche and teche.
Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

Wherupon thei diuined that the mariage of the prince, should euer be a blot in the duke's iye, or mariage of the duke, a mote in the iye of the prince.
Hall. Hen. VI. an. 9.

Name you theim divinacions? nay name theim diabolicall deuices, say you they be prognosticacions? nay they be pestiferous publyshinges.—Id. Hen. IV. an. 3.

Syne all these were mynystris of God in mortall,
And had in theym no power dyuynall.
Fabyan. Prologues.

But finally a woman diuineresse, or contrarie, a soothsayer, that was had in great reputation of hir craftes, made the very declaracion of the saide letters.—Golden Boke, c. 26.

Lo where to commeth thy blandishyng promyse,
Of false astrology and deuinatrice,
Of Goddes secretes makyng thyselfe so wyse.
Sir T. More. Workes. A Ruful Lamentacio.

There is no creature but that it needeth other creatures, and thoughe thei bee of lesse perfection than itself, as philosophers and diuines prouen.—Id. Ib. p. 18.

He fled to his wyse men of the worlde, to his diuiners and charmers.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 5.

He seconde person in diuineesse is,
Who vs assume, and bring vs to the blis.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 207.

Thou hast here, good Christian reader, the paraphrase of Erasmus vpon the Gospell, that is to say, a treasour, and in manier a full library of all good diuinity-bookes.
Udal. Preface to the Reader.

But leaving these divin'd, to Decuman we come
In North Wales who was crown'd with glorious martyrdom.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 24.

You, lady Muse, whom Jove the counsellor
Begot of Memory, Wisdom's treasuress,
To your divining tongue is given a power
Of uttering secrets large and limitless.
Davies. On Dancing.

At length out of the river it [a harp] was reared
And borne above the clouds to be divin'd,
Whilst all the way most heavenly noyse was heard
Of the strings, stirred with the warbling wind.
Spenser. The Ruines of Time.

——— But dazed were his eyne
Through passing brightnes, which did quite confound
His feble sense, and too exceeding shine,
So darke are earthly things compar'd to things divine.
Id. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

Great joy he promis'd to his thoughts, and now
Solace in her return, so long, delay'd,
Yet oft his heart, divine of something ill,
Misgave him. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

The world cries you up to be an excellent divine and philosopher; now is the time for you to make an advantage of both. of the first, by calling to mind, that afflictions are the proportion of the best Theophiles. of the other, by a well weigh'd consideration, that crosses and troubles are entail'd upon mankind, as much as any other inheritance.
Howell, b. ii. Let. 41.

Notwithstanding in the end they agreed between themselves, this controversie should be decided by the flying of birds, which do give a happy divination to things to come
North. Plutarch, p. 19.

Attributing so much to their divinators, ut ipse metus fidem faciat, that fear it selfe and conceipt, cause it to fall out: If he fore-tell sicknesse such a day, that very time they will be sick.—Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 166.

Cicero, Plautus, Pausanias, and others, have remembred divers sorts of lots, used by the Romans, Grecians, and other nations: as in the division of grounds or honours; and in thing to be undertaken: the two first kinds were called diversory; the third divinatory; and unto one of these three all may be reduced.—Raleigh. Hist. World, b ii. c. 16. s 2.

For, beeing as she is divinely wrought,
And of the brood of Angels heau'nly borne,
And with the crew of blessed saints vp brought,
Each of which did her with their gifts adorne.
Spenser. Son. 61.

After that Alexander had left his trust and confidence in the Gods, his mind was so troubled and afraid, that no strange thing happened unto him (how little soever it was) but he took it straight for a sign and prediction from the Gods: so that his tent was always full of priests and soothsayers, that did nothing but sacrifice and purifie, and tend upon divinements.—North. Plutarch, p. 589.

Touching diviners of things to come, which is held a species of witchcraft, we may read they were frequent among the Romans; they had colleges for their augurs, and aruspices.—Howell, b. iii. Let. 23.

There is none of Hercules's followers in learning, I mean, the more industrious and severe enquirers into truth, but will despise those delicacies and affectations, as indeed capable of no divineness.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. i. c. 4.

In the Canticles the Virgin saith, "My beloved is white and red, and chosen of a thousand;" white, for his blessed and divinified soul; red, for his precious flesh embrued with his blood.—Parthenia Sacra, (1633,) p. 204.

——— And turning him aside
The goodly maide (full of divinities,
And gifts of heavenly grace) he by him spide
Her bow and gilden quiver lying him beside.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 5.

Eager to read the rest, Achates came,
And by his side the mad divining dame:
The priestess of the God, Deiphobe her name.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. vi.

Therefore there was plainly wanting a divine revelation, to recover mankind out of their universally degenerated estate, into a state suitable to the original excellency of their nature: which divine revelation, both the necessities of men and their natural notions of God, gave them reasonable ground to expect and hope for.
Clarke. On the Evidences, Introd. § 7.

Some of our most eminent divines have made use of this Platonick notion, so far as it regards the subsistence of our passions after death, with great beauty and strength of reason.—Spectator, No. 90.

Damon, behold yon breaking purple cloud;
Hear'st thou not hymns and songs divinely loud?
There mounts Amyntas.—Dryden. Death of Amyntas.

When we had once look'd into our-selves, and distinguish'd well the nature of our own affections, we should probably be fitter judges of the divineness of a character, and discern better what affections were suitable or unsuitable to a perfect being.
Shaftesbury. A Letter concerning Enthusiasm, s. 5.

But besides this native institution, a foreign and exotic sect of diviners had gradually grown in fashion, the Haruspices of Tuscany; whose skill and province reached to three things, exta, fulgura, and ostenta, entrails of cattle, thunders, and monstrous births.

Bentley. Of Free-Thinking, § 52.

The mad divineress had plainly writ
A time should come but many ages yet
In which sinister destinies ordain,—

Dryden. The Hind & the Panther.

It is a thing very destructive of religion, and the cause of almost all the divisions among Christians, when young persons at their first entring upon the study of divinity, look upon humane and perhaps modern forms of speaking, as the rule of their faith.—Clarke. On the Trinity. Introd.

The grosser pagans contented themselves with divinizing lust, incest, and adultery, but the predestinarian doctors have divinized cruelty, wrath, fury, vengeance, and all the blackest vices

Ramsay. On Nat. and Rev. Religion, pt. II. p. 401.

Here [St. Paul] tells the Corinthians, that he determined not to know any thing among them, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. Whereby he hath certified all men, that in his divinely inspired judgment, this kind of knowledge so far exceeds all other, that none else deserves to be named with it.—Bp. Beveridge, vol. I. Ser. 18.

But not to one in this benighted age
Is that diviner inspiration giv'n,
That burns in Shakespeare's or in Milton's page,
The pomp and prodigality of Heav'n.

Gray. Stanzas to Mr. Bentley.

—— Arrived, they found
The wounded prince by ev'ry chief of note
Attended, and amidst them all, himself
Divinely graceful.—Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. iv

§ 2. What, then, is it that leads us so often to divination? Cowardice; the dread of events. Hence we flatter the diviners. "Pray, sir, shall I inherit my father's estate!"—"Let us see: let us sacrifice upon the occasion."—"Nay, sir, just as fortune pleases." Then, if he says, you shall inherit it, we give him thanks, as if we received the inheritance from him. The consequence of this is, that they play upon us.—Carter. Epictetus, b. II. c. 7.

DIVO'RCE, v. DIVO'RCE, n. DIVO'RCEMENT, DIVO'RCER. DIVO'RCIBLE. DIVO'RCIVE. } Fr. Divorcer; It. Divorziare; Low Lat. Divortiare; Lat. Divertere, diversum, to turn away, aside or apart; because then the wife divertitur a marito, is turned away from the husband.

To turn or put away or apart; to part, to separate, to sunder; particularly applied to the separation of the bonds of matrimony.

The same law yt loyneth by wedlocke without forsaking, the same law yeueth libell of departicion bicause of diuorce, both demed and declared.

Chaucer. The Testament of Loue, b. iii.

For whan they by such dyuorcementes attempte to driue thē againe to the nūnery, they make theyr poor husbandes, advowterers in dede, in takynge other women, their owne wyues beynge alyue.—Hale, Apology, fol. 84.

Why did not time your joined worth divorce,
T' have made your several glories greater far?
Too prodigal was nature thus to do,
To spend in one age what would serve for two.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. I.

So that instead of finding Prelaty an impeacher of schism or faction, the more I search the more I grow into the persuasion to think rather that faction and she, as with a spousal ring, are wedded together, never to be divorc'd.

Milton. The Reason of Church Government, b. I. c. 6.

O! who would not recount the strong divorces
Of that great warre. Spenser. Virgil's Gnat.

So much reverence in him did I find both then, and divers times before, against this divorcement.

State Trials. The Countess of Essex, an. 1613.

—— Patroclus (so enforc't
When he had forc't so much brave life) was from his own divorc't
And thus the great divorcer brav'd

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xvii.

In the ordinary bills of the Jewish divorce, the repudiated wife had full scope given her of a second choice, as the words ran; she was to be free, and have power over her own soul, to go away and to be married to any man whom she would. they were not more liberal than our Romish divorces are niggardly

Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Decad. 4. case 3.

If therefore the mind cannot have that due society by marriage, that it may reasonably and humanly desire, it can be no human society, and so not without reason divorcible: here he falsifies.—Milton. Colasterion.

This therefore may be enough to inform us, that divorcive adultery is not limited by our Saviour to the utmost act, and that to be attested always by eye witness, but may be extended also to divers obvious actions, which either plainly lead to adultery, or give such presumption whereby sensible men may suspect the deed to be already done.

Id. Doctrine of Divorce, b. II. c. 18.

What mighty and invisible Remora is this in Matrimony able to demur, and contemn all the divorcive engines in heaven and earth.—Milton. Doctrine of Divorce, b. I. c. 8.

Thus our Eighth Henry's marriage they defame;
They say the schism of beds began the game,
Divorcing from the Church to wed the dame.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

They urged the permission of Moses, who had allowed them to put away their wives, if they gave them a writing of divorcement.—Sharp, vol. iv. Ser. 12.

Who would have imagined that the desire which Henry VIII. had to be divorced from his wife, would have brought about the Reformation in England?

Priestley. On History, pt. I. Lect. 3.

On the 2d of April, 1800, Lord Auckland, after expatiating very forcibly and eloquently upon the enormous increase of the vice of adultery, and the perversion as well as the abuse of many divorce-bills which had passed the legislature of this country, moved to bring in a bill to prevent any person divorced for adultery from intermarrying with the guilty person.—Horsley. Speech on the Adultery Bill.

The more ancient laws of Rome, which prohibited divorces, are extremely praised by Dionysius Halycarnassæus. Wonderful was the harmony, says the Historian, which this inseparable union of interests produced between married persons; while each of them considered the inevitable necessity by which they were linked together, and abandoned all prospect of any other choice or establishment.

Hume. Ess. Of Polygamy and Divorces.

Among the Romans, more than four ages elapsed, from the foundation of their city, without any complaint or process on account of adultery; and it was not till the year 521, that they saw the first divorce; when, though the cause was specious, the indignation of all Rome pursued the divorcer to the end of his days.

Horne. Works, vol. vi Disc. 8.

DIURE'TICK, adj. DIURE'TICK, n. DIURE'TICAL. } Gr. Διουρητικος, from δια, and ουρον, (for ορον, from ορειν, excitare, impellere,) quod impellitur, vel cum stimulo quodam expellitur, Urina, (Scheidius.)

But he saith withall, that this medicine is nothing good for the dropsie, notwithstanding that it is diuretical.

Holland. Plinie, b. xx. c. 10.

For although inwardly received it may be very diuretick, and expulse the stone in the kidney; yet how it should dissolve or break that in the bladder, will require a further dispute.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. II. c. 5.

And in diureticks a very ingenious anatomist and physician told me, he tried it with good success.

Boyle. Works, vol. II. p. 89.

My having found them in myself very diuretical and aperitive is not that, which chiefly recommends them to me.

Id. Ib. p. 131.

It [candle weed] is said to be diuretic, but this I do not know from experience.—Grainger. Sugar Cane, b. iv. Note.

DIU'RNAL, n. DIU'RNAL, adj. DIU'RNALIST. DIU'RNALLY. } Lat. Diurnus, from Dies, day. Fr. Diurnel; Sp. Diurnal; It. Diurno. Of or pertaining to the day; daily. A diurnal, djurnal, journal, (qv.); a day-book, a daily paper.

And for bicause that it drew to the night
And that the sonne his arke diurnall
Ypassed was. Chaucer. Of the Blacke Knight.

There is an abstruse Astrologer that saith; If it were not, for two things, that are constant, (the one is, That the fixed starres ever stand at like distance, one from another, and never come nearer together, nor go further asunder; the other that the diurnall motion perpetually keepeth time;) no individuall would last one moment.

Bacon. Ess. Of Vicissitude of Things.

Upon my entrance on this day's defence, I found myself aggrieved at the Diurnal, and another pamphlet of the week, wherein they print whatsoever is charged against me, as if it were fully proved, never so much as mentioning what or how I answered.—State Trials.—Abp. Laud, an. 1640.

Let me add hereunto the late experiments of some odiously incestuous marriages, which even (by the relation of our diurnalists) have by this means found a damnable passage.

Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Dec. 4. c. 9.

As we make the enquiries we shall diurnally communicate them to the publick.—Tatler.

Nay some are so studiously changeling in that particular, they esteem an opinion as a diurnal, after a day or two scarce worth keeping.—Boyle. Works, vol. I. p. 35. Life.

—— Tir'd of earth
And this diurnal scene, she springs aloft
Through fields of air; pursues the flying storm;
Rides on the vollied lightning through the heavens;
Or, yok'd with whirlwinds and the northern blast,
Sweeps the long tract of day

Akenside. The Pleasures of Imagination, b. I.

DIUTU'RNAL. DIUTU'RNITY. } Lat. Diuturnus, from diu, i. e. from day, (sc.) to day; for a succession of days, a continuance, a length of time.

The authority wherein we have understood your nobleness to flourish in the British Court, is accounted not onely the reward of your merits, but also the patronage of virtue, certainly an excellent renown and every way so worthy, that the people desire a diuturnity to be annexed unto it

Caballa. The Pope to the D. of Buckingham, an. 1623.

The Pope begins to slack the bridle according to the old rule, that there is no diuturnities in violence.

Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 609

We thought it conducing to the common good of both Republics to send George Downing, a person of eminent quality, and long in our knowledge and esteem for his undoubted fidelity, probity, and diligence, in many and various negociations, dignified with the character of our agent, to reside with your lordships, and chiefly to take care of those things by which the peace between us may be preserv'd entire and diuturnal.—Milton. States of Holland, Dec. 1657.

It is reported—Plato chose it [the Cypress wood] to write his laws in before brass itself, for the diuturnity of the matter.—Evelyn. Silva.

DIVU'LGE, v. DIVU'LGER. DIVU'LGATE. DIVULGA'TION. DIVU'LGING, n. } Fr. Divulguer; It. Divulgare; Sp. Divulgar; Lat. Divulgare, spargere voces in vulgum, (Minshew.) To scatter words among the vulgar: and thus—

To publish; to make publicly or commonly known; to disclose or discover; to make manifest; to declare.

The councel of Fraunce, caused a common fame (although it were not trewe) to be diuulged abrode that there was a finall peace and a perfit amitie concluded betwene the French kynge & hys lordes whiche lately were to hym aduersaries.—Hall. Hen. IV. an. 13.

It were very perilous, to dyuulgate that noble scyence, to commune people, not lerned in lyberall sciences and philosophy.—Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. iv

And that was by pacience and sufferaunce, by which the fayth was dyuulgate and spred almost thorowe the worlde in litel while.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 110.

And when this the prince's [Edward] escape was diuulgated, much people came vnto him out of euerie quarter, with great ioy thereof.—Fox. Mart. p. 306. P. Edward's Escape.

After this deuulgatiō yt Rychard sonne to Kyng Edward was yet liuyng, & had in great honour amongest the Flemminges, there began sedicion to springe on eury side

Hall. Hen. VII. an. 7.

Divert thy course to Goshen then again,
And to diuulge it constantly be bold,
And their glad cares attractively retain,
With what, at Sinai, Abraham's God hath told.

Drayton. Moses, his Birth and Miracles, b. I.

It is true that by confessions we find, that false priest Watson, and arch traitor Percy, to have been the first devisers and divulgers of this scandalous report.

State Trials. Conspirt. of the Gunpowder Plot, an. 1606

The excellency and purity of the doctrine in all other points tend wholly to the honour of God, and the common happiness of man, the sanctified life, constant sufferings, and wonderfull miracles of the divulgers of it.

Hammond. Works, vol. II. pt. I. p. 895.

Bishop of London. There is no such licencious divulging of these books, and none have liberty by authority, to buy them, except such as Dr. Reynolds, who was supposed would confute them.

State Trials. Hampton Court Conference, an. 1604.

There is a time when we must preach Christ on the house top, there is a time, when we must speake him in the eare, and (as it were) with our lips shut. Secrecy hath no lesse use then divulgation.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Lazarus Raised.

But when Ulysses, with fallacious arts
Had made impression on the people's hearts;
And forg'd a treason in my patron's name,
(I speak of things too far divulg'd by fame)
My kinsman fell. Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. II.

Noble Achilles! Would'st thou learn from me
What cause hath mov'd Apollo to this wrath,
The shaft-arm'd king? I shall divulge the cause.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. I.

Descamps says, that this mystery, as it was then held, was stolen from Vaillant by the son of an old man, who scraped the grounds of his plates for him. This might be one of the means of divulging the new art, (mezzotinto.)

Walpole. Anecdotes, vol. v.

Here, then is an opportunity of exposing those secrets, which, perhaps, the confidence of a friend has made known to the treacherous divulger of them, and of gratifying the malice of a coward with safety, and by the infliction of the cruellest injury.—Knox, Ess. 6.

DIVU'LSION. See DIVELL.

DI'ZEN. To dize,—to put tow on a distaff, dress it. Dizen,—to dress. Hence, bedizen'd out,—over, awkwardly or improperly dressed. See Grose, and Ray

Thom. Come quickly, quickly, paint me handsomely,
Take heed my nose be not ingrain too,
Come Doll, Doll, dizen me.
Beaum. & Fletch. Monsieur Thomas, Act iv. sc. 6.

——— Do you hear, master?
I put my clothes off, and I dizen'd him.
Id. The Pilgrim, Act iv. sc. 3.

The bashful Muse will never bear
In such a scene to interfere,
Corinna in the morning dizen'd.
Swift. A beautiful Nymph going to Bed.

His gallants are all faultless, his women divine
And Comedy wonders at being so fine;
Like a Tragedy queen he has dizen'd her out,
Or rather like Tragedy giving a rout.
Goldsmith. Retaliation.

DI'ZZARD, or Dı'SARD. Dı'ZZY. Dı'ZZINESS. } Dut. Duyselen. Sherwood says, to dizze, estourdir; and Cotgrave, estourdir, to astonish, dizze, amaze. Somner has, "Dysigan, ineptire, to be foolish. Dysignesse, dysinesse; stultitia, foolishness. Hence, happily, our dizzinesse; which proceeds from the weaknesse of the braine." The progress was probably quite the reverse. (See DAZE.) A dizzard is one—

Confused, stupified; perplexed by confused variety or multiplicity.

He [Solon] ran abrode in a fole's cote like a dizard (more vecordium) and in great company of men that gathered about him, the more to cloke his pretensed purpose, in rimes and meters to him vnaccustomed, he begá to moue the people to that thing which was vnlawfull.
Goldyng. Justine, fol 41.

Thou hast had so many noble ancestours, what is that to thee? Væ ea nostra ceco, when thou art a dizard thyself
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 313.

Rather to me for to be thoughte
a doulte, and dizzard vyle,
If that my folye might please me,
or seeme good for a whyle:
Then to be wyse, and vexed ay.
Drant. Horace. Epistle to Julius Florus.

But who is that I praye you that will marueil at this, which as well maye be geuē to fooles and dizzardes as to wise and well learned men.—Hall. Hen VII. an. 6.

Wee accuse others of madnesse, of folly, and are the veriest dizards ourselves.
Burton. Democritus to the Reader, p. 41.

For as he thus was busy,
A pain he in his head piece feels
Against a stubbed tree he reels,
And up went poor Hobgoblin's heels:
Alas! his braun was dizzy.—Drayton. The Court of Fairy.

For as we see children run round so long in sport, that they fall down at last, when they would stand; so there are many who playing in the mazes of little faults, bring their minds to such a dizziness, as throws them down when they mean to stand and intermit that amusement.
Montague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 6. s. 2.

A maid she calls, the partner of her cares,
Her friend in peace, her sister in the wars.
Acca; no more;—for mortal is my wound;
A dizzy mist of darkness swims around
Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. xii.

——— Other part
Push'd down the sides of Xanthus, had long plung'd
With dashing sound into his dizzy stream,
And all his banks re-echo'd loud the roar.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xxi.

With palms expanded, on his shoulders broad,
He such a stroke impress'd, and on his spine
As dimm'd his sight with dizziness.—Id. Ib. b. xvi.

DO, v. Do'ER. Do'ING, s. } A verb auxiliary, and a verb absolute, (says Wallis;) as an auxiliary having only the present and preterimperfect, (did for do-ed;) as a verb absolute, having the participles, (doing, do'n,) and then also itself admitting auxiliary verbs.

Mr. Tyrwhitt remarks, that Do is used very rarely by Chaucer as an auxiliary, (v. 1472, 4;) that he more frequently uses it transitively, (v. 10,074, ō;) but still more frequently to save the repetition of a word, (v. 269.) This latter usage has been noticed by Hickes in the A. S., who gives, with other instances, one from Mark, viii. 6. "Et dabat discipulis ut apponerent, et apposuerunt turbæ;" And he gave to his disciples, that they should set before them, and they did so; in A. S. And hig swa didon. Mr. Tyrwhitt also observes, that the exact power which Do, as an auxiliary, has in our language, is not easy to be defined, and still less to be accounted for from analogy. Tooke answers, "that though we cannot account for the use of this verbal sign, (as he emphatically calls it,) from any analogy to other languages, yet there is no caprice in these methods of employing to and do, (the same word, in his opinion) so differently from the practice of other languages: but that they arise from the peculiar method which the English language has taken to arrive at the same necessary end, which other languages attain by distinguishing termination," (i. 359.)

To (i. e. Act,) prefixed to a noun, invests such noun with a verbal character, and was used to distinguish the infinitive from the noun, after the infinitive had lost that distinguishing termination, which it formerly had.

Do, for the same reason, and with the same effect, is prefixed to other parts of the English verb, undistinguished from the noun by termination, and to those parts only. In Chaucer's time the distinguishing terminations of the verb still remained, although not constantly employed; and he availed himself of that situation of the language to use them or not; and thus both To and Do are used by Chaucer more rarely than we use them at present. See Tooke, i. 350, et seq.

To or do is the Goth. substantive tani, or tauhts; i. e. act, effect, result, consummation, which Gothic substantive is itself the past participle tauid or tawids, of the verb tauyan, agere, to do or cause to do, to act. A. S. Don; Ger. Thun; Dut. Doen.

And see the quotations from Chaucer's Troilus, Monkes Tale, (v. 14,159,) Gower, North, and Holland.

Do is used emphatically, with subauditions to be implied from the context; e. g. We shall do without his help, i. e. do what we wish, what we aim at; and so succeed. Thus it may be supplied by various other words, more fully expressing the meaning intended, and principally by the following:—

To act or transact, to cause or occasion, to effect or produce, to perform or execute, to make, to practise, to accomplish, to complete or fulfil, to finish, to bring to an end.

Tho Claudius the emperour to ys ende was y do.
R. Gloucester, p. 67.

Hys poer he let sumny, that yspraд was wel wyde,
And greythede ys noble ost, and dude hum it the weye,
And dude hym so in to see, and vorst to Northweye.
Id. p. 182.

Now goe Turbeville, & serchis day bi day,
To do the kyng a gile, how & whan he may.
R. Brunne, p. 268.

& to that stede he toke his way,
Ther Hengist did the Bretons deie.—Id. p. 189, Pref.

And by the couent he tolde oponly that he com thydur for no other thyng, but only to se the doyng of the solempnite.
Id. p. 201. Prof. An Account of St. Wenefride.

In the castel of Corf. ich shal do the close
Ther as an anere.—Piers Ploukman, p. 45.

It is synne to him that can do good and doith not.
Wiclif. James, c. 4.

Therfore I seye to you, that the kyngdom of God schal be taken fro you, and schal be goven to a folk doynge fruytis of it.—Id. Matthew, c. 21.

But be ye doeris of the word, and not heerers oonli, disceyuynge yousilf.—Id. James, c. 1.

Therfore I biseche first of alle thingis, that biseechingis, prieris, axyngis, doynges of thankyngis be maad for alle men.
Id. 1 Timothy, c. 2.

To him [Luyk] not without desert was gheuen power to write doyngis of apostlis in her ministerie.
Id. Dedis. The Prologe.

——— Haue on him routh
For Godde's loue, and doeth him nat deie.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. iii.

His yonge sone, that three yere was of age,
Unto him said, fader, why do ye wepe?
Whan will the gaoler bringen our potage?
Is ther no morsel bred that ye do kepe,
I am so hungry, that I may not slepe.
Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,744.

The fayrest children of the blood real
Of Israel he out do gelde anon
And maked gelde of hem to ben his thral.
Id. Ib. v. 14,159.

——— And if I do that lakke,
Do stripen me and put me in a sakke,
And in the next river do me drenche:
I am a gentil woman and no wenche.
Id. The Marchantes Tale, v. 10,074

And sometime at our praiere han we leve,
Only the body, and not the soule to greve:
Witnesse on Job, whom that we didden wo.
Id. The Freres Tale, 7073

And in his harping, whan that he hadde songe,
His eyen twinkeled in his hed aright,
As don the sterres in a frosty night.
Id. The Prologue, v. 270.

Great good through hem may come to the
Bicause with her they ben prive
They shall her tell how they the fande
Curteis and wise, and wel doande.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

If any good thing to mennes liking in this Scripture be found, thanketh the maister of grace which that of the good and all other is authour, and principall doer.
Id. The Testament of Love, b. iii.

But your glorie that is so narowe and so strayte thrungen into so litle boundes, how mykell conteineth it in large and in great doynge.—Id. Boecius, b. ii.

Right so behinde his brother's backe
(With false wordes, whiche he spake)
He hath do slayne, and that is routh.
Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

She [Laodomie] hath asked of the wise
Touchend of hym in suche a wise,
That thei haue done hir vnderstonde,
Toward other howe so it stonde,
The destyne it hath so shape,
That he shall not the deth escape,
In case that he arriue at Troie.—Id. Ib. b. iv.

They can also set them [false Goddes] vp aloft, salute them with lyes, perfume them with sensynges, and cause a greate nōbre of people to worshipp the vpo ye earth. Soche mōstruouse doers are they.—Bale. Apology, fol. 141.

For though thou hast the godlye gyft of prophecie with the grace of vnderstandynge and iudgement, yet haue I founde thy workes vngodly, and thy doynges vyle and abominable before God my celestyall father.—Id. Image, pt. i.

Cicero doth not plainlie expresse the last sentence, but doth invent it fitlie for his purpose, to taunt the folie and simplicitie in his adversarie, Actius, not weighing wisely the sutle doynges of Chrysogonus and Stalenus.
Ascham. The Schole-Master, b. ii.

For wherein shall we excell others, if those things which thou hast secretly taught us, be made common to all? I do thee to understand, that I had rather excell others in excellency of knowledge than in greatness of power. Farewell.
North. Plutarch, p. 501.

Being therefore thus arraied and decked accordingly, and doing the mariners to wit beforehand, that he had a wonderfull desire to chant a sonnet or hymn unto Apollo Pythius, for the safety of himselfe, the ship and all those fellow-passengers who were within it, he stood upright on his feet in the poop close to the ship side, and after he had sounded a certain invocation or praiers to the sea Gods, he chanted the canticle beforesaid.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 282.

If he [the king] command to do a man wrong, the command is void, et actor fit author, and the actor becomes the wrong doer.—State Trials. Liberty of the Subject, an. 1628.

By the power or omnipotence of God is meant, an ability of doing all such things, the doing of which may argue perfection, and which do not imply a contradiction, neither in the things themselves, or to the nature and perfection of the doer.—Wilkins. Of Natural Religion, b. i. c. 11.

These were, indeed, works of excessive grandeur and difficulty, but he did others far more great and hard, and these were greater from the manner of performing them, than in their own nature; he did other acts so great, that they were onely to be done by an infinite power; and most of these he performed in a manner which argued omnipotency present with the doer.—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 20.

It is needfull that he should have this power of discerning whatever moveth, or passeth within him; what he thinks upon, whither he inclines, how he judgeth, whence he is affected, wherefore he doth resolve; without this power he could not be a moral agent, nor able to perform any duty, not properly subiect to any law, not liable to render an accompt of his doings.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. Ser. 12.

If you set yourself up as the doer of good works, you endeavour to put the praise from God, who professes himself to be the author of all good, and whom you ought always to glorify.—Gilpin. Works, vol. i. p. 137. Hints for Sermons.

DO'CIBLE.
DO'CIBLENESS.
DO'CILE.
DOCI'LITY.
DO'CTOR.
DO'CTORAL.
DO'CTORALLY.
DO'CTORATE, v.
DO'CTORATE, n.
DO'CTORESS.
DO'CTORING, n.
DO'CTORLIKE.
DO'CTORLY.
DO'CTORSHIP.
DO'CTRICE.
DO'CTRINE.
DO'CTRINAL, n.
DO'CTRINAL, adj.
DO'CTRINALLY.
DO'CUMENT, v.
DO'CUMENT, n.

Docible or Docile; It. Docibile; Sp. Docil; Fr. Docile; Lat. Docibilis, contracted into Docilis, from Doc-ere, which Vossius thinks with Scaliger, is from the Gr. Δοκ-ειν, existimare, putare; Martinius (with more probability) from Δεικ-ειν, to show, to point out; and thus—

A docile person takes, comprehends readily, easily, willingly, what is shown, pointed out or explained to him; and thus, is apt or quick to learn.

Lat. Doctor; Fr. Docteur; It. Dottore, Sp. Doctor; Lat. Doctor, vel quod sit doctus, vel quod doceat, (Minshew.)

A teacher, one who teaches, one who shows, points out or explains, one skilled in teaching; a learned man.

Doctrine; Fr. Doctrina; It. and Sp. Dottrina; Lat. Doctrina;

That which any one teaches; the principles or opinions taught, held or maintained.

Document; Fr. Document; It. and Sp. Documento; Lat. Documentum, quidquid nos aut doctiores reddit, aut certiores, aut prudentiores;

Any thing taught, shown, pointed out or explained, any principle or opinion held or maintained; it is also applied to a writing produced in evidence or as proof; (quod nos certiores reddat.)

——— For doctor he is yknowe
And of Scripture the skylful.—Piers Ploughman, p. 188.

He so doth by goure doctrine, doth wel ich leyve.
Id. p. 159.

And it bifel that aftir the thridde day: thei foundun him in the temple, sittynge in the myddil of the doctouris, herynge hem, and axinge hem.—Wiclif Luk, c 2.

Jhesus answeride to hem, and seide, myn doctryn is not myn, but his that sente me.—Id. Jon. c. 7.

With us ther was doctour of phisike,
In all this world ne was ther non him like
To speke of phisike, and of surgerie.
For he was grounded in astronomie.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 413.

Yet also haue I leaue of the noble husbande Boece, although I be a straunger of connyng to come after his doctrine.—Id. The Testament of Loue, Prol.

Thus louers with their mortal documents
And eloquent language they can exemplifie
The craft of loue what it doth signifie.
Id. Craft of Lovers.

I will saie, that neither all doctours among Christen men, nor all the philosophers amonge the Gentiles were concurrent in one tyme, but after the death of one good, another came better.—Golden Boke. Prologue.

Ye coulde not therwyth be moche offended, wer ye not of a frowarde, croked, and quarrellynge nature for y^e best of your doctours in expownynge the Scriptures, doth so, so wele as I.—Bale. Apology, fol. 50.

Indeede St. Chrysostome, that noble and eloquent doctor, in a sermon, "contra fatum, and the curious serching of nativities," doth wiselie saie, that "ignorance therein, is better than knowledge."—Ascham. The Schole-master, b. ii.

The golden laurell of teaching doctorall, is not from aboue indifferently euery man's gift.
Fox. Mart. an. 1391. Lat. Monitory of the Bp. of Hereford.

This processe were a prety piece, and somewhat also to the purpose, if this pacifyer's doctoring wer a good profe, that the spirituall iudges knew not this tale before
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 915.

After they had read, and well perused the same, the doctourly prelates were no more so often called to the house, neither had they the chere nor countenance when they came, as before they had.—The Life of Tyndall, by Fox.

And thus hast thou (louing reader) the whole action and stage of this doctourlie disputation shewed forth vnto thee, against these three worthy confessors and martyrs of the Lord.
Fox. Martyrs, p 1526. Disp. of M. Latimer at Oxf an. 1554.

Onles the Jewish tongue kepe silence, being both the doctrice and sounneer of carnall obseruaunces, and also an auouncher of mannes righteousnesse, the euangelicall tongue hath no power to speake.—Udal. Luke, c. 1.

Paula, the wife of Senec, informed with the doctrine of her husband, followed also her husband in conditions.
Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 4.

And this is a good doctrine, which admonisheth us to give all praise unto God, and not to ascribe it to our own selves.
Latimer. The third Sermon upon the Lord's Prayer.

Fyrste comedies, whiche they suppose to be à doctrinall of rybaudry, they be vndoubtedly a picture, or as it were a mirrour of man's lyfe: wherin ygell is not taughte, but dyscouered.—Sir T. Elyot. Governor, b. i. c. 13.

And among these sects there are three more famous then the rest the first is of them that professe the doctrine of one Confucius, a notable philosopher.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 97.

Men must be prudent in diuiding and receiuing the prophets documents. Thei must loke whiche parte containeth the lawes, whiche preche the promises & the Gospell.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel. Argument.

All the whiche, besydes the pleasure that maye be taken in readynge of them, be full of teachynges and documentes, to hym that well taste, dygeste and reduce them vnto a moral sense.—Nicolls. Thucidides. Prologue, fol. 7.

This consideration of the humble, docible temper of our church (together with our professed appeal to those first and purest times, to stand or fall, as by those evidences we shall be adjudged) necessarily renders it our infelicity, not our crime, if in judging of Christ's truth, we should be deemed to err.—Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 527.

Add hereunto that the world stands in admiration of the capacity and docibleness of the English, that persons of ordinary breeding, extraction and callings should become statesmen and soldiers, commanders and counsellors, both in the art of war and mysteries of state, and know the use of the compass in so short a tract of time.
Howell, b. v. Let. 47.

Observe the patient service he [the horse] does us at the plough, cart, or under the pack-saddle, his speed upon the high way in matters of importance, his docibleness and desire of glory and praise, and consequently his notable atchievements in war.
More. Antidote against Atheism, b. ii. c. 8.

I might enlarge myself in the commendation of hunting, and of the noble hound especially, as also of the docibleness of dogs in general.—Walton. Angler, pt. i. c. 1.

Be briefe in what thou wouldst command, that so
The docile mind may soone thy precepts know,
And hold them faithfully.
B. Jonson. Horace. The Art of Poetrie.

Other men I am sure do make a wonder at that which the elephant learneth, and is taught, whose docility is exhibited unto us in the theaters, by his sundry sorts of gestures, and changes in dauncing.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 787.

He hath in the last place his chair of ease and state, and here he sets up his rest, here he sits with as much majesty as delight. In cathedrâ, as a seat of authority, sinning doctorally, and magisterially, by his practice defining the lawfulness of these scoffs, even setting up a school of Atheism.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 671.

He [John Dee] was bred (as I believe) in Oxford, and there doctorated, but in what faculty I cannot determine.
Fuller. Worthies. Lancashire.

His conversation (for ought I can learn to the contrary) very unblameable, and the poison of heretical doctrine is never more dangerous, than when served up in clean cups, and washed dishes.—State Trials. Legatt, &c. an. 1612.

When the clergy submitted themselves in the time of Henry VIII. the submission was so made, that if any difference doctrinal, or other fell in the church, the king and the bishops were to be judges of it in the national synod or convocation.—Id. Richard Mountague, an. 1625.

His teaching is not to teach you the doctrinals of salvation and of the Son, for he leaves that to ministers, and to the Bible, to teach you the doctrinals only in a doctrinal way.
Goodwin. Works, vol. iv. pt. i. p. 126.

Doctrinally then: What I shall now add, is in application by way of comfort.—Id. vol. ii. pt. iv. p. 305.

All which [circumstances] and some other, not drawing with them any extraordinary sequel, not affording much matter for civill document, must not preponderate the handling of things more rare and considerable.
Sperd. Hen. II. b. ix. c. 6. § 10.

Soon docile to the secret acts of ill
With smiles I would betray, with temper kill.
Prior Solomon. Power.

To persons of docibility, the real character may be easily taught in a few days.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 446.

Let these [apothecaries] obey, and let the learn'd subscribe;
That men may die, without a double bribe.
Let them, but under their superiors kill;
When doctors first have sign'd the bloody bill.
Dryden. To my Friend Mr. Motteux.

The picture of this Doctor Wall drawn to the life, with his doctoral habit and square cap, hangs at this day in the council chamber belonging to the city of Oxon.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon

He [W. Rainolds] soon after left the university, and whether he went beyond the seas, and was doctorated there I cannot tell.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

Afterwards he [R. Burthogge] was doctorated in physick elsewhere (at Leyden I think.)—Id. Fasti Oxon.

One that had spent his time abroad, between the schools and the camp (for he had been in or past through armies) and had gotten a doctorship.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. p. 199.

In one place of Cartwright's book he spake of Whitgift's "bearing out himself, by the credit of his doctorship and deanery."—Strype. Life of Whitgift, an. 1573.

A preacher's doctrine, and his proof,
Is all his province, and enough:
But is no more concern'd in use
Than shoemakers to wear all shoes.
Butler. Miscellaneous Thoughts.

We are not much degenerated from the purity of Christianity as to doctrinals.—Sharp, vol. ii. Ser. 1.

O Aleiphron, if I durst follow my own judgment, I should be apt to think there are noble beauties in the style of Holy Scripture: in the narrative parts a strain so simple and unaffected: in the devotional and prophetic, so animated and sublime: and in the doctrinal parts such an air of dignity and authority, as seems to speak their original divine.
Berkeley. The Minute Philosopher, Dial. 6.

Muf. I am finely documented by my own daughter.
Dryden. Don Sebastian, Act iv. sc. 1.

Your state doctors do not so much as pretend that any good whatsoever has hitherto been derived from their operations, or that the publick has prospered in any one instance, under their management.
Burke. To a Member of the National Assembly.

An English or Irish doctorate cannot be obtained by a very young man, and it is reasonable to suppose, what is likewise by experience commonly found true, that he who is by age qualified to be a doctor, has in so much time gained learning sufficient not to disgrace the title, or wit sufficient not to desire it.
Johnson. A Journey to the Western Islands

He [the chevalier] was induced to believe, that they would exact far less from him, than we knew they expected: and they were confirmed in an opinion of his docility, which we knew to be void of all foundation.
Bolingbroke. A Letter to Sir Wm. Windham

The Psalmist, speaking of his exemption from haughtiness, compares himself to a young child: and the humble docility of little children is, in the New Testament, represented as a necessary preparative to the reception of the Christian faith.—Beattie. Moral Science, pt. i. c. 2. s. 5.

It is by an evident abuse and perversion of Mr Locke's doctrine, that Dr. Reid pretends that it is favourable to Bishop Berkeley's notion of there being no material world: when in reality our author's own principles are much more favourable to that notion than Mr. Locke's.
Priestley. Remarks on Dr. Reid's Theory, s. 7.

He hath therefore communicated to us a much greater number of doctrinal truths, all fitted to instruct our worship, and inflame our gratitude; but hath reduced our ritual performances to two.—Seeker, vol. i. Ser. 21.

Saint Luke professes not to write as an eye-witness, but to have investigated the original of every account which he delivers; in other words, to have collected them from such documents and testimonies, as he, who had the best opportunities of making inquiries, judged to be authentic.
Paley. Evidences, c. 8.

DOCK, v.
DOCK, n.
DO'CKET, v.
DO'CKET, n.

Skinner thinks, a dock for ships may be from the Dut. Duyken, abscondere, latere, to hide, to be hid; but the Dut. Duyken; Ger. Ducken, is, premere, deprimere, to depress, to sink; and thus applied to,—

A place sunk for the reception, for building or repairing ships, and for other purposes. And see the usages of the verb by Shakespeare.

Dut. Duyken, Ger. Ducken, are also, to droop or drop down, to hang down; and may thus be applied to—

The fleshy part of the tail, which drops or hangs down from the extremity of the back (of a horse) as distinguished from the hair. And thus further (as to head or behead, is, to cut off the head) to dock may be to cut off the dock; and generally—

To cut off, to lop off, to curtail or shorten.

Docket, a briefe in writing, or some small piece of paper or parchment, containing the effect of a large writing, (Minshew,) i. e. a large writing curtailed, shortened.

His here was by his eres round yshorne,
His top was docked like a preest beforne.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 592.

The saide shippe called the Holy Crosse was so shaken in this voyage, and so weakened, that she was layd vp in the docke, and neuer made a voyage after.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol iii. pt. i. p. 98.

I should not see the sandie houre-glasse runne,
But I should thinke of shallows, and of flats,
And see my wealthy Andrew docks [dockt] in sand,
Vailing her high top lower then her ribs
To kiss her buriall.

Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act I. sc. 1.

We know they [bishops] hate to be dockt and clipt.

Milton. Of Reformation in England b .

Thus having dispersed his power all abroad, he [Pompeius] brought all the pyrates' ships that were in a fleet together, within his danger; and when he had taken them, he brought them all into a dock.—North Plutarch, p. 536.

Asses have the said docke or rumpe longer than horses.

Holland. Pinie, b. xi. c. 50.

Here will be officers, presently; bethink you,
Of some course sodainely to scape the dock:
For thither you'll come else

B. Jonson. The Alchymist, Act v sc 5.

Sterne Minos and grimme Radimant
Descend their duskie roomes.
The docke was also clear of ghosts,
Adorn'd to after domes.

Warner. Albion's England, b iii. c. 18.

And for Worcester, there is no proof but the docket-book; now my Lorde, it is well known in court, that the docket doth but signify the king's pleasure for such a bill to be drawn, it never mentions who procured the preferment.

State Trials. Abp. Laud, an. 1640.

For which the said Theodore and Jacob had undertaken, by their agreement with us, to buy in Holland, and to transport from thence hither, at their own charge and adventure, several proportions of arms mentioned in a docquet, then sent inclosed in our said letters.

Clarendon. Civil War, vol ii. p. 426.

"The sea is yours, but mine the land,"
Pallas replies; "by me were plann'd
Those towers, that hospital, those docks,
That fort which crowns those island rocks"

Lyttelton. Mount Edgecombe.

The king's dock-yards at the Caraccas lie near the entrance; and farther down is the trocadero, or magazines and docks for merchant men.—Swinburn. Spain, Let 30.

DOCK. A. S. Docca. Perhaps it has the same origin as the former "Dock." See the quotation from Pliny.

For if thou desire grapes, thou goest not vnto the hasell, ne for to fechen roses, thou seekest not on okes: and if thou shalte haue honie soukles, thou leauest the fruite of the soure docke.—Chaucer. Testament of Love, b. iii.

And thus playe in and out, like, in docke out nette, that no man shoulde wytte whan they were in, and whan they were oute, nor know which were the church.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 809.

But hold my torch, while I describe the entry
To this dire passage. Say, thou stop thy nose:
'Tis but light paines: indeed this dock's no rose.

B. Jonson. The Voyage itself.

The greatest and largest of all others is the root of the herb patience or garden docke, which is knowne to run downe in the ground three cubits deepe.

Holland. Plinie, b. xix. c. 6.

Yet, now approach'd the bough the huntress tore,
He suckt it with his mouth, and kist it o're
A hundred times, and softly gan it binde
With dock-leaves, and a slip of willow rinde.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 2.

DODDER. } Dodder, Minshew says, is a
DODDERED. } weed winding about herbes, from Ger. Dotteren, to tremble; because with the least blast of wind it is easily shaken, and doth dodder or tremble. To the same purport is Skinner.

To dodder (or, as pronounced in some countics, didder or dither) is to totter or tremble; to shake.

Your country friends were told another tale;
That from the sloaping mountain to the vale,
And dodder'd oak, and all the banks along,
Menalcas sav'd his fortune with a song.

Dryden. Virgil, Past. 9.

Another shakes the bed; dissolving there,
Till knots upon his gouty joints appear,
And chalk is in his crippled fingers found;
Rots like a doddard oke, and piecemeal falls to ground.

Id. Persius, Sat. 5.

Rock'd by the blast, and cabbin'd in the storm,
The sailor hugs thee to the doddering mast,
Of shipwreck negligent, while thou art kind.

Thompson. Sickness, b. iv.

DODGE. Skinner thinks from dog; i. e. to run about—this way and that—like a dog catching after the scent.

To move quickly from place to place; to show signs of, or pretend to be, going one way and to go another; of doing one thing and to do another. And see to Doo.

And upon the king's answer to them, they sent commissioners to treat with him, at Newport in the Isle of Wight, where they so long dodged with him about trifles, that Cromwell was come to London, before they had done, to the king's destruction.—Hobbs. Behemoth.

It follows undeniably that the king from that time was by them in fact absolutely depos'd, and they no longer in reality to be thought his subjects, notwithstanding their fine clause in the covenant to preserve his person, crown, and dignity, set there by some dodging casuist with more craft than sincerity, to mitigate the matter in case of ill success.—Milton. Tenure of Kings and Magistrates.

So partridges, before their young can fly, will drop frequently down, first at lesser, and then at greater distances to dodge and draw off dogs from pursuing their young.

Derham. Physico Theology, b. iv. c. 9. Note 68.

For chance or change of peace or pain;
For fortune's favour or her frown,
For lack or glut, for loss or gain,
I never dodge, nor up nor down.

Byrom. Careless Content.

DO'DIPOLE, or } Dodo in English and
DO'TIPOLE. } French; perhaps from dote, (qv.) and pole, the head.

And what shall I do then in the mean time? First I will contemne these dastardly dotipoles and vnlearned papists and apostles of Antichrist.

Fox. Martyrs, p. 1170. Ans. of M. Luther to the Pope's Bull.

Then answered the Pharisees, Num et vos seducti estis: what ye brain sicke fooles, ye holdy peakes, ye doddy poules, doe ye beleeve him? are ye seduced also?

Latimer. Third Sermon before K. Edward.

But some will say, our curate is naught, an asse-head, a dodspoll, a lack-latine, and can do nothing: shall I pay him my tythes, that doth us no good nor none will do.—Id. Ib.

Why then was it left so? and here, without staying for my reply, shall I be called as many blockheads, numsculls, doddy-poles, dunderheads.

Sterne. Tristram Shandy, vol. ix. c. 25.

DO'DKIN. A little doit, (qv.)

Thence he brought him to an oil cellar, and where they sold olives: here you shall have (quoth he) a measure called Chœnix, for two brazen dodkins (a good market beleeve me.)—Holland. Plutarch, p. 126.

DOE. A. S. Da; D. Deyn; Fr. Daim, dain; It. Damma, daino; Lat. Dama; which Vossius thinks may be so called for its timidity or fearfulness, from the Gr. Δειμα, fear.

There might men does and roes ysee
And of squirels ful great plentie.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

She sighe the swete floures sprynge,
She herde glad foules synge,
She sigh beastes in her kynde,
The bucke, the doo, the hert, the hynde.

Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

In this country of Nova Hispania there are many buckes and does, but they haue not so long hornes as they haue here in England.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 469.

Thy Gascoigne doth send thee wine; bucke and doe are plentifull in thy forrests.—Camden. Remaines. Britain.

If we can suppose any infants to have been fortunately nourished by the wolf, the goat, the bear, the doe, strangers to all the language of men, it will not be very difficult to account for the use of language among their posterity.

Sharpe. Origin, &c. of Languages.

DOFF. To do off; put away, lay aside; put off.

Which Calidore perceyuing, thought it best
To change the manner of his lofty looke;
And doffing his bright arms, himselfe addrest
In shepheard's weed.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 9.

Where leisurely doffing a hat worth a tester,
He bade me most heartily welcome to Chester.

Cotton. A Voyage to Ireland in burlesque, c. 2.

He [Vitellius] made suit unto Messalina, as if it had beene for the greatest gift shee could bestow upon him, to doe him the grace that he might have the D'offing of her shoes.

Holland. Suetonius, p. 231.

He has doffed off the name of a country fellow, but the looke not so easy.—Earle. Micro-Cosmography.

Now mine I quickly doff, of Inkle blue.

Gay. The Shepherd's Week, Past. 4.

DOG, v. } Ger. Docke; canis Molossus.
Dog, n. } Eng. Dog; Dut. Dogghe; Fr.
Do'GGED. } Dogue. Although the word
Do'GGEDLY. } in English is applied to every
Do'GGEDNESS. } species, yet in the other dia-
Do'GGEREL. } lects it is the large hunting
Do'GGISH. } dog; Canis grandis et venaticus, and perhaps so called from Tacken, capere, to take, to catch. (Wachter.)

To dog or to dodge, (qv.) to follow about as a dog does, to pursue, or hunt like a hound: so as to find out and follow wherever we go.

A dog-iron is so called, Minshew says, because it was made in the form of a dog.

Dogged, the adj. applied to those, who have the ill-tempers or dispositions of dogs or curs; currish, snarling, morose, sullen, obstinate.

Doggerel, Mr. Tyrwhitt says, derived I suppose from dog; so that Rime-doggerel may be Rime de chien. See the second quotation from Chaucer.

Rhime, without harmony; noisy, harsh: consequentially, worthless.

Me thinketh litel harm thei [though] yt hadde i be [been] a dogge.—R. Gloucester, p. 69.

Thyn berkeres ben al blynde that bryngeth forth thy lambren
Disp-gntur oves. thi dogge dar not berrke.

Piers Ploughman, p. 160.

And she was clad full poorely
All in an olde torne courtpy,
As she were all with dogges torne,
And bothe behinde and eke before,
Clouted was she beggerly.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

Now swiche a rime the devil I beteche;
This may wel be rime doggerel, quod he.

Id. Prologue to Melibeus, v. 13,653.

But being once inflamde with ire and raging wrath,
A cruell canckred dogged hart the urchin hath.

Turbervile. Of Ladie Venus.

Truly if you should haue written against the doggedest Papist, or the pestilentest heretike that euer was you could not haue inuented, howe in more spitefull maner to deface him: but how truly, it resteth in ye tryall.

Whitgift. Defence, p. 16.

And for I finde, that fault hath runne so fast,
Both in thy flesh, and fancie too sometime,
Me thinks plaine dealing biddeth me to cast
This bone at first amid my doggrell rime.

Gascoigne. Councell geuen to Master Bartholomew Withipoll.

Ye haue auecked muche of the diuinite doggerell of that dronken papist Johã Eckius in thys mattir.

Bale. Apology, fol. 93.

Demetrius, was of that secte, that for as moche as they abandoned all shamefastenes in theyr wordes and actes, they were called Cinici, in Englishe doggyshe.

Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. i. c. 20.

Of if we will be so vnordinate, and (with reuerence be it spoken, without offence to God or man) so doggish and currish, one to another, the Lord lacketh not his dog strikers to whip vs.

Fox. Martyrs, p. 17. To Christian Protestants, &c.

I sat all day in my observing place,
Till about twilight I saw him and 's man
Steal as it were abroad; I as warily
Dogg'd them from street to street, till, sir, at length
He made a stand up close against a wall.

Digby. Elvira, Act v.

Shall I go whine, walk pale, and look my wife
For nothing, from her birth's free liberty,
That open'd mine to me? yes! if I do
The name of cuckold then dog me with scorn.

Massinger. The False Dowry, Act iii. sc. 1.

The iron dogge bear the burthen of the fuel, while the brazen-andirons stand only for state, to entertain the eyes.

Fuller. General Worthies of England, c. 9.

The silly hare doth cast aside her fear,
And forms herself fast by the ugly bear,
At whom the watchful dog did never bark
When he espied him clamb'ring up the ark.

Drayton. Noah's Flood.

Whereat the souldiours on all hands set up a great cry, that it was an intollerable shame that the Phocæans (who were never true and loyall confederates, but alwayes dogged and malicious enemies) should goe away so scotfree, and not suffer for their sinnes.—Holland. Livie, p. 963.

But thou most griev'st him (dogged dame) whom he rebukes in time,
Lest silence should pervert thy will, and pride too highly clime
In thy bold bosome.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. ix.

My lord is lusty and merry, and drinketh with his men, and all the content he gives me, is to abuse me, and use me as doggedly as before.

State Trials. The Murderers of Sir T. Overbury, an. 1615.

This remember I pray you between you and I, I entertain'd you ever as a dog, not as a devil.

Dog. True; and so I us'd thee doggedly, not devilishly.

Ford. The Witch of Edmonton, Act v. sc. 1.

Arf Now ye are friendly,
Your doggedness and niggardize slung from ye.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Spanish Curate, Act iv. sc 7.

When God makes the clouds to gather round about us, we wrap our heads in the clouds, and like the male contents in Gaiba's time, we seem sad and troubled, but it is doggedness and murmur.—Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. ser. 8.

Why the Devil do you ask my judgment?

Pala. You are so dogged now, you think no man's mistress handsome but your own.

Dryden. Marriage A la-Mode, Act ii. sc. 1.

The tempter in this action behaves himself just as you shall see some eager ill bred petitioners, who do not so properly supplicate as hunt the person whom they address to, dogging him from place to place, till they even extort an answer to their rude requests.—South, vol. vi. Ser. 7.

To be, contents his natural desire,
He asks no Angel's wing, no Seraph's fire;
But thinks admitted to that equal sky,
His faithful dog shall bear him company.

Pope. Essay on Man, Ep. 1.

But as true wit is nothing else but a similitude in ideas, so is false wit the similitude in words, whether it lies in the likeness of letters only, as in anagram and acrostic, or of syllables, as in doggrel rhymes, or whole words, as puns, echoes, and the like.—Addison. Notes on Ovid, Fable 5.

When terms begin and end could tell,
With their returns, in doggerel.—Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3.

To whom, Eumæus, thou didst thus reply:
He is the dog of one far hence deceas'd
But had he now such body, plight and strength,
As when his lord, departing to the shores
Of Ilium, left him, thou shouldst view, at once
With wonder, his agility and force.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xvii.

DOGE. } See the quotation from Gib-
DOGE-LESS. } bon.

The first foundations of Venice were laid in the Island of Rialto, and the annual election of the twelve tribunes was superseded by the permanent election of a duke or doge.

Gibbon. Roman Empire, c. 60.

But unto us she hath a spell beyond
Her name in story, and her long array
Of mighty shadows, whose dim forms despond
Above the dogeless city's vanish'd sway.

Byron. Childe Harolde, c. 4.

DO'GMA.
DOGMA'TICK, adj.
DOGMA'TICK, s.
DOGMA'TICAL.
DOGMA'TICALLY.
DOGMA'TICALNESS.
DO'GMATISM.
DO'GMATIST.
DOGMATI'ZE.
DOGMATI'ZING, s.
DOGMATI'ZER.

Gr. Δογμα, from δοκειν, videre, to see, to perceive; quod videtur, placitum, decretum, sententia, (Martinius.) Dogmatism is opposed to scepticism; and applied to—

An opinion or doctrine said or assumed to be clearly seen or discerned; and, therefore, positively affirmed, authoritatively asserted; any positive or authoritative affirmation or assertion.

Moreover Diodorus Siculus affirms, the Chaldeans likewise to have asserted this dogma of the world's eternity: The Chaldeans affirm, the nature of the world to be, that it was neither generated from the beginning, nor will ever admit corruption.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 251.

I shall therefore not deprave it by mingling it with the opinions of modern theologers, or distort any thing to make it accommodate to their dogmata.

Glanvill. Pre-existence of Souls, c. 12.

From sundry other places of his writings, it sufficiently appears, that he [Cicero] was a dogmatick and hearty theist.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 434.

The fault lieth altogether in the dogmaties, that is to say, those that are imperfectly learned, and with passion press to have their opinions pass every where for truth, without any evident demonstration either from experience, or from some places of Scripture of uncontroverted interpretation.

Hobbs. Human Nature, c. 13.

And though when they speak in the general of the weakness of our understandings, and the scantness of our knowledge, their discourse may even justifie scepticism it self; yet in their particular opinions are as assertive and dogmatical as if they were omniscient.

Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 2.

We would not be supposed ourselves dogmatically to assert any more in this point, than what all incorporealists agree in, that there is a substance specifically distinct from body.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, Pref.

I expect but little success of all this upon the dogmatist, his opinion'd assurance is paramount to argument, and 'tis almost as easy to reason him out of a feaver, as out of this disease of the mind.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 23.

For the history of generations hath five subordinate parts; The first is of celestiall bodies which comprehends the phænomena sincere, and not dogmatiz'd into any peremptory assertions.—Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. ii. c. 3.

But I'le not move beyond ourselves, and the most ordinary and trivial phænomena in nature, in which we shall finde enough to shame confidence, and unplume dogmatizing.

Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 2.

But if he cannot produce any such Scripture; then is my censor the guilty person, the very dogmatizer, that teacheth for doctrines or commandments of God, his own dictates

Hammond. Works, vol. ii. pt. iv. p. 129.

The dogmata and tenets of the Sadducees, opposite to the doctrine of the ancient church of the Jews, held by the Pharisees, are very briefly, yet fully enough, expressed by St. Luke, Acts, xxiii 8. For the Sadducees say there is no resurrection, neither Angel nor Spirit; but the Pharisees confess both.—Bp. Bull. Works, vol. i. Ser. 2.

Dogmatick jargon learnt by heart,
Trite sentences, hard terms of art,
To vulgar ears seemed so profound,
They fancy'd learning in the sound.—Gay, pt. ii. Fab 14.

Only I declare before hand, that I mean not in what I shall say, to assert any thing dogmatically, but only to propose in order to farther examination.

Sharp, vol. ii. Disc. on a Doubting Conscience.

He who is certain, or presumes to say he knows, is in that particular, whether he be mistaken or in the right, a dogmatist.—Shaftesbury. Miscell. Reflections, Misc. 2. c. 2.

Be that my task (replies a gloomy clerk,)
Sworn foe to mystery, yet divinely dark;
Whose pious hope aspires to see the day
When moral evidence shall quite decay,
And damns implicit faith and holy lies,
Prompt to impose, and fond to dogmatize.

Pope. The Dunciad, b. iv.

Most certainly I shou'd appeal, said I (continuing the same zeal which Theocles had stirred in me against those dogmatizers on pleasure.)—Shaftesbury. Moralist, pt. ii. s. 1.

Accordingly, in his Nicomachian Ethics, he expresses himself without any ceremony, and in the most dogmatic way, against a future state of rewards and punishments.

Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. iii. s. 3.

Till he produces such an adjective as Bale, which he cannot do from Shakespear, or any good author; he will not with all his dogmatical assertions convince us that Shakespear wrote so; the adjective is baleful.

Canons of Criticism, c. 7. Ex. 8.

The principal heads were,
1. The right state and disposition of mind to make proper improvements—in this were to be considered the natures of scepticism, dogmaticalness, enthusiasm, superstition, &c.

Hurd. Life of Warburton.

By the common sense of readers uncorrupted with literary prejudices, after all the refinements of subtilty and the dogmatism of learning, must be finally decided all claim to poetical honours.—Johnson. Life of Gray.

So have I seen a testy and stubborn dogmatist, when all his arguments were answered, and all his invention exhausted, comfort himself at last with simply repeating his former positions at the end of each new remonstrance from the adversary.—Beattie. Truth. Postsc.

He painted from the lectures of Petronius and Aretine, had the confidence to dogmatize on the same subjects, and practised at least what he preached.

Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. ii. c. 3.

DOIT. Fr. Doigt; Lat. Digitus. So much (brass) as can be covered by the tip of the finger. Doijt, Skinner adds, is manifestly corrupted from digitus. See DIOIT.

Morel. You will give me my gold again?
1st.Guard. Not a doit, as I am virtuous and sinful.

Shirley. The Bird in a Cage.

Say. I thank your bounty, and I'le do it to a doyt, sir.

Beaum. & Fletch. Begger's Bush, Act iii. sc. 3.

DOLE, v. } Goth. Dailyan; A. S. Dæl-an;
DOLE, s. } Dut. Deyl-en; Ger. Theil-en, to divide, to distribute, to impart, to deale. Hence, Somner adds, to this day we call the distribution of almes at a funerall, a dole. The stones also which are used in boundaries, to divide land from land, are hence also termed, dowle-stones. See DOULE. See also Tooke, ii. 256.

Happy man be his dole, i. e. "Let his portion be that of a happy man. Let happiness, good luck, good fortune be the part or portion of him, of each, of every or any one speaking, or spoken of."

To dole,—to divide, to distribute, to part, to portion, or apportion: to part with—(as if unwilling.)

And for thou true to loue shalt be
I will, and commaund thee,
That in one place thou set all whole
Thine harte, without hallen dole
For treacherie and sickernesse.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R

Accursed be he (sayth Almighty God by Moses) who removeth his neighbour's doles or markes.

Homilies. An Exhortation for Rogation Weeke.

Nor did'st thou feel their drought, their pangs, their qualms,
Their rack in writing, who do write for alms,
Whose wretched genius, and dependent fires,
But to their benefactor's dole aspires.

Cartwright. On the Dramatic Poems of Fletcher.

The fishmongers were forced to hacke it in gobbets, and so to carrie it in peecemeale throughout the countrie, making thereof a generall dole.

Holinshed. Description of Ireland, c. 4

——— I have seen him
Curry a fellow's carkasse handsomely
And in the head of a troop, stand as if he had been rooted,
Dealing large doles of death.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Island Princess, Act iv. sc. 1

Pris. A good resolution, profecto, let every man beg his own way, and happy man be his dole.

Id. Wit at several Weapons, Act i. sc. 1.

What if his eye-sight (for to Israel's God
Nothing is hard) by miracle restor'd,
He now be dealing dole among his foes,
And over heaps of slaughter'd walk his way?

Milton. Samson Agonistes

——— I know, yo' were one, could keepe
The buttry-hatch still lock'd, and save the chippings,
Sell the dole beere to aqua-vitæ-men.

B. Jonson. The Alchymist, Act i. sc. 1

Clients of old were feasted; now a poor
Divided dole is dealt at the outward door;
Which by the hungry rout is soon dispatch'd

Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 1

——— Think, oh, grateful think!
How good the God of harvest is to you,
Who pours abundance o'er your flowing fields;
While these unhappy partners of your kind
Wide-hover round you like the fowls of heaven,
And ask their humble dole. Thomson. Autumn.

It is with reason you apprehend, that those public invitations which extend to an immoderate number of people, and where the dole is distributed, not singly to a few acquaintance, but as it were to whole collective fraternities, may be turned to the factious purposes of ambition.

Melmoth. Pliny, b. x. Let. 113.

DOLE, s.
DO'LEFUL.
DO'LEFULLY.
DO'LEFULNESS.
DO'LENT.
DO'LESOME.
DO'LESOMENESS.
DO'LEANCE.
DO'LOUR, s.
DO'LOROUS.
DOLO'ROUSNESS.
DOLORI'FEROUS.
DOLORI'FICK.

Fr. Deuil; It. Duolo, doglia; Sp. Duelo; Lat. Dolor, from Dol-ere, to be in pain; perhaps from Dol-are, to cut. Vossius thinks it may be Hebrew.

Perhaps from A. S. Tholian, to thole, (qv.) pati, tolerare, sustinere: to bear, to suffer.

Pain, pain of mind, grief, sorrow; suffering, affliction.

Nicolls, who translated from the French, uses doleance as the Fr. Doléance; a wailing, moaning, complaining.

Dolour:—Lat. Dolor; Fr. Doleur—

Grief, sorrow, anguish; sadness, heaviness of heart.

The deol that made Innogen, no tonge ne telle ne may.

R. Gloucester, p 13.

The kyng hyre drof awey myd chylde as heo was,
And nom hym another wyf, that was a deiuol cas

Id. p. 237

Tho he com vp the hul an hey, he hurde atte bygynnyg
Of a womman a deolsul cry, and a pytos wepynge.

Id. p. 204.

Whan R. herd say that James was slayn,
He wend for dole to dey, he com as a wode man.

R. Brunne, p. 190

That ge wille tak to herte, the grete noyse & crie
Pro Acres that comes so amerte, lorn is so deelfullie.

Id. p. 144.

——— God sent to Saul. by Samuel the prophete
That Agag of Amalek. and all hus lyge puple
Sholde deye deilfulliche. for dedes of here eldren.

Piers Ploukman, p. 89.

Ful much dole and mone I made,
Who had wist what wo I had
I trow he would haue had pite.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

——— Amphiorax they carry
Set in his chaire with a doleful hert.
Lidgate The Story of Thebes, pt. iii.

Thus may I sene and plaine, alas
My woful houre, and my disauenture
That dolefully stond in the same cass.
Chaucer. The Floure of Curtesie.

I see right well now in my paines smert,
There is no wound of so greuous dolour,
As is the wound of my careful herte
Id. The Lamentation of Marie Magdeleine.

And laieth a plaister dolorous
Unto her herte. Id. Rom. of the Rose.

Cinders, thinkest thou, mind this? or graued ghostes?
Time of thy doole, thy spouse new dead, I graunt,
None might thee moue.—Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

Cosmana was my God, Cosmana was my ioy,
Ay me, Cosmana turnde my mirth to dole and dark anoy:
Reuenge it Radamanth, if I be found to lie,
Or if I slaunder hir at all, condemn me then to die.
Gascoigne. Weedes. Complaint of the Green Knight.

And many other articles, conteigninge doleance against the sayed Lacedomonians for that they had not kept and obsarued the sayd treatie.—Nicolls. Thucidides, fol. 138.

The life is long, that lothsomely doth last,
The dolefull dayes draw slowly to their date;
The present pangs and painfull plagues forepast
Yelde griefe aye grene to stablish this estate.
Vncertaine Auctors. Comparison of Life & Death.

Which moved not only Kalodulus and Kalander to roaring lamentations, but all the assembly dolefully to record that pitiful spectacle.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. v.

The musick wrought, indeed, a dolefullness, but it was a dolefulness to be in his power.—Id. Ib. b. iii.

The Lorde Perrets and other capitaines muche were dolent of this chaunce, and some saied he did it without counsaill, and so he hath spede.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 5.

This thing I have observed, dere friends, long and many a day, not without great sorrow and dolour of mind.
Strype. Mem. Treat. on the Sup. of the Bps. of Rome, 1558.

I neuer saw the rising mane but with my weeping eyen,
Nor yet I neuer heard so swete a voice or sound,
But that to me it did increase the dolour of my wound.
Vncertaine Auctors. The Picture of a Louer.

To my mishap, alas I finde
That happy hap is dangerous,
And fortune worketh but her kind
To make the ioyful dolorus.
Id. When Aduersitie is once fallen it is too late to beware.

Certeinly it accordeth vnto good reason, that the soule depart dolorously, leuying the fleshe vnto wourmes.
Golden Boke, c. 43.

There lay also two young virgins in their grandmother's lap, euen then mariable, which languished & lamented not so much through their own private sorow, as for the dolorousnesse of the old woman.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 41.

And but your goodnesse the same recure,
Am like for desperate dole to die
Through felonous force of mine enemie.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calendar. February.

Now twenty dayes (by which the sonnes of men
Diuide their works) haue past through heauen sheene,
Since I was brought into this doleful den.
Id. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 7.

How dolefully his dole thou didst rehearse.
Id. Shepheard's Calendar.

Dal. The king is angry.
Craw. And the passionate duke
Effeminately dolent.—Ford. Perkin Warbeck, Act iii. sc. 4.

We carry heaven and earth wrap'd up in our bosome; each part returnes homeward: and if the exceeding glory of heaven cannot countervaile the dolesomnesse of the grave, what doe I beleeving?—Bp. Hall. Meditation of Death.

Whether or not wine may be granted, in such dolorifcrous affects in the joints.
Whitaker. Love of the Grape, p. 74.

There she long groueling, and deep groning lay,
As if her vitall powers were at strife
With stronger death, and feared their decay;
Such were this ladies pangs and dolorous assay.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 4.

And if we consider what followed, it might seem also to be a design to heighten the dolorousnesse of his person; for to descend from the greatest of worldly honours, from the adoration of a God, and the acclamations to a king, to the death of a slave, and the torments of a crosse, and the dishonours of a condemned criminal, were so great stoopings and vast changes, that they gave height and sense, and excellency to each other.—Bp. Taylor. Gt. Exemp. pt. iii. s. 15.

Th' immortal Gods—by whose commands I come
From your bright realms to this eternal gloom:
Condemn'd the wasteful deep of night to tread,
And pass these doleful regions of the dead.
Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. vi.

[After being] void of all sense of pain for a minute's time or more—the pain then by degrees returned,—which I could attribute to nothing else, but the dissipating that vapour, or whatever else it were, which obstructed the nerves, and giving the dolorifick motion free passage again.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

Let them bear it as they can; such for the most part are the dolorous effects, and bitter appendages of a prevailing temptation.—South, vol. vi. Ser. 6.

It is agreeable enough to the changeable state of things in this uncertain world, that so dolorous an office as this [Visitation of the Sick] should immediately succeed the festivities of holy matrimony, for our delights are short and soon expire; and sometimes before our nuptial crowns wither, they are wet with funeral tears.
Comber. Companion to the Temple, pt. iv. s. 1.

They only make a part of our consolation in the circumstances which we so dolefully lament.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 3.

DOLL. Perhaps from the Dut. Dol, senseless, stupid, from Dol-en;—A. S. Dwolian, hebere, hebetare. See DOLT.—Applied to—

Any silly plaything.

Cooper (Latin Dict. 1573) renders O capitulum lepidissimum of Terence, "O pleasaunt companion: O little pretie Doll polle." Dryden translates Pupæ, in Perseus, "Baby-Toys;" and in a note says, that "those Baby-Toys were little Babies, or Poppets, as we call them;" whence it seems that the name of Doll was not in general use.

They who aim not at such characters, but live only to display a pretty face, without one domestic or social virtue, can scarcely rank higher than a painted doll, or a block head placed with a cap on it, in a milliner's window.
Knox. Essays, vol. i. No. 36.

DO'LLAR. Dut. Daler; Ger. Thaler. Wachter says, so called with the consent of all, quasi vallensis, from the Ger. Thal, a dale, a valley; because they were first coined in the valley of Joachim; and as Skinner says, were also called Joachims; he (Skinner) adds, that it may (non absurdè) be derived from dal, division, del, portion, because it is the half part or portion of a ducat; and in this latter opinion Tooke coincides with him. See DOLE.

The Duke of Wirtemberg is agreed wt Magister Teutonici ordinis, so that the duke shall have for his charges 66,000 daiers: but the King of Rome will not as yet agree wt Wirtemburgh.—Lodge. Illus. &c. in the reign of Edw. VI. No. 23.

Ana. Peace to the household.
Ana. I'le keep peace, for no man.
Ana. Casting of dollers is concluded lawfull.
B Jonson. The Alchymist, Act iv. sc. 7.

He that had the line in his hand threw it all into the river after him, thinking he might recover himself, but the stream running very swift, and the man having three hundred dollars at his back, was carried down, and never seen more by us.—Dampier. Voyage, &c. an. 1681.

We bought the turtles, which altogether weighed a hundred and forty-six pounds, for a dollar, and considering that we had lately paid the Dutchman a dollar for one that weighed only six and thirty pounds, we thought we had a good bargain.—Cook. Voyage, vol. ii. p. 274. b. iii. c. 10.

DO'LPHIN. } Fr. Daulphin; Sp. Delfin;
DO'LPHINET. } It. Delfino; Dut. Dolphijn; Ger. Delphin; Lat. Delphin; Gr. Δελφιν. Of unknown etymology.

When the dolphins are driven for verie hunger to course and pursue other fishes downe into the bottome of the sea, and thereby are forced a long while to hold their breath, for to take their wind againe, they launch themselves aloft from under the water as if they were shot out of a bow; and with such a force they spring up againe, that many times they mount over the verie sailes and maates of ships.
Holland. Plinie, b. ix. c. 8.

That even yet the dolphin, which him [Arion] bore
Through the Ægean seas from pirates view,
Stood still by him astonisht at his lore,
And all the raging seas for ioy forgot to roar.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 11.

The lion chose his mate, the turtle doue
Her deare, the dolphin his owne dolphinet.
Id. Colin Clouts come home again.

This event is related both by the Corinthians and the Lesbians; and there remaine at Tænarus a small figure in brass of a man seated on a dolphin's back, the votive offering of Arion himself.—Beloe. Herodotus. Clio, c. 24.

DOLT, n. } Dolt, i. e. dulled (or dol-ed, dol'd, dolt,) is the past part. of dwel-ian, dwol-an, to dull, hebere, hebetare. (Tooke.)
DO'LTISH.
DO'LTISHNESS.

A dulled, thick-headed, stupid fellow; a blockhead.

She being but a gerle, and ouercome with sorrowe for the losse of her mother, tooke the wrong way, she cast herselfe doune headlong & became a nunne, at the earnest sute either of foolish women, or else of doltish monkes.
Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 62.

Mar. No, I am a dolt,
The spirit of lies hath entered me.
Massinger. A New Way to Pay Old Debts, Act iii. sc. 2

There is as little reason to impute that misrendering to this doltish ignorance: for it cannot be imagined that he that translated a Greek author should not know the true rendering of Ιεροσολυμων, Jerusalem
Hammond. Works, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 280.

Is not this a fine manner of loquution, passing all Rhetorike, to speake, and yet not to knowe what he speaketh? what purgatories might we wish sufficient to purge the doltish braines of these bull bragging bedlems? with such blindnesse and doltishnesse are all the aduersaries of God's trueth worthie to be plagued.
Foxe. Martyrs, p. 1170. Answer of Luther.

The moral of this tale is proper,
Apply'd to Wood's adulterated copper;
Which, as he scatter'd, we like dolts,
Mistook at first for thunderbolts.
Swift. On Wood the Ironmonger, (1725.)

DOMA'IN, also written demain, (qv.) Fr. Demain, or domain; Lat. Dominium, from dominus, perhaps—Master of the house, (domus.)

"Fr. Domaine,—a man's patrimony or inheritance, proper and hereditary possessions; those whereof he is the right or true lord or possessor, and absolute owner; also an hereditary property in, and possession of land," &c. (Cotgrave.)

True it is, that much money is laid out upon pearles and precious stones; but these are in the nature of a domain and inheritance, and fall to the next heire in succession.
Holland. Pliny, b. xiii. c. 3.

But when that fate, which all must undergo,
From earth remov'd him to the shades below;
The large domain his greedy sons divide,
And each was portion'd as the lots decide.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xiv.

Some part of that influence which would otherwise have been possessed as in a sort of mortmain and unalienable domain, returned again to the great ocean from whence it arose, and circulated among the people.
Burke. Thoughts on the Present Discontents.

DOME, } Lat. Domus; Gr. Δομος, from
DO'MAL. } δεμ-ειν, to build. Mid. Lat. Doma; Fr. "Dôme, or dosme,—a flat, rounded lover, (Fr. l'ouvert,) or open roof, to a steeple, banketting-house, pidgeon-house, &c. somewhat resembling the bell of a great watch," (Cotgrave.) Du Cange says, what the French call dôme, the Italians call cupola. Dome, in English, is applied to—

A building, a mansion; and also to a cupola.

But the dome of St. Paul's, London, is a more considerable whispering place, where the ticking of a watch (when no noise is in the streets) may be heard from side to side; yea, a whisper may be sent all round the dome.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 3. Note 9.

What though the dome be wanting, whose proud gate,
Each morning vomits out the sneaking crowd
Of flatterers false, and in their turn abus'd?
Thomson. Winter.

News that ought to make the heart of a coward tremble. Mars is now entering into the first house, and will shortly appear in all his domal dignities.
Addison. The Haunted House, Act iii. sc. 1.

A stupendous edifice, the beams and pillars of which are many ranges of lofty hills, and the dome one prodigious mountain, to which the Chinese give the epithet of Celestial, with a considerable number of broad rivers flowing down its sides.—Sir W. Jones. On the Tartars, Disc. 5.

DOME'STICK, adj. } Fr. Domestique; It. and Sp. Domestico; Lat. Domesticus, from Lat. Domus, See DOME.
DOME'STICK, n.
DOME'STICAL, adj.
DOME'STICAL, n.
DOME'STICALLY.
DOME'STICATE.
DOMI'CIL.
DOMI'CILIARY.
DOMI'CILIATE.

That can or may house, or keep house or at home; and, more widely,—

Of or pertaining to house or home, family or kindred; fond of home, of privacy; attached to family enjoyments, devoted to family duties.

Domesticate, "Fr. Domestiquer,—to tame, reclaim; civilize, make familiar, gentle, tractable, housal."

Domicile, "Fr. Domicile,—a house, mansion, habitation, dwelling, place of abode," (Cotgrave.)

Le here maye ye see this beast to be no stranger, borne farr off, for Paul saith, he sitteth in the temple of God, he is therefore a domestyc enimye.

Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 7.

There is no knotte of nature or amitie so sure, which this sweorde is not hable to breake and undoe. Whom domesticall acquaintaunce hathe made louers and verey nere frendes, them shall the sweorde of the Gospell set in sunder.

Udal. Matthew, c. 10.

Amõgest whõ, ther were many his parẽtes & domesticals of housholdes.—Nicolls. Thucidides, fol. 41.

For foreign and domesticke swords
Plague, famine, and exile,
Did more than tythe, yea tythe the tythe
Of men within this isle.

Warner. Albion's England, b. v. c. 27.

Then it had given your wonder cause to last,
To see the vex'd mistakes this summons wrought,
In all my maim'd domesticks, by their haste.

Davenant. Gondibert, b. i. c. 6.

And such they were, who might presume t' have done
Much for the king, and honour of the state;
Having the chiefest actions undergone,
Both foreign and domestical of late

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

Those about me say, I bear it well, as perchance custom hath taught me, being now familiarized and domesticated evils, in the tragedian's expression, Jam mansueta mala.

Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 467.

O would he dain
To rest and reign
I' th' centre of my heart;
And make it still
His domicil
And residence in part.

Howell, b. i. s. 6. Let. 13.

Thus much of history, namely of that part of learning which answereth to one of the cells, or domicils of the understanding, which is, memory.

Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. ii. c. 12.

And since not any action of our life
Has been polluted with domestic strife,
We beg one hour of death; that neither she
With widow's teare may live to bury me,
Nor weeping I, with wither'd arms, may bear
My breathless Baucis to the sepulchre.

Dryden. Ovid. Met. b. ix.

A servant dwells remote from all knowledge of his lord's purposes, he lives as a kind of foreigner under the same roof, a domestick, and yet a stranger too.

South, vol. ii. Ser. 43.

Domestic happiness, thou only bliss
Of Paradise that hath surviv'd the fall!
Though few now taste thee unimpair'd and pure,
Or tasting long enjoy thee! too infirm,
Or too incautious, to preserve thy sweets
Unmix'd with drops of bitter, which neglect
Or temper sheds into thy crystal cup.

Cowper. The Task, b. iii.

The master labours, and leads an anxious life, to secure plenty and ease to the domestics.

Knox. On the Duty of Servants, Ser. 16.

They tell us, that "whether we view aristocracy before, or behind, or sideways, or any way else, domestically or publickly, it is still a monster."

Burke. Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs.

Thus the sheep in the domesticated state in which we see it, is destitute of ordinary means of defence or escape; is incapable either of resistance or flight.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 16.

34. Let him have no culinary fire, no domicil, let him when very hungry, go to the town for food.

Sir W. Jones. Ordinances of Menu, c. 12.

A difference of country, therefore, which excludes from the right of inheriting, is either actual and unqualified, as when an alien enemy resides in the seat of hostility, or when an alien has chosen his domicil in the seat of peace, and pays tribute exacted from infidels.

Id. Commentary on the Sirajiyyah.

The nuns of Strasburg, the prebendaries, the capitulars and domiciliars (capitularly assembled in the morning to consider the case of butter'd buns) all wished they had followed the nuns of Saint Ursula's example.

Sterne. Tristram Shandy, vol. iv. c. 1.

He will behold the republican halls hung round with monuments of proscriptions, massacres, imprisonments, requisitions, domiciliary searches, and such other trophies of the glorious victory of republicanism over monarchical power.

Blair, vol. v. Ser. 6.

DO'MINATE, v. } See DOMAIN. To dominate:—
DO'MINATION.
DO'MINATIVE.
DOMINA'TOR.
DO'MINANT.
DOMI'NION.
DOMINE'ER, v.
DOMINE'RING, n.

To rule over, to govern, to have power, command or authority; to tyrannize.

"To domineer or beare rule. B. Domineren; Fr. Dominorier, domíner; It. Dominare; Sp. Dominar; Lat. Dominari, from Dominus, a lord; to play the lord," (Minshew.) Generally, to domineer is—

To govern; to govern in a lordly, magisterial or tyrannical manner; with insolence or haughtiness. to tyrannize, to lord it.

For in him alle thingis ben maad in heuenes and in erthe, visible and unvysible, either trones, either domynaciouns, either princehoodis, either poweris.—Wielif. Colocensis, c. 1.

Trouth is put down, reason is holde fable,
Vertue hath now no dominacion.

Chaucer. To the Lords and Gentilmen.

Me semeth he should little charge
To haue lordship, or dominioun,
In the bounds of this little toun.

Lidgate. Story of Thebes, pt. ii.

Peace be multiplied with you: my commaundemente is, in all my dominyon and kyngdome that men feare & stande in awe of Daniel's God.—Bible, 1551. Daniel, c. 6.

O Lord oure God, thoughe suche lordes haue domynacion vpon vs as know not thee yet graunte, that we maye hope onelye in the, and kepe thy name in remembraunce.

Id. Ib. 1551. Esaye, c. 26.

These and other considerations in the breast of a lady, bred vp in a dominating family, her selfe a dowager, &c.

Speed. Henrie VII. b. ix. c. 20. s. 33.

Since that which has been done 's no more
Than what has been done before,
And that which will be done again,
As long 's there are ambitious men
That strive for domination.—Brome. Sir G. B. his Defeat

To each thing hath the goodness of that architect imparted a peculiar badge of honour, that nothing should be despisable in the eyes of other, the prince in majesty and sovereignty of power, the nobility in wisdom and dominative virtue.

Sir E. Sandys. State of Religion.

But (I) ouerpass their naturall inclination by heauenly influence, answerable to the disposition of Aries, Leo and Sagittary; and Jupiter, with Mars dominators for this north-west part of the world, which maketh them impatient of seruitude, louers of libertie, martiall and courageous.

Camden. Remaines. Britaine.

From the consistory of our Saviour cometh a direct prohibition, that his disciples should not "dominari sicut reges Gentium," domineer in that fashion or manner that the kings of the Gentiles did.

State Triale. H. Garnet. Earl of Northamp. an. 1606.

Friends and companions get you gone,
Tis my desire to be alone,
Ne'er well but when my thoughts and I,
Doe dominete in privacie.—Burton. The Author's Abstract.

For this thing [that the flesh hinders us from doing the will of the spirit] is so far from being a reason why we should walk in the spirit, that it perfectly discourages that design, and it is to little purpose to walk in the spirit, if this will not secure us against the domineering and tyranny of the flesh.—Bp. Taylor. On Repentance, c. 7. s. 5.

For till his daies, the chief dominion
By strength was wielded without policie;
Therefore he first wore crowne of gold for dignitie.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10

Cæsar gave her [Salome] a palace in Ascalon, she also received from the places that were subject to her sixty talents, and dwelt in the dominion of Archelaus.

Usher. Annals, an. 4001.

Men may be lords, without being lordly; and they, who have professed to abhor the name, have carried the disposition of domineering to the height; and lorded it over the consciences and the liberties of others, as much as any who have worn higher titles.

Secker. Works, vol. vi. Answer to Dr. Mayhew.

Under pretence of ill ministers and councellors of estate, whom they pretended to remove, [they] endeavoured to invest in themselves, in all times for the future, the domination of all ministries of estate, and of his Majesty's family.

Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. iii. p. 259. Let. 39.

He [Ravis] taught young men the Oriental tongues, and was then subservient to the dominant party in England.

Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

But in truth he was no enemy to the calling, but to the domineering tyranny that had been exercised by bishops under papal usurpation.—Strype. Life of Bp. Aylmer, c. 2.

High as his topmost boughs to heav'n ascend,
So low his roots to hell's dominion tend.

Dryden. Virgil. Geor. 2.

If it were not a bad habit to moot cases on the supposed ruin of the constitution, I should be free to declare, that if it must perish, I would rather by far see it resolved into any other form, than lost in that austere and insolent domination, (the Aristocracy.)

Burke. On the Cause of the Present Discontents.

As to granting the elective franchise to Catholics, and permitting persons of that religion to sit in parliament, I should have no hesitation on that subject, could I be convinced that the Catholic church would not, if it were the dominant church, be a persecuting church.

Anecdotes of Bp. Watson, vol. ii. p. 63.

Though for a while the pleasure of sin may captivate, and unlawful gain may bring its present advantage, yet, we may depend upon it, a time will come when sin will assert his dominion.—Gilpin, vol. iv. Ser. 10.

DOMI'NICAL, n. } Fr. Dominical. La Let-
DOMI'NICAL, adj. } tre Dominicale; the Dominical Letter. L'Oraison Dominicale; the Lord's Prayer; the Paternoster. It. Lettera Dominicale; Sp. Letra Dominical.

Dominical, n. The Lord's Day; and also, the Lord's Prayer.

Vortigerne, by such diuelish meanes and vnconscionable practises (as you heare) stealing away the hearts of the people, was chosen and made King of Britaine, in the yeere of our Lord 446, in the 3 consulship of Aetius, 1197 of Rome, 4 of the 305 Olympiad, 4112 of the world, the dominicall letter going by E, the prime by 10, which fell about the 21 yeere of the Emperour Valentinianus.

Holinshed. Historie of England, b. v. c. 2.

Wee decree that euery woman when she dooth communicate, haue her dominical: if she haue it not, let her not communicate vntil the next Sonneday.

Jewell. A Replie to M. Hardinge, p. 73.

But the bissextile returning every fourth year, the series of dominical letters succeeding each other is interrupted, and does not return in order, but after four times seven years, or twenty-eight years which is therefore commonly called the solar cycle, serving as a rule to find Sunday, and consequently all the days of the week of every month and year.—Priestley. On History, pt. iii. Lect. 14.

DON, n. } Contracted from the Lat. Do-
DO'N-SHIP. } minus.

A title of gentility in Spain. Used in derision in English. Sometimes written Dom.

One will bee sicke forsooth, and bid her maid deny her to this don, that earle, the other marquesse, nay to a duke.

Rowlins. The Rebellion, Act i. sc. 1.

——I draw the lady
Unto my kinsman's here, only to torture
Your don-ships for a day or two.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Chances, Act v. sc. 1.

DON, v. To do on, to put on

Godfrey arose, that day he laid aside
His hawberke strong he wonte to combat in,
And don'd a breast-plate faire, of proofe vntride,
Such one as footmen vse, light, easie, thin.

Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. xi. s. 20.

But as in Autumne (when birds cease their notes,
And stately forests d'on their yellow coates
When Ceres golden locks, &c.

Browne. Brit. Past. b. ii. s. 4.

Already Mars had don'd his coat of mail
And doubtful Conquest held her even scale.

Lloyd. The Henriade.

DONA'TION, n. } Fr. Donaison, donation;
DO'NATIVE. } It. Donatione; Sp. Donacion; Lat. Donatio; from DO'NARY. } Donare, to give. Of un-
DO'NOR. } settled origin.
DO'NEE. }

A giving or bestowing, a gift or grant, a largesse.

O mirth of martyrs, sweter than Sitole
Of confessours also richest donatife

Chaucer. A Balade of our Ladie.

But after the donation of Constãtine and other plentuous almesses committed vnto theyr hãdes for the socoure of the poore, they became all confessours, and toke them to theyr ease at home.—Bale. Image, pt. ii.

So that the childre of the seconde husbande put (by) the ryghtfull inheritours, or suche as were next allied vnto the firste donoures.—Fabyan, an. 1286.

To which add, that the Church of Rome presenting candles, and other donaries to the Virgin Mary, as to the Queen of Heaven, do that which the Collyridians did.

Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. ii. b. i.

The kingdoms of the world to thee were giv'n,
Permitted rather, and by thee usurpt,
Other donation none thou canst produce.

Milton. Paradise Regained, b. iv.

Hon. This done, our pleasure is, that all arrearages
Be paid unto the captains and their troops;
With a large donative to increase their zeal
For the service of the kingdom.
Massinger. The Picture, Act ii. sc. 2.

If goods be given to one till such a thing happen, or upon such a condition, there is a property in the donee, yet it is clogged with a limitation and condition.
State Trials. John Hampden, an. 1637.

God's giving or granting men repentance, signifies (in Scripture) his granting them the favour to have their repentance accepted to the forgiveness of past sins, or allowed instead of innocence; and not his conferring repentance upon them as an external donation; which is altogether unintelligible.—Clarke, vol. i. Ser. 31.

Most merciful Jesus, although thou reservest full manifestations of thy love to my soul, till the glorious resurrection, yet, as if thou wert impatient of so long a stay, thou hast sealed at present thy gracious donative, and my comfortable title to a never-fading crown
Comber. Companion to the Temple, pt. iii. s. 21.

A servant rarely or never ascribes what he receives to the mere liberality and generosity of the donor, but to his own worth and merit, and to the need which he supposes there is of him, which opinion alone will be sure to make any one of a mean, servile spirit, insolent and intolerable.
South, vol. ii. Ser. 2.

Many country families, which come to town for a few months, would frequent those churches, and they would frequent them with more readiness if they had an opportunity of distinguishing themselves from the lower classes by voluntary donations to the charity box.
Anecdotes of Bp. Watson, vol. ii. p. 113.

The Roman emperors, indeed, gave large donatives to the citizens and soldiers, but these distributions were always reckoned rather popular than virtuous nothing more was intended than an ostentation of liberality, nor was any recompense expected but suffrages and acclamations.
Idler, No. 4

On the one hand, the acceptance of that gift by Mr. Hastings must have pledged a tacit faith for some degree of indulgence towards the donor: if it was a free gift, gratitude, if it was a bargain, justice obliged him to it.
Burke. Report of a Committee on the Affairs of India.

DO'NZEL. Fr. Damoisel; It. Damigello, donzello; Sp. Donzelle; Lat. Domicellus, quasi parvus dominus; which is a young gentleman following arms and not yet knighted, (Minshew in v. Damsel, qv.)

Cap. No, you shall spare his dowcets my dear donsel.
Beaum. & Fletch. Philaster, Act v. sc. 1.

DOOM, v. } A. S. Dæm-an, to think, to DOOM, n. } judge, to determine. See DEEM.
DO'OMFUL. } The noun "Dom, dome, judicium, sententia, arbitrium, a judgment, sentence, ordinance, decree. Domes-dæg,—Dies judicii, the day of judgment," (Somner.)

To judge or adjudge, to sentence, determine or decree.

And so thilke Brutayne of this lond com
More thoru strengthe as ge yseth, than thoru rygt dom.
R. Gloucester, p. 95.

Alas! were was loute tho, suiche domes to deme.
Id. p. 562.

That myht last tille domesday.—R. Brunne, Pref. 189.

And when ich deme domes. and do as treuthe tetcheth
Then is Racio my ryhte name.—Piers Ploukman, p. 273.

Bote thes thre that ich spak of. on domesday defenden
Elles is in ydel. al oure levynge here.
Oure preyers and oure penaunce. Id. p. 262.

For countith he no kynges wraythe. whan he in court sytteth.
To deme as a domesman.—Id. p. 382.

For neither the fadir jugith ony man, but hath gouun ech doom to the sone.—Wiclif. Jon, c. 5.

Be thou consenting to thin adversarie soone, while thou art in the weye with him, lest peraventure thin adversarie take thee to the domesman, and the domesman take the to the mynistre, and thou be sent to prisoun.—Id. Matt. c. 5.

And alle tooken Sostenes prynce of the synagoge and smoten him bifore the doom-place.—Id. Dedis, c. 18.

But in this maner domes of men discordē, yt thilk men that some folke demen worthy of mede, other folke deme hem worthy of turment.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. iv.

What should I make lengre tale
Of all the people that I say
I could not tell till Domesday.—Id. House of Fame, b. iii.

Grot wonder is, how that he coud or might
Be domesman of hire dede beautee.
Id. The Monkes Tale, v. 13,408.

These stage applauses therefore must needs be sinful in all these respects, as Tertullian, Cyprian, Nazienzen, Eusebius, Chrysostome, Augustine, Salvian, with sundry modern Christian authors, have already doomed them to our hands.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act v. sc. 11.

What frantick fit (quoth hee) hath thus distraught
Thee, foolish man, so rash a doom to giue?
What iustice euer other iudgement taught,
But he should die who merits not to liue?
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 9.

For our own parts, we owe no malice to the persons of any of the prelates, but would lay our necks under their feet to do them good as they are men, but against the usurpation of their power, as they are bishops, we do profess ourselves enemies till Doomsday.
State Trials. Bastwick, Burton, and Prynne, an. 1637.

And by th' infectious slime that doomful deluge left
Nature herself hath since of purity been reft.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 9.

And all those airy shapes you now behold,
Were human bodies once, and cloth'd with earthly mold.
Our souls not yet prepar'd for upper light,
Till Doomesday wander in the shades of night.
Dryden. The Flower and the Leaf.

O'er him, whose doom thy virtues grieve,
Aerial forms shall sit at eve,
And bend the pensive head;
And, fall'n to save his injur'd land,
Imperial honour's awful hand
Shall point his lonely bed!
Collins. Ode on the Death of Col. Charles Ross.

DOOR, n. Goth. Dauro, daur; A. S. Dora, duru; Dut. Deure, door; Ger. Thure; Gr. Θυρα. Tooke considers the English preposition Thorough, through, and the noun Door to be the same word, differently written and applied; meaning—

Door, gate, passage.

Chaucer writes the word in the Persones Tale twice Thorruhe; or as Tyrwhitt writes it, Thurrok, (q. d.) thorough-fare. And see the quotation from Verstegan.

Out of churche men hii driue, wepinde ynowe,
& pitosliche hom selue wende out atte laste,
& the doren after hom wepende loke vaste.
R. Gloucester, p. 495.

& rizt atte churche dore he vel adoun akne
To the erchebissope's fet Id. p. 508.

And when sche cum to her chawmbur by an vtter durre, sche ran towarde churche as faste as sche mygte.
R. Brunne, Pref. p. 197.

And alle these wise weyes. weren to gederes
In an hous al by shutt. and here dore barred
Crist cam yn and al was closed.—Piers Ploukman, p. 374.

For Jamys the gentil suggeth in hus bokes
That feith withoute fet, [deeds] ys febelere than nouht
And ded as a dore-nayle.—Id. p. 22.

Treuly, treuli, I seye to you, he that cometh not in by the dore into the foold of schepe, but stieth by another weye, is a nyghte theef and a day theef.—Wiclif. Jon, c. 10.

Get me a staf, that I may underspore,
While that thou, Robin, hevest of the dore:
He shall out of his studying, as I gesse,
And to the chambre dore he gan him dresse.
Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3465.

I had rather be a dore-keeper in the house of my God, thē to dwell in the tētes of the vngodly.—Bible, 1551. Psalm 84.

At last he came vnto an iron dore,
That fast was lockt, but key found not at all
Emongst that bunch, to open it withall.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 8.

Dure or durh. Now a doore, it is as much to say as through, and not improper, because it is a durh-fare, or thorough passage.
Verstegan. Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, c. 6.

Dure-weard. A doore-warder, a doore-keeper, a porter.
Id. Ib.

With glewey wax some new foundations lay
Of virgin-combs, which from the roof are hung:
Some arm'd within doors upon duty stay,
Or tend the sick, or educate the young.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

He [Hippocrates] adds, wheresoever there are great terrors in the night, and persons are beside themselves, jumping out of bed, and running out of doors; these things are said to proceed from Hecate, and the possession of heroes.
Farmer. On the Demoniacs of the New Testament, c. 2. s. 3

DO'PPER, v. } I. e. Dip. The Venetian
DOP, n. } Dop, Mr. Gifford says, is the DO'PPING, n. } Dip, a very low bow or
DOP-CHICK. } curtesy, (a cringe, qv.)
Dop-chick, also written Dab-chick, or Dob-chick. See DAB.

With those—and a short line, as I shewed, to angle for a chub—you may dape or dop.—Walton. Angler, pt. i. c. 5.

Ori. The Venetian dop this.
B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revels, Act v. sc. 2. and Note.

——— She, that shafts doth loue,
Shot dead the woman; who into the pumpe
Like a dop-chicke, diu'd, and gaue a thumpe
In her sad settling.—Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xv.

This is a doper, a she Anabaptist.
B. Jonson. The Staple of News, Act iii. sc. 2.

Fact. Have you doppers?
2d Her. A world of doppers! but they are there as lunatic persons, walkers only: they have only to hum and ha, not daring to prophesy, or start up upon stools to raise doctrine.
Id. News from the New World. The World in the Moon.

Nothing doth render a man so compleatly Gentile; (not in an affected, or artificial way, consisting in certain postures or motions of the body, dopping, cringing, &c.)
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 27.

DOR, v. } A. S. Dora, a dorre or drone,
DOR, n. } (Somner.) Suggested in Skinner
DO'RRER. } to be from the verb, to dare, A. S. Dyrran, (q.d.) minaciter provocare. But—

To dorr the dotterel is to delude the dotterel. and both are from the same verb, Dyrran, to befool. See the quotation from Gifford.

First, there is a great number of gentlemen which cannot be content to live idle themselves, like dorrers, of that which other have laboured for—their tenants, I mean.
Sir T. More. Utopia, b. i. by Robinson

The dor, (says Gifford,) is the chaffer, and the allusion, to which Jonson is never weary of recurring, is to the desultory flight of this insect, which appears to mock, or play upon the passenger, by striking him on the face, and then flitting away preparatory, as it were, to a fresh attack. To this Cowley alludes "A hundred businesses of other men fly continually about his head and ears, and strike him in the face like dorrers." Essays on Liberty Jonson always connects the idea of tricking, or outwitting, with dorring. Buzzing, the prevailing term for deceiving, in Addison's days, as well as that most hateful vulgarism, humming, so fashionable in our own, derived its origin from the same respectable source, and both refer to this imaginary mockery in the "droning flight" of the beetle.
B. Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, Act iv. sc. 4. Note.

Kit. Abroad with Thomas! oh, that vilain dors me.
Id. Ib. Act iv. sc. 6.

When we are so easily dord and amated with every sophisme, it is a certain argument of great defect of inward furniture and worth, which should, as it were, ballance the minde and keep it upright against all outward occurrents whatsoever.—Hale. Rem. Ser. 2 Pet. iii. 16.

But this offer'd itselfe, so i' the way, I could not let it 'scape: heere he comes, whistle, be this sport call'd dorring the dottrell.—B. Jonson. Bartholomew Fayre, Act iv. sc. 1.

The dor or beetle, which you may find under cow dung
Walton. Angler, pt. i. c. 3

Or women loue to be belou'd
Of chaunge of clyents, or
Vncertaine wheare to find them, with
The eagle or the dorr.
Warner. Albion's England, b. vi. c. 31.

Mal. I would not receive the dor, but as a bosome friend
You shall direct me, still provided that
I understand who is the man, and what
His purpose, that pleads for me.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Lover's Progress, Act i. sc. 1.

——— And ghesse you, sir,
What dor unto a doating maid this was,
What a base breaking off!
Id. Love's Pilgrimage, Act iii. sc. 1

Sy. And another. I will never bear this,
Never endure this dor.—Id. Woman Pleas'd, Act iii. sc. 3.

DO'RIAN. } Fr. Dorique; It. and Sp. Do-
DO'RICK. } rico; Lat. Dialectus Dorica; Gr.
DO'RIZE. } Διαλεκτος δωρικη. One of the five dialects of the Greeke tongue, which the Dorienses, a people of Greece, used in their common speech and writings, (Minshew.)

Plato had good reason to reject them both and therefore he chose the Dorian, as that which is most beseeming valiant, sober, and temperate men.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 1021.

Most of the Historiographers declare that Orpheus, who was the ancientest of all the poets, wrote in the Doric dialect.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 296.

Which if it be true, then those Orphick fragments, that now we have, (preserved in the writings of such as did not dorize) must have been transformed by them out of their native idiom.—Id. Ib.

DO'RMANT. } Fr. Dormant; Lat. Dormiens, pres. part. of dormire, to Do'RMANCY. } sleep.
Do'RMER. } Sleeping, reposing, leaning
Do'RMITIVE, n. } or lying in a state of repose,
Do'RMITORY. } in a declining position; con-
Do'RTURE. } tinuing or remaining at rest, in stillness, in tranquillity.

A dormitory,—a place to sleep in; also of eternal rest; as a place for burying.

Dorture,—Fr. Dortoir, (q.) dormiture. And see dormitorium in Spelman.

Thou may not ligge & slepe as monke in his dortoure,
Thou salle rise vp & leape, & stirre vnto the stowre.
R. Brunne, p. 256.

And her dortoure ydight, with dores ful strong.
Piers Ploughman, C. 1.

His deth saw I by revelatioun,
Sayde this frere, at home in our dortour.
Chaucer. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7437.

And therefore her stealying furthe of the dorture in the nightc; whiche was not once or twice wekely was not for spiritual busines, nor to receiue reuelaciõs of God, but rather for bodely cõmunicaciõ & pleasure with her frẽdes.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 25.

That taught the stones to melt for passion,
And dormant sea, to hear him, [Orpheus] silent lie,
At his voice, the wat'ry nation
To flock, as if they deem'd it cheap to buy
With their own deaths his sacred harmony.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph over Death.

To the conduct of their predecessor, Queen Mary, it was an objection, that she had revived an ill precedent of prerogative taxation after a dormancy of centuries.
State Trials. The great Case of Imposition, an 1606.

Or to any shop, cellar, sollar, casements, chamber, dormer, and so forth.—Chapman. All Fools, Act iv. sc. 1.

Vnder sparring the gates, and bearing vp the dormitorie doore, they stabbed the adulterer with the rest of the covent thorough with their weapons.
Holinshed. Description of Ireland, c. 3.

Yet all the bitter noxious part of death shall be taken away, as far as concerns the faithful servants of Christ, the sting of death being by him pluck'd out, and so the grave turn'd into a dormitory or retiring-room, a place where the bodies rest in a sound sleep, till they be awakned into bliss.
Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 110.

Then he led us to a long gallery, like a dorture, where he allowed us all along the one side (for the other side was but wall and window) seventeen cells very neat ones.
Bacon. New Atlantis.

Into their cloisters now he broken had,
Through which the monkes he chaced here and there,
And them pursu'd into their dortures sad,
And searched all their cells, and secrets neare.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

In his fallen state the law of nature is active in some things, but dormant in others. The best morals of the heathens are dashed with impure permission.
Bates. Divinity of the Christ. Rel. proved by Reason, c. 2.

He [Ireton] erected for himself a more glorious monument in the hearts of good men, by his affection to his country, his abilities of mind, his impartial justice, his diligence in the public service, and his other virtues; which were far greater honour to his memory, than a dormitory among the ashes of kings.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 331.

This is the dormitive I take to Bedward.
Greenhill. Art of Embalming, p. 112.

There are other cases, especially in the progress of insect life, in which the dormant organization does not much resemble that which encloses it, and still less suits with the situation in which the enclosing body is placed, but suits with a different situation to which it is destined.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 27.

Each chamber that he fancied best
Was his the dormitory round,
And, where at eve he chose to rest,
Honour'd, thrice honour'd was the ground,
And much the lucky nun was bless'd!
Cooper. Ver Vert, c. 1.

DO'RMOUSE. Lat. Dormiens mus, the sleeping mouse.

Maximilian—what for lacke of money, and what for mistrust that he had in hys awne subiects, laye still lyke a dormouse nothynge doyne.—Hall. Hen. VII. an. 7.

The little dormouse leaves her leaden sleep,
And with the mole up to the ark doth creep.
Drayton. Noah's Flood.

But the most exquisite animal was reserved for the last chapter; and that was the dormouse, a harmless creature, whose innocence might at least have defended it both from cooks and physicians.
King. Art of Cookery, Let. 9. To Mr.——

DORSE, n. } Fr. Dossier; Mid. Lat. Dossarum, from Fr. Dos, and this Do'RCER, or } from Lat Dorsum, the back; be-
Do'SSER. } cause it was placed upon the Do'RSAL. } back of beasts of burden, (Junius.)

Or maken of these paniers
Or else hutches or dossers.—Chaucer. House of Fame, b. iii.

Now if Tyndall when he shall perceue how blindly the deuil hath led him here about, and made him to fall in the diche with his docer, and breake all his egges, and quayle thus all conclusion, wouldst for shame sake any farther shyft, &c.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 657.

——— I may meet her
Riding from market one day, 'twixt her dorsers.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Little Thief, Act i. sc. 1.

——— Now you are fain
To hire a ripper's mare, and buy new dossers.
Id. The Noble Gentleman, Act v. sc. 1.

The milk-maids' Cuts shall turn the wenches off,
And lay their dossers tumbling in the dust.
Anonymous. The Merry Devil of Edmonton.

For every dorser of provisions, 6d. per day.
State Trials. The King & the City of London, an. 1682.

He [Ed. Bysshe] had a very choice library of books all richly bound with gilt dorses.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

Several of the smaller species of whales have been known to stray up the Thames, a kind of Grampus, with a high dorsal fin has been taken within the mouth of the river.
Pennant. London, p. 653.

DOSE, v. } Fr. Dose; It. Dosa; Gr. Δοσις.
DOSE, n. } That which is given. Applied (particularly) to—

The portion of medicine given at one time; to a sufficient quantity.

He will rather take Absalom for his pattern, who invited his dear brother to a feast, hugged and embraced, courted and caressed him till he had well dosed his weak head with wine, and his foolish heart with confidence and credulity: and then in he brings him an old reckoning, and makes him pay it off with his blood.—South, vol. i. ser. 11.

That which cures the manners by alternative physick, as I said before, must proceed by insensible degrees: but that which purges the passions, must do its business all at once, or wholly fail of its effect, at least in the present operation, and without repeated doses.—Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, Ded.

DOT, v. } See Dit. Dot, the noun, (Tooke)
DOT, n. } is merely the past part. of the A.S. verb Dyttan, to stop up, to shut in. It is not made "to mark any place in a writing, but is what we call the full stop."

To express thousands the Rabbins usually place two dots over the units, that denominate the number of thousands.
Sharpe. Method of Learning the Hebrew Language, Let. 1.

From East Cape to St. Maria van Delmen, the chart, though perhaps not equally exact is without any error of moment, except possibly in some few places, which are here, and in other parts of the chart, distinguished by a dotted line, and which I had no opportunity to examine.
Cook. Voyages, vol. ii. b. ii. c. 7.

DOTE, n. } Lat. Dos, dotis, dotalis; Gr.
Do'TAL. } Δως, any thing given. (See Dose, Dota'TE. } above.) Applied (particularly)
Dota'TION. } to—

That which is given in marriage, a marriage portion. "Fr. Dotal,—given in dowry; of or belonging to a dowry."

Dotes, in B. Jonson, endowments.

In the article of his own marriage with the daughter of France, there is no mention of dote nor douaire.
Sir T. Wyatt. To Cromwell, April 12, 1540.

Cler. I muse a mistress can be so silent to the dotes of such a servant.—B. Jonson. The Silent Woman, Act ii. sc. 2.

But because these will not suffice to discharge the necessaries of the church, we think that all things dotate to hospitality in times past, with all annual rents both to burgh and land, pertaining to priestes, &c. &c. be retained to the use of the church or churches, within the towns or parishes where they were founded.
Spotswood. Church of Scotland, an. 1560. b. iii.

Shall I, of one poor dotal town possest,
My people thin, my wretched country waste.
Garth. Ovid Met. b. xiv.

They require and take their foundations, ordinations, dotations, charities, accounts, &c.
Strype. Life of Abp. Parker, an. 1561.

DOTE, v. } Also written Doat. Dut. Doten, dutten, delirare, decipere; Fr. Doter, radoter. Of unsettled origin. Some have said—from Herodotus, because he tells so many old women's stories. Tooke thinks that dotard (i. e. one who dotes) is dodet'd (i. e. befooled), the regular past tense of Dydrian, dydrian, to delude. The verb, to dote, may have been formed from this past part.; or we may owe it to the Ger. Dotteren, to tremble, to totter. To dote, is—
DO'TAGE. }
DO'TANT. }
DO'TARD. }
DO'TARDLY. }
DO'TER. }
DO'TINGLY. }
DO'TISH. }
DO'TTHRAD. }

To do as dotards do; to be weak or imbecile in mind or understanding; to be weakly fond, childishly, unreasonably, excessively so.

Thow dotede daffe quath hue dolle aren thy wittes.
Piers Ploughman, p. 19.

Now certes (qd Loue) I see well (and that me ouer thinketh) that wit in thee faileth, and art in point to dote.
Chaucer. The Testament of Loue, b. i.

Loue not to hote least thou repent sore,
Thy wife not to loue yet I nil support,
But that thou dote not, this I thee exhort.
Id. The Remedie of Loue.

I dare not writen of it no wickednesse,
Lest I myselfe fall eft in such dotage.—Id. Dreame.

But folke of wives maken non assay,
Til they ben wedded, old dotard shrewe!
And then, sayst thou, we wol our vices shewe.
Id. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 5871.

A poore chylde beyng wyse, is better than an olde king that doteth, and can not beware in time to come.
Bible, 1551. Ecclesiastes, c. 4.

For if they remayne not there, they are lyke to haue but a symple dwellynge in this age, except some superstycyous grandame, or some olde doltynge Sir Dauy, wyll harbour them for a tyme.—Bale. Apology, fol. 51.

O ye men, wyne is maruelous stronge, and ouercometh thē yt dryncke it: it dyscerneth the mynde and bryngeth both the poore mā and yᵉ kynge to dotage and vanitie.
Bible, 1551. Esdras, c. 3.

And the dotehead was beside himselfe & whole out of his mynde.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 350.

On the other side, olde age is the lighter esteemed and passed on, by reason that the power and habilitie of the witte is much decaied, & such ones greatly suspected of doting.—Udal. Luke, c. 3.

The Popis dotish disputers, Eccius, Cocleus, Pighius, Alphons, Bartholome, Catimerus, with al their dronkē drafesaks were with shame constrained to geve place to the lerned mē of the princes of Germanie.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 11.

I have had enough of these things, and do not dote upon them: the world I hope hath found me more stayed and reserved in my courses.—State Trials. Abp. Abbot, an. 1621.

——— If 't be false,
And that you clothe your hate in such a lie,
You shall hereafter doat in your own house, not in the court.—Beaum. & Fletch. Maid's Tragedy, Act iv.

Can you thinke to front his reuenges with the paleied intercession of such a decay'd dotant as you seeme to be.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act v. sc. 2.

But why doe we deuise of others ill
While thus we suffer this same dotard old
To keepe vs out, in scorn of his owne will,
And rather do not ransack all, and himself kill.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 9.

Old doting Nature change thy course anew,
And let the trembling lamb the wolf pursue
Let oaks now glitter with Hesperian fruit,
And purple daffodils from alder shoot.
Dryden. Virgil, Past. 8.

Though his majesty, and those few intrusted by him, had reason to believe that God would be more propitious to him, from some great alterations in England; yet such imagination was so looked upon as mere dotage, that the king thought not fit to communicate the hopes he had.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. iii. p. 691.

He [Shaftesbury] was, as to religion, a Deist at best. he had the dotage of astrology in him to a high degree: he told me, that a Dutch doctor had, from the stars, foretold him the whole series of his life.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1660.

Thus we see what fine conclusions, these doters upon body (though accounted great masters of logic) made; and how they were befooled in their ratiocinations and philosophy.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 240.

Now this concerning Democritus I note the rather more carefully, because Epicurus afterward dotingly fumbling about the same philosophy, made sense to be the only criterion of truth and falshood, and consequently abused this old atomical philosophy to atheism and immorality.
Id. Morality, b. ii. c. 6.

That he to wedlock, dotingly betray'd,
Should hope in this lewd town to find a maid!
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 6.

His [James I.] courtiers flattered him, and Archbishop Whitgift, who died soon afterward, and probably doated then, declared himself verily persuaded, that the king "spake by the spirit of God."
Bolingbroke. Remarks on the Hist. of England.

The last stage, the state of dotage remains, and this is the pantomime of life; the images are new only in proportion as they are extravagant, and please only because the imagination is distempered or infirm.
Johnson. Adventurer, No. 24.

DO'TTARD, i. e. Doddered, (qv.) Ascham writes dotterell.

And if some old dotterel trees, with standing over nie them, and dropping upon them, do not either hinder or crooke their growing.—Ascham. The Schole Master, b. ii.

And for great trees, we see almost all overgrown trees, in church-yards, or near ancient buildings and the like, are pollards, or dottards, and not trees at their full height.
Bacon. Naturall History, § 586.

DO'TTEREL. Tooke says, dim. of doder'd, (i. e. befooled.) See DOTE. Camden from—to dote.

See the quotation from Drayton for the character of the bird.

O dottrells dome, and is it so?
What guerdon for these doultes
Shall we deuyse? Drant. Horace, b. i. Sat. i.

None other else were lost and depriued of the lyfe whiche is in Christe Jesu, but such deuote dottrels & worldly wise people as thei taught & brought vp in false worshippinges
Bale. Image, pt. i.

The dotterell, which we think a very dainty dish,
Whose taking makes such sport, as man no more can wish;
For as you creep, or cowr, or lie, or stoop or go,
So marking you (with care) the apish bird doth do,
And acting every thing, doth never mark the net,
Till he be in the snare, which men for him have set.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 25.

If by such complaisance we can invelgle those dottrels to hearken to us, we may induce them to consider farther, and give reason some competent scope, some fair play with them.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 14.

DO'UBLE, v. DO'UBLE, n. DO'UBLE, adj. DO'UBLE, ad. DO'UBLENESS. DO'UBLER, n. DO'UBLING, n. DO'UBLY. DO'UBLET. Fr. Double; Sp. Doble; It. Doppio; Dut. Dobbel; Ger. Doppel; Sw. Dubbel; Lat. Duplus; Gr. Διπλοος, ους; διπλαξ; twofold, from Δυο, and πλεκ-ειν; Lat. Plicare, to fold.

To fold over, (sc.) one part over another; to put or add equal to equal, in number or measure; to equal twice the number or quantity.

To turn, and go twice, or a second time over the same ground, or tract; to turn and go in the course or direction already passed: to cross backwards and forwards, in and out; and thus, to endeavour to elude or escape, to illude or deceive, to trick. See DUPLICITY.

Doublet, vestis duplicata, (Minshew.)

Double is much used as an adjective prefixed to nouns; as an adverb, to adjectives and verbs.

Was ther non entre, that to the castelle gan ligge,
Bot a streite kauce, at the end a drauht brigge,
With grete duble cheynes drauhen ouer the gate.
R. Brunne, p. 183.

Thauh he be founde in fraternite. of alle fyve ordres
And have indulgences doble folde.
Piers Ploughman, p. 165.

Ghelde ghe to it as eche gheldide to ghou, and double ghe double thingis aftir hir werkis.—Wichf. Apocalips, c. 18.

Reward her even as she rewarded you, and double unto her double according to her works.—Modern Version.

Alas, for me hath he soch heuinesse;
Can he for me so pitously complain,
Iwis this sorow doubleth all my pain.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. iv.

Though thou thee hide, it is for nought,
For wher thou dwelst thou shalt be sought
Maugre thy subtill double face. Id. Dreame.

For whan he was in his richesse,
These frends ful of doublenesse
Offred him in many wise
Hert, and body, and seruice.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

And euen with that, he drew a knife
And through gowne, doublet, and shert
He made the blood come from his hert.—Chaucer. Dreame.

Now cometh the sinne of double-longe, swiche as speke faire before folk and wickedly behind.
Id. The Persones Tale

And ouer that eke forth with all
He saith, that other hane shall
The double of that his felowe axeth.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

Usure with the rich dwelleth,
To all that euer he byeth and selleth,
He hath ordeined of his sleight
Measure double and double weight.—Id. Ib. b. v.

Thus tosse I too and fro, in hope to haue relefe,
But in the fine I finde not so, it doubleth but my grefe.
Vncertaine Auctors. The Lover refused.

And whereas he saith, the emperour had but for his part a dobble, as far as I can see, knowing what the wares cost in those partes, he had treble.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 353.

What valleth troth? or by it, to take pain?
To striue by stedfastness for to attain
How to be iust, and flee from doublenesse?
Since all alike, where ruleth craftinesse,
Rewarded is both crafty, false, and plain.
Wyat. Complaint for True Love Vnrequited.

Thus is thy frend to thee, the comfort of thy paine,
The stayer of thy state, the doubler of thy gaine;
In welth and wo thy frend, an other self to thee,
Such man to man a God, the proverb saith to bee.
Vncertaine Auctors. The Praise of a true Frend.

And there was a doublette-maker of London, called John Tycle, and he hadde brought to these glotons a lx doublettes, the whiche they ware; then he demaunded of these capitaynes, who shulde paye hym for his doublettes; he demanded xxx. marke.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 384.

And therwyt he plucked vp hys doublet-sleue to his elbow vpon his left arme, where he shewed a werish withered arme and small, as it was neuer other.
Sir T. More. Works, p. 54.

By the way vpon the coast of Holland, he suffered shipwracke, and lost all his bookes, writinges, and coppyes: and was compelled to beginne all agayne anewe, to his hynderaunce and doublyng of his labours.
Life of William Tyndall.

Friend without change, play-fellow without strife,
Food without fulness, counsell without pride,
Is this sweet doubling of our single life.
Sidney. Arcadia, b iii.

And therefore it is reasonable that in presence of youre sayde allyes and confederates, we make the longer proposityon, for so much as we be doubly offended.
Nicolls. Thucididas, fol. 27.

What capes he doubled or what continent,
The gulphs and straits that strangely he had past.
Drayton, Idea 1.

And when thou hast on foot the purblind hare,
Mark the poor wretch, to overshut his troubles,
How he outruns the wind, and with what care
He cranks and crosses, with a thousand doubles.
Shakespeare. Venus & Adonis.

I would now rip up ———
All their arch-villanies and all their doubles,
Which are more than a hunted hare ere thought on.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Woman's Prize, Act iii. sc. 1.

Then doth she see by spectacles no more
She hears not by report of double spies,
Herself in instants doth all things explore;
For each thing's present, and before her lies.
Davies. The Immortality of the Soul, s. 22.

As though in this very point other men's confessions in particular, besides your own in generality, had not left us marks and traces evident and plain enough to descry doubleness and diversity.—State Trials. Gunpowder Plot, an. 1616.

The doublers of a hare, or in a morning
Salutes from a splay-footed witch, to drop
Three drops of blood at th' nose just, and no more,
Croaking of ravens, or screech of owls
Are not so boding mischief as thy crossing
My private meditation.
Ford. The Broken Heart, Act v. sc. 1.

——— And yet
It seemed he had two names, for there were writt
On a white canvasse doublett that he wore,
Two capital letters of a name before.
Corbet. To the Lord of Mordant.

Who wondring much at that so suddaine fit,
Yet nought dismayd, them stoutly well withstood;
Ne yeelded foote ne once abacke did flit,
But being doubly smitten, likewise doubly smit.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 9.

For if, in this case, the force should be increased in the proportion of 4 to 1; and, in oscillating in a cycloid, the same body, with the same velocity doubled, describes only a doubled arch, and its force is therefore only doubled, the body, with one and the same degree of velocity, would have twice as much force, when thrown upwards, as when thrown horizontally: which is a plain contradiction.
Clarke & Leibnitz. Dr. Clarke's Fifth Reply.

If by a female hand he had foreseen
He was to die, his wish had rather been
The lance and double ax of the fair warrior queen.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. ix.

Cecil, about a year ago or better, upon some heat in his back, fearing the stone, caused his doublet to be cut and voided in the back, and so went abroad, and rid very cold.
Strype. Life of Abp. Grindall, an. 1563.

——— With these consort
The staunch and steady sages of thy pack,
By long experience versed in all the wiles,
And subtle doublings of the various chase.
Somervile. The Chase, b. iv.

Now the seed being so necessary for the maintenance and increase of the several species, it is worthy the observation, what care is taken to secure and preserve it, being in some doubly and trebly defended.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

We now turned to the right, then to the left; as we went forward, he still went faster, but in vain; the person whom he attempted to escape, hunted us through every doubling, and gained upon us each moment: so that, at last, we fairly stood still, resolving to face what we could not avoid.
Goldsmith. Ess. 10.

Cowley, at all times harsh, is doubly so in his Pindaric compositions.—Blair, vol. iii. Lect. 39.

DOUBT, v. DOUBT, n. DO'UBTABLE. DO'UBTANCE. DO'UBTEDLY. DO'UBTER. DO'UBTIF. DO'UBTFUL. DO'UBTFULLY. DO'UBTFULNESS. DO'UBTING, n. DO'UBTINGLY. DO'UBTLESS. DO'UBTLESSLY. DO'UBTOUS. Fr. Doubter; It. and Sp. Dudar; Lat. Dubitare; (q.) duitare, (i.) in duo itare, (Minshew.) And Vossius agrees that du is duo, but does not accede with respect to the remainder of the word. The usage is well expressed by Cotgrave.

"To doubt, suspect, mistrust; be uncertain, make a question, or scruple of; to stagger, stammer, waver between hope and fear; to be in suspense; also, to fear, awe, dread, redoubt; (sometimes) also (as much as) to hope."

To fear, to dread, to stand in awe of, is the constant usage of the old writers; e. g. in R. of Gloucester, "He was a good man, and doubted God:" i. e. feared.

So that other grete kynges douted hym echon
Bygende see in eche stude, and dradde ver and ner,
That he come and by nome her londes, other her poer
R. Gloucester, p. 181.

Edmond, Athelstone's brother, after hym was kyng,
Gode man and doutede God thoru alle thyng.—Id. p. 276.

Eufryd, Edwyn's brother, tho he sey thys wo aboute,
To Cadwal he wende, & mercy cryde vor doute.—Id. p. 346.

A child were ybore, and mê in doute were,
Who were the fader. Id. p. 42.

Kenredus and Eldred, Kings of the Marches,
There successively reigning, became monks also
King Siberte of Estangle, and Offa doutless.—Id. p. 563.

Maid thought of this stoure, scho bithouht hir straite,
& douted dishonoure, that mot com thorgh discette.
R. Brunne, p. 119

And what lyves thei lyven, and what lawe thei usen
What thei drede and doubten, dere ayre telleth.
Piers Ploughman, p. 172.

And do we as David techeth, for doute of God's veniaunce.
Id. p. 233.

And Eroude tetrarck herde alle thingis that weren don of him; and he doutide for that it was seyde of summe men that Jon was risun fro deith.—Wichf. Luk, c. 9.

Also in the biheest of God he doutide not with untrust, but he was coumfortid in bileue ghyuynge glorie to God.
Id. Romaynes, c. 4.

And do ghe alle thingis withoute grutchyngis and doutyngis.—Id. Philipensis, c. 2.

——— Who euer intentif be
Me to honour, doubt, and serue.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

For euermore the worst is for to dout.
Id. Balade to King Henry the Fourth.

For the matter of it is such, that whê o doubt is determined & cut away, ther waxen other doubtes without number, right as the heddes of Idre the serpent waxen, ye which serpent Hercules slough.—Id. Boecius, b. iv.

Thus was I in a ioyous doubt
Sure and vnsurest of that rout. Chaucer. Dreame.

God wot thy lordship is doutable
If they enforce it to win
That should defend it fro within.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

Sens God seeth euery thing out of doutaūce
And him disposeth through his ordinaunce.
Id. Troilus, b. iv.

Thou hast now knowen and atteint the doubtous or double visage of thilke blinde goddesse Fortune.—Id. Boecius, b. ii.

Clearly to answere ye would aske long space
The matter is doubtfull and opinable
To assertain you I wol myself enable.
Id. The Remedie of Loue.

(Qd. Troilus) Iwis thou nedelesse
Counsailest me, that sickelich I me faine
For I am sicke in ernest doutesse. Id. Troilus, b. ii.

On of us two moste bowen doutelees:
And, sith a man is more resonable
Than woman is, ye moston ben suffrable.
Id. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6022.

The stature of her was of doutous iudgemente, for sometyme she constrained and shronke her selues, like to the common measure of menne: and sometyme it seemed, that she touched the heauen, with the hight of her hedde.
Id. Boecius, b. i.

Thus reignen vnder the, the kynges,
And all the people vnto the louteth,
And all the worlde thy person douteth.—Gower. C. A. b. i.

And the strange yles aboute
Ile wan, that euery man hath doute
Upon his marche for to sayle. Id. Ib. b. v.

The kynge was doutife of his dome. Id Ib. b. vi.

But els if he be doubtous
To sleen in cause of rightwisenesse,
It mais be saide no pitousnesse,
But it is pusillanimitee,
Whiche euery prince shulde flee. Id. Ib. b vii.

He had commanded his secret varlettes, that whanne soeuer he mette any persone, and made suche a sygne to theym, that incōtynent they shulde slee hym, whatsoeuer he were, without any wordes or resonyng; and by yt meanes he made many to be slayne, wherby he was so doubted, that none durst speke anaynst any thynge that he wolde haue done.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 29

The lady who douted those wordes, for she knew well Englyshemen were crewell and hasty, said sirs, as God wyll I am redy todo as ye wyll haue me.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. c 241.

For when God delyuereth not, menis myndis be broken beleuing themselues not to be herde, then beginne they to dout, or to thinke God to be angrye with them.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 3.

Thraldom at large hath made this prison free,
Danger wel past remembred werkes delight,
Of lingring doubtes such hope is sprong, pardie,
That naught I finde displeasant in my sight.
Surrey. Bonum est, &c.

Wherfore the duke sent out his letters and cōmyssyons for to assemble his knyghtys to withstande the sayde enemyes; but the sayde cytezynes of Parys cast an other way, and thought it to be done to the grenaūce or correccyon of theym: for doute wherof the prouost with other that had the gouernaūce of the cytie, causyd the gatys to be kepte, and none shulde entre but such as lyked theym.
Fabyan. King John, an. 8.

When they hearde him speak these words, they were in great doubte [curam] of hys sodeyne rashnesse, and therefore euery one requireth him aparte, that he would not increase hys perill through anye haste, but suffer himself to be ordered by ye aduyce of his phisicion.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 28.

Good heed would be had that nothing be doubtedly spoken, which may haue double meaning, nor yet any thing vttered that may make as much against vs as with vs, but that all our wordes runne to confirme wholy our matter.
Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 108.

The slipper state I know, the sodein turnes from wealth,
The doubtful hope, the certain woe, and sure dispeire of health. Surrey. Description of Fickle Affections.

And therefore, when such arguments are made, wee say, dubium per id quod æque dubium est, confirmatur. That which is doubtfull, is proued by that, which is as doubtfull, and so we doe not allowe the argument.
Wilson. The Arte of Logike, fol. 81.

I came to the court (then at Whitehall) prayed audience, had it at large, and very priuately discovered to her majesty this conspiracy, much to this effect, though covered with all the skill I had She took it doubtfully. I departed with fear.—State Trials. William Parry, an. 1584.

Here we must be dilligent, that in all such repugnaunce of propositions, there be no doubtfulnesse in any word, and that alwaies there be one maner of words that goe before, and also one maner of wordes that ende the sentence, plainly and without double vnderstanding
Wilson. The Arte of Logike, fol. 2ᵛ.

And he that asketh doubtingly, asketh coldly. And therefore Sainct James biddeth ye ask in faith no thyng doubtyng.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 18.

That famine is well known which oppressed Calagurium, a city of Spaine, when in old time Cneius Pompeius layed siege thereunto, (Valerius, lib vii. c.vii.) the citizens whereof conuerted their wiues and children into meat for the satisfying of their extreme hunger, whom doubtlesse they would with all their heartes haue sold for other victuals.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 583.

Happie are al they that wayte for hym. For thus (O thou people of Syon, and ye citizens of Jerusalem) shall ye never be in heuyness, for doubtlesse he wyll haue mercy upon thee.
Bible, 1551. Isay, c. 30.

For in these pointes wherein we vary, as for ensample that freers may wed nunnes: either the Scripture is plaine & easy to perceiue, or doubtouse and hard to vnderstande.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 457.

Vile hag, said Scudamore, why doost thou lye?
And falsly seek'st a vertuous wight to shame?
Fond knight, said shee, the thing that with thus eye
I saw, why should I doubt to tell the same.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 1.

The noblest of the people got together,
Doubting the Lord had angry with them been,
And had sent Samuel to reprove their sin.
Drayton. David & Goliah.

Some fearing shrieckt, some being harmed houl'd,
Some laught for sport, some did for wonder shout,
And som that would seem wise, their wonder turn'd to doubt. Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 3.

——— Modest doubt is cal'd
The beacon of the wise.
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cres. Act ii. sc. 2.

It were to be wished the English revolters, that are so nearly concern'd, and the unsettled doubters, that are in most danger to be seduced by the confidence of a supposed safety, which is promised them in their departure from us, and affirmed to be granted on all hands, would timely be admonished to take notice of it.
Hammond. Works, vol. ii pt. ii. p. 67.

The wisdom of a law-maker consisteth not only in a platform of justice, but in the application thereof: taking into consideration, by what means laws may be made certain, & what are the causes and remedies of the doubtfulness and uncertainty of law.—Bacon. Advancem. of Learning, b ii.

His deputy or viceroy with all expedition came off to our ship in a canow, and without any fear or doubting of our good meaning came presently on board.
Sir F. Drake. The World Encompassed, p. 85.

Which assertion the said Gildas doth not deliver coldly or doubtingly, but with great confidence and relying upon good grounds.—Speed. The Romans, b. vi. c. 9. s. 5.

His speech was answer'd with a gen'ral noyse
Of acclamations, doubtlesse signes of joyes,
Which souldiers vtter'd, as they forward went,
The sure fore-runners of a faire euent.
Beaumont. Bosworth Field.

Doubtless, this could not be, but that she turns
Bodies to spirits by sublimation strange;
As fire converts to fire the things it burns;
As we our meats into our nature change
Davies. Immortality of the Soul, s. 4.

La. Why you may, and doubtlessly will, when you have debated that your commander is but your mistres, a woman, a weak one, widely overborn with passions.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Scornful Lady, Act i. sc. 1.

He fear'd my face, but trusted to my life,
The beauty doubted, but believ'd the wife.
Dryden. Ovid. Epistle. Helen to Paris.

By this example you are taught again
That dreams and visions are not always vain:
But if, dear Partlet, you are still in doubt,
Another tale shall make the former out.
Id. The Cock and the Fox.

The bard, who first ordain'd our native tongue,
Tun'd to his British lyre this ancient song:
Which Homer might without a blush rehearse,
And leaves a doubtful palm in Virgil's verse.
Id. Palamon & Arcite.

Placid. How doubtfully these spectres fate foretel!
In double sense, and twilight truth they dwell;
Like fawning courtiers, for success they wait,
And then come smiling, and declare for fate.
Id. The Royal Martyr, Act iv. s. 4.

Whereby our soules, when they will stand most in need of comfort and support, will unavoidably be left in a trembling and disconsolate condition, and in an anxious doubtfulness of mind what will become of them for ever.
Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 34.

For my part, as in the forty-first experiment I tendered my thoughts concerning respiration but doublingly, so I am yet unwilling to determine resolvedly in a matter of that difficulty.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 176.

Taxes for the purpose of raising revenue had hitherto been sparingly attempted in America; without ever doubting the extent of its lawful power, parliament alway doubted the propriety of such impositions.
Burke. On the late State of the Nation.

He hid his head behind his wig,
And with such truth took off a pig,
All swore 'twas serious, and no joke,
For doubtless underneath his cloak,
He had conceal'd some grunting elf,
Or, was a real hog himself. Smart. The Pig, Feb. 18.

His lectures upon the three hundred and sixty-five heavens could not take up less than a year; and he would never have ended them if he had been interrupted, and obliged to answer doublers and cavillers.
Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

But obscurity as to the origin of muscular motion brings no doubtfulness into our observations upon the sequel of the process.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 7.

DOU'CE'UR. Fr. Douceur, sweetness, from Lat. Dulcis, sweet; generally applied, in English, to that which sweetens, renders pleasant or agreeable, (sc.) a gift or present; a donation.

These are the douceurs, by which we are invited to regicide fraternity and friendship.—Burke. On a Regicide Peace.

DOVE. } Goth. Dubo; A. S. Duva; Dut. Duyve, duyf; Ger. Taube; Sw. Dufwa. The Lat. Columba is thought to be from the Gr. Κολυμβαν, urinare, aquam subire; to dip or duck; from the action of these birds; Junius, supported by Wachter, thinks dove is from the A. S. Duf-ian, to dive, duck or dip.
Do'VE-ISH.
Do'VE-TAIL.
Do'VE-TAILED.

Dove-tail, (in Joinery,) so called from its resemblance to the tail of a dove; a figurâ caudæ columbinæ emulâ, (Skinner.)

He endaunted [tamed] a douve day and nyght here fedde,
In either of hus eris. Piers Ploughman, p. 294.

As lo hevenes weren opened to him: and he saw the spirit of God coming doun as a dowve and comynge on him. And lo a voice fro hevenes seiynge this is my loved sone in which I haue pleased to me.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 3.

And lo, heuē was opē ouer hym: and John saw the spirite of God descede lyke a doue, and light vpon hym. And lo, there came a voyce frō heauen sayinge: Thys is my beloued sonne in whom is my delyte.—Bible, an. 1551. Matthew.

With eyen glad, and browes bent,
Her heere douve to her heeles went,
And she was simple as doue on tree,
Full debonaire of herte was shee.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

Contempte of thys worlde, doueyshe simplicitie, serpentlike wysdome.—Confut. of N. Shaston, (1548.) sign. G. 4. b.

The falcon and the dove sit there together,
And th' one of them doth prune the other's feather.
Drayton. Noah's Flood.

For us let our dove-ship approve itselfe in meeknesse of suffering, not in actions of cruelty; we may, we must delight in blood; but the blood shed for us, not shed by us.
Bp. Hall. The Beauty and Vnitie of the Church.

Shatter'd and torn before the flag they fly
Like doves, that the exalted eagle spy
Ready to stoop and seize them from on high.
Duke. On the Death of King Charles II.

You will suffer my little doves and sparrows to take wing among your eagles, if you should have the same good opinion of them as they have of themselves; if not, you will kindly confine them to their cage and their nests.
Melmoth. Pliny, b. ix. Let. 25.

The ancient languages resemble the same art in its most improved state, after the invention of dove-tail joints, grooves, and mortices: when thus all the principal junctions are effected, by forming, properly, the extremities, or terminations of the pieces to be joined.
Campbell. The Philosophy of Rhetoric, vol. ii. p. 412.

He [Lord Chatham] made an administration, so checkered and speckled: he put together a piece of joinery, so crossly indented and whimsically dove-tailed, &c.
Burke. On American Taxation.

DOUGH. } A. S. Dah; Dut. Deeg; Ger. Teig; Sw. Deg. Skinner and Wachter seem inclined to derive from A. S. Deagan, imbuere, (q.d.) Farina aqua mixta, seu imbuta. Tooke says,—Dough is the past part. of the A. S. verb Deaw-ian, to moisten, to wet. Dough or dow means wetted. Dew is the same past part.
Do'UGHY.

The bread, (i. e. brayed corn or grain,) by being wetted becomes dough. (See Tooke, ii. 156.)

Another parable Jhesus spake to hem, the kyngdom of heavens is lyk to sour dough which a womman took and hidde in thre mesuris of mele til it were al sowred.

Wiclif. Matthew, c. 13.

The chyldrē gather stickes, the fathers kyndle the fyre, the mothers kneade ye doweghe, to bake cakes for the quene of heauen.—Bible, 1551. Jeremye, c. 8.

——— Did you mark the gentleman,
How boldly and how sawcily he talk'd,
And how unlike the lump I took him for,
The piece of ignorant dow.

Beaum. & Fletch. Rule a Wife & have a Wife, Act iii. sc. 1.

This botcher looks as if he were dough-bak'd; a little butter now and I could eat him like an oaten-cake.

Id. The Martial Maid, Act ii. sc. 1.

He comes so lazily on in a simily, with his arm full of weeds, and demeans himself in the dull expression so like a dough-kneaded thing, that he has not spirit enough left him so far to look to his Syntaxis, as to avoid nonsense.

Milton. An Apology for Smectymnuus.

Laf. No, no, no, your sonne was misled with a snipt taffata fellow there, whose villanous saffron wold haue made all the vnbak'd and dowy youth of a nation in his colour.

Shakespeare. All's Well, Act iv. sc. 5.

The third was accused for a monstrous piece of sorcery, long practis'd by hags, for moulding up pieces of dough into the shapes of men, women, and children, then heating them at a gentle fire, which had sympathetic power to torment the bowels of those in the neighbourhood.—Tatler, No. 21.

Nay, what is more than all, he [love] can make those dough-bak'd, senseless, indocile animals, women, too hard for us, their pontick lords and rulers, in a moment.

Wycherley. The Country Wife, Act iv. sc. 1.

This oil served instead of butter, to eat with dough-boys or dumplings, in his return out of these seas.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1684.

So it happened, that in forty-nine instances out of fifty, the said head was compressed and moulded into the shape of an oblong conical piece of dough, such as a pastry-cook generally rolls up, in order to make a pie of Sterne. Tristram Shandy, c. 19.

DO'UGHTY, adj. } From Duguth, virtue, goodness, valour, valiantness, the third per. sing. (Tooke says) of Dug-an, valere, "to be able, to be of force or power, to may or can, to prevail or profit. Belgis, Deugh-en, dogh-en, doog-hen," (Somner.)

A. S. "Dohtig, noble, stout, valiant, hardie, courageous, renowned, vertuous," (Somner.)

Aftur hym regny'd his sone fulle ryght,
The iii. Edward, that doughty knyght.

R. Gloucester, p. 392.

Godefrey of Louayn, the duke that was doughty,
Bi messengers tuayn sent to Kyng Henry,
For his douhter Adelayn, that wele was than of age.

R Brunne, p. 106.

He hopes to wynne that land with dynt of doughty knyght.

Id. p. 259.

Thise mad R homage douhteli, kneland doun.—Id. p. 163.

Thorgh ther douhtinesse the lond thorgh thei ronnen

Id. p. 115.

Now is grete honour comen to Inglis men
Thorgh R. the conquerour, his douhtynes we ken.

Id. p. 186.

And al that Marc hath ymad, Mathu, Johan, and Lucas
Of thyne douhtieste dedes. don on oure secte.

Piers Ploughman, p. 118.

And Dauid the doughty that devynede how Urye
Mighte slilokeste be slayn. Id. p. 197.

Thenne cam Pilatus, with muche puple sedens pro tribunali
To seo heu douhtilicke deth sholde do.—Id. p. 341.

Sire Thopas was a doughty swain,
White was his face as paindemaine
His lippes red as rose.

Chaucer. The Rime of Sire Thopas, v. 13,654.

By line and leysure clymes the lofty wall,
And winnes the turrettes toppe more conningly,
Than doughtye Dick, who lost his life and all
With hoysting vp his head to hastilye.

Gascoigne. Memories.

The doughtynes and valyauntise of the olde captaynes who warred for empyre, and not for defence of lyfe, is much renoumed and praysed, but in Gentyle wryters, and of Papyms or Gentyles.—Udal. Mark, Pref

Lesse did he thinke himselfe (I dare say) that his glorie and loftie looks should haue beene brought downe so soone, especiallie by them of his owne religion, whose part he so doughtielie defended.

Fox. Mart. p. 1905. God's Pun. upon Contem. of the Gospel.

Thereto he was a doughty dreaded knight,
Tryde often to the scathe of many deare,
That none in equall armes him matchen might.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 4.

The Biscaine perceiving him come in that manner, perceived by his doughtiness his intention, and resolved to do the like.—Shelton. Don Quixote, b. i. c. 8.

How many doughty monarchs, in later and more polite ages, would have slept in cottages, and have worked in stalls, instead of inhabiting palaces, and being cushioned up in thrones, if this rule of government had continued in force.—Bolingbroke. A Dissertation upon Parties, Let. 12.

DOUS, the termination. Lat. Dus, da, dum; as, amandus, one who ought to be loved, docendus, who ought to be taught. The root, is probably the Gr. Δεον.

DOU'T, v. The commentators on Shakespeare agree that doubt, is wrong, and dout, i. e. do out, right; but under the word doubt it has been shown that to doubt, is constantly used as equivalent to,—to fear, to awe, and thus, it may be, consequentially, in this passage, to quell, to subdue. Ray, however, has douter, an extinguisher, (q.d.) do-outer.

——— The dram of base
Doth all the noble substance often doubt
To his own scandal.—Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 5.

DOW, v. }
Do'WABLE. }
Do'WAGE. }
Do'WAGER. }
Do'WER. } Fr. Douer, to indue, endow or give a dowry unto. See Endow. Dower; Fr. Douaire; Mid. Lat. Dotarium, douarium, from Lat. Dos; Gr. Δως, any thing given. See Dote, n.
Do'WERY. }
Do'WERD. }
Do'WERLESS. }

Dowager, douairiere, quæ fruitur dote post mariti mortem; who enjoys a dowry after the death of her husband.

And the churche I founded in a mory place, called Murysfelde, & I dowed of the pryuylege of the cite by King Henry

R Gloucester, p. 320.

He comandid alle his, to mende that trespas,
In alle maner wise, as it ore felled was,
& on the same ause serued & alowed
Of all the franchise, that it are was dowed.

R. Brunne, p. 77

Fulfille the testament of Kyng William that was
That tille his sister ment for dowerie that trespas.

Id. p. 151.

Be strong of herte, and voide anon hire place,
And thilke dower that ye broughten me
Take it ageyn, I grant it of my grace.

Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8683

But ther as ye me profre swiche dowaire
As I first brought, it is wel in my mind, &c.

Id. Ib. v. 8724.

This roiall ring set with this ruble redd
Which Troilus in dowrie to me sende
To him again I leaue it whan I am dedde.

Id. The Complaint of Creseide.

Yea, and beside this he uncreth to take to wife, Ellanor Quene Dowager of Portyngall, without any dower, yea, in hir kirtell, & to endowe her with twone thousande markes sterlyng by the yere.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 19.

Than sayde she: God hathe endewed me wt a good dowery Now wil my husbande dwell with me, because I haue borne hym vi. sonnes.—Bible, 1551. Genesis, c. 30.

The Frenchmen often tymes required Kyng Henry to assigne to her a dower, but al was in vayne, for the Englishmen answered that the matrimony was neuer consummate, by reason wherof she was not dowable, by the very treatie of marriage concluded.—Hall. Hen. IV. an. 1.

——— Thy revenues cannot reach
To make her dowage of so rich a jointure
As can the heir of wealthy Jerningham?

Anonymous. The Merry Devil of Edmonton.

As Charles his daughter! you the lilly wear!
As Henry's Queen the blushing rose you bear:
By France's conquest and by England's oath,
You are the true made dowager of both.

Drayton. England's Historical Epistles.

——— She spous'd about him twines
Her marriageable arms, and with her brings
Her dower th' adopted clusters to adorn
His barren leaves. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

She did excell, and seem'd of Angels' race,
Liuing on earth like Angell new diuinde,
Adorn'd with wisedome and with chastitie,
And all the dowries of a noble mind.

Spenser. Daphnaida.

Lear. Will you with those infirmities she owes,
Vnfriended, new adopted to our hate,
Dow'r'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,
Take her or leave her.—Shakespeare. Lear, Act i. sc. 1.

Lear. ——— Return with her?
Why the hot-blooded France, that dowerless tooke
Our youngest borne,—I could as well be brought,
To knee his throne, and squire like pension beg
To keep base life a foote.—Shakes. Lear, Act ii. sc. 4

Thus dowager, on whom my tale I found,
Since last she laid her husband in the ground,
A simple sober life, in patience led,
And had but just enough to buy her bread.

Dryden. The Cock and the Fox.

Oh! had I wings to glide along the air,
To his dear tent I'd fly, and settle there;
There tell my quality, confess my flame;
And grant him any dowry that he'd name.

Crozall. Ovid. Met. b. viii.

I have three virgin daughters, from the three (Chrysothemis, Laodice, and fair
Iphianassa,) choosing forth a bride,
He shall conduct her, with no cost of dow'r,
To his own home; for at my proper cost
She shall be dow'r'd as never child before.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. ix

Then, when life's winter hastens on,
And youth's fair heritage is gone,
Dow'erless to court some peasant's arms,
To guard your wither'd age from harms

E. More. The Colt and the Farmer, Fable 12.

DO'WDY, adj. } Mr. Grose says, "Dudds Do'WDY, n. } in the north are rags, in the west, clothes; a square in the center of Sturbitch fair, where linen cloth is sold, is called the duddery. Dudman in the west, is a scarecrow, also a ragged fellow." In Dut. Tod is a rag. From dudds, whatever it may have originally meant, there is little doubt that dowdy has been formed, and applied to—

One whose clothes hang on like rags; are ill put on; one loosely dressed; in a slovenly manner.

It appears also to have been applied to an article of dress. See the example from the Tatler.

I ha' lost the fashion of my sex with grief on't,
When I have seen you courting of a dowdie.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Nice Valour, Act i. sc. 1.

No huswifery the dowdy creature knew;
To sum up all, her tongue confessed the shrew.

Gay. Shepherd's Week. Wednesday

And therefore 'tis no wonder if we see
They dote on dowdies and deformity.

Dryden. Lucretius, b. iv.

One might see likewise, that she dissented from the white apron and the cross, for which reasons, she had made herself a plain homely dowdy, and turned her face towards the Sectaries that sat on his left hand.—Tatler, No. 257.

Skies without cloud exotic suns adorn;
And roses blush, but blush without a thorn;
Landscapes unknown to dowdy nature rise,
And new creations strike our wondring eyes.

Churchill. To John Wilks, Esq.

DO'WLAS. } A kind of coarse and strong
Do'WLAS-SMOCK. } linen, probably from Dourlans, a town of Picardy, formerly celebrated for this manufacture, (Skinner.)

I bought you a dozen of shirts to your backe.
Falst. Dowlas, filthy dowlas: I haue giuen them away to baker's wiues, and they haue made boultere of them.

Shakespeare. 1 Part Hen. IV. Act iii. sc. 3

The maid, subdued by fees, her trunk unlocks,
And gives the cleanly aid of dowlas-smocks.

Gay. To the Earl of Burlington.

DOWLE. See Dole. Dowle, or dole, or deale, are but one word differently pronounced and written; and mean merely a part, piece, or portion, (without any signification of feather, or downe, &c.) He wolde teare him every doule, i. e. piecemeal, tear every piece of him, tear him in pieces, (See Tooke, ii. 259.)

The commentators on Shakespeare conceive doule to mean feather or down.

The griffen grinned as he were wode,
And lokid lovely as an owle,
And swore by cock' is herte and blode
He wold him tere every doule.

Chaucer. The Plowman's Tale, pt i.

——— You fooles, I and my fellowes
Are ministers of fate, the elements,
Of whom your swords are tempered, may as well
Wound the loud windes, or with bemockt at stabs
Kill the still closing waters, as dimmish
One dowle that's in my plume.

Shakespeare. Tempest, Act iii. sc. 3.

DOWN, n. } Dut. Donst, donse; Ger. Dunen; Sw. Dun. Skinner says,
Do'WNY. } Dut. Dunne veders, tenues (i.e.)
Do'WNLESS. } molles plumæ, and refers to thin: in Dut. Dun; and Ger. Dunn. Wachter and Ihre think from Dunen, tumere, to swell, to rise; and thus Dunen, are pennæ elasticæ, quæ depressæ resurgunt et elevantur;

Elastic feathers, which, when pressed down, raise themselves again. It is also applied to other substances having the softness and lightness of such feathers; and also (met.) to that which is soft, tender, soothing.

Of downe of pure doues white
I wol yeue him a fether bed
Raied with gold, and right well cled.—Chaucer. Dreame.

And for he shuld slepe softe
Upon a fether bed aloffte
He lieth, with many a pylow of downe.
Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

Because there were not to be found any English cities, nor such faire houses, nor at their own wish any of their old accustomed dainty food, nor any soft beds of downe or feathers, the country was to them miserable, and their reports thereof according.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 267.

——— O no:
The dust shall never be thy bed:
A pillow for thee will I bring
Stuff'd with down of Angel's wing.
Crashaw. Steps to the Temple. The Tear.

There be also plants, that though they have no prickles, yet they have a kind of downey or velvet rine upon their leaves: as rose-campion, stock gilly flowers, colts-foot; which down or nap cometh to a subtil spirit.
Bacon. Naturall History, § 560.

How sweetly did they flote upon the wings
Of silence, through the empty-vaulted night,
At every fall smoothing the raven down
Of darkness till it smil'd!—Milton. Comus.

A sweet regard and amiable grace
Mixed with manly sternnesse did appeare,
Yet sleeping in his well proportion'd face,
And on his tender lips the downy haire
Did now but freshly spring, and silken blossoms beare.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

Bert. I know no man, madman,
Enamour'd of his fetters, or delighting
In cold or hunger, or that would in reason
Prefer straw in a dungeon, before
A down-bed in a palace.
Massinger. The Maid of Honour, Act iv. sc. 4.

——— And as quicke lightnings flie
From well-deckt Juno's soveraigne, out of the thickned skie,
Preparing some exceeding raine, or haile, the fruit of cold:
Or down-like snow, that sodainly makes all the fields look old.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. x.

Then, past a boy, the callow down began
To shade my chin, and call me first a man.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. viii.

There princes gladly rest their weary heads,
And change uneasy thrones for downy beds.
Buckinghamshire. The Vision.

——— (For now youth's blowing flower
Deck'd with opening pride his face;
And with manly beauty sprung
On each cheek the downy shade.)
West. Olympic Odes. Ode. 1.

Me therefore shalt thou not with my consent
Leave here, my son! no, not if Jove himself
Would promise, reaping smooth this silver beard
To make me downy-cheek'd as in my youth.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. ix.

——— Beauty and love advanc'd
Their ensigns in the downless rosy faces
Of youths and maids, led after by the graces.
Hero and Leander. Sestyad 5.

DOWN. Fr. Dunes; It. Dune; Dut. Duyn; Ger. Dun; and A. S. Dun, dune, which Somner explains, Mons, a hill or mountain; a downe. Item, locus apertus, campestris et planus, champaigne ground. He and Menage think the word Celtic. Verstegan says, "Dune, a hill, commonly that stretcheth or extendeth itself out in length. They call in Holland the sand-banks, which lye upon the sea-side, the Dunes. The town of Dun-kirk, rightly in English Dun-church, hath had that appellation by being situate in the Dunes, or sand-banks. We yet in some parts of England, call hill—downes." To the same purport is Cotgrave. Wachter (who, as Tooke acknowledges, has laboriously and learnedly, though, he thinks, not happily, considered the word, dun) derives from dun-en, to swell, to rise, to be elevated: a most ancient word, he adds, the preservers of which are Saxones inferiores; and that they received the word from their ancestors is manifest from its derivatives, dun, a mountain, a hill, a rising or swelling of the earth, (tumor terræ,) dunen, pennæ elasticæ. See Dows, supra, and Dows, infra.

Neuer bifore in Wales was don so grete greue,
Bi downes & bi dales tharfolk at sunk mischeue.
R. Brunne, p. 91.

So for to speake vnto this ende,
Thei gon the downes and the dales
With weppyng, and with wofull tales.
Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

And being asked how they gat ye same gold, they told vs they went to a certaine downe or playne, and pulled or digged vp the grasse by the root: which done, they tooke of the earth, putting it in great buckets, which they carted to wash at the riuer.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 665.

Than he aduysed well howe the Frenchmen coude not approche nother to his hoost, nor to the towne, but in two places, other by the downes by the sea syde, or elles aboue by the highe way.—Berners. Froissart. Cron. vol. i. c. 145.

And at the same seasō on Easter day, was there three score vnknown shippes lyng in the Downes, wherfore all Kent arose, and mustered in harneis the same day.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 30.

Therefore bring forth the souldiers of our prize,
For whilst our pinnace anchors in the Downes,
